From what has been imperfectly stated under this title, the Student will observe how much nicety is required in creating and securing a Remainder; and, in some measure, see the general reasons upon which this nicety is founded. It were endless to attempt to enter upon the particular subtilties and refinements into which this doctrine, by the variety of cases which have occurred in the course of many centuries, has been spun out and subdivided: It has been already hinted, (see ante IV.) that in devises by last will and testament, (which, being often drawn up when the party is inops consilii, are always more favoured in construction than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, forethought, and advice,) Remainders may be created, in some measure, contrary to the rules laid down: though Lawyers will not allow such dispositions to be strictly Remainders; but call them by another name, that of Executory Devises, or devises hereafter to be executed; as to which see further, this Dict. under that title.

For more information on this subject, see 4 New Abr.: Vin. Abr. title Remainder: this Dict. titles Executory Devise; Recovery: and, for a clear and comprehensive statement of this abstruse branch of legal learning, Fearne's valuable Essays on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devises.

REMANENTES, [illegible] [illegible] sunt [illegible] Dominus.

REMEDY, Remedium.] [illegible] means given by Law for the recovery of a [illegible]; and it is a maxim of Law, that wherever the Law [illegible] any thing, it gives a Remedy for the same.

REMEMBRANCERS, Rememoratores.] Formerly called Clerks of the [illegible]; Officers of the Exchequer, of which [illegible] three, distinguished by the names of the King's Remembrancer, the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and the Remembrancer of First Fruits; [illegible] whose charge it lies to put the Lord Treasurer and the Justices of that Court in Remembrance of such things as are to be called on and dealt in for the King's benefit.

The King's Remembrancer enters in his office all recognizances taken before the Barons for any of the King's debts, for appearances, &c.; and he takes all bonds for such debts, and makes out process for breach of them; also he writes process against the Collectors of Customs, Subsidies, Excise, and other public payments for their accounts. All informations on Penal Statutes are entered and sued in his office; and he makes the bills of composition on Penal Laws, and takes the installment of debts. And all matters of English bills in the Exchequer-Chamber remain in the office of this Remembrancer. He hath delivered into his office the indentures, fines, and other evidences, which concern the passing any lands to or from the King. In Crastino [illegible], yearly, he reads in the Court the oath of all the Officers of the Court, when they are admitted. Writs of Prerogative, or Privilege, for Officers and Ministers of the Court, are made out by him; and commissions of Nisi Prius, by the King's warrant, on trial of any matters within his office, at the Assises in the country, he hath the entering of judgments, [illegible] pleas, &c. And all differences touching irregularities in proceedings shall be determined by the King's Remembrancer, who is to settle the same, if he can, and give costs where he finds the fault; but if not, the Court is to determine it, &c.

By order of Court, [illegible] Remembrancer, or his deputy, are diligently to attend in Court, and to give an account touching any proceedings as they shall be required; and they enter the rules and orders of the Court.

The Treasurer's Remembrancer issues out process of Fieri Facias [illegible], for debts to the King, and against Sheriffs, Escheators, &c. accounting. He [illegible] the [illegible], [illegible] the record, [illegible] Sheriffs, and other Accountants, pay their [illegible] at Easter and Michaelmas; and [illegible] record, whether Sheriffs, and other Accountants, keep their days prefixed. There are also brought into his office all the accounts of customers, comptrollers, and accountants, to make entry thereof on record. All estreats of fines, issues, and amerciaments, set in any of the Courts at Westminster, or at the Assises, or Sessions, are certified into his office; and by him delivered to the Clerk of the Estreats, to make out process on them; and he may [illegible] for discovery of [illegible] [illegible], and all such [illegible] to the Crown by [illegible], &c.

The Remembrancer of the First Fruits Office is to take all compositions and bonds for payments of First Fruits and Tenths; he makes process against all such persons as do not pay the same. Stat. [illegible] 1 [illegible] 14; 37 Eliz. c. 4.

REMITTER, from the Lat. remittere, to restore, or send back.] An operation in Law, upon the meeting of an ancient right, remediable, and a latter (defeasible) estate, in the same persons; (the latter being cast upon him by Law;) whereby the ancient right is restored and set up again; and the new defeasible estate ceased; and thus he is in, of his first or better estate. See 1 Inst. 347, 4. Litt. § 659.

Remitter is classed (with Retainer) by Blackstone, among those remedies for private wrongs which are effected by the mere operation of Law; and is defined to be, where he who hath the true property, or jus proprietatis, in lands, but is out of possession thereof, and hath no right to enter, without recovering possession in an action, hath afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent, and, of course, defective title. In this case, he is remitted, or sent back, by operation of Law, to his ancient and more certain title. The right of entry, which he hath gained by a bad title, shall be ipso facto annexed to his own inherent good one; and his defeasible estate shall be utterly defeated and annulled, by the instantaneous act of Law, without his participation or consent. Litt. § 659. [illegible] 358. Cro. Jac. 489. As if A. disseises B., that is, turns him out of possession, and dies, leaving a son C.; hereby the estate descends to C. the son of A., and B. is barred from entering thereon till he proves his right in an action: Now, if afterwards C., the heir of the disseisor, makes a lease for life to D., with remainder to B. the disseisee for life, and D. dies; hereby the remainder accrues to B., the disseisee; who, thus gaining a new freehold by virtue of the remainder, which is a bad title, is by act of Law remitted, or in, of his former and surer estate. For he hath hereby gained a new right of possession, to which the Law immediately annexes his ancient right of property. Finch. L. 194; Litt. § 683.

If the subsequent estate, or right of possession, be gained by a man's own act or consent, as by immediate purchase, being of full age, he shall not be remitted; for the taking such subsequent estate was his own folly, and shall be looked upon as a waiver of his prior right. Co. Litt. 348, 350. Therefore, it is to be observed, that to every Remitter there are regularly these incidents; an ancient right, and a new defeasible estate of freehold, uniting in one and the same person; which defeasible estate must be cast upon the tenant, not gained by his own act, or folly. The reason given by Littleton why this remedy, which operates silently, and by the mere act of Law, was allowed, is because, otherwise, he who hath right would be deprived of all remedy. Litt. § 661.

The above distinctions may seem important [illegible] [illegible], who perhaps would [illegible] the [illegible] the right, [illegible] [illegible] it [illegible] be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] he [illegible] support his just [illegible] doubly hard; because, during the time he was himself tenant, he could not establish his prior title by any possessory action. The Law, therefore, remits him to his prior title, or puts him in the same condition as if he had recovered the land by writ of entry. Without the Remitter, he would have had jus et seisinam separate; a good right, but a bad possession: Now, by the Remitter, he hath the most perfect of all titles, juris et seisinæ conjunctionem. 3 Comm. c. 10. p. 190.

There shall be no Remitter to a right, for which the party has no remedy by action: as if the issue in tail be barred by the fine or warranty of his ancestor, and the freehold is afterwards cast upon him; he shall not be remitted to his estate-tail: for the operation of the Remitter is exactly the same, after the union of the two rights, as that of a real action would have been, before it. As then, the issue in tail could not, by any action, have recovered his ancient estate, he shall not recover it by Remitter. See Co. Litt. 349: Moor 115: 1 Anu. 286: 3 Comm. 19: and 1 Inst. 347, a. in n.

There are different degrees of title which a person, disseising another of his lands, acquires in them, in the eye of the Law, independently of any anterior right. Thus, if A. is disseised by B., while the possession is in B., it is a mere naked possession, unsupported by any right, and A. may restore his possession, and put a total end to the possession of B., by an entry on the land, without any previous action: but, if B. die, the possession descends on his heir, by act of Law: In this case, the heir comes to possession of the land by a lawful title, and acquires, in the eye of the Law, an apparent right of possession; which is so far good against the person disseised, that he has lost his right to recover the possession by entry, and can only recover it by an action at Law. The actions used in these cases are called Possessory Actions. But if A. permits the possession to be withheld from him, beyond a certain period of time, without claiming it; or suffers judgment in a possessory action to be given against him by default; or if, being tenant in tail, he makes a discontinuance; in all these cases B.'s title is strengthened, and A. can no longer recover by a possessory action, and his only remedy then is by an action on the right: These last actions are called Droitural Actions, and are the ultimate resource of the person disseised. Now if, in any of these three stages of the adverse title, the disseisee, without any fault in him, comes to the possession of the estate by a defeasible title, he is considered to be in, not as of his new right, but as of his ancient and better right; and, consequently, the right of the person, who, supposing the disseisee still to be in as of his defeasible estate, would be entitled to the lands upon the cession or determination of that estate, is gone for ever. In these circumstances, the disseisee is said to be remitted to his ancient estate: the principal reason whereof is, as has already been stated, that the person so remitted cannot sue or enter upon himself; so that in those cases where the possession is recoverable by entry, the Remitter has the effect of an entry; and in those cases where it is recoverable by action, it has the effect of a judgment at Law. But since there is no Remitter where he who comes to the defeasible estate, comes to it by his own act, or his own assent; hence the defeasible estate, to entitle the party to be remitted, must be made to him or her, during infancy or coverture, or must come to them by descent, or act of Law: Neither is there any Remitter where the ancient estate is not recoverable either by action or by entry. So that in those cases where the disseisee is beyond the three stages just alluded to, if he afterwards come to the estate by a defeasible title, he remains seised as of that estate, and is not remitted to his more ancient title. 1 Inst. 347, b. in n. See title Release I.

These are the doctrines of the Common Law respecting Remitter: But they are greatly altered by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10: that statute executes the possession to the party in the same plight, manner, and form as the use was limited to him. It operates only with respect to the first taker, and therefore the issue of the issue is remitted. By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. § 6, it is enacted, that no fine, feoffment, or other act, by the husband alone, of the wife's lands, shall be any discontinuance; but that the wife, and her heirs, and such others to whom the right shall appertain after her decease, shall, notwithstanding such fine, or other act, lawfully enter into her lands, according to their rights and titles therein. This takes from the wife, and those claiming under her, the effect of stat. 27 H. 8; so that she has her election to take by stat. 27 H. 8; or enter by stat. 32 H. 8; upon which she shall be remitted. See Duncombe v. Wingfield, Hob. 254: 1 Inst. 347, b. in n.

The reason of this invention of the Law is in favour of right; and that title which is first, and most ancient, is always preferred. Dyer 68: Finch's Law 119.

In Remitters to restore rights, the first interest which works such Remitter, must be a right, and not a title of entry; and there can be no Remitter before an entry. Co. Lit. 348: 2 Bulst. 29.

A Remitter must be to a precedent right; for regularly to every Remitter there are two incidents, viz. an ancient right, and a defeasible estate of freehold, coming together. Doct. & Stud. c. 9: Wood's Inst. 528.

Tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee, on condition, and dieth; and his issue, being within age, enters for the condition broken, by virtue of the feoffment; he shall be first in as tenant in fee-simple, and be remitted as heir to his father: But, if the heir be of age, he shall not be remitted; but is to bring his writ of formedon against the feoffee. Co. Lit. 202, 349. And if tenant in tail infeoff his son, or heir-apparent, who is within age, and after dies, that is a Remitter to the heir; though, if he were at full age at the time of such feoffment, it is no Remitter, because it was his folly, that, being of full age, would take such a feoffment. Lit. 655.

If a husband alien lands which he hath in right of his wife, and after take an estate again to him and his wife, for their lives, this is a Remitter to the wife; for the alienation is the act of the husband, and not of the woman: yet if the alienation be by fine in a Court of Record, such a taking again afterwards to the husband and wife shall not make the wife to be in by her Remitter, she being excluded by the fine for ever. Terms de Ley.

Lands are given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies; and after, the husband aliens the land in fee, and then takes back an estate to him, and his wife, for their lives; here they will both be remitted: But, if he take an estate again to himself for life, Remitter will not be allowed against his own alienation. Co. Lit. 354.

When the entry of a person is lawful, and he takes an estate in the land for life, or in fee, &c. (except it be by by matter of record, or otherwise to conclude or estop him,) he shall be remitted. Co. Lit. 363. And a Remitter to one in possession, may be a Remitter to another in remainder; if the remainder be not bound, which estops it. Cro. Car. 145.

If there be tenant in tail, remainder in fee to A. B., and the tenant in tail discontinueth, and takes back an estate in fee; and then devises the lands to his wife for life, with remainder to W. R. for years, remainder to the same A. B. in fee, and dies, and his wife enters, and dies: It has been held, that he in remainder in fee may enter, and avoid the term for years to W. R., because he is remitted to his first remainder in fee: and a Remitter avoids a lease for years, without entry. Noy 48.

A father was tenant for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to the right heirs of the body of the father; he and his son conveyed the lands to the uncle in fee, who died without issue; so that the son, who was heir in tail to the father, was now heir at Law to the uncle, and the fee descended on him; the wife of the uncle brought dower, but the son being remitted to his former estate, no dower accrued to the wife, for the estate of which she claims dower is gone. 1 Leon. 37: 9 Rep. 136.

Lands were purchased by a man, and settled on himself and his wife in tail, and they had issue two sons; then he made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder in fee to his second son: The wife, after his death, entered, and made a feoffment to the issue of the second son; and then the eldest son entered for a forfeiture, on the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20: and it was adjudged a forfeiture, by reason the wife having two titles, one as tenant in tail, the other as tenant for life, by her entry she is remitted to her estate for life, so that the feoffment made by her is a forfeiture of her estate. Sid. 63: 3 Nels. Abr. 100.

If land be given to a woman in tail, the remainder to another and a third in tail, remainder to a fourth in fee; the feme takes husband, and he discontinues the lands in fee, and after an estate is made to the husband and wife for their lives, or other estate: This is a Remitter to all in remainder, and, if she die without issue, they may enter; and so it is of them who have the reversion after such intails. Lit. § 673.

Where a person lets land for term of life to another, who granteth it away in fee; if the alienee make an estate to the lessor, it will be a Remitter to him, because his entry is lawful. Lit. § 694.

If one be disseised, and the disseisor makes a feoffment to the disseisee; in this case, the disseisee may be remitted to his elder title, or he may choose to take by the feoffment; and if it be with warranty, he may if he will make use of the warranty. 1 H. 7. c. 20: 3 Shep. Abr. 237.

Tenant in tail hath two sons, and leases the land intailed to his elder son for life, remainder to his youngest son; it is no Remitter to the eldest: But, if he die without issue of his body, the youngest son shall be remitted. Lit. § 682.

If tenant in tail make a feoffment to the use of himself and his heirs, he shall not be remitted; but his issue shall. 3 Nels. 100. On Remitter of issue in tail, leases, and other charges on the lands, are avoided. Litt. §§ 659, 660.

REMITTITUR; In cases of appeal, the Record itself, or a transcript thereof, is sent from the Court of B. R. to the Exchequer-Chamber, or House of Lords: When judgment is given in the superior Court, or the Writ of Error abates, or is discontinued, the record or transcript is returned (Remittitur, sent back) to the Court of K. B., and the entry of this circumstance is termed a Remittitur. See Tidd's and Sellon's Pract.

RENANT, Or rather reniant, i. e. negans, denying; from the Fr. renier, negare, to deny or refuse. 32 H. 8. c. 2.

RENDER, Fr. rendre, reddere.] To yield, give again, or return.

This word is used in levying a fine, which is either single, where nothing is rendered back by the cognisee; or double, when it contains a grant and render back again of the land, &c. to the cognisor. West's Symb. See title Fine of Lands.

There are certain things in a manor which lie in prender, that is, which may be taken by the lord or his officers when they happen, without any offer made by the tenant, such as escheats, &c.; and certain which lie in Render, i. e. must be rendered or answered by the tenant, as rents, heriots, and other services: Also some services consist in seisance; and some in render. West. Symb. par. 2: Perkin's Ref. 696.

RENOVANT, From renovo, to renew, or make again.] A parson sued one for tithes, to be paid of things renovant, &c. Cro. Jac. 430. See title Tithes.

RENT,

REDDITUS.] Said to be from redeundo, because, Retroit & quotannis redit. Fleta, lib. 3 c. 14: Rather à reddendo, from its being rendered. See post; and title Deed.] A sum of money, or other consideration, issuing yearly out of lands or tenements. Plowd. 132, 138, 141.

Rents are classed, by Blackstone, among incorporeal hereditaments. The word Rent or Render, reditus, according to him, signifies a compensation or return, it being in the nature of an acknowledgment, given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. See 1 Inst. 144. It is defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal. It must be a profit; yet there is no occasion for it to be, as it usually is, a sum of money; for spurs, capons, horses, corn, and other matters may be rendered, and frequently are rendered, by way of Rent. Co. Lit. 142. It may also consist in services or manual operations; as, to plough so many acres of ground, to attend the King or the lord to the wars, and the like; which services, in the eye of the Law, are profits. This profit must also be certain; or that which may be reduced to a certainty by either party. It must also issue yearly; though there is no occasion for it to issue every successive year; but it may be reserved reserved every second, third, or fourth year: yet, as it is to be produced out of the profits of lands and tenements, as a recompence for being permitted to hold or enjoy them, it ought to be reserved yearly; because those profits do annually arise, and are annually renewed. It must issue out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself; wherein it differs from an exception in the grant, which is always of part of the thing granted. Plowd. 13: 8 Rep. 71. It must, lastly, issue out of lands and tenements corporeal; that is, from some inheritance whereunto the owner or grantee of the Rent may have recourse to distrain. Therefore, a Rent, strictly speaking, cannot be reserved out of an advowson, a common, an office, a franchise, or the like; but a grant of such annuity or sum (e g by a lessee of tithes, or other incorporeal hereditament) may operate as a personal contract, and oblige the grantor to pay the money reserved, or subject him to an action of debt for the amount of the Rent agreed upon; though it doth not affect the inheritance, and is no legal Rent in contemplation of Law. 1 Inst. 47, 144. See 2 Woodd. 69. and post. II ad fin. And the King might always reserve a Rent out of incorporeal hereditaments: the reason of which is, that he, by his prerogative, can distrain on all the lands of his lessee. 1 Inst. 47, a. in n.

III. In what Cases a Demand of Rent is necessary.

IV. Of the Time of demanding Rent, and the Place where the Demand is to be made.

I. There are, at Common Law, three manner of Rents; Rent-service, Rent-charge, and Rent-seck. Lit. § 213.

Rent-service is so called, because it hath some corporal service incident to it; as, at the least, fealty, or the feodal oath of fidelity. 1 Inst. 142. For, if a tenant holds his land by fealty, and 10 s. Rent; or by the service of ploughing the Lord's land, and 5 s. Rent; these pecuniary Rents, being connected with personal services, are therefore called Rent service. And for these, in case they be behind, or arrere, at the day appointed, the Lord may distrain of common right, without reserving any special power of distress; provided he hath in himself the reversion, or future estate of the lands and tenements, after the lease or particular estate of the lessee or grantee is expired. Lit. § 215.

The services are of two sorts, either expressed in the lease or contract, or raised by implication of Law. When the services are expressed in the contract, the quantum must be either certainly mentioned, or be such as, by reference to something else, may be reduced to a certainty; for if the lessor's demands be uncertain, it is impossible to give him an adequate satisfaction or compensation for them, as the Jury cannot determine what injury he has sustained. Co. Lit. 96, a: Stil. 397: 2 Ld. Raym. 1160.

The services implied are such as the Law obliges the tenant to perform when there are none contracted for in the grant; and these are more or less, according to the duration of the gift; as at Common Law, before the statute Quia emptores terrarum, if the tenant made a feoffment in fee without any reservation of services, the feoffee held by the same services by which the feoffor held over; because the services being an incumbrance on the land, which the tenant could not discharge without his Lord's consent, must follow the land, into whose hands soever it comes. Co Lit. 22, 23.

A Rent-charge, is where the owner of the Rent hath no future interest, or reversion expectant, in the land; as where a man, by deed, maketh over to others his whole estate in fee-simple, with a certain Rent payable thereout; and adds to the deed a covenant or clause of distress, that if the Rent be arrere, or behind, it shall be lawful to distrain for the same. In this case, the land is liable to the distress, not of common right, but by virtue of the clause in the deed: and therefore it is called a Rent-charge, because, in this manner, the land is charged with a distress for the payment of it. 1 Inst. 143.

A clear Rent-charge must be free from the land tax. Doug. 602.

Where a man, seised of lands, grants by deed-poll, or indenture, a yearly rent, to be issuing out of the same land, to another in fee, in tail, for life or years, with a clause of distress; this is a Rent charge, because the lands are charged with a distress by the express grant or provision of the parties, which otherwise it would not be. So, if a man make a feoffment in fee, reserving Rent, and if the Rent be behind, that it shall be lawful for him to distrain; this is a Rent-charge, the word reserving amounting to a grant from the feoffee. Lit. § 217: Co. Lit. 170, a: Plowd. 134.

A Rent granted for equality of partition by one coparcener to another, is a Rent-charge, and distrainable of common right, without clause of distress; and although there be no tenure of the sister who grants it; for as the Law, for the conveniency of coparceners, allows of such grants, it must consequently give a remedy to the grantee for recovery of it. Lit. § 252.

An Annuity is a thing very distinct from a Rent-charge, with which it is frequently confounded: A Rent charge being a burden imposed upon and issuing out of lands; whereas an annuity is a yearly sum chargeable only upon the person of the grantor. Therefore, if a man by deed grant to another the sum of 20 l. per annum, without expressing out of what lands it shall issue, no land at all shall be charged with it; but it is a mere personal annuity: which is of so little account in the Law, that, if granted to an eleemosynary corporation, it is not within the Statutes of Mortmain; and yet a man may have a real estate in it, though his security is merely personal. 2 Comm. c. 3. See 1 Inst. 144.

Rent seck, redditus siccus, or barren Rent, is in effect nothing more than a Rent reserved by deed, but without any clause of distress.

A Rent-seck is so called, because it is unprofitable to the grantee; as, before seisin had, he can have no remedy for recovery of it; as where a man, seised in fee, grants a Rent in fee for life or years, or where a man makes a feoffment in fee or for life, remainder in fee, reserving Rent, without any clause of distress, these are Rents-seck: for which, by the policy of the ancient Law, there was no remedy, as there was no tenure between the grantor and and grantee, or feoffor and feoffee; consequently, no fealty could be due. Lit. § 215, 218: Cro. Car. 520: Kelw. 104: Cro. Eliz. 656.

And it hath been ruled in equity, where an annuity was devised by will to A., and the land, subject to the annuity, to B., that B. should give seisin of the Rent-seck to A., that he might have remedy for recovery of it at Common Law; it being the original intention of the gift, that the devisee should have some benefit from it. Moor 620: 3 Chan. Ca. 92.

So, when a bill was brought for 3 l., for a Rent of 5 s. arrear for twelve years, the equity of the bill being that the deeds by which the Rent was created were lost, consequently no remedy for the Rent at Law; the Court, on the plaintiff's proving constant payment till the last twelve years, decreed the defendant to pay the arrears and growing Rent; for since, by payment, it was evident the plaintiff had a right to the Rent, and that he could not, without his deeds, make a title at Law; therefore the Court decreed the defendant to pay the Rent, and so subjected his person, which possibly might not have been liable by the deed which created the Rent. 1 Chan. Ca. 120. This was previous to stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. See post. II.

Though a Rent is an incorporeal hereditament, it is susceptible of the same limitations as other hereditaments. Hence it may be granted or devised for life, or in tail, with remainders or limitations over. But there is this difference between an intail of lands, and an intail of Rent; that the tenant in tail of lands, with the immediate reversion in fee in the donor, may, by a common recovery, bar the intail and the reversion: See title Recovery. Whereas the grantee in tail of a Rent de novo, without a subsequent limitation of it in fee, acquires, by a common recovery, only a base fee, determinable upon his decease, and failure of the issues in tail: but if there is a limitation of it in fee, after the limitation in tail, the recovery of the tenant in tail gives him the fee-simple. This was resolved in the cases of Smith v. Farnaby, Cart. 52: Sid. 285: 2 Keb. 29, 55, 84: Weeks v. Peach, Lutw. 1224: Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 229: 2 Eq. Abr. 384, 5.

The reason of this difference is, that it would be unjust that the conveyance of a grantee of a Rent, should give a longer duration or existence to the Rent, than it had in its original creation. It is true that the barring of an estate-tail in land, is equally contrary to the intention of the grantor. But a Rent differs materially from land. The old principles of the Feudal Law looked upon every modification of landed property, which was considered to be against common right, with a very jealous eye. Now a Rent-charge was supposed to be against common right; the grantee of the Rent-charge being subject to no feudal services, and being a burden on the tenant who was to perform them. Upon this principle, the Law, in every instance, avoided giving, by implication, a continuation to the Rent, beyond the period expressly fixed for its continuance. Thus, if a tenant in tail of land die without issue, his wife is entitled to dower for her life out of the land, notwithstanding the failure of the issue; but the widow of a tenant in tail of Rent is not entitled to her dower against the donor. So, if a Rent is granted to a man and his heirs, generally, and he dies without an heir, the Rent does not escheat, but sinks into the land. It is upon this principle, that, when there is not a limitation over in fee, a tenant in tail of Rent acquires by his recovery no more than a base fee; as has been already stated: But if there is a limitation in fee, after the particular limitation in tail, the grantor has substantially limited the Rent in fee; and therefore it is doing him no injustice, that the recovery should give the donee who suffers it an estate in fee-simple. 1 Inst. 298, a. in n.

The case of Chaplin v. Chaplin was, that Lady Hanby, the grandmother of Porter Chaplin, being seised in fee, conveyed certain lands, to the use and intent that the trustees, named in the deed, should receive and enjoy a Rent-charge of 30 l per annum, and to them and their heirs, with power to distrain for it, and to enter and hold the land on non-payment for 40 days: and then the Rent was declared to be to the use of Porter Chaplin in tail; remainder to the use of the same person who had the land in fee. P. C. died, leaving issue, who married, and died without issue; and the question was, Whether the widow was entitled to dower in this Rent? and determined she was not. It is stated to have been afterwards disclosed to the Court, that the legal estate of the Rent in fee was in the trustees: but it is observable, that it was not necessary that any new matter should be adduced to disclose this to the Court, as it appeared on the face of the deed: for a conveyance to A. and his heirs, to the use and intent that B. and his heirs may receive a Rent out of the estate, gives B. the legal fee of the Rent: so that if it is afterwards declared that B. and his heirs are to stand seised of the Rent to uses, the intended cestuis que use take only trust or equitable estates. If, therefore, it is intended to limit a Rent in strict settlement, it is necessary to do it by way of grant at Common Law, to some person and his heirs, to the uses intended to be limited. This gives the grantee the mere seisin to the uses, and the uses declared upon it will be executed by the statute. See 1 Inst. 298, a. in n.

There are also other species of Rents, which are reducible to these three. Rents of Assise are the certain established Rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be departed from or varied. 2 Inst. 19. Those of the freeholders are frequently called Chief-Rents, redditus capitales; and both sorts are indifferently denominated Quit-Rents, quieti redditus; because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. When these payments were reserved in silver or white money, they were anciently called White-Rents, or Blanch-farms, redditus albi; in contradistinction to Rents reserved in work, grain, or baser money, which were called redditus nigri, or Black Mail. 2 Inst. 19. See those several titles. Rack-Rent is only a Rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it. A Fee-farm Rent is a Rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee; of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands, at the time of its reservation: for a grant of lands, reserving so considerable a Rent, is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of the usual methods for life or years. 1 Inst. 143. It seems that the quantum of the Rent is not essential to create a fee-farm. See 1 Inst. 145, b. n. 5: And also, whether a fee-farm must necessarily necessarily be a Rent-charge; or may not also be a Rent-seck; and Doug. 605.

These are the general divisions of Rent; but the difference between them (in respect to the remedy for recovering them) is now totally abolished; and all persons may have the like remedy by distress for Rents-seck, Rents of Assise, and Chief-Rents, (if paid for three years within twenty years preceding the act, or if created since,) as in case of Rents reserved upon lease. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 5.

II. By stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 37, The executors or administrators of tenants in fee-simple, tenants in fee-tail, and tenants for term of life, of Rents-service, Rent-charges, Rents-seck, and Fee-farms, unto whom any such Rent or Fee-farm be due, shall have an action of debt for such arrears against the tenants, who ought to have paid in the life-time of their testator, or against their executors and administrators, and distrain for the arrears on the land charged with the payment, so long as the lands continue in the seisin or possession of the tenant in demesne, who ought to have paid the Rent or Fee-farm, or in the seisin or possession of any other person claiming only from the same tenant by purchase, gift, or descent, in like manner as their testator might have done. § 1.

This act shall not extend to any manor in Wales, whereof the inhabitants have used to pay to every Lord, at his first entry, any sum of money for discharge of all duties and penalties wherewith the inhabitants were chargeable to any of the Lord's ancestors. § 2.

If any man have, in right of his wife, any estate in Rents or Fee-farms, and the same be unpaid in the wife's life, the husband, after the death of his wife, his executors, and administrators, shall have action of debt for the arrears, or may distrain. § 3.

If any have any Rents or Fee-farms for term of life of any other person, and the Rent, &c. be unpaid in the life of such person, and after the said person doth die, he to whom the Rent or Fee-farm is due, his executors and administrators, shall have an action of debt, or distrain for the same. § 4.

The only clause in stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, for converting military into common socage tenures, which seems to affect Rents, is a proviso (§ 5,) to preserve Rents certain, and to make the reliefs on them universally the same, as on the death of tenant in common socage. 1 Inst. 162, b. in n.

By stat. 8 Ann. cap. 14, No goods, upon any tenements leased, shall be taken by any execution, unless the party, at whose suit the execution is sued out, shall, before the removal of such goods, pay to the landlord of the premises, or his bailiff, all money due for Rent for the premises; provided the arrears do not amount to more than one year's Rent: And in case the arrears shall exceed one year's Rent, then the party, paying the said landlord, or his bailiff, one year's Rent, may proceed to execute his judgment: and the sheriff is required to levy and pay to the plaintiff, as well the money paid for Rent, as the execution-money. § 1. The Act contains a proviso to prevent prejudice to the Crown, in recovering and seising debts, fines, and forfeitures. § 8.

Landlord dead, and, after execution executed, administration is granted to A.; he is not entitled to a year's Rent. 1 Strange 97.

The administrator of the landlord may have an action against the officer for taking the goods in execution, and removing them from the premises before the landlord was paid a year's Rent. 1 Strange 212.

On motion on behalf of the landlord, the Sheriff was ordered to pay him his year's Rent, without deducting poundage. 1 Strange 643.

This statute extends to the immediate landlord, and not to the ground landlord. 2 Strange 787. After the landlord had been paid a year's Rent on one execution, another execution came in, and he moved to be paid another year's Rent on the last execution, but was denied; for the intent of the Act was only to continue a lien as to one year, and to punish him for his laches, if he lets more run in arrear. 2 Strange 1024.

It shall be lawful for any person having Rent due on any lease for life, years, or at will, determined, to distrain for such arrears, after determination of the leases: Provided, That such distress be made within six calendar months after the determination of such lease, and during the continuance of such landlord's title, and during the possession of the tenant from whom such arrear became due. Stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. §§ 6, 7. The above clauses were made to remedy the defect of the Common Law, under which the power of distress ceased with the tenure. 1 Inst. 162, b. in n.

By stat. 4 Geo. 2. cap. 28, In case any tenant for life or years, or other person who shall come into possession of any lands, &c. under or by collusion of such tenant, wilfully hold over, after the determination of such term, and after demand made in writing, for delivering possession, such person holding over shall pay double the yearly value of the lands, &c. so detained. § 1.

In all cases between landlord and tenant, on half a year's Rent being in arrear, the landlord having a right by Law to re-enter for non-payment, may, without any formal demand or re-entry, serve a declaration in ejectment; and in case of judgment, or nonsuit for not confessing lease, entry, and ouster, it shall appear that half a year's Rent was due before a declaration served, and no sufficient distress to be found, and that the lessor in ejectment had power to re-enter; the lessor in ejectment shall recover judgment. § 2. See title Ejectment.

Lessees, &c. filing a Bill in Equity, shall not have an injunction against Proceedings at Law, unless they shall, within forty days after answer filed, bring into Court such money as the lessors in their answer shall swear to be in arrear, over and above all just allowances, and costs taxed, there to remain till the hearing of the cause, or to be paid to the lessors on good security, subject to the decree of the Court; and in case such bill shall be duly filed, and execution executed, the lessors shall be accountable for only so much as they shall really make of the premises from the time of their re-entry; and if the same shall happen to be less than the usual Rent reserved, the lessees shall not be restored to the possession, until they shall make up the deficiency to the lessors. § 3.

If the tenant, at any time before trial, tender or pay into Court all arrears with costs, Proceedings on Ejectment shall cease. § 4.

Previous to the above statute the Courts, both of Law and Equity, had exercised a discretionary power of staying the lessor from proceeding at Law, in cases of forfeiture for non-payment of Rent, by compelling him to take the money really due to him. See Andr. 341: 2 Salk. 597: 8 Mod. 345: 10 Mod. 383: 2 Vern 103: Wil. 75: 2 Stra. 900.

By stat 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, It shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the tenements occupied by defendants, in an action on the case, for the use and occupation of what was held; and if in evidence on the trial any parol demise, or agreement, not by deed, whereon a certain Rent was reserved, shall appear, plaintiff may make use thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages. § 14.

Where any tenant for life dies before or on the day, on which any Rent was reserved, on any demise which determined on the death of such tenant for life, the executors or administrators of such tenant for life may, in an action on the case, recover of the under-tenants, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or if before such a day, then a proportion, of such Rent, according to the time such tenant for life lived of the last year, or quarter, or other time, in which the Rent was growing due; making all just allowances. § 15.

The above clause gives action on the case to executors of a lessor or landlord, being only tenant for his own life, where he dies before or on a Rent-day; and by his death the lease or demise determines: In which case the lessee or under-tenant, by the Common Law, might have avoided paying any Rent. 1 Inst. 162, b. in n.

If any tenant, holding tenements at a Rack-Rent, or where the Rent reserved be full three-fourths of the yearly value of the premises, who shall be in arrear for one year's Rent, desert the premises, and leave the same uncultivated or unoccupied, so as no sufficient distress can be had to countervail the arrears; it shall be lawful for two Justices of the Peace (having no interest in the premises) to go upon and view the same, and to affix, on the most notorious part, notice in writing, what day (at the distance of fourteen days at least) they will return to take a second view; and if, on such second view, the tenant, or some person on his behalf, shall not appear and pay the Rent in arrear, or there shall not be sufficient distress on the premises, the Justices may put the landlord in possession, and the lease to such tenants, as to any demise therein contained only, shall become void. § 16.

In case any tenant give notice of his intention to quit, and shall not accordingly deliver up the possession at the time in such notice contained, the tenant, his executors or administrators, shall pay to the landlord double the Rent which he should otherwise have paid. § 18.

The general remedy for Rent is by distress, under the restrictions and directions of the foregoing statutes; and, as to which, see further at length this Dict. title Distress: But there are also other remedies particularized by Blackstone, 3 Comm. c. 15, which it will be sufficient here to notice in a summary manner; as they are treated of under the several titles in this Dictionary.

By Action of Debt, for the breach of the express contract. This is the most usual remedy, when recourse is had to any action at all for the recovery of pecuniary Rents: to which species of render, almost all free services are now reduced since the abolition of the military tenures: But for a freehold Rent, reserved on a lease for life, &c., no Action of Debt lay, by the Common Law, during the continuance of the freehold, out of which it issued; for the Law would not suffer a real injury to be remedied by an action that was merely personal. 1 Rol. Abr 595. But by stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. § 4, an Action of Debt is given for Rents on leases for life or lives, as upon a lease for years: And by stat. 5 Geo 3. c. 17, which enables ecclesiastical persons to lease tithes and other incorporeal inheritances, Action of Debt is given (by § 3.) for recovery of Rent on such leases; and perhaps the text of these statutes extends to leases of incorporeal hereditaments. See 1 Inst. 47, a. in n.

An assise of mort d'ancestor, or novel disseisin will lie of Rents, as well as of lands; if the lord, for the sake of trying the possessory right, will make it his election to suppose himself ousted or disseised thereof. This is now seldom heard of; and all other real actions to recover Rent, being in the nature of Writs of Right, and therefore more dilatory in their progress, are entirely disused, though not formally abolished, by Law.—Such are the Writ de Consuetudinibus & Servitiis; the Writ of Cessavit; and the Writ of Right sur Disclaimer: As to which, see this Dict. under those titles; and see also title Gavelet. On the other hand, the Writ of Ne injuste vexes; (see that title;) and the Writ of Meine, (see Mean,) are remedies for the tenant against the oppression of the lord.

The Rent in a lease must be reserved to the lessor, or his heirs, &c., and not to a stranger. See 1 Inst. 213, b. The principle which gave rise to this rule is, that Rent is considered as a retribution for the land, and is therefore payable to those who would otherwise have had the land. It is to be observed, that remainder-men, in a settlement, being at first view neither feoffors, donors, lessors, nor the heirs of feoffors, donors, or lessors, there seems to have been, for some time after the Statute of Uses, a doubt, whether the Rents of leases, made by virtue of powers contained in settlements, could be reserved to them. In Chudleigh's case, 1 Rep. 139, it is positively said, that if a feoffment in fee be made to the use of one for life, remainder to another in tail, with several remainders over, with a power to the tenant for life to make leases, reserving the Rent to the reversioners, and the tenant for life accordingly makes leases; neither his heirs, nor any of the remainder-men, shall have the Rent. But, in Harcourt v. Pole, 1 Anders. 273, it was adjudged, that the remainder-men might distrain in these cases: And in T. Jones 35, the dictum in Chudleigh's case is denied to be Law. The determination in Harcourt v. Pole will appear incontrovertibly right, if we consider, that both the lessees and remainder-men derive their estate out of the reversion or original inheritance of the settler; and therefore the Law, to use Coke's expression in Whitlocke's case, 8 Rep. 71, will distribute the Rent to every one to whom any limitation of the use is made. 1 Inst. 214, a. in n.; and see Id. 213, b. in n.

III. Many of the decisions under this and the following Division are, by reason of the statute remedies against non-payment of Rent, become of less consequence than than they were at the time of their determination: But seem still worthy of being preferred; as shewing, in some measure, the evils remedied by those statutes.

With respect to the necessity of demanding Rent, there is a material difference between a remedy by re-entry, and a remedy by distress, for non-payment of the Rent; for where the remedy is by way of re-entry for non-payment, there must be an actual demand made, previous to the entry, otherwise it is tortious; because such condition of re-entry is in derogation of the grant, and the estate at Law being once defeated, is not to be restored by any subsequent payment: and it is presumed, that the tenant is there residing on the premises, in order to pay the Rent for preservation of his estate, unless the contrary appears by the lessor's being there to demand it: Therefore, unless there be a demand made, and the tenant thereby, contrary to the presumption, appears not to be on the land ready to pay the Rent, the Law will not give the lessor the benefit of re-entry, to defeat the tenant's estate, without a wilful default in him; which cannot appear without a demand hath been actually made on the land. Co. Lit. 201, b: Hob. 20, 331: 5 Co. 56: Dy. 51: Plowd. 70: 7 Co. 56: Vaugh. 32. This was at Common Law; but now see the stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2: ante, Div. II.; and this Dict. title Re entry.

So, if there had been a nomine pœnæ given to the lessor for non-payment, the lessor must demand the Rent before he can be entitled to the penalty. Hut. 114: Hob 207; 331: 7 Co 56.

Where the remedy for recovery of Rent is by distress, there needs no demand previous to the distress; though the deed says, that if the Rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, that the lessor may distrain; but the lessor, notwithstanding such clause, may distrain when the Rent becomes due. So it is, if a Rent-charge be granted to A., and if it be behind, being lawfully demanded, that then A. shall distrain; he may distrain without any previous demand, because this remedy is not in destruction of the estate, for the distress is only a pledge for payment of it, and the taking a distress is a legal demand of the tenant to pay the Rent, which was all that was required by the deed; and the tenant is not injured by the taking of the distress, because, on tender of the Rent, the pledges are immediately to be restored, or a writ of detinue lies after the quantum of the Rent has been settled in the replevin; whereas in the case of re-entry, or of a penalty, the tenant is really injured, either by loss of his estate, or the payment of a greater sum than the Rent, which cannot be restored on payment of the Rent; therefore he shall not be punished in such cases without a wilful default in him, which cannot otherwise appear than by the proof of a demand, which was not answered by the tenant. Hob. 207: Hut. 13, 23: Moor 883: 2 Rol. Abr. 426.

But this general distinction must be understood with these restrictions:

That if the King makes a lease, reserving Rent, with a clause of re-entry for non-payment, he is not obliged to make any demand previous to his re-entry; but the tenant is obliged to pay his Rent for the preservation of his estate, because it is beneath the King to attend his Subject to demand his Rent. 4 Co. 73: 5 Co. 56: Latch. 28: Moor 152: Dyer 87, 88.

But this exception is not to be extended to the Duchy lands, though they be in the hands of the King, for the King must make a demand before he can re enter into such lands; but this is by the stat. 1 H. 4. c. 18, which provides, that, when the Duchy lands come to the King, they shall not be under such government and regulations as the demesnes and possessions belonging to the Crown. Moor 149, 160.

So, if a prebendary make a lease, rendering Rent, and if the Rent be in arrear and demanded, that it shall be lawful for the prebendary to re-enter; if the reversion in this case comes to the King, the King must in this case demand the Rent, though he shall be by his prerogative excused of an implied demand, for the implied demand is the act of the Law, the other, the express agreement of the parties, which the King's prerogative shall not defeat: Therefore, in case of the King, if he makes a lease, reserving Rent, with a proviso, that if the Rent be in arrear for such a time, (being lawfully demanded, or demanded in due form,) that then the lease shall be void; it seems that not only the patentee of the reversion in this case, but also the King himself, whilst he continues the reversion in his own hands, is obliged to make an actual demand, by reason of the express agreement for that purpose. Dyer 87, 210.

But if the King, in cases where he need not make a demand, assigns over the reversion, the patentee cannot enter for non-payment, without a previous demand, because the privilege is inseparably annexed to the person of the King. 4 Co. 73: Moor 404: Cro. Eliz. 462: Dyer 87.

Another exception is, where the Rent is payable at a place off the land, with a clause that if the Rent be behind, being lawfully demanded at the place off the land, or where the clause is, that if the Rent be behind, being lawfully demanded of the person who is to pay it, that then he may distrain; in these cases, though the remedy be by distress only, yet the grantee cannot distrain without a previous demand: because here the distress and demand being not complicate, but different acts, to be performed at different places and times, the demand must be previous to the distress; for distress is an act of grace, not of common right, and therefore must be used in the manner that it is given. Hob. 208: 2 Rol. Abr. 426: Moor 83: Brownl. 171: But see Hutt. 23. contra.

But where the clause is no more than that if the Rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, (without saying at any place off the land, or of the person of the grantor,) that then the grantee may distrain, there needs no actual demand; because here the distress and demand is but one complicate act, the one included in the other, and all done at the time and place, viz. on the land; for the distress is in itself a lawful demand, therefore needs no actual demand previous to it; because all that was required by the deed was a lawful demand, which the distress in its own nature is. 2 Rol. Abr. 426: Hob. 208: and see Dyer 348.

And there seems to have been formerly another exception admitted, that where the remedy was by way of entry for non-payment, that yet there needed no demand, if the Rent were made payable at any place off the land; because they looked on the money payable off the land to be in nature of a sum in gross, which the tenant had at his own peril undertaken to pay; but this opinion has been entirely exploded, for the place of payment does not change the nature of the service, but it remains in its nature ture a Rent, as much [illegible] made payable on the land; therefore [illegible] is, that the tenant was ready to pay it, unless [illegible] overthrown by the proof of a demand; and without such demand, and a neglect or refusal, there is no injury to the lessor, consequently the estate of the lessee [illegible] be defeated. Plow. 70: [illegible] Cro. Eliz. 415, 435, 536.

But where the power of re-entry is given to the lessor [illegible] without any further demand, there it [illegible] undertaken to pay it, whether it [illegible] or not; and there can be no presumption [illegible] this case; because, by dispensing with the [illegible] put himself under the necessity of making [illegible] proof that he was ready to tender and pay the [illegible]

[illegible] there is another exception when the remedy is by distress, and that is, when the tenant was ready on the land [illegible] the Rent at the day, and made a tender of it; there [illegible] there must be a demand previous to the distress, [illegible] where the tenant has shewn himself ready on the [illegible] he has done all that in reason can be [illegible] of him; for it would put the tenant to endless [illegible] to oblige him every day to make a tender; it [illegible] altogether uncertain when the lessor will come for [illegible] when he has omitted to receive it the day he appointed by the lease for payment and receipt; wherefore [illegible] must expect the lessor, and be ready to pay [illegible] day appointed; or else the lessor may distrain for [illegible] any demand; so where the lessor has lapsed the day of payment, and was not on the land to receive it, he must give the tenant notice to pay it before he can distrain; for the tenant shall be put to no trouble where it appears that he has omitted nothing on his part. Hob. 207: 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

And where the tender was made by a tenant on the land at the day, there a demand on the land is sufficient to justify a distress after the day; because the demand in this case is of equal notoriety with the tender, and by parity of reason the tenant ought to take notice of such demand, as well as the lessor of the tender on the land. Hob. 207.

But if the tenant had tendered the Rent on the day to the person of the lessor, and he refused it, it seems, by the better opinion, that the lessor cannot distrain for that Rent, without a demand of the person of the tenant; because the demand ought to be equally notorious to the tenant, as the tender was to the lessor. Hob. 207: 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

[illegible] by which the tenant holds be personal [illegible] homage, fealty, &c. the demand must be of the [illegible] performed [illegible] person of the tenant; therefore a demand [illegible] would be improper. Hut. 13.

[illegible] the Rent [illegible] and the tenant be [illegible] of payment to pay the [illegible] he must [illegible] the tenant on the [illegible] the tenant, [illegible] was required [illegible] assise, after [illegible] of the person [illegible] damages [illegible] default in him; but in the case of a Rent-charge [illegible] tender by the tenant on the land, the grantee afterwards demand the Rent on the land, because [illegible] remedy by distress, which is no more than [illegible] for the Rent; and that being to be found and taken on the land, the grantee need only demand his Rent where he can find his remedy, which is on the land; but in this case if the grantee cannot find the tenant on the land to demand the Rent, he may, on the next feast on which the Rent is payable, demand all the arrears on the land; and if the tenant is not there to pay it, he has failed of his duty, and is guilty of a wilful default, which amounts to a denial; and that denial being a disseisin of the Rent, the grantee may have his assise, and by that shall recover the arrears. Cro. Car. 508: 7 Co. 57: Hob. 207: 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

But if there has been neither a tender of the Rent, nor a demand of the grantee on the day, there the grantee may afterwards demand the Rent on the land; because the tenant having omitted to do his duty by a tender on the day, he is still obliged to answer the legal demands of the grantee, which is well made on the land, because the Rent issues thereout; for where there is no tender on the day of payment, the Rent is due and payable every day afterwards; therefore a demand in the same manner as the Law requires is sufficient; consequently the non-payment, after a demand on the land, is a denial and disseisin, for which the grantee may have his assise. Lit. § 233: 7 Co. 57: 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

If a lease be made, reserving Rent, and a bond given for performance of covenants and payment of the Rent, the lessor may sue the bond without demanding the Rent. Cro. Eliz. 332: Cro. Car. 76: Hob. 8.

If there be several things demised in one lease, with several reservations, with a clause, that, if the several yearly Rents reserved be behind or unpaid in part, or in all, by the space of one month after any of the days on which the same ought to be paid, that then it shall be lawful for the lessor, into such of the premisses, whereupon such Rents, being behind, is or are reserved, to re-enter; these are in the nature of distinct demises, and several reservations; consequently there must be distinct demands on each demise to defeat the whole estate demised. Vaugh. 71, 72. But see stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2.

Also as to the necessity of a demand of the Rent, there is a difference between a condition and a limitation; for instance, if tenant for life (as the case was by marriage settlement with power to make leases for twenty-one years, so long as the lessee, his executors or assigns, shall duly pay the Rent reserved) makes a lease pursuant to the power; the tenant is at his peril obliged to pay the Rent without any demand of the lessor; because the estate is limited, continuing only so long as the [illegible] therefore [illegible] performance [illegible] ation, the [illegible] to a [illegible] which [illegible] Vid. [illegible] Co. 64 [illegible] the Exchequer, or to his Receiver in the country. 4 Rep. 73. And, strictly, the Rent is demandable and payable before the time of sun-set of the day whereon it is reserved; though, perhaps, not absolutely due till midnight. Co. Lit. 302: 1 Anders. 253: 1 Saund. 287: Prec. Chanc. 555: Salk. 578.

If the lessor dies before sun is set on the day upon which the Rent is demandable, it is clearly settled, that the Rent unpaid is due to his heir, and not to his executor: But if he dies after sun-set, and before midnight, it seems to be the better opinion, that it shall go to the executor, and not to the kin. 1 P. Wms. 178.

There is a material difference between the reservation of a Rent payable on a particular day, or within a certain time after; and the reservation of a Rent payable at a certain day, with a condition that, if it be behind, by the space of any given time, the lessor shall enter; in both cases, a tender on the first or last day of payment, or on any of the intermediate days, to the lessor himself, either upon or out of the land, is good: But, in the former case, it is sufficient, if the lessee attends on the first day of payment at the proper place; and if the lessor does not attend there to receive the Rent, the condition is saved. In the latter case, to save the lease, it is not sufficient that the lessee attends on the first day of payment, for he must equally attend on the last day. 10 Rep. 129, a: Plowd. 70, a, b: Cro. Eliz. 48. See 1 Inst. 202, a. in n.

The other effects of this question of the time of the Rent becoming due, are now in equal measure superseded by the statute regulations already stated and alluded to: But the following determinations on the subject may, notwithstanding, be requisite to be known.

The time for payment of Rent, and consequently for a demand, is such a convenient time before the sun-setting of the last day, as will be sufficient to have the money counted; but if the tenant meet the lessor on the land at any time of the last day of payment, and tenders the Rent, that is sufficient tender, because the money is to be paid indefinitely on that day, therefore a tender on the day is sufficient. Co. Lit. 202, a: Dalst. 44: Sav. 253: 4 Leon. 171: 1 Saund. 287.

If a lease is made, rendering Rent at Michaelmas, between the hours of one and five in the afternoon, with a clause of re-entry, and the lessor comes at the day, about two in the afternoon, and continues to five, this is sufficient. Cro. Eliz. 15. The demand may be by Attorney. 4 Leon. 479. But the power must be special, for such land and of such tenant. Yelv. 37: 1 Brownl. 138. Demand must be proved by witnesses, Dyer 68. Must be made of the precise sum due. 1 Leon. 305: Sav. 121: Mo. 307.

If a lease be made, reserving Rent, on condition, that if the Rent be behind at the day, and ten days after, (being in the mean time demanded,) and no distress to be found upon the land, that the lessor may re-enter; if the Rent be behind at the day, and ten days after, and a sufficient distress be on the land till the afternoon of the tenth day, and then the lessee takes away his cattle, and the lessor demands the Rent at the last hour of the day, and the lessee does not pay it, and there is not any distress on the land; yet the lessor cannot enter, because he made no demand in the mean time between the day of payment and the ten days, which by the clause he was obliged to do. Cro. Eliz. 63.—But see Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28: ante II.

As to the place of demanding Rent, there is a difference between a remedy by re-entry and distress; for when the Rent is reserved, on condition that, if it be behind, that the lessor may re-enter, in such case the demand must be upon the most notorious place on the land; therefore, if there be a house on the land, the demand must be at the fore-door thereof, because the tenant is presumed to be there residing, and the demand being required to give notice to the tenant that he may not be turned out of possession, without a wilful default, such demand ought to be in the place where the end and intention will be best answered. Co. Lit. 153, 201: 2 Rol. Abr. 428.

And it seems the better opinion, that it is not necessary to enter the house, though the doors be open, because that is a place appropriated for the peculiar use of the inhabitant, into which no person is permitted to enter without his permission; and it is reasonable that the lessor shall go no further to demand his Rent, than the tenant should be obliged to go, when he is bound to tender it; and a tender by the tenant at the door of the house of the lessor is sufficient, though it be open, without entering; therefore, by parity of reason, a demand by the lessor at the door of the tenant, without entering, is sufficient. Dalst. 59: Co. Lit. 201: 1 And. 27: 3 Leon. 4: and see Cro. Eliz. 15.

But when the demand is only in order for a distress, there it is sufficient, if it be made on any notorious part of the land, because this is only to entitle him to his remedy for his Rent; therefore, the whole land being equally debtor, and chargeable with the Rent, a demand on it, without going to any particular part of it, is sufficient. Co. Lit. 153.

REPARATIONS. A tenant for life or years may cut down timber-trees to make Reparations, although he be not compelled thereto; and where a house is ruinous at the time of the lease made, and the lessee suffers it to fall, he is not bound to rebuild it; and yet if he fell timber for Reparations, he may justify the same. Co. Lit. 54.

REPARATIONE FACIENDA, An ancient Writ which lies in many cases; one whereof is where there are tenants in common or joint-tenants of a house, &c. which is fallen into decay, and one is willing to repair it, but the others are not: In this case, the party willing to repair the same shall have this writ against the others. *F. A deed or will may stand good as to part, and be repealed for the rest. Style 241. And a defendant, in a suit, cannot repeal or revoke his Warrant of Attorney, given to an Attorney to appear for him, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 452: without first paying his bill. See title Attorney.

REPLEADER, Replacitare.] To plead again. See title Pleading I. 3. ad finem.

Repleader is to be had where the pleading hath not brought the issue in question, which was to be tried: Also, if a verdict be given where there was no issue joined, there must be a Repleader to bring the matter to trial, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 460.

In debt on a Sheriff's bond, for defendant's appearance in B. R. upon the return of the writ, the defendant pleaded, that he had appeared secundum, &c. and on this they were at issue; and there being a verdict for the plaintiff, a Repleader was allowed, because the appearance was not triable by a Jury, but by the record. 1 Leon. 90.

It was held, that, at Common Law, a Repleader was granted before trial, because a verdict did not cure an immaterial issue; but that now a Repleader ought never to be awarded before trial, because the fault in the issue may be helped by the Statutes of Jeofails: That if a Repleader is denied where it should be granted, or è converso, it is error; and the judgment in Repleader is general, (viz.) Quod partes replacitent: They must begin again at the first fault, which occasioned the immaterial issue; if the declaration and the bar, and the replication, be all ill, they must begin de novo; but if the bar be good, and the replication ill, they must begin at the replication; and no costs are allowed on either side; and a Repleader cannot be awarded after a default. 2 Salk. 579.

Though a Repleader is allowed after verdict; it has been adjudged, not to be awarded after demurrer: (But a Repleader hath formerly been granted after demurrer, and likewise after the demurrer argued;) and that a Repleader can never be awarded after a writ of error; but only after issue joined, &c. Latch. 147: 3 Lev. 440: *Mod. I. A REPLEVIN is, a remedy grounded and granted on a Distress; being a redeliverance of the thing distrained, to remain with the first possessor, on security (or pledges) given by him, to try the right with the distrainer, and to answer him in a course of Law.—Or, it is bringing the Writ called Replegiari facias, by him who has his cattle or goods distrained by another, and putting in surety to the Sheriff, that, on delivery of the thing distrained, he will prosecute the action against the distrainer. Lit. lib. 2. c. 12. § 219: 1 Inst. 145, b.

Replevin is a Writ, and usually granted in cases of distress, and is a matter of right; so that if a man grants a rent with clause of distress, and grants further, that the distress taken shall be irreplevisable, yet it may be replevied; for such restraint is against the nature of a distress, and no private person can alter the common course of the Law. Co. Lit. 145.

An Action of Replevin is founded upon, and is the regular way of contesting the validity of, a distress: being a redelivery of the pledge, or thing taken in distress, to the owner, by the Sheriff, or his Deputy: upon the owner's giving security to try the right of the distress, and to restore it, if the right be adjudged against him: after which, the distrainer may keep it, till tender made of sufficient amends, but must then redeliver it to the owner. 3 Comm. c. 9. p. 147, cites 1 Inst. 145: 8 Rep. 147.

In this writ, or action, both plaintiff and defendant are called Actors; the one, i. e. the plaintiff, suing for damages, and the other, the avowant, or defendant, to have a return of the goods or cattle. 2 Brownl. 84: Cro. Eliz. 799: 2 Mod. 149. Therefore, either party may carry down the cause; and if the defendant give notice, and do not go on to trial, the Court will give costs against him; for the same reason, the defendant may not move for judgment of nonsuit, unless the plaintiff has given notice of trial. Bull. N. P. 61.

the

That the avowant (the person making the distress) is in nature of a plaintiff, appears, 1st, from his being called an Actor, which is a term in the Civil Law, and signifies plaintiff; 2dly, from his being entitled to have judgment de retorno habendo, and damages, as plaintiff; 3dly, from this, that the plaintiff may plead in abatement of the avowry, consequently such avowry must be in nature of an action. Carth. 122: 6 Mod. 103: Yelv. 148.

The avowant, being in nature of a plaintiff, need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus est verificare, more than any other plaintiff need aver his count. Plowd. 263. See post. IV.

Nor shall he have a protection cast for him more than any other plaintiff. 2 Inst. 339.

But though an avowry be in nature of an action, yet one tenant in common may avow for taking cattle damage-feasant. Cro. Eliz. 530.

Replevin is an action founded on the right, and different from trespass. Carth. 74: Yelv. 148: Hob. 16: Cro. Eliz. 799.

It is now held, that, as no lands can be recovered in this action, it cannot, with any propriety, be considered as a real action; though the title of lands may incidentally come in question, as it may do in an action of trespass, or even of debt, which are actions merely personal. Finch's Law 316: and see Comb. 476: Fitzg. 109.

Formerly, when the party distrained upon intended to dispute the right of the distress, he had no other process by the old Common Law, than by a Writ of Replevin, replegiari facias; which issued out of Chancery, commanding the Sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice, in respect to the matter in dispute, in his own County-Court. F. N. B. 68. But, this being a tedious method of proceeding, the beasts, or other goods, were long detained from the owner, to his great loss and damage. 2 Inst. 139. For which reason, the Statute of Marlbridge, (52 Hen. 3.) c. 21, directs, that (without suing a writ out of the Chancery) the Sheriff immediately, upon plaint to him made, shall proceed to replevy the goods. See post. III. And, for the greater ease of the parties, it is farther provided, by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12, that the Sheriff shall make at least four Deputies in each county, for the sole purpose of making Replevins. See post. III. Upon application, therefore, either to the Sheriff, or one of his said Deputies, security is to be given; in pursuance of the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 2; 1st, That the party replevying will pursue his action against the distrainor; for which purpose he puts in plegios de prosequendo, or pledges to prosecute: 2dly, That if the right be determined against him, he will return the distress again; for which purpose he is also bound to find plegios de retorno habendo. See post. IV. Besides these pledges, the sufficiency of which is discretionary, and at the peril of the Sheriff, the stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 23, requires, that the officer, granting a Replevin on a distress for rent, shall take a bond with two sureties in a sum of double the value of the goods distrained, conditioned to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and for return of the goods; which bond shall be assigned to the avowant, or person making cognizance, on request made to the officer; and, if forfeited, may be sued in the name of the assignee. See post. IV. And certainly, as the end of all distresses is only to compel the party distrained upon, to satisfy the debt or duty owing from him, this end is as well answered by such sufficient sureties, as by retaining the very distress, which might frequently occasion great inconvenience to the owner; and that the Law never wantonly inflicts. The Sheriff, on receiving such security, is immediately, by his officers, to cause the chattels, taken in distress, to be restored into the possession of the party distrained upon; unless the distrainor claims a property in the goods so taken. For if, by this method of distress, the distrainor happens to come again into possession of his own property in goods, which before he had lost, the Law allows him to keep them, without any reference to the manner by which he thus has regained possession; being a kind of personal Remitter. See title Remitter. If, therefore, the distrainor claims any such property, the party replevying must sue out a writ de proprietate probanda, in which the Sheriff is to prove, by an inquest, in whom the property, previous to the distress, subsisted. Finch. L. 316. And if it be found to be in the distrainor, the Sheriff can proceed no farther; but must return the claim of property to the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas, to be there farther prosecuted, if thought advisable, and there finally determined. Co. Lit. 145: Finch. L. 450.

But if no claim of property be put in, or if (upon trial) the Sheriff's inquest determines it against the distrainor; then the Sheriff is to replevy the goods; (making use of even force, if the distrainor makes resistance; 2 Inst. 193;) in case the goods be found within his county. But if the distress be carried out of the county, or concealed, then the Sheriff may return, that the goods, or beasts, are eloigned; elongata, carried to a distance, to places to him unknown: and thereupon the party replevying shall have a writ of capias in withernam; in vetito, (or, more properly, repetito,) namio; a term which signifies a second or reciprocal distress, in lieu of the first which was eloigned. It is therefore a command to the Sheriff to take other goods of the distrainor, in lieu of the distress formerly taken, and eloigned, or withheld from the owner. F. N. B. 69, 73. So that here is now distress against distress; one being taken to answer the other, by way of reprisal, and as a punishment for the illegal behaviour of the original distrainor. For which reason, goods taken in withernam cannot be replevied, till the original distress is forthcoming. 3 Comm. c. 9. See post. III.

But, in common cases, the goods are delivered back to the party replevying, who is then bound to bring his action of Replevin; which may be prosecuted in the County-Court, be the distress of what value it may. 2 Inst. 139. But either party may remove it to the superior Courts of King's Bench or Common Pleas, by writ of recordari, or pone; 2 Inst. 23; the plaintiff at pleasure, the defendant upon reasonable cause; F. N. B. 69, 70: And also, if in the course of proceeding any right of freehold comes in question, the Sheriff can proceed no farther; so that it is usual to carry it up, in the first instance, to the Courts of Westminster-Hall. Finch. L. 317. Upon this action brought, and a declaration delivered, the distrainer, who is now the defendant, makes Avowry; that is, he avows taking the distress in his own right, or the right of his wife; and sets forth the reason of it, as for rent arrere, damage done, or other cause; or else, if he justifies in another's right as his bailiff or servant, he is said to make Cognizance: that is, he acknowledges the taking, but insists that such taking was legal, as he acted by the command of one who had a right to distrain; and on the truth and legal merits of this avowry or cognizance the cause is determined. If it be determined for the plaintiff, viz. that the distress was wrongfully taken; he has already got his goods back into his own possession, and shall keep them, and moreover recover damages. F. N. B. 69. See stat. 21 H. 8. c. 19: and post. IV. But if the defendant prevails, by the default or nonsuit of the plaintiff, then he shall have a writ de retorno habendo, whereby the goods or chattels (which were distrained and then replevied) are returned again into his custody; to be sold, or otherwise disposed of, as if no Replevin had been made. And at the Common Law, the plaintiff might have brought another Replevin, and so in infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. Wherefore the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2, restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from suing out any fresh Replevin; but allows him a judicial writ, issuing out of the original record, and called a Writ of Second Deliverance, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the like security as before. And, if the plaintiff be a second time nonsuit, or if the defendant has judgment upon verdict or demurrer in the first Replevin, he shall have a Writ of Return irreplevisable: after which, no Writ of Second Deliverance shall be allowed. 2 Inst. 340. But in case of a distress for rent arrere, the Writ of Second Deliverance is in effect taken away by stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7; which directs that, if the plaintiff be nonsuit before issue joined, then, upon suggestion made on the record in nature of an avowry or cognizance; or if judgment be given against him on demurrer, then, without any such suggestion; the defendant may have a writ to inquire into the value of the distress by a Jury, and shall recover the amount of it in damages, if less than the arrear of rent; or, if more, then so much as shall be equal to such arrear, with costs: or, if the nonsuit be after issue joined, or if a verdict be against the plaintiff, then the jury impannelled to try the cause shall inquire concerning the sum of the arrears, and the value of the goods, &c. distrained: and thereupon the defendant shall have judgment for such, or so much thereof, as the goods, &c. distrained amounted unto: And if (in any of these cases) the distress be insufficient to answer the arrears distrained for, the defendant may take a farther distress, or distresses. See 1 Vent. 64. But otherwise, if, pending a Replevin for a former distress, a man distrains again for the same rent or service, then the party is not driven to his action of Replevin, but shall have a writ of recaption, and recover damages for the defendant, the re-distrainer's, contempt of the process of the Law. F. N. B. 71. 3 Comm. c. 9. See title Recaption.

II. It is a general rule, that the plaintiff ought to have the property of the goods in him at the time of the taking: and not only a general property, which every owner hath, but also a special property, such as a person hath who hath goods pledged with him, or who hath the cattle of another to manure his lands, &c. is sufficient to maintain a Replevin, and in such cases either party may bring a Replevin. Co. Lit. 145: Winch 26.

A Replevin doth not lie of things which are feræ naturæ, as conies, hares, monkies, dogs, &c.; but if things, wild by nature, are made tame, or are reclaimed, so long as they continue in that condition, they belong to the person who hath the possession of them, and he may bring Replevin; and the general rule herein seems to be, that a Replevin lies for any thing that may by Law be distrained. 2 Rol. Abr. 430: Godb. 124. See title Distress.

We read of Canes replegiati, hounds replevied, in a case between the abbot of St. Alban's and Geoffrey Childwick, 24 Hen. 3.

Goods may be replevied by Writ, which is by the Common Law, or by plaint, which is by Statute Law, for the more speedy having again their cattle and goods.

A Replevin lies of a leveret; for it has animum revertendi; for the same reason it lies of a ferret; but it is said not to lie for a mastiff dog, though an action of trespass will. Br. Repl. 64: 2 Rol. Abr. 430. Sed quære?

Replevin lies of a swarm of bees. F. N. B. 68.

But not of trees, or timber growing; nor of things annexed to the freehold, because such things cannot be distrained; yet Replevin lies of certain iron belonging to the party's mill. F. N. B. 68.

So Replevin doth not lie of deeds or charters concerning lands; for they are of no value, but as they relate thereto. Bro. Repl. 34.

Nor of money, or leather made into shoes. Moor 394: 2 Brownl. 139.

If a mare in foal, a cow in calf, &c. are distrained, and they happen to bring forth their young, whilst they are in the custody of the distrainer, a Replevin lies for the foal, calf, &c. Bro. Repl. 41: F. N. B. 69: 1 Sid. 82.

Replevin lies for a ship; so for the sails of the ship. March 110: Raym. 232. Replevin lies not for goods taken beyond sea, though brought hither by the defendant afterwards. 1 Show. 91.

He that brings Replevin must have an absolute, or at least a special, property in the thing distrained; and therefore several men cannot join in a Replevin, unless they be joint-tenants, or tenants in common. Executors may have a Replevin of a taking in vitâ testatoris. So, if the cattle of a feme sole be taken, and she afterwards intermarry, the husband alone may have Replevin; but, if they join after verdict, judgment will not be arrested, because the Court will presume them jointly interested; (as they may be, if a distress be taken of goods of which a man and woman were joint-tenants, and afterwards intermarry;) the avowry admitting the property to be in the manner it is laid. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 53.

If I distrain another's cattle damage-feasant, and, before they are impounded, he tenders me sufficient amends; now, though the original taking was lawful, my subsequent detainment of them, after tender of amends, is wrongful, and he shall have an action of Replevin against me to recover them; in which he shall recover damages only for the detention, and not for the caption, because the original taking was lawful. F. N. B. 69. See 3 Comm. c. 9. But if the tender were before the taking, the taking is tortious: if after impounding, neither the taking nor detaining is tortious. And after the avowant has had return irreplevisable, yet if the plain. make sufficient tender, he may have his action of detinue for the detainer after. Bull. N. P. 60.

III. REPLEVIN may be made either by original writ of Replevin, at Common Law, or by plaint, under the Stat. of Marl. 52 H. 3. c. 21 : Co. Lit. 145 : F. N. B. 69.

The following are the words of this statute; "That if the beasts of any person be taken, and wrongfully withholden, the Sheriff, after complaint made to him thereof, may deliver them, without let or gainsaying of him that took the beasts, if they were taken out of liberties; and if the beasts were taken within any liberties, and the bailiff of the liberty will not deliver them, then the Sheriff, for default of those bailiffs, should cause them to be delivered."

The mischiefs before this act, as has been already hinted, were the great delay and loss the party was at, by having his beasts or goods withholden from him; as also that, when cattle were distrained and impounded within any liberty which had return of writs, the sheriff was obliged to make a warrant to the bailiff of the liberty to make deliverance; and there was another mischief, when the distress was taken without and impounded within the liberty. To remedy which, by this statute, the Sheriff, on plaint made to him without writ, may, either by parol or precept, command his bailiff to deliver the beasts or goods, that is, to make Replevin of them; and by these words (post querimoniam sibi fact') the Sheriff may take a plaint out of the County-Court, and make a Replevin presently, which he is to enter in the Court; as it would be inconvenient, and against the scope of the statute, that the owner, for whose benefit the statute was made, should tarry for his beasts till the next County-Court, which is holden from month to month. And, by this act, the Sheriff may hold plea in the County-Court on Replevin by plaint, though the value be of 40*s.* or above; and yet, in other actions, he shall only hold plea where the matter is under 40*s.* value. 2 Inst. 139: 13 Co. 31: 1 Keb. 205: Dalt. Sh 430.

Replevins by writ issue, properly, out of Chancery, returnable into the Courts of K. B. and C. B. at Westminster. F. N. B. 68 : Gilb. Distr. & Repl. 68. and post. V.

Replevins by plaint are made by the Sheriff by force of the above-mentioned statute of Marlebridge; by which he directed, on complaint made to him by the party, that his goods or cattle are distrained, to command his bailiff (which may be by parol or precept) to make deliverance; and which plaint may be taken at any time, and as well out of, as in Court. Bro. Repl. pl. 4 : Co. Lit. 145 : 2 Inst. 139.

It becomes the Sheriff's duty, on complaint, by parol or by precept to his bailiff, to replevy the cattle, which precept may be given before any County Court; but such plaint is afterwards to be entered by the party who made the complaint, and not by the Sheriff. 2 Com. Rep. 591.

The action of Replevin is of two sorts: 1. In the detinet; 2. In the detinuit. Where the party has had his goods redelivered to him by the Sheriff, upon a writ of Replevin, or upon a plaint levied before him, the action is in the detinuit; but where the sheriff has not made such Replevin, but the defendant still has the goods, the action is in the detinet: However, of late years, no action has been brought in the detinet, though there is much curious learning in the old books concerning it. The advantage the plaintiff has in bringing an action of Replevin in the detinet, in preference to an action of trespass de bonis asportatis, is, that he can oblige the defendant to redeliver the goods immediately, in case, upon making his avowry, they appear to be repleviable; but as, in such cases, he may more speedily have them delivered to him by application to the Sheriff in the common way, it is of no use; unless the distrainer have eloigned the goods, so that the Sheriff cannot get at them to make Replevin; and in such case the plaintiff may bring an action of Replevin in the detinet, and, after avowry, pray that the defendant may gage deliverance; or he may, upon return of an elongavit to the pluries writ of Replevin, have a writ to the Sheriff, commanding him to take other beasts, &c. of the defendant in withernam; But if the defendant, before the return of the withernam, appear to the writ of Replevin, and offer to plead non cepit, it shall stay the withernam; for the defendant shall not be concluded by the return of an elongavit, since the Sheriff can make no other return where he cannot find the thing to be replevied Bull. N. P. c. 4.

The Hundred Court, and Courts of Lords of Manors, may by prescription hold plea in Replevin, so may incidentally have power to replevy goods or cattle; but that, it seems, must be by process of the Court after a plaint entered, but not by parol complaint out of Court. Carth. 380.

Therefore, where in trespass for taking goods, &c. the defendant justified that the place where, &c. was a Hundred, and time out of mind had a Court of all actions, Replevins, &c. grantable in or out of Court, virtute cujus, &c. The question was, If good or not? And the reason of the doubt was, because the County-Court could not hold plea in Replevin at Common Law; but were enabled by the Statute of Marlebridge, which extends not to the Hundred Court, which is a Court derived out of the County-Court; but per Cur. clearly, Supposing they may grant them in Court, yet they cannot prescribe to grant them out of Court. 2 Salk. 580: 5 Mod. 252: Skin. 674: Carth. 380: 1 Ld. Raym. 219.

The Sheriff is obliged to grant Replevins in all such cases as they are allowed by Law; and the officer who takes the goods, by virtue of a Replevin issuing for what cause soever, is not liable to an action of trespass, unless the party, in whose possession the goods were, claims property in them: And note; that in all cases of misbehaviour by the Sheriff, or other officers, in relation to Replevins, they are subject to the control of the King's superior Courts, and punishable by attachment for such misbehaviour. Carth. 381.

And though the Sheriff may grant Replevins by plaint, and may proceed thereon in his County Court, yet if any thing touching freehold come in question, or ancient demesne be pleaded, the Sheriff can proceed no further; nor can any such proceedings be carried on in the Hundred Court, Court-Baron, or any other Court claiming a jurisdiction herein by prescription. 2 H. 7, 6: 4 H. 6, 30: Co. Lit. 145, b.

So, when the King is party or the taking is in right of the Crown, in these cases the Sheriff is to surcease. Bro. Repl. pl. 3: 1 Brownl. 3.

Where an Act of Parliament orders a distress and sale of goods, THIS is in nature of an Execution, and Replevin does not lie; but if the Sheriff grants one, yet it is not such a contempt as to grant an attachment against him; and and Powell, Justice, said, He remembered a case in the Exchequer, where a distress was taken for a fee-farm rent due to the King, and a Replevin granted, yet, on debate, no attachment was granted, though it was in the King's case. Trin. 12 W. 3. in C. B. Bradshaw's case. But it is now determined that, if goods be taken in execution, (for on a conviction before Justices,) the Sheriff shall not make Replevin of them; and if in such case the Sheriff should make Replevin, he would subject himself to an attachment; for goods are only replevisable where they have been taken by way of distress. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 53.

The following is the provision of stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12, already alluded to; "That the Sheriff shall at his first county-day, or within two months after he receives the patent, depute and proclaim in the shire-town four deputies to make Replevins, not dwelling twelve miles distant from one another; on pain to forfeit, for every month he wants such deputy or deputies, 5*l.* to be divided between the King and the prosecutor."

IV. 1. When the Sheriff makes Replevin he ought to take two kinds of pledges; plegii de prosequendo, by the Common Law, and plegii de retorno habendo, by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2; by which it is provided, "that Sheriffs or Bailiffs, from thenceforth, shall not only receive of the plaintiff pledges for pursuing the suit, before they make deliverance of the distress, but also for return of the beasts, if return be awarded; and if any take pledges otherwise, he shall answer for the price of the beasts, and the lord that distrains shall have his recovery by writ, that he shall restore to him so many beasts or cattle; and if the plaintiff be not able to restore, his superior shall restore."

In the construction hereof the following points have been ruled, and opinions holden:

If the Sheriff returns insufficient pledges, he shall answer according to the statute; for insufficient pledges are no pledges in Law; and such pledges must not only be sufficient in estate, viz. capable to answer in value, but likewise sufficient in Law, and under no incapacity; therefore infants, feme coverts, persons outlawed, &c. are not to be taken as pledges, nor are persons politic, or bodies corporate. Co. Lit. 145: 2 Inst. 340: 10 Co. 102.

In Replevin the Sheriff did not return any pledges, and after issue joined and found, it was moved, if they could be put in by the Court after verdict; and the Court held they might, notwithstanding the statute of Westm. 2, as before that statute the Court might take pledges on the omission of the Sheriff; and a diversity was taken between pledges for prosecuting, which were at Common Law, and pro retorno habendo given by this statute; and the Court held, that though on default of the Sheriff he was subject to the action of the party, that yet the taking of pledges by the Court did not make the judgment erroneous. Noy 156. And that the omission of pledges of the first description is error; but the omission of pledges de retorno habendo does not vitiate the proceedings, but subjects the Sheriff to an action. See 1 Jon. 419: Cro. Car. 594. And if the Sheriff omit to take bond, pursuant to the stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, (see ante I. and post.) an attachment will not be granted, but the remedy is by action against him. 2 Term Rep. 617.

A Replevin by plaint was sued in the Sheriff's Court in London, and pledges were found de retorno habendo, si, &c. this plaint was removed according to their custom into the Mayor's Court, and after into the King's Bench by certiorari, and there oyer of certiorari being demanded, the party declared in B. R. On this a return was awarded, and on an elongat' returned, a scire facias went against the pledges in the Sheriff's Court of London. On demurrer, the question was, Whether, this case being removed by certiorari, the pledges in the inferior Court are discharged, or whether they remain liable to be charged by this scire facias? It was adjudged, that the pledges were not discharged. Skin. 244: 2 Show. 421. Comb. 1, 2: 3 Mod. 56. S. C.

The plaintiff declared, that he distrained for 7*l.* 10*s.* rent, reserved on a lease, and that the defendant delivered the cattle without taking pledges; to which the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff in Replevin delivered to him 3*l.* 10*s.* for pledges, which he accepted; and on demurrer the Court held, that pledges being to be found to answer the party, if he had good cause of avowry, and to be answerable for amercement to the King, if nonsuited, or if it be found against him; the taking of money for a pledge was not lawful; and that although he might take money for pledges, yet he ought not to accept less than the plaintiff's demand; on which account the Court likewise held the plea vicious; but they agreed, that if the defendant had taken but one pledge, (if he had been sufficient,) it had been well enough. Cro. Car. 446: 1 Jon. 378.

A bond taken by the Sheriff, conditioned that if the party applying for the Replevin should appear at the next County-Court, &c. and prosecute his action with effect, and should make return of the thing replevied, if return should be adjudged, and save the Sheriff harmless, &c. is good in Law; and agreeable to the intent of the statute of Marlebridge which requires pledges or sureties, of which nature the obligors are; and this method of taking bond instead of pledges was said to be of ancient usage; and that in the old books plegii signified the same as sureties; and that there being a proper remedy on such bond, it differed from the case of taking a deposit or sum of money; but the Court agreed, that at Common Law this bond had been void, because it had been to save the Sheriff harmless in making Replevin by plaint, which he could not have done before the statute of Marlebridge. 1 Ld. Raym. 278: 2 Lutw. 686.

If in Replevin in an inferior Court, the condition of the bond is, if he prosecute his suit commenced with effect in the Court of, &c. and make return, &c. if a return be adjudged by Law, and it happens, that the plaintiff hath judgment in the Court below, which is afterwards reversed on a Writ of Error in B. R.; in such case, unless the party make a return, he forfeits his bond; for though he had judgment in the Court below, yet the words, "if he prosecute his suit commenced," &c. extend to the prosecution of the Writ of Error, which is part of the suit commenced in the Court below; and in this case, the taking such bond was held to be lawful, and said to be common practice. Carth. 248: 1 Show. 400: Filng. 158.

In debt on a Replevin-bond taken by the Sheriff, conditioned that if C. B. appear at the next County-Court, and and prosecute with effect for taking, &c. and make return, &c. if return be adjudged, and save harmless the Sheriff, &c. then, &c. the defendant after oyer pleaded, that at the next County-Court, held on such a day, he did appear, and prosecuted, &c. until it was removed by recordari, and did save the Sheriff harmless, but doth not say, that no retorn. habend' was adjudged; on demurrer, the Court inclined for the plaintiff; for the defendant should have said, that no return was adjudged at all; and though he prosecuted to the recordari, yet retorn. habend' might be adjudged afterwards; and the condition goes to any adjudication of return. Comb. 228.

An action was brought on a bond in Replevin to prosecute his suit with effect, and also to make return, &c. the defendant pleaded that E.G. did levy a plaint in Replevin in the Court before the Steward of Westminster, and that afterwards, and before the suit was determined, viz. such a day, &c. E. G. died; per quod the suit abated; the plaintiff replied, that true it is, that E. G. levied such a plaint against the defendant, who immediately afterwards exhibited an English bill in the Exchequer against the plaintiff in that suit, and by injunction hindered the proceedings below until such a day, &c. on which E. G. died; so that he did not prosecute his suit with effect: On demurrer to this replication the defendant had judgment; for, per Holt, this was a prosecution with effect, because there was neither a nonsuit or verdict against E. G. Carth. 519.

In action on a Replevin-bond common bail shall be filed. 1 Salk. 99. See title Bail.

Under stat. Westm. 2. c. 2, an action lies against the Sheriff, if he omit to take pledges, or if he take those that are insufficient; and the party may have a scire facias against the pledges, where the suit is in any Court of Record; and though in the County-Court, &c. a scire facias will not lie against the pledges, because these are not Courts of Record, and every scire facias ought to be grounded on a Record, yet there the party may have a precept, in nature of a scire facias, against the pledges. 1 Ld. Raym. 278: See 1 Comb. 1, 2: Com. 593.

In such action against the Sheriff, some evidence must be given, by the plaintiff, of the insufficiency of the pledges or sureties; but very slight evidence is sufficient to throw the proof on the Sheriff: for the sureties are known to him; and he is to take care that they are sufficient. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 60.

An action on the case was brought against a Sheriff for taking insufficient pledges on a Replevin; to which he pleaded not guilty; and a verdict being found against him, and judgment given thereon in the Court of C. B. on a Writ of Error brought in B. R.; it was objected, first, That an action on the case was not the proper remedy; 2dly, Supposing such action lay, that there ought to have been a scire facias, first sued out against the pledges. As to the first, the Court held, That the party distraining has, by the statute of Westm. 2, an interest in the pledges; and if the Sheriff omits to take such, or, which is the same thing, takes insufficient ones, he is aggrieved, and consequently entitled to his action; 2dly, That though a scire facias may be brought against the pledges, yet it does not follow from thence, that an action does not lie against the Sheriff, without any such previous scire facias; and such scire facias, which is only to certify the insufficiency of the pledges, is the less necessary in the present case; such insufficiency being set forth in the declaration, and found by the verdict. Mich. 12 Geo. 2. Rouse v. Patterson, in B. R: 16 Vin. Ab. 399. c. 4.

The following is the clause of the stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, alluded to ante, Div. I. "That officers, having authority to grant Replevins, shall, in every Replevin of a distress for rent, take in their own names, from the plaintiff and two sureties, a bond in double the value of the goods distrained; (such value to be ascertained by the oath of one or more witnesses not interested, which oath the person granting such Replevin is to administer;) conditioned for prosecuting the suit with effect, without delay, and for returning the goods, in case a return shall be awarded, before any deliverance be made of the distress; and such officer, taking such bond, shall, at the request and costs of the avowant, or person making conusance, assign such bond to the avowant, &c. by indorsing the same, and attesting it under his hand and seal, in the presence of two witnesses; which may be done without stamp, provided the assignment be stamped before any action brought thereon; and if the bond be forfeited, the avowant, &c. may bring an action thereupon in his own name, and the Court may by rule give such relief to the parties on such bond, as may be agreeable to justice; and such rule shall have the effect of a defeasance.

2. THE declaration in Replevin ought to be certain in setting forth the numbers and kinds of cattle distrained; because, otherwise, the Sheriff cannot tell how to make deliverance, if it should be necessary: yet an avowry may make that good, which would be bad on demurrer; both parties agreeing what the quantum and nature of the goods are. And the Sheriff may require the defendant to shew him the goods; and it would be a good return to say, "that no one came, on the part of the defendant, to shew the goods and chattels." Aleyn 32: Stile 71.

The declaration ought to be not only of a taking in a ville or town, but also "in a certain place called," &c.; but if the defendant would take advantage of this, he must demur to the declaration. Hob. 16.

A man may count of several takings, part at one day and place, and part at another; and if the plaintiff alleges two places, and the defendant answer only one, i. e. if the plea begin only as an answer to part, and be in truth but an answer to part, it is a discontinuance; and the plaintiff must not demur, but must take his judgment for that by nihil dicit; for if he demur or plead over, the whole action is discontinued. But if a plea begin with an answer to the whole, but is in truth only an answer to part, the whole plea is nought, and the plaintiff may demur. F. N. B. 68: Salk. 176. Where the defendant avows at a different place, in order to have a return, he must traverse the place in the Count, because his avowry is inconsistent with it; but where he does not insist upon a return, he may plead non cepit, and prove the taking to be at another place, for the place is material. Stra. 507. This is to be understood where the defendant never had the cattle in the place laid in the declaration at all; for if, on the plea of non cepit, the plaintiff prove that the defendant had the cattle in the place laid in the declaration, he will have a verdict; and if the fact be, that the defendant defendant took the cattle in another place, and only had them in the place mentioned in the declaration, in the way to the pound, he ought to plead that matter specially. Bull. N. P. c. 4. p. 54.

The general issue in Replevin is non cepit; upon which property cannot be given in evidence, for that ought to be pleaded; and if he plead property in himself, he may either plead it in bar, or in abatement; but if he pleads it in a stranger, it ought strictly to be pleaded in abatement; though it may likewise be pleaded in bar. 2 Vent. 249: 1 Salk. 5; Co. Lit. 145: 2 Lev. 92.

If the defendant plead property, whether it be in himself or a stranger, he shall have a return without making an avowry for it; but where the plea in abatement is of a collateral matter, such as cepit in alio loco, he must make an avowry in order to have a return; for he must shew a right to the property, or at least to the possession, to have a return; but the plaintiff ought not to traverse the matter of the conusance; and if he do, and demurrer be joined upon it, it is a discontinuance, and the defendant will have judgment. Salk 94: Bull. N P. 54.

The defendant may either avow the taking, or justify it; if he avow, it must be upon a right subsisting, such as rent-arrear, &c. and then he entitles himself to a return; but where, by matter subsequent, he is not to have the thing for which the distress was taken, there he will not be entitled to a return, and therefore cannot avow, but must justify; as, if a lord distrain for homage, and afterwards the tenant die, and then his executor bring Replevin But a man may distrain for one thing, and avow for another. 3 Co. 26, a: Bull. N. P. 54, 55.

By stat. 11 Geo. 2 c 19. § 22, any person distraining for rent, relief, heriot, or other service, may in Replevin avow or make cognizance generally, without setting out a title.

If a defendant make cognizance as bailiff to J. S. the plaintiff may traverse his being bailiff, for this is different from trespass quare clausum fregit; for there, if the defendant justify an entry by command, or as bailiff to one in whom he alleges the freehold to be, the plaintiff shall not traverse the command, because it would admit the truth of the rest of the plea, viz. that the freehold was in J. S. which would be sufficient to bar his action. But in trespass de bonis asportatis, e. g for taking the plaintiff's sheep, if the defendant justify the taking them, damage-feasant, as servant to J. S. the plaintiff may traverse the command or authority; for though J S. had a right to take the cattle, yet a stranger, who had no authority from him, would be liable. And there is a great difference between a justification in trespass, and an avowry in Replevin, in another respect, e. g. for an amerciament in a Court Leet; in the justification it is necessary for the defendant to set forth a warrant or precept, &c. but not to aver the matter of the presentment, because his plea is only in excuse: but in avowry he ought to aver, in fact, that the plaintiff committed the crime for which he is amerced; because he is an actor, and is to recover, which must be upon the merits. Bull. N. P. 55: cites 1 Salk. 107.

If an avowry be made for rent, and it appear by the defendant's own shewing, that part of it is not yet due, yet the avowry will be good for the residue. In such case the avowant must abate his avowry, quoad the rent not due, and take judgment for the rest; but if it appear that he has title only to two undivided parts of the rent, the avowry shall abate. 1 Saund. 285: Moor 281: Salk. 580. So, if the avowry be for part of a quarter or half a year's rent, he must shew how the rest is satisfied, or it will be bad. Hardw. 84: Comb. 346: 1 Saund. 191. In avowry for rent, and a nomine pœnæ together, without alleging any demand of rent, the avowry is good for the rent, though it will be ill for the penalty. 1 Saund. 286: Hob. 133. Avowry for rent due at a latter day, is no bar to avowry for rent due at a former day: but an acquittal under seal is; if not under seal, contrary proof will be admitted. Bull. N. P. 56. See further, this Dictionary, titles Avowry; Rent; Distress.

By stat. 21 H. 8. c. 19, If the avowry, cognizance, or justification be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuited, the defendant shall recover such damages and costs as the plaintiff would have had if he had recovered. But this act mentions only persons avowing or making cognizance for rent-service, customs, services, damage-feasant, or for other rent or rents; so that it does not extend to an avowry for a nomine pœnæ, or for an estray; and therefore, if in such case damages and costs were given, the judgment would be reversed. 1 Jon. 135; and see Bull. N. P. 57.

The avowant or defendant in Replevin, though not within the words, is plainly within the meaning of the stat. 4 Ann. c. 16; (by which a plaintiff in replevin, which to certain purposes an avowant is, may plead as many pleas as he may think necessary:) And accordingly, where some issues in Replevin are found for the plaintiff, which entitle him to judgment, and some for the defendant, the latter must be allowed the costs of the issues found for him, out of the general costs of the verdict; unless the Judge certify, that the plaintiff had a probable cause for pleading the matters on which those issues are joined. 2 Term Rep. 235.

If issue be joined on the property, the defendant may give in evidence the plaintiff's having the cattle, in mitigation of damages. Godb. 98. If the plaintiff plead riens arrere in bar to an avowry for rent, he cannot, upon such issue, give in evidence non-tenure. Bull. N. P. 59. In an avowry for rent, the plaintiff may plead a tender and refusal, without bringing the money into Court; because, if the distress were not rightfully taken, the defendant must answer the plaintiff his damages. Bull. N. P. 60.

V. The original writ of Replevin issues out of Chancery, and neither it nor the alias Replevin are returnable, but are only in nature of a justicies, to empower the Sheriff to hold plea in his County-Court, when a day is given the parties; but the pluries Replevin is always with this clause, vel causam nobis significes, and it is a returnable process. F. N. B. 69, 70: Doct. Pl. 313, 314: 2 Inst 139: Salk. 410. It is usual to take out the alias and pluries at the same time. Dalt. Sh. 273.

A pluries Replevin returned in Michaelmas Term, the defendant claimed property, and nothing was afterwards done, nor any appearance nor continuance till Easter Term following, at which term they appeared and pleaded, and judgment was thereupon given; though no continuance was between Michaelmas and Easter, yet this was not any discontinuance, because there is not any continuance till appearance; appearance; for the parties have not any express day in Court, and where there is not any continuance, there cannot be any discontinuance. 1 Rol. Abr. 485.

The pluries Replevin supersedes the proceedings of the Sheriff, and the proceedings are on that, and not on the plaint, as they are when that is removed by recordari; and though there is no summons in the writ, yet it gives a good day to the defendant to appear; and if he does not appear, then a pone issues, and then a capias. 1 Ld. Raym. 617.

Capias and process of outlawry lies in Replevin; for when on the pluries replegiari fac the Sheriff returns averia elongata, then a capias in withernam issues; and on that being returned nulla bona, a capias issues; and so to outlawry. Capias and process of outlawry in Replevin were given by stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c 17: 6 Mod. 84.

If on the pluries Replevin the Sheriff return, that the cattle are eloigned to places unknown, &c. so that he cannot deliver them to plaintiff, then shall issue a withernam, directed to the Sheriff, commanding him to take the cattle or goods of the defendant, and detain them till the cattle or goods distrained are restored to the plaintiff; and if, on the first withernam, a nihil be returned, there an alias and pluries Replevin issue; and so to a capias and exigent. F. N. B. 73.

The writ of withernam ought to rehearse the cause which the Sheriff returns, for which he cannot replevy the cattle or goods; so that it does not lie on a bare suggestion, that the beasts are eloigned, &c. F. N. B. 69, 73. See ante III.

If on the withernam the cattle are restored to the party who eloigned them, yet he shall pay a fine for his contempt. 2 Leon 174.

Cattle taken in withernam may be worked, or, if cows, may be milked; for the party has them in lieu of his own. 1 Leon. 220: Dyer 280.

And as the party is to have the use of the cattle, he is not to have any allowance made him for the expences he has been at in maintaining them. Owen 46: Cro. Eliz. 162: 3 Leon. 235.

Scire facias against an executor, reciting, that where Replevin was brought against his testator for a cow, and judgment against him de retorno habendo, which was not executed, that he should shew cause why he should not have execution. The executor pleads plene administravit, upon which the plaintiff demurred; and Wyld, Justice, said, that upon the judgment the cow is in the custody of the Law, therefore he ought to have execution; but the doubt is, because the Replevin is determined by the death of the party; yet (by him and Rainsford, being only in Court) the plaintiff shall have execution, for the defendant cannot be prejudiced; for if the Sheriff return averia elongata, he shall not have a withernam, but of the goods of the testator; or, if there are no goods of the testator, the Sheriff can take nothing, but shall return nulla bona, and then the plaintiff hath his ordinary way to charge the defendant, if he hath made a devastavit; and it was adjudged for the plaintiff. Pasch. 20 C. 2. in B. R. Sucklin v. Green.

W. sues a Replevin, B. removes it by recordari into the King's Bench, the plaintiff does not declare, and on that a return awarded to H. upon which the Sheriff returns averia elongata, and then a withernam was awarded and executed; and now the plaintiff comes and prays he may be admitted to declare, and prays a deliverance of the withernam; and it was testified by the clerks, that on the plaintiff's submission to a fine for not declaring, and that being imposed on him by the Judges, he shall have deliverance of the withernam; and a fine of 3*s.* 4*d.* being accordingly imposed on the plaintiff, he then declared, and had deliverance. Hob. 50. The course of B. R. is contrary to that of C. B.

If, on an elongata returned, the Sheriff's cattle are taken in withernam, yet on the defendant's appearance, and pleading non cepit, on claiming property, the defendant shall have his cattle again; and if they are eloigned, a withernam against the plaintiff; for if the property or taking be in question, there is no reason that the plaintiff should have the defendant's cattle. 1 Ld. Raym. 614.

The withernam is but mesne process, and cannot be on execution, because it is granted before judgment. 1 Ld. Raym. 614: and see Comb. 201: Salk. 582.

VI. The Writ of Second Deliverance is a judicial Writ depending upon the first original, and is given by stat. Westm 2. 13 E. 1. c. 2; which recites, that, after the return is awarded, the party distrained does replevy again, and so the judgments given in the King's Courts take no effect; wherefore it enacts, that when return is awarded to the distrainer, the Sheriff shall be commanded by a judicial Writ to make return, in which it shall be expressed that the Sheriff shall not deliver them without writ making mention of the judgment: And it further enacts, that if the party make default again, or, for any other cause, return of the distress be awarded, being now twice replevied, the distress shall remain irreplevisable. See ante I.

If a defendant in Replevin has return awarded on nonsuit of a plaintiff, on which he sues a writ de retorno habendo, upon which Writ the Sheriff returns averia elongata per querentem, and on this a withernam is awarded, and on the withernam the defendant has tot catalla to him delivered of the goods of the plaintiff, and thereupon the plaintiff sues a Second Deliverance; he shall sue it for the first distress taken, not for the withernam; and this by the nature and form of the Writ of Second Deliverance. 2 Rol. Abr. 435.

If a retorno habendo be awarded to the Sheriff after a Writ of Second Deliverance prayed by plaintiff, this is a supersedeas to the retorno habendo, and closes the Sheriff's hand from making any return thereto; and if the Sheriff will not execute the Writ of Second Deliverance, the party has his remedy against him. Dyer 41: Dalt. Sh 275.

The statute of Westm. 2, gives the Writ of Second Deliverance out of the same Court where the first Replevin was granted, and a man cannot have it elsewhere; for if he may, then he shall vary from the place limited as to this by the statute. Plowd. 200.

In Replevin a defendant avowed, that the plaintiff being nonsuited brought a Writ of Second Deliverance, whereupon it was moved to stay the Writ of Inquiry of Damages; And per Curiam, this is a supersedeas to the retorno habendo, but not to the Writ of Inquiry of Damages; for these Damages are not for the thing avowed for, but are given by stat. 21 H. 8. c. 19, as a compensation for the expence and trouble the avowant has been at. 1 Salk. 95. See Palm. 403: Latch, 72.

Error of judgment in C. B. in a Second Deliverance; on demurrer in pleading, the error assigned was, because there was not any Writ of Second Deliverance certified; and and in nullo est erratum being pleaded, it was moved not to be material, because it is awarded on the roll, and the parties had appeared and pleaded to it; but it was adjudged ill, and reversed for that cause; for there ought to be a writ, and if it vary from the declaration in the Replevin, it shall be abated. Cro. Jac. 424.

No Second Deliverance lies after a judgment on a demurrer, or after verdict, or confession of the avowry; but, in all these cases, the judgment must be entered with a return irreplevisable; but on a nonsuit, either before or after evidence, a Second Deliverance will lie, because there is no determination of the matter, and there a Writ of Second Deliverance lies to bring the matter in question; but, in the case of demurrer and verdict, the matter is determined by confession of the party. 2 Lill. Reg. 457.

If the plaintiff's Writ abates, he may have a new Writ, and is not put to his Writ of Second Deliverance. Com. 122.

If the plaintiff in Replevin be nonsuited for want of delivering a declaration, if it happened through sickness of the person employed to prosecute, the Court will order the defendant to accept a declaration on payment of costs; otherwise plaintiff would be remediless, the Writ of Second Deliverance being taken away by stat. 17 C. 2. c. 7, in case of distresses for rent arrear. See ante I.

If the person taking the goods claims property, the Sheriff cannot make Replevin of them; for property must be tried by Writ, and in this case the plaintiff may have the Writ de proprietate probandâ to the Sheriff; and if it be found for the plaintiff, then the Sheriff is to make Replevin; if for the defendant, then he is to proceed no further; but as this is but an inquest of office, though the property be found in the defendant, yet the plaintiff is not concluded, for he may still have his action of Replevin, or of trespass: But if in an action of Replevin the defendant plead property, and it be found for him, the plaintiff is concluded: And if the Sheriff return the claim of property, yet shall it proceed in C. B. where the property shall be put in issue, and finally tried. Co. Litt. 145, b: F. N. B. 77: Dyer 173: Com. 592: Bull. N. P.

None but he who is party to the Replevin shall have the Writ de proprietate probandâ; so that if on a Replevin the beasts of a stranger are delivered to the plaintiff, such stranger, being no party to the Replevin, shall not have this Writ. 14 Hen. 4. 25: 2 Roll. Abr. 431.

The Sheriff is to return the claim of property on the pluries, before which time the Writ de proprietate probandâ does not issue, for it recites the pluries. Reg. 83: Com. 595.

The Writ de proprietate probandâ is an inquest of office, and the Sheriff is to give notice to the parties of the time and place of executing it. Dalt. Sh 274.

If the defendant claims property in Replevin, the plaintiff may have the Writ de proprietate probandâ without continuance of the Replevin, though it be two or three years after; because, by claim of property, the first suit is determined. Moor 403.

If the plaintiff has property, and omits to claim it before the Sheriff, he may notwithstanding plead property in himself or in a stranger, either in abatement or in bar; though it was formerly held, that property in a stranger could only be pleaded in abatement. Cro. Eliz. 475: Wimb. 26: 1 Show. 402: Salk. 594: 6 Mod. 81.

In Replevin the defendant in his avowry pleads, that the beasts taken belong to a third person, and not to the plaintiff, therefore prays a return; to which the plaintiff demurs; for on the avowant's own shewing he ought not to have return, having admitted the property of the beasts to be in another; but judgment was given for the defendant; for the prior possession was in him, and he hath a right against all others but the right owner, and the plaintiff by his demurrer hath admitted, that he hath no property in them. Comb. 477: See 6 Mod. 68, 139: 2 Mod. 242.

VII. The retorno habendo is a judicial Writ, which lies for him who has avowed the distress, and proved the same to be lawfully taken; or where, on removal of the plaint into the Courts above, the plaintiff, whose cattle were replevied, makes default, or does not declare or prosecute his action; and thereby becomes nonsuited, &c. and by this Writ the Sheriff is commanded to make a return of the cattle to the defendant in the Replevin. 35 Hen. 6. 40: Dyer 280: Co. Litt. 145. See ante I.

A bailiff who makes conusance may have judgment of a return, and consequently a Writ de retorno habendo grounded on such judgment. Co. Ent. 59.

If a defendant hath a return awarded him, and he sueth a writ de retorno habendo, and the Sheriff return on the pluries, quod averia elongata sunt, &c. he shall have a scire facias against the pledges, &c. according to the statute of Westm. 2; and if they have nothing, then they shall have a withernam against the plaintiff, of the plaintiff's own cattle. F. N. B. 172.

Since the stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7, (see ante I,) it has been the custom, as it was before, to enter judgment for a retorno habendo: but, notwithstanding, the defendant may enter a suggestion on that statute, and a Writ of Second Deliverance will be no supersedeas to such Writ. The whole fact is to be proved, and may be litigated in the Writ of Inquiry, directed by that statute. Bull. N. P. 58. And if the Jury, impannelled to try a cause in Replevin, omit to inquire the value of the rent arrear, or of the distress, according to the directions of the said statute, it cannot be supplied by a Writ of Inquiry, because the statute confines the inquiry to the Jury impannelled in the cause. Therefore, in such case, the defendant must take judgment de retorno habendo at Common Law: but it is not the same upon stat. 21 H. 8. c. 19; (see ante IV. 2;) nor upon stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, if the defendant avow as overseer for a distress for a poor's rate; because, if the Jury had inquired, it had been as an inquest, on which no attaint would have lain, and the statute does not tie it up to the same Jury. And if the plaintiff, being nonsuited, bring a Writ of Second Deliverance, though it will be a supersedeas to the Writ de retorno habendo, yet it will be none to the Writ of Inquiry. Bull. N. P. 58.

Return irreplevisable is a judicial Writ, directed to the Sheriff, for the final restitution or return of cattle unjustly taken by another, and so found by verdict, or after a nonsuit in a Second Deliverance. 2 Roll. Abr. 434.

If the plea be to the writ, or any other plea be tried by verdict, or judged on demurrer, return irreplevisable shall be awarded, and no new Replevin shall be granted, nor any Second Deliverance by the stat. West. 2, but only on nonsuit. 2 Inst. 340: Dyer 280. See I. V.

If, on issue joined in Replevin, the plaintiff does not appear on the trial, being called for that purpose, yet return irreplevisable shall not be awarded, as in case of a verdict's being given, but the party may have a Writ of of Second Deliverance, as well as if it had been a nonsuit before declaration, or appearance. 3 Leon. 49. See ante VI.

If a man has return irreplevisable, and a beast die in the pound, he may distrain anew; so, if the beast die before judgment. Hob. 61.

If return irreplevisable be awarded, the owner of the cattle may offer the arrears; and if the defendant refuses to deliver the distress, the plaintiff may have his action of detinue, because the distress is only in nature of a pledge. 1 Ld Raym. 720.

By the statute of Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 17, If the party who distrains, conveys the distress into any house, park, castle, or other place of strength, and refuses to suffer them to be replevied, the Sheriff may take the posse comitatus, and, on request and refusal, break open such house, castle, &c. and make deliverance; and this was a necessary law so soon after the irregular time of Hen. III. 2 Inst. 193: 5 Co. 93: Dalt. Sh 373.

If the Sheriff return, that the beasts are inclosed in a park among savages, or inclosed in a castle, &c. he shall be amerced, and another Writ of Replevin shall be awarded; for he ought to have taken the posse com. for this was a denial. F. N. B. 257.

If the Sheriff return, quod mandavi balliwo libertati, &c. qui nullum dedit mihi responsum, or that the bailiff will not make deliverance of the cattle, these are not good returns; for by statute of Westm. 1, the Sheriff, on such return made to him by the bailiff, ought presently to enter into the franchise, and make deliverance of the cattle taken. F. N B. 157.

If a man sue a Replevin in the County-Court without writ, and the bailiff return to the Sheriff, that he cannot have view of the cattle to deliver them, the Sheriff, by inquest of office, ought to inquire into the truth thereof; and if it be found by a Jury, that the cattle are eloigned, &c. the Sheriff in the County-Court may award a withernam to take the defendant's cattle; and if the Sheriff will not award a withernam, then the plaintiff may have a Writ out of Chancery, directed to the Sheriff, rehearsing the whole matter, commanding him to award a withernam, &c.; and he may have an alias, and after a pluries, and an attachment against the Sheriff, if he will not execute the King's command. F. N. B. 158.

If the Sheriff return, quod averia elongata ad locum incognitum, this is a good return, and the party must pursue his writ of withernam; but if the Sheriff return averia elongata ad locum incognitum infra comitatum meum, he shall be amerced, for the Law intends that he may have notice in his county. Bro. Retur. de Br. pl. 100.

If in Replevin the Sheriff return, quod averia mortua sunt, that is a good return. Bro. Retur. de Br. pl. 125.

If the Sheriff be shewn a stranger's goods, and he takes them, an action of trespass lies against him, for otherwise he could have no remedy; for being a stranger he cannot have the Writ de proprietate probanda, and were he not entitled to this remedy, it would be in the power of the Sheriff to strip a man's house of all his goods; but Keilway seems to hold, that the action lies more properly against the person who shews the goods. 2 Roll. Abr. 552: Com. 596.

The Sheriff comes to make Replevin of beasts impounded in another man's soil; if the place be inclosed, and has a gate open to the inclosure, he cannot break the inclosure, and enter thereby, when he may enter by the open gate; but if the owner hinder him so that he cannot go by the open gate for fear of death, he may break the inclosure, and enter there. 10 Hen. 6. 28: 2 Roll. Abr. 552.

The Sheriff is to return, that the cattle are eloigned, or that no person came to [illegible] or a delivery; but he cannot return, that [illegible] the cattle, because it is supposed in the Writ [illegible] the ground of it, which the Sheriff cannot falsify. 1 Ld. Raym. 613: 1 Lutw. 581.

For further information on this subject, see Vin. Abr. title Replevin.

REPLEVISH, To let one to mainprise on surety. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 11.

REPLICATION, Replicatio.] An exception or answer made by a plaintiff to a defendant's plea. And it is also that which the complainant replies to the defendant's answer in Chancery, &c. West. Symb. par. 2. See title Pleading I. 2: and as to Replications in criminal cases, see Pleading I.

The Replication is to contain certainty, and not vary from the declaration, but must pursue and maintain the cause of the plaintiff's action; otherwise it will be a departure in pleading, and going to another matter. Co. Litt. 304. Though as a faulty bar may be made good by the Replication; so sometimes a Replication is made good by a rejoinder; but if it wants substance, a rejoinder can never help it. 2 Lill. Abr. 462. A Replication being entire, and ill in part, is ill in the whole: but if there be three Replications, and one is superfluous, and the other two sufficient, and the defendant demurs generally, the plaintiff may have judgment on those which are sufficient. 1 Saund. 338: 2 Saund. 17.

Where the defendant pleads in bar, and the plaintiff replies insufficiently; if the defendant demurs specially on the Replication, and the bar is insufficient, if the action be of such a nature that a title is set forth in the declaration, or count, as in a formedon, &c. judgment may be given for the plaintiff on the insufficient bar of the defendant: and where the title doth not appear till set forth in the Replication, and that is insufficient, there judgment shall be had for the defendant for the ill Replication. Godb. 138: 1 Leon. 75.

A Replication concludes either with hoc paratus est verificare, or to the country. In action on a bond to pay all sums expended about certain business, &c. on the defendant's pleading he paid all; the plaintiff replies that he had not, et hoc paratus, &c. Upon a demurrer it was held, that the plaintiff ought to have concluded to the country; because there is an affirmative and negative, and if he might be admitted to aver his Replication thus, there would be no end in pleading. Raym. 9[illegible].

But where new matter is offered in a Replication, the plaintiff should aver his plea, so as to give the defendant an opportunity to rejoin. 4 Mod. 283: Lutw. 98.

REPORT, from Lat. reportare.] A public relation, or bringing again to memory, of cases judicially adjudged in Courts of Justice, with the reasons as delivered by the Judges. Co. Litt. 293. See title Law Books.

There are likewise Reports, when the Court of Chancery, or other Court, refer the stating some case, settling some account, &c. to a Master of Chancery, or other referee, his certificate therein is called a Report. This Report may be excepted to, disproved, or over-ruled; or otherwise it is confirmed and made absolute, by order of the Court. See 3 Comm. 453.

A Master in Chancery, having an order of reference, is to issue his summons for the parties to attend him at a certain time and place; when and where they may come with their counsel, clerk, or solicitor, to defend themselves, and maintain, or object against, his Report, or certificate, &c. And Masters are to draw their Reports briefly and as succinctly as may be, preserving the matter clearly for the judgment of the Court; without recital of the several points of the order of reference, or the debates of Counsel before them; unless in cases doubtful, when they may shortly represent the reasons which induce them to what they do.

None shall take any money for Report of an order, or cause, referred to them by any Judges, on pain of 100*l.* &c. so as not to prohibit the clerk from taking 12*d.* for the first, and 2*d.* for every other sheet. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10.—But by stat 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 12, Masters in Chancery, may take for every Report, or certificate, made on an order on hearing of a cause, 20*s.* And for any other Report, &c. made on petition or motion, 10*s.* And their clerks shall have 5*s.* for writing every Report. See further, title Reference.

A Report by a Master in Chancery, is as a judgment of the Court. 1 P. Wms. 653.

By a standing order of the Court of Chancery, made by the Lords Commissioners, in the 4 W. & M. it was directed, that all Reports should be filed within four days after the making, otherwise no decree or proceedings to be had thereupon; but the Register reporting, that it was sufficient if the Report were filed before any proceedings had thereupon, though not done within four days after making, Ld. C. J. King, agreed thereto. And the Court took it to be well enough; though, in this case, the motion to confirm the Report, nisi causa, was made the same day that the Report was filed. 2 P. Wms. 517.

It is not usual to confirm Reports of Receiver's accounts, per Master of the Rolls. 2 P. Wms. 661.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST, Repositio Forestæ, i. e. a reputting to.] A Statute, whereby certain Forest-grounds, being made purlieu. on view, were, by a second view, put to the Forest again. Manw. par. 1.

REPOSITORIUM, Lat.] A storehouse or place wherein things are kept; a warehouse. Cro. Car. 555.

REPRESENTATION, Representatio.] The personating another: There is an heir by Representation, where a father dies in the life of the grandfather, leaving a son, who shall inherit his grandfather's estate, before the father's brother, &c. Bro. Abr. 303. Also, executors represent the person of the testator. to receive money and assets. Co. Litt. 209. See titles Heir; Executor.

REPRIEVE, from the Fr. Repris.] The taking back or suspending a prisoner from the execution and proceeding of Law for that time. Terms de Ley. See title Execution of Criminals.

REPRISAL, Reprisale; Reprisalia.] The taking one thing in satisfaction for another, derived from the Fr. Reprise; and is all one in the Common and Civil Law.

Reprisals are ordinary and extraordinary; ordinary Reprisals are to arrest and take the goods of merchant-strangers within the realm; and the other is for satisfaction out of the realm, and is under the Great Seal, &c. Lex Mercat. 120.

If any person be killed, wounded, spoiled, or any ways damaged in a hostile manner, in the territories of any Potentate, to whom letters of request are transmitted, and no satisfaction be made, there is no necessity to resort to the ordinary prosecution, but Letters of Reprisal issue forth; and the Prince against whom the same are issued is obliged to make satisfaction out of the estates of the persons committing the injuries; and in case of a deficiency there, it will then be adjudged a common debt on his country. But where misfortunes happen to persons, or their goods, residing in a foreign country in time of war, Reprisals are not to be granted: In this case they must be contented to sit down under the loss, for they are at their liberty to relinquish the place on the approach of the enemy, when they foresee the country is subject to spoil: and if they continue, they must partake of the common calamity. Lex Mercat.

Reprisals may be granted on illegal prosecutions abroad; where wrong judgment is given in matters not doubtful, which might have been redressed, either by the ordinary or extraordinary power of the country or place, and which was apparently denied, &c. See further, title Letters of Marque: and as to Reprisal of Goods, see title Recaption.

REPRISES, Fr. Resumptions, taking back.] Is used for deductions and payments out of a manor or lands, as rent-charges, annuities, &c. Therefore when we speak of the clear yearly value of a manor, or estate, or land, we say it is so much per annum, ultra Reprises, besides all Reprises.

REPUBLICATION OF WILLS; See title Will.

REPUGNANT, Repugnans.] What is contrary to any thing said before: Repugnancy in deeds, grants, indictments, verdicts, &c. make them void. 3 Mod. 135. See title Deeds, &c.

The Common Law abhors Repugnances, and all incongruities; but the former part of a deed, &c. shall stand, where the latter part is repugnant to it. Jenk. Cent 251, 256.

Where contrarieties are in several parts of deeds or fines, the first part shall stand; in wills, the last, if the several clauses are not reconcileable. Jenk. 96 pl. 86.

In contracts, gifts, verdicts, evidences, &c. where direct contrarieties are for the same thing at the same time, all is void. Jenk 96. pl. 86.

A. made B. and C. executors, provided that C. shall not administer his goods. B. and C. brought debt on bond, as executors. It was held, that the action was well brought; for the proviso is void. Dy 3. b. a. pl 7, &c.

A. gives lands to B. in tail, provided A. shall take the profits of part for 1000 years; the proviso is void; for in common presumption it takes away the benefit and interest of the grantee in that parcel. Cro. Eliz. 35.

An award, that each shall give the other a general release within four days after the award; proviso that if either disliked the award within 20 days after made, and should pay to the other within the said twenty days 10*s.* that then the arbitrement should be void. the proviso is repugnant, and judgment for plaintiff. Cro. Eliz. 291. See title Award.

A proviso, good in the commencement, may by consequence become repugnant, as grant of rent by deed for life, life, provided that it shall not charge his person; the proviso is good, but if the rent be arrear, and the grantee die, his executors shall charge the person of the grantor in debt; for otherwise they be remediless; and so it is now repugnant, by consequence void. 6 Rep. 41, b. See further, titles Condition; Proviso.

REPUTATION, [Reputatio] Is defined by Coke to be vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. 4 Rep. 104. That is not Reputation which this or that man says; but that which generally hath been, and many men have said or thought. 1 Leon. 15.

A little time is sufficient for gaining Reputation, which needs not a very ancient pedigree to establish it, for general acceptation will produce a Reputation. Cro. Jac. 308. [illegible] been held, that common Reputation cannot be intended of an opinion which is conceived of four or five years standing; but of long time. [illegible] must be averred to induce a Reputation. [illegible] Abr. 64.

[illegible] parcel of a manor, though not really [illegible] 1 Vent. 51: 2 Mod. 6[illegible]: 3 Nels. abr. 137. And there [illegible]

REPUTATION OF FAME, Is under the protection of the Law, as all persons have an interest in their good name; and scandal and defamation are injurious to it, though defamatory words are not actionable, otherwise than as they are a damage to the estate of the person injured. Wood's Inst. 37.

The security of Reputation, or good name, from the arts of detraction and slander, are rights to which every man is entitled by reason and natural justice; since, without these, it is impossible to have the perfect enjoyment of any other advantage or right. 1 Comm. 134. See title Liberty.

REQUEST, of things to be done: Where one is to do a collateral thing, agreed on making a contract, there ought to be a Request to do it. 2 Lil. Abr. 464. If a duty is due, it is payable without Request; on promise to pay a duty precedent on Request, there needs no actual Request; but on a promise for a penalty, or collateral sum, there should be an actual Request before the action is brought. Cro. Eliz. 74: 1 Saund. 33: 1 Lev. 289.

If a debt is before a promise, a Request is not necessary, for then a Request is not any cause of the action; though, upon a promise generally to pay on Request, the action arises on Request, and not before. Cro. Jac. 2[illegible]1: 1 Lev. 48. See [illegible].

Action of [illegible] money due on a bond, may be brought without alleging a special Request. Cro. Eliz. 229. 523.

A man promises to redeliver, on Request, such goods as were delivered to him; if an action of detinue is brought, the plaintiff need not allege a special Request, because the action is for the thing itself: but if an action on the case is had for these goods, then the Request must be specially alleged; as it is not brought for the thing itself, but for damages. Sid. 66: 3 Salk. 309.

If a promise is made to pay money to the plaintiff, on Request, no special Request is required: But where there are mutual promises between two persons to pay each other money on Request, if they do not perform such an award, the Request is to be specially alleged. And if there is a promise to pay money to a man on Request, and he dies before any Request made, it shall be paid to his executors; but not till Request made. 3 Salk. 09: 3 Bulst. 259.

Where a person promises to pay a precedent duty, the general allegation is sufficient, because there was a duty without a promise: As for instance; if one buys or borrows a horse, and promises to pay so much on Request: But where the promise is collateral, as to pay the debt of a stranger on Request, &c. the Request is part of the agreement, and therefore, there being no duty before the promise made, and for that reason the Request must be specially alleged, for bringing the action will not be a sufficient Request. Latch. 93: 3 Leon. 200: 3 Salk. 308.

Where the thing is a duty before any Request made, a Request is only alleged to aggravate damages, and such Request is not traversable; but if the Request makes the duty, as in assumpsit to do such a thing on Request, there the day, &c. of the Request ought to be alleged, because it is traversable. Palm. 389.

[illegible] a Request is to be specially made, the day and year when made should be specially alleged. 1 Lutw. 231: 2 Lill. Abr. 406: Cro. Car. 280. But where a person is not restrained to make the Request by a time limited, if made at any time during his life, it has been held to be good. Cro. Eliz. 136. And a Request at any other time than named may be given in evidence. Sid. [illegible]68.

If a debt or duty does not accrue on a promise, until Request made, the statute of Limitations runs from the time of the Request, only, and not from the time of the precedent promise. Cro. Car. 98. See title Limitation of Actions.

At a trial, the defendant would have the plaintiff to prove the Request; but it was ruled that he need not; for, not being traversed in the plea, it is admitted. 1 Lev. 166.

Unreasonable Requests are not regarded in Law; and there is no difference where a thing is to be done on Request, and reasonable Request. Dyer 218: Cro. Car. 1[illegible]6: 3 Nels. Abr. 140, 142. See titles Action; Declaration; Pleading; Rent, &c.

REQUESTS, Court of; See Court of Requests.

RESSE COUNTY; See Rese County.

RESCEIT, (or RECEIT,) Receptio] An admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons; as, where an action is brought against tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case he in the reversion may move that he may be received to defend his right, and to plead with demandant.

Resceit is likewise applied to the admittance of a plea, where the controversy is between the same two persons. Broke 205: Co. Litt. 192: 3 Nels. Abr. 1[illegible]6.

He in reversion may come into Court, and pray to be received in a suit against his particular tenant; and after such Resceit the business shall be hastened, as much as may be by Law, without any delay of either side. Stat. 13 R. 2. c. 17. But Resceit is admitted only for those who have estates depending on particular estates for life, tenants by the curtesy, or after possibility, &c. and not for him in remainder after an estate-tail, which is perdurable. 1 And. 135.

Husband and wife were tenants for life, remainder to another in fee; a formedon was brought against the husband, who made default after default; and thereupon the wife prayed that she might be received to defend her right; but it was denied by the Court, because, if defendant should recover against her husband, it would not bar her right if she survived him, therefore it would be to no purpose. Then he in remainder prayed to be received, which at first the Court doubted, by reason if the husband should recover, he might falsify such Recovery; and because his estate did not depend on the estate of the husband alone, but on the estate of the husband and wife; but at last he was received. 1 Leon 86.

The statute of Gloucester, 6 E. 1. c. 11, enacts, that a termor may be received to falsify, if he hath a deed, and comes before judgment; this is where he in reversion causeth himself to be impleaded by collusion, to make the termor lose his term, &c. And by stat. 20 E. 1. st. 3, if any stranger come in by a collateral title, before he is received, he shall find surety to satisfy the demandant the value of the lands, if he recovers from that time till final judgment; and demandant recovering, he shall be grievously amerced, &c.

RESCEIT OF HOMAGE, Receptio Homagii] The Lord's receiving Homage of his tenant, at his admission to the land. Kitch. 148. See title Homage.

RESCOUS, or RESCUE.

RESCUSSUS, from the Fr. Rescouse, i. e. Liberatio] A resistance against lawful authority.

I. Of the different Kinds of Rescues, &c.

II. Of the Offence of making Rescue of a Prisoner; and how the Offenders are to be proceeded against, and punished. And see title Escape (B) IV. 3.

III. Of the Form of the Proceedings on a Rescue.

IV. In what Cases the Sheriff may return a Rescue; of the Form of a Return, and for what Defects it may be quashed.

I. IN the case of a distress, the goods being, from the first taking, considered as in the custody of the Law, and not merely in that of the distrainer, the taking them back by force is looked upon as an atrocious injury, and denominated a Rescous; for which the distrainer has a remedy in damages, either by Writ of Rescous, in case they were going to the pound; or by Writ de parco fracto, or Pound-breach, in case they were actually impounded F. N. B 100, 101. He may also, at his option, bring an action on the case for this injury, and shall therein, if the distress were taken for rent, recover treble damages. Stat. 2 W. & M. st. 1, c 5: see post. II.; and this Dictionary, titles Distress; Rent; Replevin; Pound-breach.

The term Rescous is likewise applied to the forcible delivery of a defendant, when arrested, from the officer who is carrying him to prison. In which circumstances, the plaintiff has a similar remedy by action on the case, or of Rescous; or if the Sheriff makes a return of such Rescous to the Court out of which the process issued, the Rescuer will be punished by attachment. 6 Mod. 211: Cro. Jac. 419: Salk. 586. See 3 Comm. c. 9: and post. II. III. IV.

If a bailiff, or other officer, on a writ, arrest a man, and others by violence take him away, or procure his escape; this is a Rescous in fact. So, if one distrain beasts damage-feasant, in his ground, as he drives them in the highway towards the pound, they enter into the owner's house, and he withholds them there, and will not deliver them on demand, this detainer is a Rescous in Law. Co. Litt. lib 2. c. 12, 161. Cassanæus, in his book De Consuetud. Burg. f. 294, hath the same words coupled with resistentia.

In other terms, Rescue is the taking away and setting at liberty, against Law, any distress taken for rent, or services, or damage-feasant; but the more general notion of Rescous is, the forcible freeing another from an arrest, or some legal commitment; which, being an high offence, subjects the offender not only to an action at the suit of the party injured, but likewise to fine and imprisonment at the suit of the King. Co. Litt. 160: F. N. B. 226. See post. II.

But there can be no Rescous but where the party has had the actual possession of the cattle, or other things whereof the Rescous is supposed to be made; for if a man come to arrest another, or to distrain, and is disturbed, regularly his remedy is by action on the case. Co. Litt. 161, a: Litt. Rep. 296: Hetl. 145.

If on f. fa. the Sheriff seizes goods, which are taken away by a stranger, this is not properly a Rescue; for by seizure of the goods, by virtue of the fieri facias, the Sheriff has a property in them, and may maintain trespass, or trover, for them: also the party injured may have an action on the case against the wrong-doer. Hetl. 145: Litt. Rep. 296.

If the lord distrain for rent when none is due, the tenant may lawfully make Rescous; so may a stranger, if his beasts be distrained when no rent is due. So, if the tenant tender the rent when the lord comes to distrain, and yet he does distrain, or if he distrain any thing not distrainable, as beasts of the plough, when other sufficient distress may be taken, the tenant may make Rescous; so, if the lord distrain in the highway, or out of his fee. Co Litt. 47; 160, b; 161, a.

But though there must be reason for the distress, and that otherwise the Rescue cannot be unlawful; yet it hath been held, in a parco fracto, that a defendant cannot justify breaking the pound and taking out the cattle, though the distress was without cause, because they are now in the actual custody of the Law. Salk. 247.

There is a difference between a man's being arrested by a warrant on record, and by a general authority in Law; for if a capias be awarded to the Sheriff to arrest a man for felony, though he be innocent, he cannot make Rescue; but if the Sheriff will, by the general authority committed to him by Law, arrest any man for felony, if he be innocent, he may rescue himself. Co. Litt. 161. See 5 Co. 68: 6 Co. 54: Cro. Jac. 486.

II. RESCUE is classed, by Blackstone, amongst offences against public justice; and is defined to be the forcibly and knowingly freeing another from an arrest or imprisonment; and it is generally the same offence in the stranger so rescuing, as it would have been in a gaoler to have voluntarily permitted an escape. A Rescue, therefore, of one apprehended for felony, is felony; for treason, treason; and for a misdemeanor, a misdemeanor also. But here, likewise, as upon voluntary escapes, the principal must be first attainted, or receive judgment, before the Rescuer can be punished; and for the same reason, because perhaps, in fact, it may turn out that there has been no offence committed. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 131: 1 Hal. P. C. 607: Fost. 344. And see this Dictionary, title Escape.

By stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31, to convey to any prisoner, in custody for treason or felony, any arms, instruments of escape, or disguise, without the privity of the gaoler, though no escape be attempted; or any way to assist such prisoner to attempt an escape, though no escape be actually made, is felony; and subjects the offender to transportation for seven years: or if the prisoner be in custody for petty larceny, or other inferior offence, or charged with a debt of 100*l.*, it is then a misdemeanor, punishable with fine and imprisonment. See title Escape (B) IV. 3.

By several special statutes, to rescue, or attempt to rescue, any person committed for the offences enumerated in those acts, is felony without benefit of clergy. See stats. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. § 5: 24 Geo. 3. c. 56, as to Transportation; and this Dictionary under that title, and title Escape: Stats. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22: 27 Geo. 2. c. 15; as to offences against the Black Act; stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20, as to destroying turnpikes; and this Dictionary, title Highways VI. (B) 10; stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 34, as to Smuggling; stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37, as to Murder.

Under the last mentioned statute, to rescue, or attempt to rescue, the body of a felon executed for murder, is single felony, punishable by transportation for seven years; and a like punishment is inflicted by stats. 11 Geo. 2. c. 26: 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. § 28; against persons assembling, to the number of five, or more, to rescue any unlawful retailers of spirituous liquors, or to assault the informers against them.

Even if any person, charged with any of the offences against the Black Act stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22; and being required by order of the Privy Council to surrender himself, neglects to so do for forty days, both he and all that knowingly conceal aid, abet, or succour him, are declared felons without benefit of clergy.

It seems agreed, that the rescuing a person imprisoned for felony, is also felony by the Common Law. 1 Hal. P. C. 606.

Also it is agreed, that a stranger who rescues a person committed for, and guilty of, high treason, knowing him to be so, is in all cases guilty of high treason. Staundf. P. C. 11: 1 Jon. 455. Whether he knew that the prisoners were so committed or not Cro. Car. 583.

To make a Rescue felony, it is necessary that the felon be in custody, or under arrest for felony; therefore, if A. hinder an arrest, whereby the felon escapes, the township shall be amerced for the escape, and A. shall be fined for the hindrance of his taking; but it is not felony in A. because the felon was not taken. 1 Hal. P. C. 606: 3 Ed. 3. Coron. 333: Staundf. 31.

So, to make a Rescue felony, the party rescued must be under custody for felony, or suspicion of felony; and it is all one whether he be in custody for that account by a private person, or by an officer, or warrant of a Justice; for where the arrest of a felon is lawful, the Rescue of him is felony; but it seems necessary that he should have knowledge that the person is under arrest for felony, if he be in the custody of a private person. 1 Hal. P. C. 606.

But if he be in custody of an officer, there, at his peril, he is to take notice of it; so if there be felons in a prison, and A. not knowing it, breaks the prison, and lets out the prisoners, though he knew not that there were felons there, it is felony. 1 Hal. P. C. 606. Cro. Car. 583.

A person committed for high treason, who breaks the prison, and escapes, is guilty of felony; unless he lets others also escape, whom he knows to be committed for high treason; in which case he is guilty of high treason, not in respect of his own breaking of prison, but of the Rescous of the other. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 7.

If the person rescued were indicted or attainted of several felonies, yet the escape or Rescue of such a person makes but one felony. 1 Hal. P. C. 599

Wherever the imprisonment is so far groundless or irregular, or the breaking of a prison is occasioned by such a necessity, i. e. that the party himself, breaking prison, is either by the Common Law, or by the Statute de frangentibus prisonam, saved from the penalty of a capital offender, a stranger who rescues him from such imprisonment is, in like manner, also excused; & sic è converso. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 6.

The return of a Rescue of a felon, by the Sheriff against A., is not sufficient to put him to answer for it as a felony, without indictment or presentment, by the statute 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 4: 1 Hal. P. C. 606.

As in case of an escape, so in case of a Rescue, if the party rescued be imprisoned for felony, and rescued before indictment, the indictment must surmise a felony done, as well as an imprisonment for felony, or suspicion thereof; but if the party be indicted, and taken by a capias, and rescued, then there needs only a recital that he was indicted prout, and taken and rescued. 1 Hal. P. C. 607.

Though the Rescuer may be indicted, before the principal is convicted and attainted, yet he shall not be arraigned or tried before the principal be attainted; but if the person rescued were imprisoned for high treason, the Rescuer may immediately be arraigned, for in high treason all are principals: Sed quære.—But it seems that he may be immediately proceeded against for a misprision only, if the King please. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 8.

The Rescuer of a prisoner for felony, though not within clergy, yet shall have his clergy. 1 Hal. P. C. 607; unless where it is otherwise declared by statute.

As the offence of rescuing persons in cases of high treason and felony is usually punished by indictment, so the offence of rescuing a person arrested on mesne process, or in execution after judgment, subjects the offender to a Writ of Rescous, or a general action of trespass vi & armis, or an action on the case, in all which damages are recoverable. Also it is the frequent practice of the Courts to grant an attachment against such wrong-doers, it being the highest violence and contempt that can be offered to the process of the Court. Co Litt. 161: Co. Ent. 614: Rast. Ent. 577.

He who rescues a prisoner from any of the Courts of Westminster Hall, without striking a blow, shall forfeit his goods and profits of his lands, and suffer imprisonment during life; but not lose his hand, because he did not strike. 22 Ed. 3. 13: 3 Inst. 141: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 5.

It is clearly agreed, that for a Rescous on mesne process, the party injured may have either an action of trespass vi et armis, or an action on the case, in which he shall recover his debt and damages against the wrong-doer; and the rather, because on mesne process he can have no remedy against the Sheriff. Cro. Jac. 486: Hob. 180. See post. IV.

Also it hath been adjudged, that for Rescous of a person in execution on a ca. sa. or ca. utlag. an action will lie against the Rescuer, though the party injured hath his remedy against the Sheriff, and the Sheriff hath his remedy against the wrong doer; for perhaps the Sheriff may be dead or insolvent; but herein it hath been held, that if he bring his action against the party who made the Rescue, he may plead it in bar to an action brought by the Sheriff; so, if against the Sheriff, or his bailiff, they may plead that he had satisfaction from the party, so that if he recovers against one, the other is discharged. Hetl. 95: Cro. Car. 109: Hut. 38: Hob. 180.

By stat. 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 5. § 5, on Pound-breach, or Rescous of goods distrained for rent, the person grieved shall, in a special action on the case, recover treble damages and costs against the offenders, or against the owner of the goods, if they come to his use.

In an action on the case for a Rescous, on this statute, it hath been held, that the plaintiff shall recover treble costs as well as treble damages, for the damages are not given by the statute, but increased; an action on the case lying for a Rescous at Common Law. 1 Salk. 205.

An attachment will be granted not only against a common person, but even against a Peer of the Realm, for rescuing a person arrested by due course of Law: so that if the Sheriff in any case return to the Court, that a person arrested, or goods seized, or possession of lands delivered by him, by virtue of the King's writ, were rescued or violently taken from him, &c. they will award an attachment against the Rescuers. Dyer 212: 2 Jon. 39: Salk. 322.

But it seems to be the practice, not to grant an attachment in any case for a Rescous, unless the officer will return it; for it hath been found by experience, that officers will take on them to swear a Rescous where they will not venture to return one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 34.

A distinction was taken where an attachment is prayed for a Rescous in the first instance, and where a rule to shew cause is only asked; in this, affidavits of the fact are sufficient; in the other case, the Sheriff's return is requisite. Trin. 5 Geo. 2. in B. R. Young v. Payne.

Where, on the return of a Rescue, an attachment is granted, and the party examined on interrogatories, upon answering them, he shall be discharged; but if the Rescous is returned to the Filazer, and process of outlawry issues, and the Rescuer is brought into Court, he shall not be discharged on affidavits. Salk. 586.

III. An indictment of a Rescous ought to set forth the special circumstances of the fact, with such certainty, as to enable defendant to make a proper defence. Dyer 164. No defect can be aided by the verdict. 1 Rol. Abr. 781.

Therefore, if an indictment lay the offence on an uncertain or impossible day, as where it lays it on a future day, or lays one and the same offence at different days, or lays it on such a day which makes the indictment repugnant to itself, it is void. Moor 555: Rast. Ent. 263.

It has been adjudged, on exceptions taken to an indictment for a Rescous, that it was not necessary to allege the place where the Rescue was made, and that it should be intended that where the arrest was, there also was the Rescue. Cro. Jac. 345: 2 Inst. 208.

An exception was taken to an indictment of Rescous, that it wanted the words vi & armis, or manu forti; but over-ruled, it being held by the Court, that the word rescussit implies it to be done by force. Cro. Jac. 345. The same exception taken in Cro. Jac. 473, over-ruled, and there held, that though it were error at Common Law, yet it is made good by the stat. 37 Hen. 8. c. 8.

It is said, that an indictment of Rescous is not within the Statute of Additions, and that naming the person indicted of such a parish, without giving him any title, is sufficient. 2 Inst. 665: 2 Show. 84.

Note; on an indictment of Rescous, if it were on an arrest upon mesne process, and the party has appeared, the Court will be easily induced to quash it; so, if it be on process out of an inferior Court, though the party has not appeared, for no aid is given to inferior jurisdictions.

In an action for a Rescue, the plaintiff must allege in his declaration all the material circumstances; as that such a writ issued, that he was arrested, and in custody, and that he was rescued, &c. Godb. 124: 1 Lutw. 130.

In an action on the case for a Rescous on mesne process, the evidence was, the bailiff stood at the street door, and sent his follower up three pair of stairs, in disguise, with the warrant, who laid hands on the party, and told him that he arrested him; but he, with the help of some women, got from the follower, and ran down stairs, and the defendant, hearing a noise, ran up, and put the party into a room, locked the door, and would not suffer the bailiff to enter. Holt doubted whether this was a lawful arrest, being by the bailiff's servant, and not in his presence; but said, that the plaintiff must prove his cause of action against the party; that he must prove the writ and warrant by producing sworn copies of them; he must prove the manner of the arrest, that it may appear to the Court to be legal; and, in point of damage, he must prove the loss of his debt, viz. that the party became insolvent, and could not be retaken. 6 Mod. 211.

IV. The distinction laid down in a variety of books and cases is, that on a Rescue on mesne process the Sheriff may return the Rescue, and is subject to no action; for that on a mesne process he was not obliged to raise his posse comitatus, nor would it be convenient so to do on the execution of every mesne process. Cro. Eliz. 868: 1 March 1: 1 Jon. 201: 3 Bulst. 198: 1 Rol. Rep. 389: Noy 40: Moor 852: 2 Lev. 144: 6 Mod. 141: Lutw. 130, 131. But the Sheriff may, if he pleases, take his posse to arrest one on mesne process. Noy 40.

But if the Sheriff takes a man on an execution, as on a ca. sa. and he is rescued from him before he can bring him to prison, though he returns the Rescue, yet this shall not excuse him; for when judgment is passed, and he and his bail do not surrender him, nor pay the condemnation-money, and then a capias issues, to which there can be no bail, there it is presumed that he will not be forthcoming, because neither he nor his bail have satisfied the judgment; therefore the Sheriff ought to take the posse comitatûs; consequently it cannot be a good return, that he took the body, but that it was rescued; and the party may have an action of escape against the Sheriff on this return; and this is provided by the stat. West. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 39, which was made to prevent Sheriffs from returning Rescues to the King's writs. Cro. Jac. 419: 1 Rol. Rep. 388, 440: 3 Bulst. 198: Moor 852: Or on a capias utlagatum after judgment. Cro. Jac. 419: 1 Rol. Rep. 389.

In an action on the case against the Sheriff for an escape on mesne process, the defendant pleaded a Rescue, which on demurrer was held a good plea, though he did not shew that the Rescue was returned. 3 Lev. 46.

But if one taken on mesne process be once in prison, the Sheriff cannot return a Rescous, for the Law presumes that he hath a power to keep him there. 1 Rol. Rep. 441: 3 Bulst. 198: Cro. Jac. 419. Unless the prison is broken by the King's enemies, which shall excuse the Sheriff. 4 Co. 84: 1 Vent. 239. But not if broken by rebels and traitors, for the Sheriff or gaoler hath his remedy over against them. 4 Co. 84: Cro. Eliz. 815: 2 Mod. 28: 1 Vent. 239.

If a felon be attainted, and in carrying him to execution he is rescued from the Sheriff, the Sheriff is punishable notwithstanding the Rescue; for there is judgment given, and the Sheriff should have taken sufficient power with him; therefore in that case the township is not finable. 1 Hal. P. C. 602: and there said that a Rescue is no excuse in felony.

It hath been adjudged, that the return of a Rescue by a Sheriff must shew the year and day on which it was made, such Return being in lieu of an indictment. 3 H. 7. 11. pl. 3. Bro. Return de Brief 97: Fitz. Coro. 45: Attach. 1.

But it hath been held, that the Sheriff's return of a Rescue on a latitat, without mentioning the day of the caption, was sufficient; all the clerks in Court affirming the precedents to have been so. Palm. 552.

The Sheriff's return of a Rescue, without mentioning the place where it was made, was held bad, and the party discharged. Moor 422. pl. 585.

Where the Sheriff returned virtute brevis mihi direct' feci warrant' A. & B. ballivis meis qui virtute inde ceperunt the defendant, & in custodia mea habuerunt quousque such and such rescusserunt him ex custodia ballivorum meorum; this return was on motion quashed; for, per Holt, when bailiffs have arrested the party, he is in fact in their custody, but in Law he is in custody of the Sheriff; an answer either way is good, viz. that he was rescued out of the bailiff's custody, or that he was rescued out of the Sheriff's custody; but to say that he was in the custody of the Sheriff, and yet rescued out of the custody of the bailiff, is repugnant. 2 Salk 586.

It seems that anciently, when the Sheriff returned a Rescue, the party was admitted to plead to it as to an indictment; but the course of late has been not to admit any plea to it, but drive the party to his action against the Sheriff, in case the return were false; hence it is now settled that the return of a Rescue is not traversable, but yet it hath been held that submission to the fine doth not conclude the party grieved from bringing his action for the false return, if it were so. Cro. Eliz. 781: Dyer 212: 2 Jon. 29: 1 Vent. 224: 2 Vent. 175: Comb. 295.

If on a fieri facias the Sheriff returned that he had seised the goods, but that they were rescued by B. and C. &c. this is not a good return, but he shall be amerced; the party also, at whose suit the execution issued, may charge him by scire facias for the value of the goods. 1 Vent. 21: 2 Saund. 343: 1 Show. 180.

See farther, as to exceptions to returns of Rescue; Yelv. 51: 2 Rol. Rep. 255: Stil. 155: 1 Sid. 332: 1 Lev. 214: *Lit. RESCUSSOR, The party making a Rescue.

RESEISER, Resseisire.] The taking lands into the hands of the King, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused, contrary to the order of Law. Staundf. Prærog. 26.

RESERVATION, Reservatio.] A keeping aside, or providing; as, when a man lets or parts with his land, but reserves or provides for himself a rent out of it, for his own livelihood; sometimes it has the force of a saving or exception. Co. Litt. 143.

Exception is always of part of the thing granted, and of a thing in being: and a Reservation is of a thing not in being, but is newly created out of the lands or tenements demised; though Exception and Reservation have been used promiscuously. Co. Litt. 47. The proper place for a Reservation is next after the limitation of the estate; and Reservation of rent may be every two, three, or more years; as well as yearly, half-yearly, quarterly, &c. Co. Litt. 47: 8 Rep. 71.

It must be out of an house, or lands; and be made either by the words yielding and paying, &c. or the word covenant; which is of both lessor and lessee, therefore makes a Reservation. Rel. Rep. 80.

The Reservation of Rent is good, although it is not reserved by apt and usual words, if the words are equivalent. Plowd. 120. But Reservation of a Rent secundum ratam, is a void Reservation. 2 Vent. 272. See titles Deed; Reddendum; Rent, &c.

RESIANCE, Resiantia.] Residence; abode or continuance; whence comes the participle Resiant, that is, continually continually dwelling or abiding in any place. Old Nat. Br. 85: Kitch. 33.

RESIANT ROLLS, i. e. Rolls containing the Resiants in a tithing, &c. which are to be called over by the steward on holding Courts-leet. Comp Court Keep.

RESIDENCE, Residentia.] Is peculiarly used both in the Canon and Common Law, for the continuance of a Parson or Vicar on his benefice. And personal Residence is required of ecclesiastical persons on their cures, on pain of forfeiting 10*l* for every month, if they are absent one month at once, or two months at several times in the year; 5*l.* to the King, and 5*l.* to the informer. Stat 21 H. 8. c. 13. See title Parson II.—But chaplains to the King, or other great persons, (Peers, &c. mentioned in this statute, and stat. 25 H. 8. c. 16,) may be non resident.

The statute 21 H. 8 c. 13, must be put in suit by a common informer within a year, or by the King within two years after the end of that year; so that twelve penalties, or 120*l.* may be recovered at once by a Subject for himself and the King; or the King may recover at once twenty-five penalties, or 250*l.* See stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5, this Dictionary, title Limitation of Actions II. 2.: and 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 392, in n.—Is there not a contradiction in the above, and may not more than twenty-five penalties be recovered by the King?

Independent of this statute, the Bishop in his Court may compel the Residence of all the Clergy, who have the cure or care of souls within his diocese. 3 Burn's Eccl. Law 281: Gibs. 887.—This statute is not confined to parsonages and vicarages, but extends to all archdeaconries, deaneries, and dignities in cathedral and collegiate churches. Those who have two benefices or dignities, upon each of which Residence is required, must reside upon one or the other. But the incumbent of an augmented curacy cannot be prosecuted under the statute for the penalties of Non Residence. 4 Term Rep. 665.

A Bishop is not punishable under this statute, for Non-Residency on his bishoprick; but if he hold a deanery, parsonage, &c. in commendam, he must reside thereon, under the penalties of this statute. Bishops are liable to ecclesiastical censures for Non-Residence on their bishoprick; and the King may issue a mandatory writ to enforce their attendance, and compel them to it, by seizing their temporalties; as King Henry III. did, by the Bishop of Hereford. 2 Inst. 625.

One of the great duties incumbent on clergymen, is that they be resident on their livings: And on the first erecting parochial churches, every clergyman was obliged to reside on his benefice, for reading of prayers, preaching, &c. by the laws and canons of the church; and by statute, the parson ought to abide on his rectory or the parsonage-house; for the statute is intended not only for serving the cure, and for hospitality, but to maintain the house in repair, and prevent dilapidations: though lawful imprisonment, sickness, &c. being things of necessity, are good cause of excuse for absence, and excepted out of the act by construction of Law: And it is the same where a person is employed in some important business for the Church or King; or is entertained in the King's service. 6 Rep. 21: Cro. Eliz. 180: Gibs Cod. 887.

In an information on the statute, it was adjudged, that the parson is to live in the parsonage-house, and not in any other, though in the same parish. Under stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 20, leases made by parsons are declared void, where the parson is absent above eighty days in any one year, &c. On this act, the defendant pleaded to an agreement for tithes, that the parson was absent from his parsonage by the space of eighty days in one year; and the Jury found that he dwelt in another town adjoining, and came constantly to his parish church four days in every week, and there read divine service; and it was held, that this was not such an absence as is intended by the statute to avoid any agreement or lease made by the parson. 1 Bulst. 112. See title Lease II.

A person allowed to have two benefices, may demise or lease one of them (on which he is non-resident) to his curate only; but if the curate leases over, such lease shall last no longer than during the curate's residence, without absence above forty days in any one year. 1 Leon. 100. See Cro. Eliz 123. Some words in the act 13 Eliz c. 20, as to leases by parsons not resident, repealed. See stat. 14 Eliz c. 11.

An incumbent presented by the University to a recusant's living, shall lose it by sixty days absence in a year. 1 W. & M. c. 26. § 6.

See further 19 Vin. Abr. title Residence.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE, Is he to whom the residuum of the estate is left by will. See titles Executor; Legacy.

RESIGNATION, Resignatio] The yielding up a benefice into the hands of the Ordinary, called, by the Canonists, Renunciation; and though it is all one in nature with the word Surrender, yet it is, by use, restrained to yielding up a spiritual living to the Bishop; as Surrender is the giving up of temporal land into the hands of the lord. And a Resignation may now be made into the hands of the King as well as the Diocesan, because he has supremam authoritatem ecclesiasticam, as the Pope had in ancient times; though it has been adjudged that a Resignation ought to be made only to the Bishop of the diocese, and not to the King; because the King is not bound to give notice of the Resignation to the patron, as the Ordinary is; nor can the King make a collation himself, without presenting to the Bishop. Plowd 498: Rol. Abr. 358.

Every parson who resigns a benefice, must make the Resignation to his superior, as an incumbent to the Bishop, a Bishop to the Archbishop, and an Archbishop to the King, as supreme Ordinary. A donative is to be resigned to the patron, not the Ordinary; for in that case the clerk received his living immediately from the patron. 1 Rep. 137.

A common benefice is to be resigned to the Ordinary, by whose admission and institution the clerk first came into the church: And the Resignation must be made to that Ordinary who hath power of institution; in whose discretion it is either to accept or refuse the Resignation, as the Law hath declared him the proper person to whom it ought to be made, it hath likewise empowered him to judge thereof. Cro. Jac. 64, 198.

The instrument of Resignation is to be directed to the Bishop; and when the Bishop hath accepted of it, the Resignation is good, to make void the church, and not before; unless it be where there is no cure, when it is good without the acceptance of the Bishop. A Resignation may be made before a public notary, but without the Bishop's acceptation it doth not make the church void: the notary can only attest the Resignation, in order to its being presented, &c. Cro. Jac. 64, 198.

Ref-

Before acceptance of the Resignation by the Bishop, no presentation can be had to the church; but, as soon as the acceptance is made, the patron may present to the benefice resigned: And when the clerk is instituted, the church is full against all men in case of a common person; though, before induction, such incumbent may make the church void again by Resignation. Count. Pars. Comp. 106.

It seems to be clear, that the Bishop may refuse to accept a Resignation upon a sufficient cause for his refusal: But whether he can, merely at his will and pleasure, refuse to accept a Resignation without any cause, and who shall finally judge of the sufficiency of the cause, and by what mode he may be compelled to accept, are questions undecided. In the case of the Bishop of London v. Ffytche, the Judges in general declined to answer whether a Bishop was compellable to accept a Resignation: One thought he was compellable by Mandamus, if he did not shew sufficient cause; and another observed, that, if he could not be compelled, he might prevent any incumbent from accepting an Irish bishoprick; as no one can accept such bishoprick till he has resigned all his benefices in England. But Lord Thurlow seemed to be of opinion, that he could not be compelled, particularly by Mandamus, from which there is no appeal on writ of error. 1 Comm. c. 11. p. 393, in n.

A parsonage is not to be granted over by the incumbent, but it may be resigned; and Resignations are to be absolute, and not conditional; for it is against the nature of a Resignation to be conditional, being a judicial act. 3 Nels. Abr. 157.

If any incumbent corruptly resign his benefice, or take any reward for resigning the same, he shall forfeit double the value of the sum, &c. given, and the party giving it, be incapable to hold the Living. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. § 8. But a man may bind himself by bond to resign, and it is not unlawful, but may be on good and valuable reasons; as, where he is obliged to resign if he take a second benefice, or if he be non-resident by the space of so many months, or to resign on request, if the patron shall present his son or kinsman, when he shall be of age capable to take the living, &c. Cro. Jac. 249, 274. Though bonds for Resignation of benefices have no encouragement in Chancery; for on such bonds, generally, the incumbent is relieved, and not obliged to resign. 1 Rol. Abr. 443. On debt upon a bond to resign a benefice, the Court would not let the defendant's counsel argue the validity of the bond, these bonds having been so often established even in a Court of Equity. 1 Strange 227. But such a bond will not be allowed, where money has been paid on it. Ibid. 534. See further, title Simony.

A parson's refusal to pay his tenths, it is said, is a Resignation, for which he may be deprived. Owen 5. And where Resignation is actually made de ecclesiâ, it extends to all the lands and possessions of the church. Cro. Jac. 63.

The usual words of a Resignation are Renuncio, Cedo, Dimitto, and Resigno; and the word Resigno is not a proper term alone. 2 Rol. 350.

As to Resignation of temporal offices,—Declaring, at an assembly of the Corporation, that he would hold the place of Alderman no longer, is a good Resignation, especially since the Corporation accepted it, and chose another in his place; but, till such election, he had power to waive his Resignation, but not afterwards. 2 Salk. 433.

A Burgess of a Corporation came to the Mayor, and desired the Mayor to remove and dismiss him from the place of Burgess. On return of this, a Mandamus was denied to restore him; for having resigned voluntarily, he is estopped to say, that the Mayor had no power to remove him; and the case being sent to Hale, Ch. B. he agreed, and said, that a Corporation, as such, have power to take such Resignation. Sid. 14.

But giving consent to be removed, does not amount to a Resignation. A man may resign an office by parol. Holt's Rep. 450.

Resignation by a Common-Council-man need not be by deed. Lutw. 405.

Where an Alderman is a Justice of Peace for life, by force of the patent of the King, who created the Corporation, he cannot resign his office of Justice of Peace; because he cannot resign it but to a superior; per Coke, Ch. J.: Rol. Rep. 135. pl. 19.

So, if a man can have no title to the profits of an office, without the admission or confirmation of a superior, there the Resignation of that office must be to him. 3 Nels. Abr. 158. See titles Corporation; Mandamus; Quo Warranto.

RESORT, Resortum; The authority or jurisdiction of a Court. Spelm.

Dernier Resort, the last refuge.—The House of Lords is the Dernier Resort in cases of Appeal.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS HABENDO, A Writ for respiting a Sheriff's account, directed to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139. See title Sheriff.

RESPITE, Respectus.] A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time. Glanvil, lib. 12. c. 9. See this Dict. title Execution of Criminals.

RESPITE OF HOMAGE, Respectus Homagii.] The forbearance or delay of Homage, which ought to be performed by tenants holding by Homage, &c. It was most frequently in use for such as held by knights-service and in capite, who formerly paid into the Exchequer, every fifth term, some small sum of money to be respited their Homage: But this charge being incident to, and arising from knights-service, it is taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See titles Tenures; Homage.

RESPITE OF JURY; See titles Jury; Nisi Prius; Trial.

RESPONDEAS, or RESPONDEAT OUSTER, To answer over, in an action, to the merits of the cause, &c. If a demurrer is joined on a plea to the jurisdiction, person, or writ, &c. and it be adjudged against the defendant, judgment is given that he shall answer over. See titles Judgment; Demurrer.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. If Sheriffs of London are insufficient, the Mayor and Commonalty must answer for them: And pur insufficience del bailiff d'un liberty, respondeat dominus libertatis. 4 Inst. 114: Stat. 44 Edw. 3. cap. 13.

If a Coroner of a county is insufficient, the county as his Superior shall answer for him. Wood's Inst. 83.

A Gaoler constitutes another under him, and he permits an escape, if he be not sufficient, Respondeat Superior; and superior officers must answer for their deputies in civil actions, if they are insufficient to answer damages. Doct. & Stud. c. 24. See titles Deputy; Officer.

RESPONDENTIA; See Bottomry; Insurance IV.

RESPONSALIS, Qui responsum defert.] He who appears and answers for another in Court at a day assigned. Glan. lib. 12. c. 1. Fleta makes a difference between respansalem, atturnatum, and essoniatorem; he says, that responsalis was for the tenant, not only to excuse his absence, but to signify what trial he meant to undergo, the combat or the country. Fleta, lib 6. c 21.

This word is made use of in the Canon Law for a Proctor.

RESTITUTION, Restitutio.] The restoring any thing unjustly taken from another. It signifies also the putting him in possession of lands or tenements, who had been unlawfully disseised of them. Cromp. Just 144. And Restitution is a Writ, which lies where judgment is reversed, to restore and make good to the defendant what he hath lost: The Court which reverses the judgment, gives, on reversal, a judgment for Restitution; whereon a scire facias quare restitutionem habere non debet, reciting the reversal of the judgment, and the writ of execution, &c. must issue forth. But the Law doth often restore the possession to one without a Writ of Restitution, i. e. by writ of habere facias possessionem, &c. in the common proceeding of justice on a trial at Law. 2 Lil. Abr. 472, 3. See title Execution.

There is a Restitution of the possession of lands in cases of forcible entry, a Restitution of lands to an heir, on his ancestor's being attainted of treason or felony; and Restitution of stolen goods, &c.

A Writ of Restitution is not properly to be granted but where the party cannot be restored by the ordinary course of Law; and the nature of it is, to restore the party to the possession of a freehold, or other matter of profit, from which he is illegally removed; and it extends to Restitution on Mandamus to any public office. 2 Lill. 472, 473.

Where a judgment for land is reversed in B R by Writ of Error, the Court may grant a Writ of Restitution to the Sheriff to put the party in possession of the lands recovered from him by the erroneous judgment; though there ought to be no Restitution granted of the possession of lands, where it cannot be grounded on some matter of record appearing to the Court. Hil. 22 Car. And persons who are to restore, are to be parties to the record; or they must be made so by special scire facias. Cro. Car. 328: 2 Salk. 587.

If a lease is taken in execution on a Fi. fa. and sold by the Sheriff, and afterwards the judgment is reversed; the Restitution must be of the money for which it was sold, not the term. Cro. Jac. 246: Moor 788. But where a Sheriff extended goods and lands on an elegit, and returned that he took a lease for years, which he sold and delivered to the plaintiff as Bona & Catalla of the defendant for the debt, and afterwards the judgment was reversed for error; it was adjudged, that the party shall be restored to the lease, because the elegit gave the Sheriff no authority to sell the term, therefore a Writ of Restitution was awarded. Yelv. 179. And there has been, in this case, a distinction made between compulsatory and voluntary acts done in execution of justice; where the Sheriff is commanded by the writ to sell the goods, and where he is not, when the goods are to be restored, &c. 8 Rep. 96.

If a plaintiff hath execution, and the money is levied and paid, and afterwards the judgment is reversed, there the party shall have Restitution without a scire facias, for it appears on the record what the party hath lost and paid; but if the money was only levied, and not paid, then there must be a scire facias suggesting the sum levied, &c. And where the judgment is set aside after execution for an irregularity, there needs no scire facias for Restitution; but an attachment of contempt, if, on the rule for Restitution, the money is not restored 2 Salk. 588.

In a scire facias quare restitutionem &c. the defendant pleaded payment of the money mentioned in the scire facias, and it was held to be no plea. Cro. Car 328. But now payment is a good plea to a scire facias by the stat. 4 & 5 Ann c. 16 § 12 2 Lill Abr 479

Upon a Writ of Vi laica removenda a parson was put out of possession, and on a suggestion thereof, and affidavit made, Restitution was ordered Cro. Eliz. 465.

The Justice of Peace, before whom an indictment for forcible entry is found, must give the party Restitution of his lands, &c. who was put out of possession by force Stat 8 H 6 c 9.—But where one is indicted for a forcible entry, and the party indicted traverses the indictment, there cannot be Restitution before trial and a verdict, and judgment given for the party, though the indictment be erroneous, it being too late to move to quash the indictment after the traverse, which puts the matter on trial 2 Lill. 473, 474 See Forcible Entry II.

A person being attainted of treason, &c he or his heirs may be restored to his lands, &c by the King's charter of pardon; and the heir, by petition of right, may be restored if the ancestor is executed But Restitution of blood must be by act of Parliament; and Restitutions by Parliament are some of blood only, some of blood, honour, inheritance, &c The King may restore the party, or his heirs, to his lands, and the blood, as to all issue begotten after the attainder 3 Inst 240 Co. Litt. 8, 391. See titles Attainder, Forfeiture, &c

On a conviction of larceny, the prosecutor shall have Restitution of his goods, by virtue of stat 21 H 8. c. 11: for, by the Common Law, there was no Restitution of goods upon an indictment, it being considered as at the suit of the King only; and therefore the party was enforced to bring an Appeal of Robbery, in order to have his goods again. 3 Inst. 242. But it being considered, that the party prosecuting the offender by indictment deserves, to the full, as much encouragement as he who prosecutes by appeal; this statute was made, which enacts, that if any person be convicted of larceny, by the evidence of the party robbed, he shall have full Restitution of his money, goods, and chattels, or the value of them, out of the offender's goods, if he has any, by a writ to be granted by the Justices And the construction of this act having been in a great measure conformable to the Law of Appeals, it has therefore in practice superseded the use of appeals of larceny. For instance: As formerly upon appeals, so now upon indictments, of larceny, this Writ of Restitution shall reach the goods so stolen, notwithstanding the property of them is endeavoured to be altered by sale in market-overt. 1 Hal. P. C. 543. And, though this may seem somewhat hard upon the buyer, yet the rule of Law is, that spoliatus debet, ante omnia, restitui; especially when he has used all the diligence in his power to convict the felon. And, since the case is reduced to this hard necessity, that either the owner or the buyer must suffer; the Law prefers the right of the owner, who has done a meritorious act, by pursuing a felon to condign punishment, to the right of the buyer, whose merit is only negative, that he has been guilty of no unfair transaction. See 2 Inst. 714: 3 Inst. 242: 5 Rep. 109. And it is now usual for the Court, upon the conviction of a felon, to order (without any writ, no instance of the suing out of which has occurred for three hundred years) immediate Restitution of such goods, as are brought into Court, to be made to the several prosecutors. Or, else, secondly, without such Writ of Restitution, the party may peaceably retake his goods, wherever he happens to find them, unless a new property be fairly acquired therein. Or, lastly, if the felon be convicted and pardoned, or be allowed his clergy, the party robbed may bring his action of trover against him for his goods; and recover a satisfaction in damages. But such action lies not before prosecution; for so felonies would be made up and healed: 1 Hal. P. C. 546: And also recaption is unlawful, if it be done with intention to smother or compound the larceny; it then becoming the heinous offence of Theft-bote. See 4 Comm. c. 27. p. 363.

If goods stolen are not waived by flight, or seized for the King, the party robbed may take his goods again without prosecuting the felon; but after they are seized for the King, they may not be restored without appeal or indictment. Kel. 48: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 49.

A servant took gold from his master, and changed it into silver; the master shall have Restitution of the silver by this statute. Cro. Eliz. 661. pl. 9.

A. stole cattle and sold them at Coventry, in an open market, and immediately he was apprehended by the Sheriff of Coventry, and they seized the money; and afterwards the thief was arraigned and hanged, at the suit of the owner of the cattle: And, by the Court, the party shall have Restitution of the money, notwithstanding the words of the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 11, the goods stolen, &c. Noy 128.

A Bank-note of 50*l.* was stolen from Golightly, by one Ferguson. He was apprehended, and several articles of silver plate, a Bank-note of 20*l.*, and ten guineas in gold, which were found upon him, were produced at the trial, and placed in the custody of Reynolds, Clerk of the Arraigns. Golightly gave evidence against Ferguson at the Old Bailey, and he was convicted of stealing the 50*l.* note. The owner demanded Restitution from Reynolds of the goods found upon Ferguson; but, as they were not the identical goods which Golightly had lost, Reynolds refused to restore them. But on trover being brought in B. R. they were ordered to be restored, they being the produce of the 50*l.* Bank note. Lofft. 90.

The owner of goods stolen, who has prosecuted the thief to conviction, cannot recover the value of his goods from a person who has purchased them, and sold them again, even with notice of the theft, before conviction. 2 Term Rep. 750. But the plaintiff has a right to the Restitution of the goods in specie, and perhaps would be entitled to recover damages in trover against any person who is fixed with the goods after conviction, and refuses to deliver them; for then the goods are converted to the prejudice of the owner. Per Kenyon, C. J.

If the owner of goods loses them by a fraud, and not by a felony, and afterwards convicts the offender, he is not entitled to Restitution, or to retain them, against a person (as a pawnbroker) who has fairly acquired a new right of property in them. 5 Term Rep. 175.

See further, this Dictionary, title Market; and the stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21, there noticed, by which the sale of goods, wrongfully taken, to a pawnbroker within London, or two miles thereof, shall not alter the property. See also stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 87. § 10; and this Dictionary, title Pawnbrokers, as to goods illegally pawned. As to stolen horses, see this Dictionary, title Horses; and stat. 31 Eliz. c. 12, whereby the owner may, within six months, on paying the buyer what he actually paid, recover his horse without prosecution.

RE-RESTITUTION, Takes place when there hath been a Writ of Restitution before granted: And Restitution is generally matter of duty; but Re-restitution is matter of grace. Raym. 85.

A Writ of Re-restitution may be granted on motion, if the Court see cause to grant it. And on quashing an indictment of forcible entry, the Court of B. R. may grant a Writ of Re-restitution, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 474. See title Forcible Entry II.

RESTITUTIONE EXTRACTI AB ECCLESIA, A Writ to restore a man to the Church, which he had recovered for his sanctuary, being suspected of felony. Reg. Orig. 69.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIUM, A Writ directed to the Sheriff, to restore the Temporalties of a bishoprick to the Bishop elected and confirmed. F. N. B. 169: 1 Rol. Abr. 880.

RESULTING USE. Whenever the Use limited by a deed expires, or cannot vest, it returns back to him who raised it, after such expiration, or during such impossibility, and is styled a Resulting Use. As, if a man makes a feoffment to the Use of his intended wife for life, with remainder to the Use of the first-born son in tail: Here, till he marries, the Use results back to himself; after marriage, it is executed in the wife for life; and if she dies without issue, the whole results back to him in fee. Bacon of Uses 350: 1 Rep. 120. See title Uses.

RESUMMONS, Resummonitio.] A second Summons, or calling a man to answer an action, where the first Summons is defeated by any occasion; and when, by death, &c. of the Judges, they do not come on the day to which they were continued, for trial of causes, such causes may be revived or recontinued by Resummons. There is also a Writ of Resummons, which issues after parol demurrer. See titles Parol Demurrer; Re attachment.

RESUMPTION, Resumptio.] Is particularly used for taking again into the King's hands such lands or tenements, &c. as before on false suggestion he had granted by letters patent to any man. Broke 298. It is said, that the King cannot grant a prerogative of power so, but that he may resume it; otherwise it is of a grant of an interest. Skinner's Rep. 236. Resumption of Grants is mentioned in the stat. 31 Hen. 6. c. 7, and other statutes. See title Grant of the King.

RETAINER, from the Latin Retinere.] Signifies, in a legal sense, a servant, but not menial or familiar, that is, not continually dwelling in the house of his master, but only wearing his livery, and attending sometimes upon special occasions. This livery was wont to consist of hats, (or hoods,) badges, or other suits of one garment by the year; and was many times given by great men, on design of maintenance and quarrels; and was therefore justly forbidden by several statutes; as by stat. 1 R. 2.

c. 7, on pain of imprisonment and forfeiture to the King; and again, by stat. 16 R. 2. c. 4: 20 R. 2. c. 1: 1 H. 4. c. 7. by which the offender should make ransom at the King's will; and any Knight or Esquire thereby duly attainted should lose his livery, and forfeit his fee for ever, &c. Which statutes were further confirmed and explained by stat. 2 H. 4. c. 21: 7 H. 4 c. 3: 8 H. 6. c. 4. Yet this offence was so deeply rooted, that Edward the Fourth was necessitated to confirm the former statutes, and further to extend their meaning, as appears by stat. 8 Edw. 4. c. 2. adding a special penalty of five pounds on every man who gave such livery, and as much on every one so retained, either by writing, oath, or promise, for every month.

These were, by the feudists, called Affidati, sic enim dicuntur qui in alicujus fidem & tutelam recepti sunt. And as our Retainers were thus forbidden, so were those affidati in other countries. But most of the above-mentioned statutes were repealed by stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 4. Cowell. And the provisions of these obsolete and expired laws, are rendered useless by the alteration of manners. See further, title Maintenance.

RETAINER OF DEBTS, By an Executor or Administrator, See title Executor V. 6.

RETAINING FEE, Merces retinens.] The first fee given to any Serjeant or Counsellor at Law, whereby to make him sure that he shall not be on the contrary part.

RETRACTUS AQUÆ, The ebb or return of a tide. Plac. 30 Ed. 1.

RETRAXIT, Is when a plaintiff cometh in person in Court where his action is brought, and saith he will not proceed in it; and this is a bar to that action for ever. It is so called, because it was the emphatical word in the Latin entry. See Salkeld's Pract.; and this Dictionary, titles Nonsuit; Nolle Prosequi.

A Retraxit must be always in person; if it is by attorney, it is error. 8 Rep. 58: 1 Salk. [illegible].

A Retraxit is a bar to any action of equal nature, brought for the same cause or duty; but a nonsuit is not. [illegible] See Will. 98.

If a plaintiff says, he will not appear, this is not a Retraxit, but a nonsuit: But if the plaintiff says he will not [illegible], it is a Retraxit. 2 Danv. Abr. 471. And Retraxit [illegible] on the part of the plaintiff or demandant, [illegible] be after a declaration, for before the [illegible] it is only a nonsuit. 3 Leon. 47: 2 Lil. Abr. 470.

If a plaintiff enters a Retraxit against one joint-trespasser, it is a release to the rest. Cro. Eliz. 762. Sed qu.? For [illegible] a Retraxit [illegible] in an appeal of murder, [illegible] against the rest; because the appellant [illegible] execution against every one of them. [illegible] In a prosecution by three, a Retraxit [illegible] but the other two plaintiffs. Moor 469: Nels. Abr. 165. A Retraxit in its operation is mostly similar to a Nolle prosequi, entered to the whole cause of action. See that title.

RETTE, Fr.] A charge or accusation. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 2. Co. Litt. 173, b. and n.

RETURN, Returna, or Retorna, from the Fr. retour, i. e. redditio, recursus.] Hath many applications in Law; but is most commonly used for the Return of writs, which is the certificate of the Sheriff made to the Court, of what he hath done touching the execution of any writ directed to him; and where a writ is executed, or the defendant cannot be found, &c. then this matter is indorsed on the back of the writ by the officer, and delivered into the Court whence the writ issued, at the day of the return thereof, in order to be filed. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 39: 2 Lil. Abr. 476. See titles Sheriff; Writ.

The name of the Sheriff must always be to the Return of writs; otherwise it doth not appear how they came into Court: If a writ be returned by a person to whom it is not directed, the Return is not good, it being the same as if there was no Return on it. And after a Return is filed, it cannot be amended; but before, it may. Cro. Eliz. 310.

If the Sheriff doth not make a Return of a writ, the Court will amerce him: So, if he makes an insufficient Return; and if he makes a false Return, the party grieved may have an action on the case against him. Wood's Inst. 71.

If a Sheriff return a vouchee summoned, where in truth he is dead, and there is no such person: or in a præcipe quod reddat that the tenant is dead, &c. there may be an averment against such Returns, by the stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 18: Jenk. Cent. 121, 122.

Some Returns are a kind of declaration of an accusation; as the Return of a rescous, and the like; and these must be certain and perfect, or they will be ill. 11 Rep. 40: Plowd. 63, 117: Keilw. 165.

Writs to do things in franchises, are directed to, and returned by the Sheriff, to whom bailiffs make their Returns: And an action will lie against a Sheriff, who takes the Return of one who is no bailiff, and against him who makes it; and likewise against the bailiff of a franchise, for negligence in execution, &c. 7 Ed. 4. 14: 12 Ed. 4. 15: Moor, c. 606.

There is also a Return of Juries by Sheriffs; and Returns of commissions by Commissioners, &c. See the several appropriate titles.

RETURN-DAYS, Certain Days in Term, for the Return of Writs, or Days in Bank. See Term.

RETURNO HABENDO, A Writ which lies where cattle are distrained and replevied, and the person who took the distress justifies the taking, and proves it lawful; on which the cattle are to be returned to him.

This writ also lieth when the plaint in replevin is removed by recordari, into the King's Bench or Common Pleas, and he whose cattle are distrained makes default, and doth not prosecute his suit. F. N. B. 74. See title Replevin.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM, A judicial Writ, the same with Returno habendo. Reg. Jud. [illegible]

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE, A Writ judicial, directed to the Sheriff for [illegible] restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and and so found by verdict; and it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Judic. 27. See title Replevin.

REVE, or Gereve, from the Saxon word, Græfa, Præfectus. Lambard's explication of Saxon words, verb. Præfectus.] The bailiff of a franchise or manor, especially in the Western part of England: Hence Shire-reve for Sheriff. See Kitchin 43.

REVELAND, Terra Regis. Hæc terra fuit tempore Edwardi Regis Tainland, sed postea conversa est in Reveland. Et item dicunt legati Regis, quod ipsa terra & census qui inde exit, furtim aufertur à Rege. Domesd. Herefordsc.

The land here said to have been Thaneland, T. E. R. and after converted into Reveland, seems to have been such land as having reverted to the King after the death of his Thane, who had it for life, was not since granted out to any by the King, but rested in charge on the account of the Reve or bailiff of the manor; who (as it seemeth) being in this lordship of Hereford, like the Reeve in Chaucer, a false brother, concealed the land from the auditor, and kept the profit of it; till the surveyors, who are here called Legati Regis, discovered this falsehood, and presented to the King that furtim aufertur à Rege.

This passage from Domesday-book is imperfectly quoted by Sir Edward Coke, who, from these words, draws a false inference, that land holden by knight-service was called Thainland, and land holden by socage was called Reveland. Cowell. See Spelman of Feuds, c. 24: 1 Inst. 86, a. and n.

Dalrymple attempts to establish a distinction between Bockland, or Thaneland; and Reveland, also called Folkland: and to shew that the former was feudal, and the latter allodial. Dalrymp. Feud. prop. 9. See titles Tenures; Copyhold; Bockland; Folkland.

REVELS, Sports of dancing, masking, &c. formerly used in Princes' Courts, the Inns of Court, and noblemen's houses; commonly performed by night; there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was intitled Master of the Revels. Cowell.

REVENUE, Fr.] Properly the yearly rent which accrues to any man from his lands and possession; and is generally used for the Revenues or profits of the Crown.

Whoever chooses to be informed of the fiscal prerogatives of the King, or such as regard his Revenue; which the British Constitution hath vested in the Royal person, in order to support his dignity, and maintain his power, will find them very curiously and learnedly treated of by Blackstone, in the 8th chapter of the first volume of his Commentaries. And see this Dict. titles King; Taxes.

REVERSAL, Of judgment; Is the making it void for error; and when, on the return of a writ of error, it appears that the judgment is erroneous, then the Court give judgment, Quod judicium revocetur, adnulletur & penitus pro nullo habeatur. 2 Lill. Abr. 481.

The eldest Judge of the Court, or, in his absence, the next in seniority, always pronounces the Reversal of an erroneous judgment openly in Court, on the prayer of the party; formerly it was the course to pronounce it in French, to this effect, Pur les errors avandits, & auter errors manifest in le record, soit le judgment reverse, &c. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. The Judge now only says, Judgment affirmed, or, Judgment reversed, as the case happens.

Reversal of a judgment may be pronounced conditionally, i. e. That the judgment is reversed if the defendant in the writ of error doth not shew good cause to the contrary at an appointed time; and this is called a revocetur nisi; and if no cause be then shewn, it stands reversed without further motion. 2 Lil. 482.

By the Statute of Limitations, stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. § 4, where judgment is given for a plaintiff, and reversed by Writ of Error; or if judgment for a plaintiff be arrested, or if a defendant in an action by original be outlawed, and the outlawry reversed, the plaintiff may commence a new action within twelve months after such Reversal, or arrest of judgment, or Reversal of outlawry: though it be beyond the time of limitation directed by the statutes. REVERSION, Reversio, from Revertor.] A returning again. 1 Inst. 142.

A Reversion hath two significations; the one is an estate left, which continues during a particular estate in being; and the other is the returning of the land after the particular estate is ended: It is said to be an interest in the land, when the possession shall fall, and so it is commonly taken; or it is when the estate, which was parted with for a time, ceaseth, and is determined in the persons of the alienees or grantees, &c. and returns to the grantor or donor, or their heirs, from whence derived. Plowd. 160: 1 Inst. 142.

But the usual definition of a Reversion is, that it is the residue of an estate left in the grantor after a particular estate granted away, continuing in him who granted the particular estate; and where the particular estate is derived out of his estate. Also a Reversion takes place after a Remainder, where a person makes a disposition of a less estate, than that whereof he was seised at the time of making thereof. 1 Inst. 22, 142: Wood's Inst. 151.

The difference between a Reversion and a Remainder is, that a Remainder is general, and may be to any man, except to him who granteth the land, for term of life, or otherwise; and a Reversion is to himself from whom the conveyances of the land proceeded, and is commonly perpetual, &c. Remainder is an estate, appointed over at the same time: But the Reversion is not always at the same time appointed over. See title Remainder.

Blackstone, with his usual accuracy and perspicuity, shortly defines a Reversion thus: "The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him." Coke describes a Reversion to be the returning of land to the grantor, or his heirs, after the grant is over: As, if there be a gift in tail, the Reversion of the fee is, without any special reservation, vested in the donor by act of Law; and so also the Reversion, after an estate for life, years, or at will, continues in the lessor: For the fee-simple of all lands must abide somewhere; and if he, who was before possessed of the whole, carves out of it any smaller estate, and grants it away, whatever is not so granted, remains in him. A Reversion is never therefore created by deed or writing, but arises from construction of Law; a Remainder can never be limited, unless unless by either deed or devise. But both are equally transferrable, when actually vested, being both estates in præsenti, though taking effect in futuro. 2 Comm. c. 11, cites 1 Inst. 22, 142.

The doctrine of Reversions is plainly derived from the feudal constitution: For, when a feud was granted to a man for life, or to him and his issue male, rendering either rent, or other services; then, on his death, or the failure of issue male, the feud was determined and resulted back to the lord or proprietor, to be again disposed of at his pleasure: And hence the usual incidents to Reversions are said to be fealty and rent. When no rent is reserved on the particular estate, fealty however results of course, as an incident quite inseparable, and may be demanded as a badge of tenure, or acknowledgment of superiority; being frequently the only evidence that the lands are holden at all. Where rent is reserved, it is also incident, though not inseparably so, to the Reversion. 1 Inst. 143. The rent may be granted away, reserving the Reversion; and the Reversion may be granted away, reserving the rent; by special words: but by a general grant of the Reversion, the rent will pass with it, as incident thereunto; though by the grant of the rent generally, the Reversion will not pass. The incident passes by the grant of the principal, but not è converso. 1 Inst. 151, a.

These incidental rights of the Reversioner, and the respective modes of descent, in which remainders very frequently differ from Reversions, have occasioned the Law to be careful in distinguishing the one from the other, however inaccurately the parties themselves may describe them: For if one, seised of a paternal estate in fee, makes a lease for life, with remainder to himself and his heirs, this is properly a mere Reversion, to which rent and fealty shall be incident; and which shall only descend to the heirs of his father's blood, and not to his heirs general, as a remainder limited to him by a third person would have done: For it is the old estate, which was originally in him, and never yet was out of him. And so likewise, if a man grants a lease for life to A., reserving rent, with Reversion to B. and his heirs, B. hath a remainder descendible to his heirs general, and not a Reversion to which the rent is incident; but the grantor shall be entitled to the rent, during the continuance of A.'s estate. 2 Comm. c. 11, cites Cro. Eliz. 321: 3 Lev. 407: 4 Mod. 23.

When the particular estate determines, then the Reversion comes into possession, and before it is separated from it; for he who hath the possession, cannot have the Reversion, because, by uniting them, the one is drowned in the other. 2 Lil. Abr. 484. See title Merger.

The Reversion of land when it falls, is the land itself; and the possession of the tenant, preserves the Reversion of the lands, with the rents, &c. in the donor, or lessor. 1 Inst. 324.

A Reversion of an estate of inheritance may be granted by bargain and sale inrolled, lease and release, fine, &c. And by the grant of lands, a Reversion will pass; though by the grant of a Reversion, land in possession will not pass. 6 Rep. 36: 5 Rep. 124: 10 Rep. 107.

If one have a Reversion in fee, expectant on a lease for years, he may make a bargain and sale of his Reversion for one year, and then make a release to the bargainee in fee; by which the Reversion in fee will pass to the bargainee. 2 Lil. Abr. 483. And a Reversioner may covenant to stand seised of a Reversion to a use, &c. 11 Rep. 46. Likewise a Reversion may be devised by will; and a testator being seised in fee of lands which he had in possession, and of other lands in Reversion, devised all his lands for payment of debts; adjudged, that by the words "all his lands," the Reversion as well as the possession passed. 2 And. 59: Cro. Eliz. 159.

A person devised a manor to A. B. for six years, and some other lands to C. D. and his heirs: and all the rest of his lands to his brother, and the heirs male of his body: and it was held that these words, "the rest of his lands," did not only extend to the lands which were not devised before, but to the Reversion in fee of the manor, after the determination of the estate for years. Allen 28. And by devise of all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, undisposed of before in a will, a Reversion in fee will pass. 2 Vent. 285: 3 Ness. Abr. 166.

One seised of lands in fee, devises part thereof to B. for life, and after, by the same will, gives to C. all his lands not before particularly disposed of; by this devise of "all lands," &c. the Reversion of the part given for life passes to C. Preced. Chanc. 202. See title Will.

There was lessee for years, remainder for life, Reversion in fee, the tenant for life died, and the lessee for years did not attorn to him in the Reversion; yet it was resolved, that it passed without attornment, and he might bring an action of debt, or avow. Hetl. 73. See title Attornment.

If tenant for life, and he in Reversion, join in a lease for life, or gift in tail, rendering rent; it shall enure, after the death of tenant for life, to him in Reversion. 1 Inst. 214.

The particular estate for life or years, and the estate of him in Reversion, are divers and distinct; therefore aid may be prayed of him in Reversion: Yet these estates have relation one to another. 3 Shep. Abr. 220.

Copyholder for life, cannot, by forfeiture or otherwise, destroy the estate in Reversion: And he who hath a Reversion cannot be put out of it, unless the tenant be ousted of his possession also. 39 Hen. 6: Plowd. 162: Yelv. 1.

Reversions expectant on an estate-tail, are not assets, or of any account in Law, because they may be cut off by fine and recovery; but it is otherwise of a Reversion on an estate for life, or years. 1 Inst. 173: 6 Rep. 38. See title Assets.

No lease, rent-charge, or estate, &c. made by tenant in tail in remainder, shall charge the possession of the Reversioner. 2 Lil. 448. But as no statute hath made any provision for those who have Remainders or Reversions on any estate-tail, they are barred by a Recovery. 10 Rep. 32. See title Recovery.

There were no Reversions or Remainders on estates in tail, at Common Law: And by the Common Law, no grantee of a Reversion could take advantage of any condition or covenant broken by the lessees of the same land; but by statute, grantees of Reversions may take advantage of conditions and covenants against lessees of the same lands, as fully as the lessors and their heirs; and the lessees may have the like remedies against the grantees of Reversions, &c. 1 Inst. 327. See Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 34: And titles Condition; Lease.

A Reversioner

A Reversioner may bring an action on the case for spoiling trees; so, for any injury to his Reversion, he may have this action, but he cannot have trespass, which is founded on the possession. 3 Lev. 209, 233: 3 Co. 55.

He in Reversion shall have a writ of entry ad communem legem, where tenant for life, &c. aliens the lands: And writ of intrusion, after their deaths, &c. New Nat. Br. 461. But see title Recovery.

How to plead a Reversion in Fee. 2 Lutw. 1174.

In order to assist such persons as have any estate in Remainder, Reversion, or Expectancy after the death of others, against fraudulent concealments of their deaths, the stat. 6 Ann. c. 18, provides, that all persons on whose lives any lands are holden, shall, (on application to the Court of Chancery, and order made thereon,) once in every year, if required, be produced to the Court, or its Commissioners; or, upon neglect or refusal, they shall be taken to be actually dead, and the person entitled to such expectant estate may enter upon and hold the lands and tenements till the party shall appear to be living. See title Life-Estate.

REVIEW, Bill of; in Chancery. The object of this is to procure an examination and reversal of a decree, made upon a former bill, and signed by the person holding the Great Seal, and inrolled. It may be brought upon error of Law appearing in the body of the decree itself, or upon discovery of new matter. In the first case, the decree can only be reversed upon the ground of the apparent error; as if an absolute decree be made against a person who, upon the face of it, appears at the time to have been an infant. A bill of this nature may be brought without leave of the Court previously given. But if it is sought to reverse a decree signed and inrolled, upon discovery of some new matter, the leave of the Court must be first obtained; and this will not be granted but upon allegation, upon oath, that the new matter could not be produced or used by the party claiming, at the time when the decree was made. If the Court is satisfied, that the new matter is relevant and material, and such as might probably have occasioned a different determination, it will permit a Bill of Review to be filed. See Mitf. Treat. on Chanc. Pleadings 78; and the authorities there cited: See also this Dictionary, titles Chancery; Decree.

A Bill of Review, upon new matter discovered, has been permitted, even after an affirmance of the decree in Parliament; but it may be doubted, whether a Bill of Review, upon error, in the decree itself, can be brought after such affirmance. If, upon a Bill of Review, a decree has been reversed, another Bill of Review may be brought upon the decree of reversal: But see 1 Vern. 417. But when twenty years have elapsed from the time of pronouncing a decree, which has been signed and inrolled, a Bill of Review cannot be brought: and after a demurrer to a Bill of Review has been allowed, a new Bill of Review on the same ground cannot be brought. It is a rule of the Court, that the bringing a Bill of Review shall not prevent the execution of the decree impeached; and if money is directed to be paid, it ought regularly to be paid before the Bill of Review is filed, though it may afterwards be ordered to be refunded. Mitf. Treat. 79, 80.

In a Bill of this nature it is necessary to state the former Bill, and the proceedings thereon; the decree, and the point in which the party exhibiting the Bill of Review conceives himself aggrieved by it; and the ground of Law, or new matter discovered, upon which he seeks to impeach it; and if the decree is impeached on the latter ground, it seems necessary to state in the Bill the leave obtained to file it, and the fact of the discovery; though it may be doubted, whether after leave given to file the Bill that fact is traversable. The Bill may pray simply, that the decree may be reviewed, and reversed in the point complained of, if it has not been carried into execution. If it has been carried into execution, the Bill may also pray the farther decree of the Court, to put the party complaining of the former decree, into the situation in which he would have been if that decree had not been executed. If the Bill is brought to review the reversal of a former decree, it may pray that the original decree may stand. The Bill may also, if the original decree has become abated, be at the same time a Bill of Revivor: (See title Revivor:) A supplemental Bill may likewise be added, if any event has happened which requires it; and, particularly, if any person, not a party to the original suit, becomes interested in the subject, he must be made a party to the Bill of Review, by way of supplement. Mitf. Treat. 80, 81.

To render a Bill of Review necessary, the decree sought to be impeached must have been signed and inrolled. If, therefore, this has not been done, a decree may be examined and reversed upon a species of supplemental Bill in nature of a Bill of Review, where any new matter has been discovered since the decree. As a decree not signed and inrolled may be altered upon a rehearing, without the assistance of a Bill of Review, if there is sufficient matter to reverse it appearing upon the former proceedings; the investigation of the decree must be brought on by a petition of rehearing: and the office of the supplemental Bill, in nature of a Bill of Review, is to supply the defect which occasioned the decree upon the former Bill. It is necessary to obtain the leave of the Court to bring a supplemental Bill of this nature; and the same affidavit is required for this purpose, as is necessary to obtain leave to bring a Bill of Review on discovery of new matter. The Bill, in its frame, nearly resembles a Bill of Review; except, that instead of praying that the former decree may be reviewed and reversed, it prays that the cause may be heard with respect to the new matter, made the subject of the supplemental Bill, at the same time that it is reheard upon the original Bill; and that the plaintiff may have such relief as the nature of the case made by the supplemental Bill requires. Mitf. Treat. 81—83.

If a decree is made against a person who had no interest at all in the matter in dispute, or had not such an interest as was sufficient to render the decree, against him, binding upon some person claiming the same, or a similar interest, relief may be obtained against error in the decree by a Bill in the nature of a Bill of Review. Thus, if a decree is made against a tenant for life only, a remainder-man in tail, or in fee, cannot defeat the proceedings against the tenant for life, but by a bill shewing the error in the decree, the incompetency of the tenant for life to sustain the suit, and the accruer of his own interest; and thereupon praying that the proceedings in the the original cause may be reviewed, and, for that purpose, that the other party may appear to, and answer this new Bill, and that the rights of the parties may be properly ascertained. A Bill of this nature, as it does not seek to alter a decree made against the plaintiff himself, or against any person under whom he claims, may be filed without leave of the Court. Mitf. Treat. 83.

REVIEW OF APPEAL OR DELEGATES, A commission granted by the King to certain Commissioners, &c. See title Appeal to Rome.

REVILING CHURCH ORDINANCES, Is a positive offence against Religion, that affects the established Church; and the reviling the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is punished by stats. 1 Ed. 6. c. 1: 1 Eliz. c. 1, with fine and imprisonment: And by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2, if any Minister shall speak any thing in derogation of the Book of Common Prayer, he shall, if not beneficed, be imprisoned one year for the first offence, and for life for the second: And if he be beneficed, he shall for the first offence be imprisoned six months, and forfeit a year's value of his benefice: for the second offence he shall be deprived, and suffer one year's imprisonment; and for the third, shall, in like manner, be deprived, and suffer imprisonment for life. And if any person whatsoever shall, in plays, songs, or other open words, speak any thing in derogation, defaming, or despising of the said Book, or shall forcibly prevent the reading of it, or cause any other service to be used in its stead, he shall forfeit for the first offence one hundred marks; for the second, four hundred; and for the third shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and suffer imprisonment for life. The policy and propriety of these punishments, even at this distance from the Reformation, are well stated by Blackstone, 4 Comm. c. 4. p. 51.

REVIVING, A word metaphorically applied to rents and actions, and signifies renewing them after they are extinguished. Of which see many examples in Broke, title Revivings of Rents, Actions, &c. 13. See also 19 Vin. Abr. 228—230.

REVIVOR, BILL OF; When a Bill hath been exhibited in Chancery, against one who answers, and before the cause is heard, or if heard, and the decree is not inrolled, either party dies, or a female plaintiff marries; in these cases a Bill of Revivor must be brought.

A Bill of Revivor must state the original Bill, and the several proceedings thereon, and the abatement: It must shew a title to revive, and charge that the cause ought to be revived, and stand in the same condition, with respect to the parties in the Bill of Revivor, as it was in with respect to the parties to the original Bill, at the time the abatement happened; and it must pray, that the suit may be revived accordingly. It may likewise be necessary to pray that the defendant may answer the Bill of Revivor; as in the case of a requisite admission of assets, by the representative of a deceased party. In this case, if the defendant does admit assets, the cause may proceed against him on an order of Revivor merely; but if he does not make that admission, the cause must be heard for the purpose of obtaining the necessary accounts of the estate of the deceased party, to answer the demands made against it by the suit; and the prayer of the Bill, therefore, in such cases, usually is, not only that the suit may be revived, but also that in case the defendant shall not admit assets, to answer the purposes of the suit, those accounts may be taken; and so far the Bill is in the nature of an original Bill. If a defendant to an original Bill dies before putting in an answer, or after an answer to which exceptions have been taken, or after an amendment of the Bill, to which no answer has been given, the Bill of Revivor, though requiring in itself no answer, must pray that the person, against whom it seeks to revive the suit, may answer the original Bill, or so much of it as the exceptions taken to the answer of the former defendants extend to, or the amendment remaining unanswered. See Mitf. Treat. on Pleadings in Chanc. 70, 71; and the authorities there referred to.

Upon a Bill of Revivor the defendant must answer in eight days after appearance, and submit that the suit shall be revived, or shew cause to the contrary; and in default, unless the defendant has obtained an order for further time to answer, the suit may be revived without answer, by an order made upon motion as a matter of course. The ground for this is an allegation, that the time allowed the defendant to answer by the course of the Court is expired, and that no answer is put in; it is therefore presumed, that the defendant can shew no cause against reviving the suit in the manner prayed by the Bill. Mitf. Treat. 71, 72.

An order to revive may also be obtained, in like manner, if the defendant puts in an answer submitting to the Revivor; or even without that submission if he shews no cause against the Revivor. Though the suit is revived of course, in default of the defendant's answer within eight days, he must yet put in an answer if the Bill requires it; as if the Bill seeks an admission of assets, or calls for an answer to the original Bill; the end of the order of Revivor being only to put the suit and proceedings in the situation, in which they stood at the time of the abatement, and to enable the plaintiff to proceed accordingly. And notwithstanding an order for Revivor has been thus obtained, yet if the defendant conceives that the plaintiff is not entitled to revive the suit against him, he may take those steps which are necessary to prevent the farther proceeding on the Bill; and though these steps should not be taken, yet if the plaintiff does not shew a title to revive, he cannot finally have the benefit of the suit, when the determination of the Court is called for on the subject. Mitf. Treat. 72, 73.

After a decree, a defendant may file a Bill of Revivor, if the plaintiffs, or those standing in their right, neglect to do it. For then the rights of the parties are ascertained, and plaintiffs and defendants are equally entitled to the benefit of the decree, and equally have a right to prosecute it. The Bill of Revivor, in this case therefore, merely substantiates the suit, and brings before the Court the parties necessary to see to the execution of the decree, and to be the objects of its operation; rather than to litigate the claims made by the several parties in the original pleadings, except so far as they remain undecided. In the case of a Bill by creditors, on behalf of themselves and other creditors, any creditor is entitled to revive. A suit, become entirely abated, may be revived as to part only of the matter in litigation; or as to part by one bill, and as to the other part by another. Thus, if the rights of a plaintiff in a suit, upon his death, become vested part in his real, and part in his personal represent-representatives, the real representative may revive the suit so far as concerns his title; and the personal so far as his demand extends. Mitf. Treat. 73, 74.

When the interest of a party dying is transmitted to another, in such a manner that the transmission may be litigated in a Court of Equity, as in the case of a devise, the suit cannot be revived by or against the person to whom the interest is so transmitted; but such person, if he succeeds to the interest of a plaintiff, is entitled to the benefit of the former suit; and if he succeeds to the interest of a defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the former suit against him: This benefit is to be obtained by an original Bill, in nature of a Bill of Revivor. A Bill for this purpose must state the original Bill, the proceedings upon it, the abatement, and the manner in which the interest of the party dead has been transmitted; and it must charge the validity of the transmission, and state the rights which have accrued by it. The Bill is said to be original, merely for want of that privity of title, between the party to the former and the party to the latter Bill, though claiming the same interest, which would have permitted the continuance of the suit by Bill of Revivor. Therefore, when the validity of the alledged transmission of interest is established, the party to the new Bill shall be equally bound by, or have advantage of, the proceedings on the original Bill, as if such privity had actually existed: And the suit is considered as pending, from the time of filing the original Bill; so as to save the Statute of Limitations; to have the advantage of compelling the defendant to answer, before an answer can be compelled, to a cross Bill; and every other advantage which would have attended the institution of the suit by the original Bill, if it could have been continued by Bill of Revivor merely. Mitf. Treat. 88, 89.

If the interest of a plaintiff or defendant, suing or defending in his own right, wholly determines, and the same property becomes vested in another person, not claiming under him, the suit cannot be continued by a Bill of Revivor; nor can its defect be supplied by a supplemental Bill, but the benefit of the former proceedings must be obtained by an original Bill in the nature of a supplemental bill. Mitf. Treat. 89, 90.

REVOCATION, Revocatio] The calling back of a thing granted: or a destroying or making void of some deed that had existence, until the act of Revocation made it void. 2 Lil. Abr. 485. A Revocation may be either general, of all acts and things done before; or special, to revoke a particular thing: And where any deed or thing is revoked, it is as if it never had been. 5 Rep. 90: Perk. § 10[illegible] ntary deeds and conveyances, there are frequently provisoes containing power of Revocation, which being coupled with an use, and tending to pass by raising of uses, according to the stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, are allowed to be good, and not repugnant; as where one seised of an estate in fee, covenants to stand seised thereof to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son in tail, remainder over, &c. with proviso that he may revoke any of the said uses; now, if afterwards he revokes them, he is seised again in fee, without entry or claim: But in case of a feoffment or other conveyance, whereby the feoffee or grantee is in by the Common Law, such proviso would be merely repugnant and void. 1 Inst. 237: See title Uses.

Voluntary estates made with power of Revocation, as to purchasers, are held in equal degree with conveyances made by fraud and covin to defraud purchasers, under stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4: 3 Rep. 82. See title Frauds.

Where a power of Revocation is reserved for a man to dispose of his own estate, it shall always have a favourable construction; but it shall be taken strictly when it is to charge the estate of another. 2 Vent. 250.

If power is reserved to a man to revoke a deed by writing, subscribed and sealed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses: if he makes his will in writing, without making any express Revocation, it will be a good Revocation, and the will a good execution of the power. Hob. 312: Raym. 295. But see title Power.

If a person make a feoffment in fee, or levy a fine, &c. of the lands, before the deed of Revocation is executed; these amount to a Revocation in Law, and extinguish the power of Revocation. 1 Vent. 371: 1 Rep. 111.—Power of Revocation may be released; and where a man has an entire power of Revocation, and he suspends or extinguishes it as to part, he may revoke as to the residue, if the conveyance was by way of use; but not where a condition is annexed to the land. 1 Rep. 174: Moor 615.

A Will is revocable; and a last will revokes the former: And a new publication of the first will, if made in due form, will revoke the last. Perk. 479: 2 Sid. 2: 3 Mod. 207. See title Wills.

Letters of Attorney, and other authorities, may be revoked, by the persons giving the powers; and as they are revocable in their nature, it has been adjudged, that they may be revoked, though they are made irrevocable. 8 Rep. 82: Wood's Inst. 286. These Revocations of all powers regularly must be made after the same manner they are given; and there ought to be notice to the party, &c. But if once the power be executed, a Revocation after will come too late. Dyer 210.

A warrant of attorney from a defendant to appear and accept a declaration, and plead for the defendant, may not be revoked with an intent to stay the plaintiff's proceedings; but the defendant, on good cause shewn to the Court, may change his attorney, so as he plead by another in due time. 2 Lil. 486.

As to the Revocation of Letters of Administration, and Presentations to Benefices, see those titles.

REVOCATIONE PARLIAMENTI. An ancient Writ for recalling a Parliament; and anno 5 Ed. 3, the Parliament being summoned, was recalled by such writ before it met. Pryn's Animad. on 4 Inst. fol. 44. See title Parliament.

REWARDS. In order to encourage the apprehending of certain felons, Rewards, and immunities are bestowed on such as bring them to justice, by divers statutes. The stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8, enacts, That such as apprehend a highwayman, (and by stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, highway robbers in the streets of London, or other towns, and prosecute him to conviction, shall receive a Reward of 40*l.* from the public; to be paid to them (or, if killed in the endeavour to take him, their executors) by the sheriff of the county; besides the horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken upon the person of such robber; with a reservation of the right of any person from whom the same may have been stolen: to which stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, superadds 10*l.* to be paid by the Hundred indemnified by such taking. By stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17: 15 Geo. 2. c. 28, persons apprehending and convicting any offender against those statutes, respecting the coinage, shall (in case the offence be treason or felony) receive a Reward of forty pounds; or ten pounds, if it only amount to counterfeiting the copper coin. By stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23, any person apprehending and prosecuting to conviction a felon guilty of burglary, housebreaking, horsestealing, or private larceny to the value of 5*s.*, from any shop, warehouse, coach-house, or stable, shall be excused from all parish offices: (which is vulgarly termed, having a Tyburn-ticket): And by stat. 5 Ann. c. 31, any person so apprehending and prosecuting a burglar, or felonious housebreaker, (or, if killed in the attempt, his executors,) shall also be entitled to a Reward of 40*l.* By stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, persons discovering, apprehending, and prosecuting to conviction, any person taking Reward for helping others to their stolen goods, shall be entitled to 40*l.*—By stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 6, explained by stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 34, any person apprehending and prosecuting to conviction such as steal, or kill with intent to steal, any sheep, lamb, bull, cow, ox, steer, bullock, heifer, or calf, shall for every such conviction receive a Reward of 10*l.*—Lastly, by stats. 16 Geo. 2. c. 15: 8 Geo. 3. c. 15, persons discovering, apprehending, and convicting felons, and others, being found at large during the term for which they are ordered to be transported, shall receive a Reward of 20*l.*

The stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8: 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17: 5 Ann. c. 31, together with stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 4, which directs the method of reimbursing the Sheriffs, are extended to the county palatine of Durham, by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 46.

In the spirit of the above statutes, the stats. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22: 10 Geo. 2. c. 32, allow a recompence of 50*l.* to persons maimed in endeavouring to apprehend offenders against the Black Act, destroyers of sea-banks, cutters of hop-binds, and firers of collieries. And by stat. 19 G. 2. c. 34, several strong regulations are made for recompensing persons wounded or plundered by smugglers; and Rewards of 50*l.* are given to accomplices in smuggling, discovering two or more offenders; and one of 500*l.* for detecting proclaimed smugglers in certain cases.

REWEY, A term among clothiers, signifying cloth unevenly wrought, or full of Rewes. See stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 10.

RHANDIR, A part in the division of Wales before the Conquest: Every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four Rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every Rhandir. Taylor's Hist. Gav. p. 69.

RIAL, from the Span. Reale, i. e. Royal Money, because it is stamped with the King's effigies: In England, a Rial was a piece of gold coin, current for 10*s.* in the reign of King Henry VI. at which time there were Half-Rials passing for 5*s.* and Quarter Rials, or Rial Farthings, going for 2*s.* 6*d.* In the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, golden Rials were coined at 15*s.* a-piece; and 3 Jac. I, there were Rose-Rials of gold at 30*s.* Spur-Rials at 15*s.* Lowuds's Essay on Coins, p. 38.

RIBAUD, Fr. Ribauld, Ribaldus.] A rogue, vagrant, whoremonger, or person given to all manner of wickedness: Anno 50 E. 3, there was a petition in Parliament against Ribauds and Sturdy Beggars.

RICE, As to the importation of, see titles Navigation Acts; Customs on Merchandise.

RICHMOND IN SURRY, Richmond Old Park settled on Queen Charlotte for life. Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 1. See title Queen.

RICHMOND IN YORKSHIRE, Spiritual persons in the archdeaconry of Richmond, shall not exact portions of the deceased's goods. Stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 15.

RIDER-ROLL, A Schedule, or small piece of parchment, often added to some part of a Roll, Record, or Act of Parliament.

RIDGE-WASHED KERSEY, Kersey cloth made of fleece wool, washed only on the sheep's back. See stat. 35 Eliz. c. 10.

RIDING ARMED; See Armour and Arms.

RIDING-CLERK, One of the six Clerks in Chancery, who in his turn, for one year, keeps the controlment-books of all grants that pass the Great Seal. Blount.

RIDINGS, corrupted from Trithings.] Are the names of the parts or divisions of Yorkshire, which are three, viz. East-Riding, West-Riding, and North-Riding, mentioned in stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 5: And, in indictments for offences in that county, the Town and the Riding must be expressed, &c. West. Symb. p. 2. See 1 Comm. 116: and this Dictionary, titles Rape; Registry of Deeds.

RIENS ARREAR, A plea used in an action of debt for Arrearages of Account, whereby the defendant alleges that there is nothing in Arrear. Book Entr. See titles Account; Issue; Pleading.

RIENS PASSE PER LE FAIT, Nothing passes by the Deed; The form of an exception taken in some cases to an action. Broke. See title Pleading.

RIENS PER DESCENT, The plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, and hath no land from him by Descent, or assets in his hands. 3 Cro. 151. In an action of debt against the heir, who pleads Riens per Descent, judgment may be had presently; and when assets descend, a scire facias lies against the heir, &c. 8 Rep. 134. See title Heir.

RIER COUNTY, Retro Comitatus, from the Fr. Arrear, i. e. posterior.] Is opposed to full and open County; and appears to be some public place, which the Sheriff appoints for receipt of the King's money, after the end of his County-Court. See stat. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 5: and also stat. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 38: Fleta, l. 2. c. 67.

RIFFLARE, from the Saxon, riefe, rapina.] To take away any thing by force; from whence comes our English word rifle. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 57.

RIFFLURA, A slight wound in the flesh. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 41.

RIGHT, Jus.] In general signification, includes not only a Right for which a Writ of Right lies, but also any title or claim, either by vi[illegible] of a condition, mortgage, or the like, for which ac[illegible]on is given by Law, but only an entry. Co. Lit. l. 3. c. 8. § 445.

There is jus proprietatis, a Right of Property; jus possessionis, a Right of Possession; and jus proprietatis & possessionis, a Right both of Property and Possession; and this was anciently called jus duplicatum. For example, if a man be disseised of an acre of land, the disseisee hath hath jus proprietatis, the disseisor hath jus possessionis; and if the disseisee release to the disseisor, he hath jus proprietatis & possessionis. Co. Lit. l. 3. § 447.

Jus est sextuplex. 1. Jus recuperandi. 2. Intrandi. 3. Habendi. 4. Retinendi. 5. Percipiendi. 6. Et possidendi. 8 Co. Edward Altham's case.

The disseisor has only the naked possession, because the disseisee may enter and evict him; but against all other persons the disseisor has Right, and in this respect only can be said to have the Right of possession; for in respect to the disseisee, he has no Right at all. But when a descent is cast, the heir of the disseisor has jus possessionis, because the disseisee cannot enter upon his possession, and evict him, but is put to his real action, being the freehold cast upon the heir. The notions of the Law do make this title to him, that there may be a person in being to do the feudal duties, to fill the possession, and to answer the actions of all persons whatever; and since it is the Law that gives him this Right, and obliges him to these duties, antecedent to any act of his own, it must defend such possession from the act of any other person whatever; till such possession be evicted by judgment; which being also the act of Law may destroy the heir's title. Gilb. Ten. 18. See further, titles Estate; Property; Release; Title.

There is also a present and future Right; a jus in re, which may be granted to a stranger; and what is called a naked Right, or jus ad rem, where an estate is turned to a Right, on a discontinuance, &c. Co. Lit. 345.

Right doth also include an estate in esse in conveyances; and therefore if tenant in fee-simple makes a lease and release of all his Right in the land to another, the whole estate in fee passes. Wood's Inst. 115, 116.

Sir Edward Coke tells us, That of such an high estimation is Right, that the Law preserveth it from death and destruction; trodden down it may be, but never trodden out: And there is such an extreme enmity between an estate gained by wrong and an ancient Right, that the Right cannot possibly incorporate itself with the estate gained by wrong. 1 Inst. 279: 6 Rep. 70: 8 Rep. 105. A Right may sometimes sleep, though it never dies; a long possession, exceeding the memory of man, will make a Right; and if two persons are in possession by divers titles, the Law will adjudge the possession in him that hath the Right. Co. Lit. 478: 6 Lit. § 158: When there is no remedy, there is presumed to be no Right by Law. Vaugh. 38.

RIGHT CLOSE, Writ of; See titles Recto; Writ of Right.

RIGHT CLOSE, secundum Consuetudinem Manerii.] A Writ which lies for the King's tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the Right of their lands and tenements in the Court of the Lord exclusively. See Writ.

RIGHT IN COURT; See Rectus in Curia.

RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES; See title Liberty.

RINE, Saxon, Ryne.] A water-course, or little stream, which rises high with floods.

RINGA, A military girdle; from the Sax. Ring, i. e. annulus, circulus, because it was girt round the middle: But, according to Bracton, Ringa enim dicuntur quod renes cirundant, unde dicitur accingere gladio. Bract. lib. 1. cap. 8.

RINGHEAD, An engine used in stretching of cloth. See stat. 43 Eliz. c. 10.

RINGILDRE, A kind of bailiff or serjeant; and such Rhingyl signifies in Welsh. Chart. Hen. 7.

RIOT,

ROUT; AND UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

RIOT, Riota and Riottum, from the French, Riotte; quod non solum rixam & jurgium significat, sed vinculum etiam, quo plura in unum, fasciculorum instar, colligantur.] The forcible doing of an unlawful thing by three, or more persons assembled together for that purpose. West. Symbol. part 2. title Indictments, § 65.

The difference, between a Riot, Rout, and unlawful Assembly, see in Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. c. 5: Kitchin 19; the latter of whom gives these examples of Riots; the breach of inclosures, banks, conduits, parks, pounds, houses, barns, the burning of stacks of corn, &c. Lamb. ubi supra, mentions these; to beat a man, to enter upon a possession forcibly. Cowell.

I. What are considered as Riots, Routs, and unlawful Assemblies, at Common Law.

II. The Punishment of these Offences: And the Provisions against them, by Statute Law.

I. HOLT, Ch. J. in delivering the opinion of the Court, said, That the books are obscure in the definition of Riots, and that he took it, that it is not necessary to say they assembled for that purpose; but there must be an unlawful Assembly; and as to what act will make a Riot or Trespass, such an act as will make a Trespass will make a Riot; as, if a number of men assemble with arms, in terrorem populi, though no act is done; so if three come out of an alehouse, and go armed. 11 Mod. 116, 117. See Hob. 91.

Hawkins says, a Riot seems to be a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons, or more, assembling together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature; and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was of itself lawful or unlawful. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65. § 1.

A Rout seems to be, according to the general opinion, a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intent to do a thing, which, if it be executed, will make them Rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution thereof; but, by some books, the notion of a Riot is confined to such Assemblies only, as are occasioned by some grievance common to all the company, as the inclosure of land, in which they all claim a right of common, &c. However, inasmuch as it generally agrees with a Riot, as to all the rest of the above-mentioned particulars, requisite to constitute a Riot, except only in this, that it may be a complete offence without the execution of the intended enterprise; it seems not to require any farther explication. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65. § 8.

An Unlawful Assembly, according to the common opinion, is a disturbance of the peace by persons barely assembling together, with an intention to do a thing, which, which, if it was executed, would make them Rioters, but neither actually executing it, nor making a motion toward the execution of it; but (says Hawkins) this seems to be much too narrow a definition; for any meeting whatsoever of great numbers of people, with such circumstances of terror, as cannot but endanger the public peace, and raise fears and jealousies among the King's Subjects, seems properly to be called an Unlawful Assembly; as where great numbers, complaining of a common grievance, meet together armed in a warlike manner, in order to consult together concerning the most proper means for the recovery of their interests; for no one can foresee what may be the event of such an Assembly. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65 § 9.

These offences are thus defined and distinguished by Blackstone: An Unlawful Assembly is, when three or more do assemble themselves together to do an unlawful act, as, to pull down inclosures, to destroy a warren, or the game therein; and part, without doing it, or making any motion towards it. 3 Inst. 176. A Rout, is where three or more meet to do an unlawful act upon a common quarrel; as, forcibly breaking down fences, upon a right claimed of common, or of way, and make some advances towards it. Bro. Ab. title Riot 4, 5. A Riot, is where three or more actually do an unlawful act of violence, either with or without a common cause or quarrel: 3 Inst. 176: As if they beat a man, or hunt and kill game in another's park, chase, warren, or liberty: or do any other unlawful act, as removing a nuisance in a violent and tumultuous manner. 4 Comm. c. 11. p. 146.

If a man be in his house, and he hears that J. S. will come to his house to beat him, he may well make an Assembly of people of his friends and neighbours to assist and aid him in safe keeping his person. Per Fineux, Ch. Jus. Br. Riots, pl. 1, cites 21 Hen. 7. 39.

But if a man be menaced or threatened, that if he comes to the market of B. or to W. that he shall be beat, he cannot make an Assembly of people to assist him to go there, and this in safeguard of his person; for he need not go there, and he may have remedy by surety of the peace; but the house of a man is to him his castle and his defence, and where he properly ought to abide, &c. Br. Riots, pl. 1. cites 21 H. 7. 39.

Hawkins, citing the above case, remarks, That such violent methods cannot but be attended with the danger of raising tumults and disorders to the disturbance of the public peace.—Though a man may ride with arms, yet he cannot take two with him to defend himself, even though his life is threatened; for he is in the protection of the Law, which is sufficient for his defence. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65 § 10: Dalt. J. c. 137: 11 Mod. 116, 117.

If a number of people be assembled together in a lawful manner, and upon a lawful occasion, as for electing a Mayor, or the like, and during the Assembly a sudden affray happens, this will not make it a Riot ab initio; but it is only a common affray. Ld. Raym. 965.

If a number of people assemble in a riotous manner to do an unlawful act, and a person, who was upon the place before, upon a lawful occasion, and not privy to their first design, comes and joins himself with them, he will be guilty of a Riot equally with the rest. Ld. Raym. Rep. 965.

If several are assembled lawfully without any ill intent, and an affray happens, none are guilty but such as act; but if the Assembly was originally unlawful, the act of one is imputable to all. Per Holt, Ch. J. 2 Salk. 595.

It seems agreed, that if a number of persons, being met together at a fair, or market, or church ale, or any other lawful and innocent occasion, happen on a sudden quarrel to fall together by the ears, they are not guilty of a Riot, but of a sudden affray only, of which none are guilty, but those who actually engage in it; because the design of their meeting was innocent and lawful, and the subsequent breach of the peace happened unexpectedly without any previous intention concerning it; yet it is said, that if persons innocently assembled together, do afterwards, upon a dispute happening to arise among them, form themselves into parties, with promise of mutual assistance, and then make affray, they are guilty of a Riot; because, upon their confederating together with an intention to break the peace, they may as properly be said to be assembled together for that purpose from the time of such confederacy, as if their first coming together had been on such a design; however, it seems clear, that if, in an Assembly of persons, met together on any lawful occasion whatsoever, a sudden proposal shall be started of going together in a body to pull down a house or inclosure, or to do any other act of violence, to the disturbance of the public peace, and such motion be agreed to and executed accordingly, the persons concerned cannot but be Rioters, because their associating themselves together for such a new purpose is no way extenuated by their having met at first upon another. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65. § 3.

II. THE punishment of unlawful Assemblies, if to the number of twelve, may, as hereafter fully noticed, be capital, according to the circumstances that attend them; but from the number of three to eleven, is by fine and imprisonment only. The same is the case in Riots and Routs by the Common Law; to which the pillory, in very enormous cases, has been sometimes superadded. 4 Comm. c. 11.

By statute 34 E. 3. c. 1, Justices of the peace have power to restrain Rioters, &c. to arrest and imprison them, and cause them to be duly punished. By stat. 17 R. 2. c. 8, the Sheriff, and other the King's Ministers, generally have power to arrest Rioters with force. And by stat. 13 H. 4. c. 7, any two Justices, together with the Sheriff or Under-Sheriff of the county, may come, with the posse comitatus, if need be, and suppress any Riot, Assembly, or Rout, arrest the Rioters, and record, upon the spot, the nature and circumstances of the whole transaction; which record alone shall be a sufficient conviction of the offenders: And if the offenders are departed, the said Justices, &c. shall, within a month after, make inquiry thereof, and hear and determine the same; and if the truth cannot be found, then, within a further month, the Justices and Sheriffs are to certify to the King and Council, &c; on default whereof, the Justices, &c. shall forfeit 100*l.*

These statutes are understood of great and notorious Riots: And the record of the Riot within the view of the Justices, by whom it is recorded, is such a conviction as cannot be traversed, the parties being concluded thereby; but they may take advantage of the insufficiency of the record, if the Justices have not pursued the statute, &c. It is said, that the offenders being convicted victed upon the record of their offence, in the presence of the Justices, ought to be sent immediately to gaol, till they pay a fine assessed by the same Justices; which fine is to be estreated into the Exchequer; or the Justices may record such Riot, and commit the offenders, and after certify the record into B. R. or to the Assizes or Sessions: If the offenders are gone, then the Justices shall inquire by a Jury; and the Riot being found, they are to make a record of it, and fine them, or receive their traverse, to be sent by the Justices to the next Quarter-Sessions, or into the King's Bench, to be tried according to Law. Dalt. 200, 201, 202.

It hath been adjudged, that where Rioters are convicted upon the view of two Justices, the Sheriff must be a party to the inquisition on the stat. 13 Hen. 4. c. 7. But if they disperse themselves before conviction, the Sheriff need not be a party; for in such case the two Justices may make the inquisition without them; and this is pro Domino Rege: And if the Justices neglect to make an inquisition within a month after the Riot, they are liable to the penalty for not doing it within that time; but the lapse of the month doth not determine their authority to make an inquisition afterwards. 2 Salk. 594.

In the interpretation of the above stat. 13 Hen. 4. c. 7, it hath also been holden, that all persons, noblemen and others, except women, clergymen, persons decrepit, and infants under fifteen, are bound to attend the Justices in suppressing a Riot, upon pain of fine and imprisonment: And that any battery, wounding, or killing the Rioters, that may happen in suppressing the Riot, is justifiable. 1 Hal P. C. 495: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 20, 21.

On the above, Blackstone remarks, that our ancient Law seems pretty well to have guarded against any violent breach of the public peace; especially as any riotous Assembly, on a public or general account, as to redress grievances, or pull down all inclosures, and also resisting the King's forces, if sent to keep the peace, may amount to overt acts of high treason, by levying war against the King.—This observation will appear confirmed, by a statement of the following statutes, also made on this subject. And see further 1 Hawk. P.C. c. 65.

Rioters convicted on view of two Justices, and of the Sheriff of the county, are to be fined by the two Justices and the Sheriff; and if the Sheriff do not join in setting the fine, it is error; for the statute requires that he should be joined with the Justices in the whole proceedings. Raym. 386. By stat. 2 Hen. 5. st. 1. c. 8, If the Justices make default in inquiring of a Riot, at the instance of the party grieved, the King's commission shall be issued to inquire, as well of the Riots as of the default, by sufficient and indifferent men of the county, at the discretion of the Chancellor; and in case the Sheriff is in default, the Coroners shall make the panel of inquest upon the said commission, which is returnable into the Chancery, &c. and by this statute, heinous Rioters are to suffer one year's imprisonment.

The Lord Chancellor, having knowledge of a Riot, may send the King's writ to the Justices of peace, and to the Sheriff of the county, &c. requiring them to put the statute in execution; and the Chancellor, upon complaint made, that a dangerous Rioter is fled into places unknown, and on suggestion, under the seals of two Justices of peace and the Sheriff, that the common fame runneth in the county of the Riot, may award a capias against the parties, returnable in Chancery upon a certain day, and afterwards a writ of proclamation, returnable in the King's Bench, &c. Stat. 2 H. 5. st. 1. c. 9: 8 H. 6. c. 14.

Where Riots are committed, the Sheriff, upon a precept directed to him, is to return twenty-four persons, dwelling within the county, to inquire thereof, &c. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 13.

A Mayor and Alderman of a town making a Riot, are punishable in their natural capacities; but where they have countenanced dangerous Riots within their precincts, their liberties have been seized, or the corporation fined. 3 Cro. 252: Dalt. 204, 326. Women may be punished as Rioters; but infants, under the age of fourteen years, are not punishable. Dalt. 325: Wood's Inst. 429.

The riotous assembling of twelve persons, or more, and not dispersing upon proclamation, was first made high treason by stat. 3 & 4 Edw. 6. c. 5, when the King was a minor, and a change in religion to be effected: but that statute was repealed by stat. 1 Mar. c. 1, among the other treasons created since the 25 Edw. 3; though the prohibition was in substance re-enacted, with an inferior degree of punishment, by stat. 1 Mar. st. 2. c. 12, which made the same offence a single felony. These statutes specified and particularized the nature of the Riots they meant to suppress; as, for example, such as were set on foot with intention to offer violence to the Privy Council, or to change the Laws of the kingdom, or for certain other specific purposes: in which cases, if the persons were commanded by proclamation to disperse, and they did not, it was by the statute of Mary made felony, but within the benefit of clergy; and the act also indemnified the peace-officers and their assistants, if they killed any of the mob in endeavouring to suppress such Riot. This was thought a necessary security in that sanguinary reign, when Popery was intended to be re-established, which was like to produce great discontents: but at first it was made only for a year, and was afterwards continued for that Queen's life. And, by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 16, when a reformation in religion was to be once more attempted, it was revived and continued during her life also: and then expired. From the accession of James I. to the death of Queen Anne, it was never once thought expedient to revive it: but, in the first year of George I. it was judged necessary, in order to support the execution of the Act of Settlement, to renew it, and at one stroke to make it perpetual, with large additions. For, whereas the former acts expressly defined and specified what should be accounted a Riot, the statute 1 Geo. 1. c. 5, enacts, generally, That if any persons, to the number of twelve, are unlawfully assembled, to the disturbance of the peace, and any one Justice of the peace, Sheriff, Under-Sheriff, or Mayor of a town, shall think proper to command them by proclamation to disperse, if they contemn his orders, and continue together for one hour afterwards, such contempt shall be felony without benefit of clergy. And farther, if the reading of the proclamation be by force opposed, or the reader be in any manner wilfully hindered from the reading of it, such opposers and hinderers are felons without benefit of clergy: and all persons to whom such proclamation ought to have been made, and knowing of such hinderance, and not dispersing, are felons without benefit of clergy. There is in this act also an indemnifying clause, in case any of the mob be unfortunately killed in the endeavour to disperse them; and and, by a subsequent clause, if any person, so riotoufl assembled, begin, even before proclamation, to pull dow any church, chapel, meeting-house, dwelling-house, o out-houses, they shall be felons without benefit of clergy and inhabitants of towns and Hundreds are to yield dama ges for rebuilding or reparation, to be levied and paid u such manner as money recovered against the Hundred by persons robbed on the highway, &c. Prosecutions o this act are to be commenced within one year after th offence: This statute, being wholly in the affirmative doth not take away any authority in the suppressing a Rio by Common Law, or by other statutes. Wood's Inst. 430 See 4 Comm. 125, 433.

The owners of houses may recover damages for th destruction of their furniture, or for any injury to their property, done at the same time that the buildings are demolished, or in part pulled down. Doug. 673, (699), Hyde v. Cogan.

A person, present aiding and abetting Rioters, is a principal in the second degree under this statute 4 Burr. 2073.

Nearly related to this head of Riots, is the offence of Tumultuous Petitioning; which was carried to an enormous height in the times preceding the Grand Rebellion. Wherefore, by stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 5, It is enacted, That not more than twenty names shall be signed to any petition to the King, or either House of Parliament, for any alteration of matters, established by Law, in Church or State; unless the contents thereof be previously approved, in the Country, by three Justices, or the majority of the Grand Jury at the Assises or Quarter Sessions; and, in London, by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council: and that no petition shall be delivered by a company of more than ten persons, on pain, in either case, of incurring a penalty not exceeding 100*l.* and three months imprisonment. See this Dictionary, titles Petition; Liberty.

Proceedings of the same nature, and manifestly tending to the same end, as the tumultuous petitions above alluded to, by Assembling the lower class of people in public meetings on Political Questions, and by reading Lectures on Political Subjects, had arrived to such a height in the year 1795, through the machinations of persons friendly to, and not improbably connected with, the French Revolutionists, that the Legislature found it necessary to interpose: and the following Act was passed; after several debates, in both Houses, in which the perseverance of the opposers of the measure was more remarkable than their numbers. It is but justice to say, that the evils dreaded from this fresh restraint of the liberty of the Subject never appear to have taken place, while the benefits were unquestionable: Though the Act was in some measure eluded, particularly in the provision against Political Lectures.

The first part of the stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 8, after reciting that "Assemblies of divers persons collected for the purpose, or under the pretext, of deliberating on public grievances, and of agreeing on petitions, complaints, remonstrances, declarations, or other addresses to the King, or to both Houses, or either House of Parliament, had of late been made use of to serve the ends of factious and seditious persons, to the great danger of the public peace; and might become the means of producing confusion and calamities in the Nation;" enacts, That no meeting of any description of persons, exceeding the number of fifty persons, (except county-meetings; or meetings called by two Justices; or by the major part of the Grand Jury of the county; or meetings of corporate bodies, or of towns corporate, and their divisions, called by the proper officer;) shall be holden for the purpose, or on the pretext, of considering or preparing any petition, &c. to the King, or Parliament, for alterations of matters established in Church or State; or for the purpose, or on pretext, of deliberating upon any grievance in Church or State; unless previous notice of the time, place, and purpose of such meeting shall be given, by seven householders of the place, in some public news-paper, five days previous to the meeting. Such notice not to be inserted in any paper, unless the authority for so doing shall be signed by seven householders, at the foot of the notice for the meeting. The notice and authority to be preserved and produced to a Justice, if required; and a penalty of 50*l.* is imposed on the person inserting the notice in a paper without such authority, or refusing to produce the notice and authority when required. § 1.

Or a notice, signed as above by seven householders, may be delivered to the Clerk of the Peace, who shall send a copy of the same to three Justices of the place, at least. § 2.

All meetings of any description of persons, exceeding fifty in number, (except as aforesaid,) which shall be held without such notice, for the purpose or on the pretexts before stated, shall be deemed and taken to be Unlawful Assemblies. § 3.

If twelve or more persons, of a greater number than fifty assembled contrary to this statute, shall continue together one hour, after being required by a Justice to disperse, they shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. § 4. For the proclamation for dispersing, see at the end of this title.

In case any meeting shall be holden, in pursuance of such notice, and the purpose for which the same shall in such notice have been declared to be holden, or any matter which shall be in such notice proposed to be propounded or deliberated upon at such meeting, shall purport that any thing by Law established may be altered, except by authority of King, Lords, and Commons, in Parliament, a Magistrate may order them to disperse: And if twelve or more shall then continue together, they shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. § 5.

At the meetings so held, Justices may order any persons to be taken into custody, who shall propound or maintain propositions for altering any thing by Law established, except by authority of the King and Parliament; or who shall wilfully and advisedly make any proposition, or hold any discourse, for the purpose of inciting and stirring up the people to hatred or contempt of the King, or the Government and Constitution: And in case of resistance, proclamation may be made, and the Assembly must disperse, on the penalties before imposed. § 6.

Magistrates may resort to all such Meetings and Assemblies, and act according to Law, and require the assistance of peace-officers. § 8: And persons obstructing Magistrates attending, or going to attend, the meetings, are declared capital felons. § 10: And the other provisions of the Riot Act, 1 Geo. 1. c. 5, are adopted for enforcing this Act.

The other part of the Statute relating to Political Lectures, after reciting "That certain houses, &c. in London, Westminster, and the neighbourhood, and in other places, had of late been frequently used for the purpose of delivering lectures and discourses on supposed public grievances grievances and matters relating to the Laws, Constitution and Government, and Policy of these kingdoms, and treating and debating on and concerning the same; and that under pretence thereof, lectures or discourses had been delivered, and debates held, tending to stir up hatred and contempt of the King's person, and of the Government, and Constitution of the realm as by law established;" Enacts, that every place where lectures shall be delivered, or debates held, on public grievances, or any matter relating to the Laws, Constitution, Government, or Policy of these kingdoms, where money is, directly or indirectly, given or paid for admission, unless previously licensed pursuant to the act, shall be deemed disorderly places, and the persons opening or using them shall forfeit 100*l*. § 12. And the usual provisions are made to prevent the statute being eluded. See title Sunday.

Magistrates, who, by information on oath, may have reason to suspect that any place is opened for delivering lectures, &c. may demand to be admitted: And in case of refusal, the place shall be deemed disorderly, and the person refusing admittance shall forfeit 100*l*. § 14.

Magistrates may demand admittance to any licensed place, at the time of delivering lectures; on the same penalties. § 15.

Two Justices may license places for delivering lectures, (for which only 1*s*. shall be paid) for one year, or any time therein specified; which licences may be revoked by the General Quarter Sessions. § 16.

It is expresly provided that the act shall not extend to lectures in the Universities; nor to Schoolmasters in the exercise of their duty: And that the act shall not take away or abridge any previous provision of the Law for punishing or suppressing such offences.—

The continuance of the act was limited to three years, from the 18th December 1795; and to end of the then next Session of Parliament.

ROBA, A robe, coat, or garment. Walsingh. 267. See Retainer.

ROBBERY, Roberia.] A felonious taking away of another man's goods, from his person or in his presence, against his will, by putting him in fear, and of purpose to steal the same. West. Symbol. part. 2. title Indictments. 660. And this offence was called Robbery, either because they bereaved the true man of some of his robes or garments, or because his money or goods were taken out of some part of his garment or robe about his person. Co. 3 Inst. c. 16. This is sometimes called violent theft. West. Symbol. ub. sup.. Kitchin, fol. 16: 22 Lib ass. 39: See Skene de verborum signif. verb. Reif, and Cromp. Justice of Peace, fol. 30.

ROBBERY is a felony by the Common Law, committed by a violent assault, upon the person of another, by putting him in fear, and taking from his person his money, or other goods of any value whatsoever. 3 Inst. 68. c. 16.

What is or amounts to a Robbery in respect of the Manner, or the Person from whom any Thing is taken.

* Open and violent Larceny from the person, or Robbery, is the felonious and forcible taking, from the person of another, of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. 1*st*, There must be a taking, otherwise it is no Robbery. A mere attempt to rob was indeed held to be felony, so late as Henry the Fourth's time: 1 Hal. P C. 532. But afterwards it was taken to be only a misdemeanor, and punishable with fine and imprisonment; till the statute 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. which makes it a felony, (transportable for seven years,) unlawfully and maliciously to assault another, with any offensive weapon or instrument;—or by menaces, or by other forcible or violent manner, to demand any money or goods;—with a felonious intent to rob. If the thief, having once taken a purse, return it, still it is a Robbery; And so it is, whether the taking be strictly from the person of another, or in his presence only: As, where a Robber by menaces and violence puts a man in fear, and drives away his sheep or his cattle before his face. 1 Hal. P. C. 533. But if the taking be not either directly from his person, or in his presence, it is no Robbery. Com. 478: Stra. 10. 15.

2*dly*, It is immaterial of what value the thing taken is: a penny as well as a pound, thus forcibly extorted, makes a Robbery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. § 5.

Lastly, The taking must be by force, or a previous putting in fear; which makes the violation of the person more atrocious than privately stealing. This previous violence, or putting in fear, is the criterion that distinguishes Robbery from other larcenies. For if one privately steals sixpence from the person of another, and afterwards keeps it by putting him in fear, this is no Robbery, for the fear is subsequent: Neither is it capital, as privately stealing, being under the value of twelvepence. 1 Hal. P. C. 534. Not that it is indeed necessary, though usual, to lay in the indictment that the Robbery was committed by putting in fear; it is sufficient, if laid to be done by violence, and against the will of him robbed. Fost 128. And when it is laid to be done by putting in fear, this does not imply any great degree of terror or affright in the party robbed: It is enough that so much force, or threatening by word or gesture, be used, as might create an apprehension of danger, or induce a man to part with his property without or against his consent. Thus, if a man be knocked down without previous warning, and stripped of his property while senseless, though strictly he cannot be said to be put in fear, yet this is undoubtedly a Robbery. Or, if a person with a sword drawn begs an alms, and I give it him through mistrust and apprehension of violence, this is a felonious Robbery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 45. § 6. So if, under under a pretence of sale, a man forcibly extorts money from another, neither shall this subterfuge avail him. But it is doubted, whether the forcing a higler, or other chapman, to sell his wares, and giving him the full value of them, amounts to so heinous a crime as Robbery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. § 7.

This species of larceny is debarred of the benefit of clergy by stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1, and other subsequent statutes; not indeed in general, but only when committed in a dwelling-house, or in or near the King's highway. A Robbery therefore in a distant field, or foot-path, was not punished with death; 1. Hal. P. C. 535. but was open to the benefit of clergy, till the stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9; which takes away clergy, from both principals and accessaries before the fact, in Robbery, wheresoever committed. 4 Comm. c. 17. p. 243, 4. Principals and accessaries, before the fact, were debarred of clergy by stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1. And accessaries, after, by stat. 4 P. & M. c 4, in the cases above-mentioned. The words of the stat 23 Hen. 8, are still pursued in indictments for this offence. 1 Hawk. P. C c. 34. § 11. n.

The circumstance of putting one in fear, makes the difference between a Robbery and a cut-purse; both take it from the person, but this takes it clam et secrete without assault or putting in fear, and the Robber by violent assault and putting in fear. 3 Inst. 68. c. 16.

Wherever a person assaults another, with such circumstances of terror as put him in fear, and causes him, by reason of such fear, to part with his money, the taking thereof is adjudged Robbery; whether there were any weapon drawn or not, or whether the person assaulted delivered his money upon the other's command, or afterwards gave it to him upon his ceasing to use force, and begging an alms; for he was put into fear by his assault, and gives him his money to get rid of him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. § 9.

In the case of Macdaniel and others, at the Old Bailey Sessions in December 1755, Mr. Justice Foster was of opinion, that if a man attacked by an highwayman and robbed, previous to the Robbery resists, and is overpowered, without being under any fear at all, it is not the less Robbery upon that account. Fost. 128.

If the fact appear, upon the evidence, to have been attended with those circumstances of violence or terror which, in common experience, are likely to induce a man to part with his property against his consent, either for the safety of his person, or for the preservation of his character and good name, it will amount to a Robbery; and this, though no express demand of money is made. Thus if an officer feloniously take money from a prisoner, not to take him to gaol, under colour of authority: Or if one obtain property by threatening to accuse another of having been guilty of an unnatural crime, these Acts, particularly the latter, on the solemn opinion of all the Judges, have been held acts sufficient to raise, in the mind of the party menaced, such a terror and apprehension of mischief, as to constitute the offence of Robbery, by putting in fear. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. § 6. Leach's note

The following distinction has also been frequently admitted in prosecutions for Robbery, viz. That if any thing is snatched suddenly from the head, hand, or person of any one without any struggle on the part of the owner, or without any evidence of force or violence being exerted by the thief, is does not amount to Robbery. But if any thing is broken or torn in consequence of the sudden seizure, it would be evidence of such force as would constitute a Robbery: As where part of a lady's hair was torn away by snatching a diamond pin from her head, and an ear was torn by pulling of an ear-ring, each of these cases was determined to be a Robbery. 4 Comm. c. 17. p. 244. n. cites Leach 238.

The words of the indictment, violenter et felonicè cepit, must be understood to imply that there is an actual taking in deed, and a taking in Law, and that may be when a thief receives, &c. For example: If thieves rob a true man, and finding but little about him, take it, this is an actual taking; and by threats of death compel him to swear upon a book to fetch them a greater sum, which he does and delivers it to them, which they receive, this is a taking in Law by them, and adjudged Robbery; for fear made him take the oath, and the oath and fear continuing, made him bring the money, which amounts to a taking in Law; and in this case there needs no special indictment, but the general indictment (Quod violenter & felonicè cepit) is sufficient. And so it is, if at the first the true man for fear delivers his purse, &c. to the thief. 3 Inst. 68. c. 16.

See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. § 4. That the thief must be in possession of the thing stolen, or otherwise he is not guilty of Robbery. 3 Inst. 69. c. 16. S P.

The words of the indictment are from the person, &c. If the true man, seeking to escape for the safeguard of his money, casts it into a bush, which the thief perceiving, takes it: This is a taking in Law from the person, because it is done at one time. 3 Inst. 69. c. 16. And so, if one drive my cattle in my presence out of my pasture, or takes my hat, which fell from my head, he may be indicted as having taken things from my person. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 34. §. 8. See also 3 Inst. 69. c. 16: And. 116. pl. 161: Sty. 156.

In some cases, a man may be said to rob me, where in truth he never actually had any of my goods in his possession; as where I am robbed by several in one gang, and one of them takes my money, in which case; in judgment of Law, every one of the company shall be said to take it, in respect of that encouragement which they give to another through the hopes of mutual assistance in their enterprise: Nay, though they miss of their first intended prize, and one of them afterwards rides from the rest, and robs a third person in the same highway, without their knowledge, out of their view, and then returns to them, all are guilty of Robbery; for they came together with an intent to rob, and to assist one another in so doing. 1 Hawk. P. C c. 34. § 7.

If a carrier's man or son conspire to rob him, and do it accordingly, the carrier not being privy to it, he may sue the Hundred on the statute of Winton; but the conspiracy may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages. Style 427.

If a man-servant be robbed of his master's goods, in his master's sight, this shall be taken for a robbing of the master. Style 156.

Taking cattle from A. which he is driving on the highway, is a taking from his person, and so a Robbery; 2 Salk. 641.

As to recovering against the Hundred, see this Dictionary, title Hue and Cry: And as to Robberies from the person without violence and others, see tit. Larceny.

ROBBERSMEN, or ROBBERDSMEN, Were a sort of great thieves, mentioned in the statutes 5 Edw. 3. c. 14: 7 R. 2. c. 5: of whom Coke says, That Robin Hood lived in the reign of King Rich. I. on the borders of England and Scotland, by robbery, burning of houses, rapine and spoil, &c. and that these Robberdsmen took name from him. 3 Inst. 197.

ROCHET, That linen garment which is worn by bishops, gathered at the wrists; It differs from a surplice; for that hath open sleeves hanging down; but a Rochet hath close sleeves. Lindewode, lib. 3. tit. 27.

ROCK-SALT; See Salt.

ROD, Roda terræ.] A measure of sixteen feet and a half long, otherwise called a Perch.

ROD-KNIGHTS, From the Sax. Rad. Equitatio & Cnyt, Famulus, quasi Ministri Eqitantes.] Certain servitors who held their land by serving their lords on horseback. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.

ROGUE, Fr.] An idle sturdy beggar, who, by ancient statutes, for the first offence, was called a Rogue of the first degree, and punished by whipping, and boring through the gristle of the right ear, with a hot iron; and for the second offence, he was termed a Rogue of the second degree, and executed as a felon, if he were above eighteen years old; stats. 27 H. 8. c. 25: 14 Eliz. c. 5: but repealed by stat. 35 Eliz. c. 7. § 24: as relates to vagabonds of the second degree. See further title Vagrants.

ROGUS, Lat.] A funeral pile: A great fire wherein dead bodies were burned; and sometimes it is taken simply for a pile of wood. Claus. 5 Hen. 3.

ROLL, Rotulus.] A schedule of parchment that may be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe. Staundf. P. C. 11. Rolls are parchments on which all the pleadings, memorials, and acts of Courts are entered and filed with the proper officer; and then they become records of the Court. 2 Lil. Abr. 491. By a rule made by the Court of King's Bench, every Attorney is to bring in his Rolls into the office fairly engrossed by the times thereby limited, viz. The Rolls of Trinity, Michaelmas, and Hilary terms, before the essoin day of every subsequent term; and the Rolls of Easter term before the first day of Trinity term; and no Attorney at law, or any other person, shall file any Rolls, &c. but the clerks of the chief clerks of this Court. Ord. B. R. Mich. 1705. If Rolls are not brought into the office in time, it has been ordered that they shall not be received without a particular rule of Court for that purpose. Mich. 9 W. 3. See titles Practice; Pleadings.

ROLL OF COURT, Rotulus Curiæ.] The Court-Roll in a manor, wherein the names, rents, and services of the tenants were copied and inrolled. See tit. Copyhold.

ROME-SCOT; See Peter-Pence.

ROMNEY-MARSH, A large tract of land in the county of Kent, containing 24,000 acres: and is governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable Judge in the reign of King Henry III.; from which laws all Commissioners of Sewers in England may receive light and direction. 4 Inst. 276. King Henry III granted a charter to Romney-Marsh, empowering twenty-four men thereunto chosen, to make distresses equally upon all those who have lands and tenements in the said Marsh, to repair the walls and watergates of the same against the dangers of the sea. There are also several laws and customs observed in the said Marsh, established by ordinance of Justices thereto appointed in 42 Hen. 3: 16 E. 1: 33 E. 3, &c. The Commissioners of Sewers, in other parts of England, may act according to the laws and customs of Romney Marsh, or otherwise at their own discretion. See title Sewers.

ROOD, or Holy Rood, Holy Cross.

ROOD OF LAND, Rodata Terræ.] The fourth part of an acre.

ROOTS, Trees, shrubs, or plants. See this Dict. title MISCHIEF, Malicious.

ROPE-DANCERS, &c. are public nusances, and may, upon indictment, be suppressed and fined. 1 Hawk. P. C 75. § 6. See title Play Houses.

RUSCATIA, The place where kneeholm or broom grows. Co. Lit. 5.

RUSH-LIGHTS; See Candles.

RUSSIA COMPANY, (or as it has ſometimes been termed The Muſcovy Company,) ſubſiſted by virtue of a charter granted by Philip and Mary, in the firſt and ſecond year of their reign, which was confirmed by a private ſtatute, paſſed in 8th of Elizabeth. The charter was granted to them under the ſtyle of The Merchants Adventurers of England for the Diſcovery of Lands, Territories, Iſles, Dominions, and Seigniories unknown, and not, before their late Adventure or Enterpriſe, by Seas or Navigation commonly frequented. In the ſtatute they were deſcribed by the name of The Fellowſhip of Engliſh Merchants for the Diſcovery of new Trades. The extent of their rights under the ſtatute was the ſole privilege of trading to and from the dominions and territories of the Emperor of Ruſſia, lying Northward, North-eaſtward, and North-weſtward from London, as alſo to the countries of Arminia Major or Minor, Media, Arcania, Perſia, or the Caſpian Sea. It was ſaid in ſtat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 6, to be commonly called The Ruſſia Company.

In the reign of King Will. III. it was thought this trade might be conſiderably enlarged, if the admiſſion of perſons into the Company was made more eaſy; and that it would be very proper to aſcertain the fee of admiſſion, which had not been done either by the charter or the ſtatute [of Elizabeth]. It was accordingly enacted by the ſaid ſtatute of 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 6. § 1, 2, that every Subject of this realm might be admitted into the Company on payment of 5*l.* only.

For the charter and other matters relating to this Company, ſee Hackluyt, vol. 1. p. 258—274. And for the particulars of ſtat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 36, as to the trade to Perſia through Ruſſia, See Reeves's Law of Shipping and Navigation.

RUSTICI. The churls, clowns, or inferior country tenants, who held cottages and lands by the ſervices of ploughing, and other labours of agriculture for the lord. The land of ſuch ignoble tenure was called by the Saxons Geſalland, as afterwards ſocage tenure, and was ſometimes diſtinguiſhed by the name of terra ruſticorum. Paroch. Antiq. 136. See title Tenures.

RYE, A grain, of which bread is made in ſome parts of England. See title Corn.

Rye and Winchelsea, An ancient ſtatute was made againſt ballaſt caſt into the channel at Rye and Winchelſea, &c. Stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 30. See title Cinque Ports.

S.

SABBATH-BREAKING. The profanation of the Lord's Day. See title Sunday.

SABBATUM, The Sabbath, or day of rest; the seventh day from the Creation: It is used for peace in the book of Domesday.

SABALLINÆ PELLES, Sable furs, mentioned in Hovend. p. 578: Brompt. anno 1188.

SABBULONARIUM, A gravel pit: or liberty to dig gravel and sand; also the money paid for the same. Pet. Parl. temp. Ed. III.

SAC; See Soke.

SACA, In the Saxon is properly synonymous with Causa in Latin, whence we in England still retain the expression, For whose sake, i. e. For whose cause, &c.

SACABURTH; SACABERE; SAKABERE: He that is robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Brit. c. 15 & 29; with whom agrees Bracton, l. 3. c. 32. The Scots term it Sikerborgh, that is certum vel securum plegium vel pignus; for with them Siker signifieth securus, and borgh legius. Spelm.

SACCINI, Monks so called, because they wore next their skins a garment of goat's hair; and saccus is applied to coarse cloth made of such hair. Walsing.

SACCIS, Fratres de Saccis, the sack-cloth brethren, or the penitential order. Placit. 8 Ed. 2.

SACCUS CUM BROCHIA, A service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach (pitcher) to the King, for the use of his army. Bracton, lib. 2. c. 16. See Brochia.

SACK OF WOOL, A quantity of twenty-six stone of Sheep's Wool; and of Cotton Wool, from one hundred and a half to four hundred. Stat. antiq. 14 Ed 3 st. 1. c. 2.

SACRAMENT, Sacramentum.] Usually applied to the Holy Sacrament of The Lord's Supper. By the Rubrick there must be three at the least to communicate, and a minister is not without lawful cause to deny it to any who shall devoutly and humbly desire it: But notorious sinners are not to be admitted to it till they have repented; nor those who maliciously contend, until they are reconciled, &c. also the Sacrament is not to be administered to such who refuse to be present at the prayers of the church, or to strangers; for a minister is not obliged to give it to any but those of his own parish; and the partakers of the Holy Sacrament ought to signify their names to the curate at least a day before it is administered. Can. 27.

If a minister refuse to give the Sacrament to any one, being required by the Bishop, he is to certify the cause of such refusal; and a parson refusing to administer the Sacrament to any without just cause, is liable to be sued in action on the case; because a man may have a temporal loss by such refusal. 1 Sid. 34. See the Corporation and Test Acts; this Dictionary, title Nonconformists.

In every parish church the Sacrament is to be administered three times in the year, (whereof the feast of Easter to be one) and every layman is bound to receive it thrice every year, &c. In Colleges and halls of the Universities, the Sacraments are to be administered the first or second Sunday of every month; and in cathedral churches, upon all principal feast-days. Canon 21, 22, 23.

The Churchwardens, as well as the Minister, are to take notice whether the parishioners came so often to the Sacrament as they ought; and on a Churchwarden's presenting a man for not receiving the Sacrament, he may be libelled in the Ecclesiastical Court and excommunicated, &c. See further, title Reviling, &c.

SACRAMENTUM, An oath: The common form of all inquisitions might, in Latin, by a Jury, run thus: Qui dicunt supra Sacramentum suum, &c. whence possibly the proverbial offering to take the Sacrament of the truth of a thing, was first meant by attesting upon oath.

SACRAMENTUM ALTARIS, The Sacrifice of the Mass, or what is now called, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Paroch. Antiq. 438.

SACRILEGE, Sacrilegium.] Church robbery, or a taking of things out of a holy place; as where a person steals any vessels, ornament, or goods of the church: And it is said to be a robbery of God, at least of what is dedicated to his service. 3 Cro. 153. If any thing belonging to private persons, left in a church, be stolen, it is only common theft, not Sacrilege: But the Canon Law determines that also to be Sacrilege; as likewise the stealing of a thing known to be consecrated, in a place not consecrated. Treat. Laws 360.

By the Civil Law, Sacrilege is punished with greater severity than any other thefts; and the Common Law distinguished this crime from other robberies; for it denied the benefit of the clergy to the offenders, which it did not do to other felons: But by statute it is put upon a footing with other felonies, by making it felony excluded of clergy, as most other felonies are. 2 Inst. 250.

All persons not in holy orders, who shall be indicted, whether in the same county where the fact was committed, or in a different county, of robbing any church, chapel, or other holy place, are excluded from their clergy, by stats. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1: 25 Hen. 8. c. 3: 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c 10. And all persons in general are ousted of their clergy for the felonious taking of any goods out of any parish church, or other church or chapel, by stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12 See title Larceny II. 1. But the word robbing being always taken to carry with it some force, it seems no Sacrilege is within these statutes, which is not accompanied with the actual breaking of a church, &c. Kel. 58, 69: Dyer 224 And the stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1, is the only act which extends to accessaries to these robberies; except the offence amount to burglary, in which case accessaries before are ousted of clergy, by stat. 3 & 4 W. & M c. 9. See titles Accessary; Burglary.

The term Sacrilege was also anciently applied to the alienation to laymen, and to profane or common purposes, of what was given to religious persons and to pious uses: This was a guilt which our forefathers were very tender of incurring; and therefore when the order of the Knights Templars was dissolved, their lands were, under this pretext, afterwards violated, given to the Knights Hospitallers of Jerusalem, for this reason: Ne in pios usus erogata contra donatorum voluntatem in alios usus distraherentur. Paroch. Antiq. 390.

SACRISTA, Lat.] A sexton, belonging to a church, in old times called Sagerson and Sagiston.

SAFE-CONDUCT, Salvus Conductus.] A security given by the Prince, under the Great Seal, to a stranger, for his safe-coming into, and passing out of, the realm; the form whereof is in Reg. Orig. 25.

The royal prerogative of granting Safe-conducts is considered by Blackstone as nearly related to, and plainly derived from, that of making war. See this Dictionary, title King V. 3.

Great tenderness is shewn by our laws, not only to foreigners in distress, (see title Wreck,) but with regard also to the admission of strangers who come spontaneously; for as long as their nation continues at peace with ours, and they behave themselves peaceably, they are under the King's protection; though liable to be sent home whenever the King sees occasion. But no Subject of a nation at war with us can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized by our Subjects, unless he has letters of Safe-conduct; which by divers ancient statutes must be granted under the King's Great Seal, and inrolled in Chancery, or else are of no effect; the King being supposed the best judge of such emergencies, as may deserve exception from the general law of arms. But passports under the King's sign-manual, or licences from his embassadors abroad, are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity. 1 Comm. c. 7. p. 259, 260. See stats. 15 H. 6. c. 3: 18 Hen. 6. c. 8: 20 Hen 6. c. 1: and further, title Alien.

Indeed the Law of England, as a commercial country, pays a very particular regard to foreign merchants in innumerable instances. One is highly proper to be mentioned in this place. By Magna Carta, c. 30. it is provided, that all merchants (unless publicly prohibited beforehand) shall have Safe-conduct to depart from, to come into, to tarry in, and to go through England, for the exercise of merchandise, without any unreasonable imposts; except in time of war: And, if a war breaks out between us and their country, they shall be attached (if in England) without harm of body or goods, till the King or his chief justiciary be informed how our merchants are treated in the land with which we are at war; and, if ours be secure in that land, they shall be secure in ours. See 1 Comm. p. 260: Montesq. Sp. L. xx. 13.

The Violation of Safe-conducts or Passports, or the committing acts of hostility against such as are in amity, league, or truce with us, who are here under a general implied Safe-conduct, are breaches of public faith; without the preservation of which there can be no intercourse or commerce between one Nation and another; and they are considered as one just ground of national war. And as, during the continuance of any Safe-conduct, either express or implied, the foreigner is under the protection of the King and the Law; and, more especially, as we have seen that it is one of the articles of Magna Carta, that foreign merchants should be entitled to Safe-conduct and security throughout the kingdom; there is no question but that any violation of either the person or property of such foreigner may be punished, by indictment in the name of the King, whose honour is more particularly engaged in supporting his own Safe conduct. And when this malicious rapacity was not confined to private individuals, but broke out into general hostilities, by stat. 2 Hen. 5 st. 1. c. 6, the breaking of truce and Safe-conducts, or abetting and receiving the truce breakers, was (in affirmance and support of the Law of Nations) declared to be high treason against the Crown and dignity of the King; and conservators of truce and Safe-conducts were appointed in every port, and empowered to hear and determine such treasons (when committed at sea) according to the ancient Marine Law, then practised in the Admiral's Court; and together with two men learned in the Law of the land, to hear and determine according to that Law the same treasons, when committed within the body of any county. Which statute, so far as it made these offences amount to treason, was suspended by stat. 14 Hen. 6. c. 8, and repealed by stat. 20 Hen. 6. c 11, but revived by stat 29 Hen. 6. c. 2; which gave the same powers to the Lord Chancellor, associated with either of the Chief Justices, as belonged to the conservators of truce and their assessors; and enacted that, notwithstanding the party be convicted of treason, the injured stranger should have restitution out of his effects, prior to any claim of the Crown. And it is farther enacted by stat. 31 Hen. 6. c. 4, that if any of the King's Subjects attempt or offend, upon the sea, or in any port within the King's obeisance, against any stranger in amity, league, or truce, or under Safe-conduct; and especially by attaching his person, or spoiling him or robbing him of his goods; the Lord Chancellor, with any of the Justices of either the King's Bench, or Common Pleas, may cause full restitution and amends to be made to the party injured.

It is observed, that the suspending and repealing acts of 14 & 20 Hen. 6, and also the reviving act of 29 Hen. 6, were only temporary; so that it should seem that, after the expiration of them all, the stat. 2 Hen. 5; continued in full force: but yet it is considered as extinct by the stat. 14 Ed. 4. c. 4, which revives and confirms all statutes and ordinances, made before the accession of the House of York, against breakers of amities, truces, leagues, and Safe-conducts, with an express exception to the stat. 2 Hen. 5. But (however that may be) it seems to have been finally repealed by the general statutes of Ed. VI. and Queen Mary, for abolishing new-created treasons; though Hale seems to question it as to treasons committed on the sea. 1 Hal. P. C. 267. But certainly the stat. 31 Hen. 6. remains in full force to this day. 4 Comm. c. 5. p. 69, 70.

SAFEGUARD, Salva Guardia.] A protection of the King to one, who is a stranger, that fears violence from some of his Subjects, for seeking his right by course of Law. Reg. Orig. 26.

SAGITTARII, A sort of small ships or vessels, with oars and sails. R. de Diceto, anno 1176.

SAIL-CLOTH. For encouraging the manufacture of Sail-cloth, any person may import into this kingdom undressed flax, without paying any duty for the same, so as a due entry be made thereof at the Custom-house, &c. And no drawback is to be allowed on re-exportation of foreign Sail-cloth: But an allowance shall be made of 1*d. per* ell for British Sail-cloth exported, &c. All foreign Sail-cloth imported, from which duties are granted, shall be stamped, expressing from whence imported, &c. And manufacturers of Sail-cloth in this kingdom are to affix, to every piece by them made, a stamp containing their names, and places of abode; or, exposing it to sale, shall forfeit 10*l.* And if any persons cut off or obliterate such stamps, they incur a forfeiture of 5*l.* upon conviction before one or more Justices, to be levied by distress, &c. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 27.

Ships built, on first setting out to sea, to have one complete set of sails manufactured here, on pain of 50*l.* No sail-maker may work up into sails foreign Sail-cloth not stamped, under 20*l.* penalty: Sail-cloth made in Great Britain, the pieces being made of certain lengths and breadths, shall weigh so many pounds each bolt, and the warp wrought of double yarn, &c. Flax yarn used in British Sail-cloth not to be whitened with lime, on forfeiture of 6*d.* a yard. Sail-makers, &c. are to cause this act to be put up in their shops and work-houses, under the penalty of 40*s.* Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 37.

Masters of ships are to make entry of all foreign-made sails on board, under the penalty of 50*l.* and pay duty for the same, unless they choose to deliver up the sails as forfeited: Sails brought from the East Indies are exempted from duty: Foreign made Sail-cloth imported, is to be stamped at the landing: Forger of stamps, &c. shall forfeit 50*l.* A sail-maker making foreign Sail-cloth unstamped into sails, shall forfeit 50*l.* A sail-maker shall not repair or amend the same under the penalty of 20*l.* Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 27, continued by subsequent acts. By the stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 32, duties are laid on Sail-cloths imported from Ireland. See also stats. 23 Geo. 2. c. 21. § 26: 26 G. 2. c. 32: 29 G. 3. c. 55.

SAINT MARTIN LE GRAND, Court of. The chief of the several Courts in London are the Sheriffs' Courts, holden before their steward or judge; from which a writ of error lies to the Court of Hustings, before the Mayor, Recorder, and Sheriffs; and from thence to Justices appointed by the King's commission, who used to sit in the church of Saint Martin le Grand; and from the judgment of those Justices a writ of error lies immediately to the House of Lords. 3 Comm. 80. n. cites F. N. B. 32.

SAIO, onis, A Tipstaff, or serjeant at arms; derived from the Saxon, Sagol, Fustis, because they used to carry a rod or staff. Spelm.

SALARY, Salarium.] A recompence or consideration made to a person for his pains and industry in another man's business: The word is used in the stat. 23 Ed. 3. c. 1. Salarium at first signified the rents or profits of a Sala, hall or house; (and in Gascoigne they now call the seats of the gentry Sala's, as we do halls;) but afterwards it was taken for any wages, stipend, or annual allowance. Cowell.

SALE, Venditio.] The transferring the property of goods from one to another, upon valuable consideration: If a bargain is that another shall give me 5*l.* for such a thing, and he gives me earnest, which I accept, this is a perfect Sale. Wood's Inst. 316. On Sale of goods, if earnest be given to the seller, and part of them are taken away by the buyer, he must pay the residue of the money upon fetching away the rest, because no other time is appointed; and the earnest given binds the bargain, and gives the buyer a right to demand the goods; but a demand without paying the money is void: And it has been held, that, after the earnest is taken, the seller cannot dispose of the goods to another, unless there is some default in the buyer; therefore if he doth not take away the goods and pay the money, the seller ought to require him so to do; and then if he doth not do it in convenient time, the bargain and Sale is dissolved, and the seller may dispose of them to any other person. 1 Salk. 113. A seller of a thing is to keep it a reasonable time, for delivery: But where no time is appointed for delivery of things sold, or for payment of the money, it is generally implied that the delivery be made immediately, and payment on the delivery. 3 Salk. 61. Where one agrees for wares sold, the buyer must not carry them away before paid for; except a day of payment is allowed him by the seller. Noy 87.

It is said a perfect bargain and Sale between parties, will be good, though the seller knows of an execution that is against him; and doth sell the goods to prevent the falling of it upon them. 3 Shep. Abr. 115. A Sale may be of any living or dead goods in a fair or market, be they whose they will, or however the seller come by them; if made with the cautions required by Law: But if one sell my goods unduly, I may have them again. Doct. & Stud. 328: Perk. § 93. If a man affirm a thing sold is of such a value when it is not, this is not actionable; but if he actually warrants it, at the time of the Sale, and not afterwards, it will bear an action, being part of the contract. 2 Cro. 5, 386, 630: 1 Rol. Abr. 97: See titles Agreement; Consideration; Contract; Fraud; Market, &c.

SALET, from Fr. Salut, Salus.] A head piece; a Salet, or scull of iron, &c. See stat. 20 R. 2. c. 1.

SALTATORIUM, A deer-leap: Quod habeat unum Saltatorium in parco de E. Pat. 1 Ed. 3.

SALT. The price of Salt is to be set by Justices of the peace in their sessions; and persons selling it at a higher rate shall forfeit 5*l.* Also Salt shall be sold by weight after the rate of 56 lb. to the bushel, under the like penalty. See stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 31. § 44, 92: 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 6.—A duty is imposed on Salt; pits to be entered, &c. at the Salt-office on pain of 40*l.* penalty; and proprietors removing Salt from any pit, before weighed, in presence of the proper officer, to forfeit 20*l.* &c. Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 22: 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 21.—The duties on Salt made in this kingdom were taken off, and duty on foreign Salt to continue, except for the British fishery, &c. by stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 20. Since then, the duties on Salt have been revived and continued, to be managed by commissioners, &c. who may grant licences to erect houses for refining of Rock-Salt, at certain places in the counties of Essex and Sussex. Stats. 5 Geo. 2. c. 6: 7 Geo. 2. c. 6.—The Salt duties continued for a further term, and under the same provisions, &c. with a clause of loan of 500,000*l.* And proprietors of Salt-works in Scotland are not to pay their work-people in Salt, under the penalty of 20*l.* Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 12.—The Salt duties further continued, with a loan of 1,200,000*l.* at 4*l.* per cent. interest, &c. Rock-Salt may be used in the making of Salt from sea-water in works in Wales, paying the duties on both. 14 Geo. 2. c. 22.—The Salt duties are made perpetual by stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 3. The duties on this article are further regulated, frauds guarded against, and provisions made as to the use of Salt in the fisheries, by a vast variety of statutes. See stats. 26 G. 2. c. 32: 5 G. 3. c. 43: 12 G. 3. c. 58: 19 G. 3. c. 52: 20 Geo. 3. c. 34: 22 Geo 3. c. 39: 26 Geo. 3. c. 90: 25 Geo. 3. c. 58, 63: 26 Geo. 3. c. 36, 81.—As also this Dictionary, title Navigation Acts; and Burn's Just. title Excise (Salt).

SALUTE, Salus.] A coin made by King Hen. V. after his conquests in France; whereon the arms of France and England were stamped and quartered. Stowe's Chron. 589.

SANCTA, The reliques of the saints; jurare super sancta was to make oath on those reliques. Leg. Canut. c. 57.

SANCTUARY, Sanctuarium.] A place privileged for the safeguard of offenders' lives, being founded upon the Law of mercy, and the great reverence and devotion which the Prince bears to the place whereunto he grants such privilege. Sanctuaries were first granted by King Lucius to our churches and their precincts; and among all other nations, our ancient kings of England seem to have attributed most to those Sanctuaries, permitting [illegible] to fl[illegible] had committed both felonies and [illegible] forty days they acknowledged [illegible] mitted themselves to banishment; [illegible] if any layman expelled them he was [illegible] nd if a clerk, he was made irregular. Mat. Westm. anno 1[illegible] S. P. C. lib. [illegible] cap. 38: Fleta, lib. 1. [illegible] 29.

St. John's of Beverly in [illegible] had an eminent Sanctuary belonging to it in the time of [illegible] And St. Buriens in Cornwall had the like granted by King Athelstan, anno 935: so had Westminster granted by King Edward the Confessor: and St. Martin le Grand in London. 21 Hen. 8, &c.

Sanctuaries, it has been observed, did not gain the name of such till they had the Pope's bull, though they had full privilege of exemption from temporal Courts by the King's grant only: But no Sanctuary granted by general words, extended to high treason; though it extended to all felonies, except sacrilege, and to all inferior crimes, not committed by a Sanctuary man; and it never was a protection against any action civil, any farther than to save the defendant from execution of his body, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32.

While this protection against justice remained in force, if a person accused of any crime (except treason, wherein the Crown, and sacrilege, wherein the church, was too nearly concerned) had fled to any church or church-yard, and within forty days after went in sackcloth and confessed himself guilty before the coroner, and declared all the particular circumstances of the offence; and thereupon took the oath in that case provided, viz. that he abjured the realm, and would depart from thence forthwith, at the port that should be assigned him, and would never return without leave from the King; he by this means saved his life, if he observed the conditions of the oath, by going with a cross in his hand, and with all convenient speed, to the port assigned, and embarking. For if, during this forty days' privilege of Sanctuary, or in his road to the sea side, he was apprehended and arraigned in any Court, for this felony, he might plead the privilege of Sanctuary, and had a right to be remanded, if taken out against his will. But by this abjuration his blood was attainted, and he forfeited all his goods and chattels. The immunity of these privileged places was very much abridged by the stats. 27 Hen. 8. c. 19: 32 Hen. 8. c. 12. And now, by the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 28, all privilege of Sanctuary, tuary, and abjuration consequent thereupon, is utterly taken away and abolished.

There were several statutes made relative to Sanctuaries, whilst they existed, viz. Art. Cler. 9 Ed. 2. st. 1. cc. 10, 15: 2 R. 2. st. 2. c. 3: 4 H 8. c. 2: 21 H. 8. c. 2: 22 H. 8. c. 2. § 14. By 26 H 8. c. 13, Sanctuary was taken from offenders in high treason. See further, titles Abjuration; Arrest; Privilege I.

SAXON LAGE, Saxon-laga, Lex Saxonum.] The Law of the West Saxons by which they were governed. See title Merchenlage. 4 Comm. c. 33.

The reason why so many traces of the Saxon Laws, language, and customs are to be found in England, are thus stated; Robertson, in his History of Emperor Ch. V. says, The Saxons carried on the conquest of that country with the same destructive spirit, which distinguished the other barbarous nations. The ancient inhabitants of Britain were either exterminated, or forced to take shelter among the mountains of Wales, or reduced into servitude. The Saxon government, laws, manners, and language were, of consequence, introduced into Britain; and were so perfectly established, that all memory of the institutions previous to their conquest was abolished. Roberts. i. 197. Note IV.—As to the laws of the Saxons, for putting an end to private wars. See Id. 285.

SCABINI, A word used for wardens at Lynne in Norfolk. Norf. Chart. Hen. 8.

SCALAM, Ad scalam, The old way of paying money into the Exchequer. The Sheriff, &c. is to make payment ad scalam, i. e. solvere, præter quamlibet numeratum librum, sex denarios. Stat. W. 1. And at that time sixpence superadded to the pound made up the full weight, and nearly the intrinsic value. This was agreed upon as a medium to be the common estimate for the defective weight of money; thereby to avoid the trouble of weighing it when brought to the Exchequer. Lowndes's Essay on Coin, p. 4: Hale's Sher. Accounts, p. 21. See Pensam.

SCALINGA, A quarry or pit of stones, or rather slates for covering houses: French escailere, whence scaling of houses, &c. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 130.

SCANDAL, A report or rumour, or an action whereby one is affronted in public. See Libel.

SCANDAL OR IMPERTINENCE IN BILLS IN EQUITY. If a Bill in Equity contain matter either scandalous or impertinent, the defendant may refuse to answer it, till such Scandal or Impertinence is expunged, which is done upon an order to refer it to one of the Masters. 3 Comm. 442. See titles Chancery; Libel I.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM.

WORDS spoken in derogation of a Peer, a Judge, or other great officer of the realm: These, though they would not be actionable in the case of a common person, yet yet when spoken in disgrace of such high and respectable characters, they amount to an atrocious injury, which is redressed by an action on the case, founded on the ancient statutes; as well on behalf of the Crown to inflict the punishment of imprisonment on the offender, as on behalf of the party to recover damages for the injury sustained. 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 124.

The laws on which this action is grounded, are stats. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 34: 2 Rich. 2. st. 1. c. 5, which, after speaking of "devisors of false news, and horrible lies, of Prelates, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and other nobles and great men of the realm, and also of the Chancellor, Treasurer, Clerk of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King's house, Justices of the one Bench or of the other, and other great officers of the realm," enact, "That none contrive or tell any false news, whereby discord or slander may grow between the King and his people; or contrive or tell any false things of Prelates, Lords, and of others aforesaid, whereof discord or slander might rise within, or any Scandal to, the realm; and he who doth the same shall be imprisoned till he have brought him forth that did speak the same." This statute is recited by stat. 12 R. 2. c. 11; and thereby it is further provided, that the offender not producing his author shall be punished by the advice of the Council. 4 Inst. 51: 4 Co. 12, b.

At the time of making the law, on which this action is founded, the constitution of this kingdom was martial, and given to arms; the very tenures were military, and so were the services; as knight-service, castle-guard, and escuage; so that all provocations by vilifying words were revenged by the sword, which often created factions in the Commonwealth, and endangered the Government itself; for in this kind of quarrels the great men, or Peers of the realm, usually engaged their vassals, tenants, and friends; so that Laws were then made against wearing of liveries or badges, and against riding armed; therefore it is that the stat. Westm. 2, appoints that the offender shall suffer imprisonment until he produces the author of a false report. 2 Mod. 156.

This action or public prosecution for scan. mag. is totally different from the action of slander in the case of common persons. The scandalum magnatum is reduced to no rule or certain definition, but it may be whatever the Courts in their discretion shall judge to be derogatory to the high character of the person of whom it is spoken: as to say of a Peer, "that he was no more to be valued than a dog;" which words would have been perfectly harmless, if uttered of an inferior person. Bull. N. P. 4.

Though this action is now seldom or ever resorted to, it may be matter of some utility, as well as curiosity, to peruse the following determinations on the subject:

I. Who may bring this Action, and for what Words it lies.

II. Of the Proceedings in this Action.

I. IT hath been held, that the King is not included in the words "great men of the realm," as the statute begins with an enumeration of persons of an inferior rank, as Prelates, Dukes, &c. Cromp. Jurisd. 19, 35.

Scandalizing the marriage of King Hen. VIII. with Anne Bullein was declared treason, by stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 22.

Also it is held, that a woman noble by birth is not entitled to this action. Cromp. Juris. 34.

It hath been adjudged, that though there was no Viscount at the time of making this statute, (the first Viscount being John Beaumont who was created Viscount, 18 Hen. 6,) yet when created noble, though by a new title, he was entitled to his action on this statute. Cro. Car. 136: Palm. 565, Say and Seal (Visc.) v. Stephens.

Also it hath been adjudged, that since the Union, a Peer of Scotland may have an action on this statute, and that it is not necessary for him to allege that he hath a seat and voice in Parliament; for by stat. 5 Ann. c. 8. art. 23, All Peers of Scotland, after the Union, shall be Peers of Great Britain, and have rank and precedency, &c. be tried, &c. and enjoy all privileges of Peers as the Peers of England now do, or hereafter may enjoy; except the right and privilege of sitting in the House of Lords, and the privilege depending thereon. Com. 439, Falkland Ld, v. Phipps.

It hath been contended, that no words of slander are punishable by this statute, unless they are actionable at Common Law; and that they are only aggravated by the statute, which, in this respect, is like the King's proclamation. 2 Mod. 161: Freem. 222.

But the contrary hereof seems to have been holden in most of the cases on this head, and not without reason; as it would be to no purpose to make a law, and thereby to give a Peer an action for such words as a common person might have before the making of the statute, and for which the Peer himself had equally a remedy by the Common Law; and therefore the design of the statute must be, not only to punish such things as import a great Scandal in themselves, or such for which an action lay at the Common Law, but also such things as savoured of any contempt of the persons of the Peers or great men; and brought them into disgrace with the Commons, whereby they took occasion of provocation and revenge. 2 Mod. 156.

It hath been observed, that no action was brought on this statute till 100 years after the making thereof; the Lords still continuing the military way of revenge to which they had been accustomed. 2 Mod. 156.

The first case on this statute, said to be reported, is in Keilw. where the Lord Beauchamp brought an action of scan. mag. against Sir Richard Crofts, for that the said Richard had sued out a writ of forgery of false deeds against him; and it was held, that the taking out the writ, being done in a legal way, and in a course of justice, the action did not lie. Keilw. 26, 27: 3 Mod. 164, cited.

Scan. mag. brought for saying of a Judge, "You are a corrupt Judge," and held actionable. Cromp. Juris. 35: Ld. Ch. J. Dyer's case—So for these words, "He imprisoned me till I gave him a release." 3 Leon. 376; Lord Winchester's case, cited Freem. 221.—So these words "You have writ a letter to me, which I have to shew, which is against the word of God, against the Queen's authority, and to the maintenance of superstition, and that I will stand to prove against you;" were held actionable, and 500 marks damages given. Cro. Eliz. 1.

 Bishop

Bishop of Norwich v. Prickett.—So of these words, " My Lord Mordant did know that Prude robbed Shotbolt, and bid me compound with Shotbolt for the same, and said he would see me satisfied for the same, though it cost him 100*l*. which I did for him, being my master, otherwise the evidence I could have given would have hanged Prude." Cro. Eliz. 67: For these words written in a letter, " I have heard that your Lordship hath sought by uncharitable means to bereft me of my life, lands, and liberty," an action lies. Moor 142: Ld. Lumley v. Fox, 4 Co. 16. That the action as well lies for words written as those spoken; see 2 Show. 505.

An action of scan. mag. was brought for these words, " There are more Jesuits come into England since the Earl of Northampton was Lord of the Cinque Ports than ever there were before," and held actionable. 12 Co. 132. In scan. mag. for these words spoken by a parson in the pulpit, " The Lord of Leicester is a wicked and cruel man, and an enemy to the Reformation in England," adjudged actionable, and 500*l*. damages given. 2 Sid. 21.

So these words, " The Earl of Pembroke is of so little esteem in the country, that no man of reputation hath any esteem for him, and no man will take his word for 2*d*. and no man of reputation values him more than I do the dirt under my feet;" were held actionable, though said they would not be so in the case of a common person. Freem. 49.

If one says, " I met J. S. whom I do not know, but my Lord P. sent after me to take my purse;" an action of scandalum magnatum lies, though not positively said my Lord P. sent him, or that it was to take the purse feloniously; which last, in case of an action by a common person, might be a good exception. 1 Lev. 277: 1 Sid. 434: 2 Keb. 537; E. of Peterborough v. Sir John Mordant. Vide 1 Sid. 133: 1 Keb. 813: 1 Lev. 148, Marquis of Dorchester v. Proby. If one says of a Peer, " He is an unworthy man, and acts against law and reason;" an action of scan. mag. lies, notwithstanding the words are general, and charge him with nothing certain: and so adjudged by North, Windham, and Scroggs, against the opinion of Atkins; who said the statute extended not to words of so small and trivial a nature, but to such only which were of greater magnitude, by which discord might arise, &c. and therefore the words " horrible lies" were inserted in the statute. Note; the Rule laid down by the Court in this case was, that words should not be construed either in a rigid or mild sense, but according to the general and natural meaning and agreeable to the common understanding of all men. 2 Mod. 151, &c.: 1 Mod. 232: Freem. 220: Lord Townsbend v. Doctor Hughes.

II. It is now clearly agreed, that though there be no express words in the statute which give an action, yet the party injured may maintain one, on this principle of Law; that when a statute prohibits the doing of a thing, which if done might be prejudicial to another, in such a case he may have an action on that very statute for his damages. 2 Mod. 152.

Though the action is to be brought tam pro domino rege quam pro seipso, yet the party is to recover all the damages. 1 P. Wms. 690. If the words are actionable at Common Law, the Peer hath his election to proceed on the statute, or at Common Law. Freem. 49. It hath been held, that this being a general law, the plaintiff need not recite it particularly; and that if he sets forth so much thereof as shews his case to be within the statute, it is sufficient. Cro. Car. 139: 2 Sid. 21: Freem. 425. It is now settled that no new trial is to be granted in scan. mag. for excessive damages; which point seems to have been first determined in the case of Lord Townsbend v. Dr. Hughes, where the Jury gave 4000*l*. damages. 2 Mod. 151: 1 Mod. 231.

It has been ruled, that in scan. mag. the defendant cannot justify, let the words be ever so true, because the action is brought qui tam, in which the King is concerned; but it hath been held, that the defendant may explain the words by shewing the occasion of speaking of them, and thereby extenuate the meaning of them, as was done in Lord Cromwell's case. 4 Co. 14: 2 Mod. 166: Freem. 220: Poph. 67.

In scan. mag. the Court will never change the venue on the common affidavit that the words were spoken in another county, because a Scandal raised on a Peer of the realm reflects on him through the whole kingdom; and he is a person of so great notoriety, that there is no necessity of his being tied down to try his cause among his neighbourhood. Carth. 400: 2 Salk. 668. Vide 1 Lev. 56: 1 Keb. 514: 1 Sid. 185: 2 Mod. 216.

But in the case of Lord Shaftesbury v. Graham, the Court, in scan. mag. on a special affidavit of the plaintiff's power and interest in the county where the action was laid, made a rule for changing the venue; but note, that the books, which report and cite this case, mention it as a case of the times, and that it was owing to the great influence that Lord had in the city of London that the Court varied from the general rule, and which rule hath ever since, notwithstanding this case, been adhered to. 2 Jo. 198: 1 Vent. 363: Skin. 40: 2 Show. 200.

It hath been held, that the statute 27 Eliz. c. 8, giving the writ of error in the Exchequer-chamber, does not extend to scan. mag. Cro. Car. 286, 385: 1 Sid. 143. That in an action of scan. mag. special bail is not required. 3 Mod. 41: Holt. Rep. 640. That no costs are to be given the plaintiff on his obtaining a verdict. 2 Show. 506.

SCARBOROUGH, Persons incorporated there, with power to distrain every man for the fifth part of houses and lands, towards the repairs of the pier and key, &c. See stat. 37 Hen. 8. c. 14.

SCAVAGE, SCEVAGE, or SCHEWAGE, from the Sax. Sceawian, i. e. ostendere.] A kind of toll or custom, exacted by Mayors, Sheriffs, &c. of Merchant-strangers, for wares shewed or exposed to sale within their liberties; prohibited by the statute 19 Hen. 7. c. 7. But the City of London still retains this ancient custom to a good yearly profit: And the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, President of the Council, Privy Seal, Steward, and two Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, are to ascertain these duties, and order tables to be made, mentioning the particulars, &c. Stat. 22 H. 8. c. 8. § 4.

SCAVAIDUS, The officer who collected the Scavage-money, which was sometimes done with great extortion. Cowell.

SCAVENGERS, from the Belg. schaven, to scrape or carry away.] Persons chosen into this office in London and its suburbs, who hire rakers and carts to cleanse the streets, and carry the dirt and filth thereof away.

In Easter week yearly, two tradesmen in every parish within the weekly bills of mortality must be elected Scavengers by the constables, churchwardens, and other inhabitants, who are to take upon them the office in seven days, under the penalty of 10*l.* These Scavengers, every day, except Sundays or holidays, are to bring their carts into the streets, and give notice by a bell, or otherwise, of carrying away dirt, and to stay a convenient time, or shall forfeit 40*s.* and Justices of the peace in their petit sessions may give Scavengers liberty to lodge their dirt in vacant places near the streets, satisfying the owner for the damage, &c. All persons, within the weekly bills, are to sweep the streets before their doors, every Wednesday and Saturday, on pain of forfeiting 3*s.* 4*d.* Persons laying dirt or ashes before their houses, incur a forfeiture of 5*s.* Inhabitants and owners of houses are also to pave the streets before their own houses, on the penalty of 20*s.* for every perch: And constables, churchwardens, &c. may make a Scavenger's tax, being allowed by two Justices of the peace, not exceeding 4*d.* in the pound, &c. Stat. 2 W. & M. st. 2. c. 8: and see stats. 3 W. & M. c. 12: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 37: 6 Geo. 1. c. 6: 18 G. 2. c. 33. § 2, 3: and this Dict. title Police.

SCHARPENNY, A small duty or compensation: And some customary tenants were obliged to pen up their cattle at night in the pound or yard of the lord, for the benefit of their dung; or if they did not so, they paid a small compensation called Sharpenny or Sharnpenny, i. e. dung penny, or money in lieu of dung; The Saxon scearn signifying muck or dung. In some parts of the North they still call cow-dung by the name of cow-skern; and in Westmorland a Skarny Houghs is a nasty, dirty dunghill-wench. Cowell.

SCHAVALDUS; Vide Scavaldus.

SCHEDULE, A little roll, or long piece of paper or parchment, in which are contained particulars of goods in a house let by lease, &c. See Lease.

Schedules are likewise frequently annexed to answers in a Court of Equity, containing an account of estates or effects, monies, debts, &c. received or disposed of or expended by the person putting in the answer: And Schedule is a term frequently used, instead of Inventory.

SCHOOLMASTER. No person shall keep or maintain a Schoolmaster, who does not constantly go to church, or is not allowed by the Ordinary, on pain of 10*l.* a month; and the Schoolmaster shall be disabled, and suffer a year's imprisonment. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1.—Recusants are not to be Schoolmasters in any public Grammar-school, nor any other, unless licensed by the Bishop; under the penalty of forfeiting 40*s.* a-day. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 4 —Every Schoolmaster keeping any public or private School, and every tutor in any private family, shall subscribe the declaration, that he will conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England as by Law established, and be licensed by the Ordinary; or he shall for the first offence suffer three months' imprisonment, &c. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4.—If any Papist shall be convicted of keeping a School, or taking upon him the education of youth, he shall be adjudged to perpetual imprisonment. Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. See titles Papists; Dissenters; as to the mitigation of these by later statutes, under certain conditions. The stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 7, which imposed the penalty of three months' imprisonment on persons keeping School without a licence from the Bishop, was repealed by stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 3.

By the Canons, no man shall teach in a public School, or private house, but such as is examined and allowed by the Bishop, and of sober life: And all Schoolmasters are to teach the catechism of the church in English or Latin; and bring their Scholars to church, and afterwards examine them how they have benefited by sermons, &c. Can. 77, 79 —Though the Act of Uniformity obliges Schoolmasters only to assent to and subscribe the declaration, yet it adds, according to the laws and statutes of this realm, which presupposes some necessary qualification. And therefore a Bishop may take time to inquire into the character of an elected Schoolmaster, before he licenses him. 2 Strange 1023.

As to the power of a Schoolmaster in correcting his Scholars, see title Homicide II. 1.

SCILICET, An adverb, signifying, that is to say; to wit; Hobart, in his exposition of this word, says, it is not a direct and separate clause, nor a direct and entire clause, in a conveyance, but intermedia; neither is it a substantive clause of itself; but it is rather to usher in the sentence of another, and to particularise that which was too general before, or distribute that which was too gross, or to explain that which was doubtful and obscure; and it must neither increase, nor diminish the premises or habendum, for it gives nothing of itself: But it may make a restriction, where the precedent words are not so very express, but that they may be restrained. Hob. 171, 172. See also 1 P. Wms. 18; and the case of a bond to two with a Scilicet, severing the money between them. Dy. 350. The word Scilicet, in a declaration, shall not make any alteration of that which was before. Poph. 201.

201, 4. And yet, in some cases, the Scilicet which introduces a subsequent, shall not be rejected. 2 Cro. 618. See title Pleading.

SCIRE FACIAS.

A Writ judicial, most commonly to call a man to shew cause to the Court whence it issues, why execution of judgment passed should not be made out. This writ is not granted until a year and a day be elapsed after a judgment given. Old Nat. Brev fol. 151. Scire facias upon a fine lies not, but within the same time after the fine levied; otherwise it is the same with the writ of habere facias seisinam. West. Symbol. part 2. title Fines, § 137. See stats. 25 E. 3. st. 5. cap. 2: 39 Eliz. c. 7.

Other diversities of this writ are in the table of the Register Judicial and Original. See also Rastall's Entries, verb. scire facias. Cowell. And post. titles Scire Facias, against Bail; ad audiendum errores; in detinue, &c.

All Writs of execution must be sued out within a year and a day after the judgment is entered; otherwise the Court concludes primâ facie, that the judgment is satisfied and extinct: But it will grant a writ of scire facias in pursuance of stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 45, for the defendant to shew cause why the judgment should not be revived, and execution had against him; to which the defendant may plead such matter as he has to allege, in order to shew why process of execution should not be issued. 3 Comm. 421.

I. A Scire Facias is deemed a judicial writ, and founded on some matter of record, as judgments, recognizances, and letters patent, on which it lies to enforce the execution of them, or to vacate or set them aside; and though it be a judicial writ of execution, yet it is so far in nature of an original, that the defendant may plead to it, and is in that respect considered as an action; and therefore it is held, that a Release of all actions, or a release of all executions, is a good bar to a scire facias. Litt. § 505: Co. Lit. 290, b; 291, a: F. N. B. 267.

But though it be held that a scire facias is in nature of an original, yet it hath been adjudged, that no writ of error lies into the Exchequer-chamber on a judgment given in B R. on a scire facias; the statute 27 Eliz. c. 8, which gives the writ of error, mentioning only suits or actions of debt, detinue, covenant, account, actions upon the case, ejectione firmæ, or trespass. Cro Car. 286, 300, 464: 1 Rol. Rep. 264; 1 Vent. 38: 1 Salk. 263.

If a bill of exceptions be tendered to a Judge, and he signs it, and dies, a scire facias lies against his executors or administrators to certify it. 4 Inst. 438: See 2 Inst. 428.

A scire facias lies against a Sheriff who levies money on a fi. fa. and retains it in his hands. Holt 32: Cro. Jac. 514: 1 And. 247: Godb. 276.

So a scire facias will lie for a fine assessed on the party at the Justice-seat of a forest. Cro. Car. 409. It lies to have execution of damages recovered in appeal. Cro. Jac. 549.

Upon an elongavit returned by the Sheriff, a scire facias lies against the pledges in replevin, by the plaintiff in the Sheriff's Court, transmitted to the hustings, and so to B. R. by certiorari. Comb. 1. And a scire facias lies against the Sheriff for taking insufficient pledges in replevin. Hutt. 77.

If one hath judgment in a quare impedit, and afterwards, before execution, the party is outlawed, the King may have a scire facias to execute the judgment; the King having privity enough in this case to shew execution, because the thing, as it was in the plaintiff, vested in the King. Moor 241: Cro. Eliz. 44, 325. Where having the thing gives a sufficient privity to maintain a scire facias; see Keilw. 168, 169.

On a motion to discharge an outlawry which was pardoned by the act of oblivion, the Court held that it could not be done on motion, but that the party must bring a scire facias on the act. Stil. 348. See title Outlawry IV.

Where one obtained judgment, and after had judgment on a scire facias thereupon, and then became a bankrupt, and the original judgment was assigned by the commissioners to S. S. upon motion, it was entered to intitle him to the benefit of the judgment on the scire facias without bringing a new one. 3 Mod. 88.

A scire facias brought by the successor of a President of the College of Physicians in London, (upon a judgment in debt obtained by him upon the statute 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5, against practising physic in London without a licence,) who died before execution; it was objected on demurrer, that the scire facias ought to have been brought by the executor or administrator of him who recovered: But without argument the Court held, that the successor might well maintain the action; for the suit is given to the College by a private statute, and the suit is to be brought by the President for the time being; and he having recovered in right of the Corporation, the Law shall transfer that duty to the successor of him who recovered. Cro. Jac. 159.

A scire fac. was brought in the Court of C. B. to reverse a Fine in ancient demesne; and it was ruled, that no such writ lay, but that the party ought to bring his writ of deceit. Salk. 210: 3 Salk. 35: 3 Lev. 419: 1 Ld. Raym. 177.

Where either party dies, between the verdict and the judgment, it is enacted, by the statute 17 Car. 2. c. 8, "That his death shall not be alleged for error, so as the judgment be entered within two terms after the verdict." In the construction of this statute, it has been holden, that the death of either party before the Assizes is not remedied: but if the party die after the Assizes begin, though before the trial, that is within the remedy of the statute; for the Assizes are considered but as one day in Law, and this is a remedial act, which shall be construed favourably. The judgment upon this statute is entered by or against the party, as though he were alive; and it should be entered, or at least signed, within two terms after the verdict. But there must be a scire facias to revive it, before execution can be taken out: and such scire facias, pursuing the form of the judgment, should be general, as on a judgment recovered by or against the party himself. Tidd's Pract. K. B.; and the authorities there cited.

By

By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, it is enacted, " That in all actions to be commenced in any Court of Record, if the plaintiff or defendant happen to die, after interlocutory and before final judgment, the action shall not abate by reason thereof, if such action might have been originally prosecuted or maintained, by or against the executors or administrators of the party dying; but the plaintiff, or, if he be dead after such interlocutory judgment, his executors or administrators, shall and may have a scire facias against the defendant, if living after such interlocutory judgment, or, if he died after, then against his executors or administrators, to shew cause, why damages in such action should not be assessed and recovered by him or them. And if such defendant, his executors or administrators, shall appear at the return of such writ, and not shew or allege any matter sufficient to arrest the final judgment, or being returned warned, or, upon two writs of scire facias, it being returned that the defendant, his executors or administrators, had nothing whereby to be summoned, or could not be found in the county, shall make default, that thereupon a writ of inquiry of damages shall be awarded; which being executed and returned, judgment final shall be given for the said plaintiff, his executors or administrators, prosecuting such writ or writs of scire facias, against such defendant, his executors or administrators, respectively." This statute has been held not to extend to cases, where the party dies before interlocutory judgment; though it be after the expiration of the rule to plead. 1 Wilf. 315.

Where either party dies, after interlocutory judgment, and before the execution of the writ of inquiry, the scire facias upon this statute ought to be, for the defendant, or his executors or administrators, to shew cause why the damages should not be assessed and recovered against them, and to hear the judgment of the Court thereupon. Lil. Ent. 647: 6 Mod. 144. But where the death happens after the writ of inquiry is executed, and before the return, the scire facias must be to shew cause, why the damages assessed by the Jury should not be adjudged to the plaintiff, or his executors or administrators. 1 Wilf. 243: See 1 Term Rep. 388. And where the plaintiff dies, after interlocutory and before final judgment, in an action against an executor, the defendant cannot plead to the scire facias a judgment upon bond against his testator, and no assets ultrà; for the statute never intended, that the executor should be in a better situation, as to the assessing of damages upon the inquiry, than his testator, who could have pleaded nothing but a release, or other matter in bar, arising puis darrein continuance. 1 Salk. 315: 6 Mod. 142.

The judgment upon this statute is not entered by or against the party himself, as upon stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8, but by or against his executors or administrators. 1 Salk. 42. And where the defendant dies, after interlocutory and before final judgment, two writs of scire facias must be sued out by the plaintiff, before he can have execution: one before the final judgment is signed, in order to make the executors or administrators parties to the record; the other after final judgment is signed, in order to give them an opportunity of pleading no assets, or any other matter, in their defence: for it would be unreasonable that the executors or administrators should be in a worse situation, where their testator or intestate died before the final judgment was signed, than they would have been in if they had died afterwards. Say. 266. See this Dictionary, title Abatement I. 6. c.

II. There have been different opinions whether a scire facias lay at Common Law or not; but this doubt, says Coke, arose for want of distinguishing between personal and real actions. At Common Law, if after judgment given, or recognizance acknowledged, the plaintiff did not sue out execution within the year, the plaintiff, or his conusee, was driven to his original upon the judgment; and the scire facias in personal actions was given by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 45. But in real actions, or upon a fine, though no execution was sued out within a year after the judgment given or fine levied, yet after the year a scire facias lay for the land, &c. because no new original lay upon the judgment or fine. 2 Inst. 469, 470.

A scire facias lay as well in mixed as real actions, and upon a judgment in assise. So it lay upon a judgment in a writ of annuity. Salk. 258, 600.

It hath been adjudged, that if there be judgment in ejectment, and no execution sued thereon in a year and a day, an habere facias possessionem cannot be sued out after, without a scire facias; and Holt, Ch. J. said, that as to the possession of the land an ejectment was real, and the only remedy a termor for years had, and that a recovery therein bound the right of inheritance. Salk. 258, 600: Comb. 250: 7 Mod. 64: And see 1 Sid. 307, 351: 2 Keb 307: Skin. 161: 3 Lev. 100: Lutw. 1268.

But though, after a year and a day, there can be no execution of a judgment without a scire facias, yet if the plaintiff hath been delayed by a writ of error, he may take out execution within a year and a day after the judgment affirmed. 5 Co. 80: Moor 566 pl. 772: Cro. Eliz. 706: Godb. 372: Palm. 44: See 1 Rol. Abr. 899: Lan. 20: Dennis v. Drake: Cro. Eliz. 416.

So, if after the year after the recovery the defendant brings a writ of error, and the judgment is affirmed, though before the writ of error brought the recoveror was put to his scire facias, yet this affirmance is a new judgment, and the recoveror may have, within the year after the affirmance, a fieri facias or capias, without a scire facias. 1 Rol. Abr. 899. And see Palm. 449: Latch 193.

So, if he be nonsuit in the writ of error, or if the writ of error be discontinued: for though in these cases there is not any new judgment given, yet the bringing of the writ of error revives the first judgment. Cro. Jac. 364: 1 Rol. Rep. 104, 113: Vide 1 Rol. Abr. 899.

If upon a judgment there be a cesset executio for a year after the judgment, the plaintiff within the subsequent year may take out execution without a scire facias. 6 Mod. 288: 7 Mod. 64.

Also it hath been held, that where execution hath been taken out after the year and day, it is not void, but voidable only. 3 Leon. 404: Salk. 273.

If the execution is staid by injunction, though the act of the defendant, yet the Court will not take notice thereof. See title Execution.

In such case there must be a scire facias; the staying the proceedings by injunction, does not appear to the Court, by any record of its own: Nor is the filing a bill in equity equity any revival of the judgment, as in the case of a writ of error. 6 Mod. 288: Salk. 322. See title Injunction. But where it appeared that the whole delay had arisen, on the part of the defendant, by bills in Chancery for injunctions, and by obtaining time for payment, &c. the Court were unanimous that this rule of reviving a judgment, above a year old, by scire facias, before execution, which was intended to prevent a surprise upon the defendant, ought not to be taken advantage of by one, who was so far from being surprised by the delay, that he himself had been trying all manner of methods, whereby he might delay the plaintiff; and therefore they discharged the rule for setting aside the execution, with costs. 2 Burr 660.

If judgment be given in debt, and no execution sued out within the year, yet the plaintiff may, after an award of an elegit on the judgment roll, as of the same term with the judgment, continue it from thence, by vicecomes non misit breve; so held on a motion to set aside the execution; and though the Court said that an elegit ought to be actually taken out within the year, yet being informed by the clerks of the Court, that it had been the practice for many years to make such entry, &c. it was said to be the law of the Court, and they ordered the execution to stand. Carth. 283: 2 Show. 235: Comb. 232.

If the demandant, or plaintiff, taketh his process of execution within the year, though it be not served within the year, yet if he continue the same, he may have execution at any time after the year. 2 Inst. 471: Co. Lit. 290. b: And see 2 Leon. 77, 78, 87: 3 Leon. 259: 4 Leon. 44: 1 Sid. 59: 1 Keb. 159: 6 Mod. 288.

If the plaintiff delay the executing of a writ of inquiry till a year after the interlocutory judgment, he cannot execute it after without a scire facias.

In the case of the King, there need not be any scire facias after the year and day. 2 Salk. 603.

After a judgment, if the plaintiff within the year sues a scire facias, he cannot have a capias, within the year, until he hath a new judgment on the scire facias. 1 Rol. Abr. 900: 3 Danv. 333. Q. p. 1.

Where there is any change or alteration of parties, a scire facias is in general necessary to warrant an execution, as in case of death, &c. Where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants in a personal action, and one of them dies before judgment, his death should regularly be suggested on the roll, and judgment entered for or against the survivors. But where one of two plaintiffs died before interlocutory judgment, and the first notwithstanding went on to execution in the name of both; on a motion to set aside the proceedings for this irregularity, the Court permitted the plaintiff to suggest the death of the other before interlocutory judgment on the roll, and to amend the ca. sa. without paying costs. And where one of several plaintiffs dies after judgment, execution may be had for or against the survivors without a scire facias: But the execution, in such case, should be taken out in the joint names of all the plaintiffs or defendants, otherwise it will not be warranted by the judgment. Tidd's Pract. K. B. c. 41, and the authorities there cited. If proceedings are removed out of the County Court, or other Courts, not of Record, by writ of false judgment, and the plaintiff is nonprossed, the execution shall issue out of the Court above, and a scire facias seems to be necessary for this purpose. Tidd's Pract. K. B. c. 41. And see this Dict. title Abatement.

A scire facias seems necessary under the Lords' Act, 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 20, which gives execution against the future goods of an insolvent debtor taking the benefit of that act. 1 Term Rep. 80.

When a prisoner is charged in execution, the execution is considered as executed, and therefore, though the plaintiff afterwards die, his executors are not bound to revive the judgment by scire facias; or even to charge the defendant in execution de novo. Tidd's Pract. K. B. 211, cites King v. Millett, Hil. 22 Geo. 3.

III. Recognizances and Statutes are considered as judgments, being obligations solemnly acknowledged, and entered of record, and the scire facias on those is the judicial writ and proper remedy which the conusee hath; but herein we must distinguish between Recognizances at Common Law and Statutes-merchants, &c. for, upon the former, if the conusee did not take out execution within a year, after the day of payment assigned in the recognizance, he was obliged to commence the suit again by original; the Law presuming the debt might have been paid, if execution was not sued within the year after the money became payable; but this Law is altered by stat. Westm. 2. c. 45, by which the conusee hath a scire facias given him to revive the judgment, and put it in execution; if the conusor cannot stop it by pleading such matter as the Law judges sufficient for that end, such as a release, &c. But the conusee of a statute-merchant, &c. may at any time sue execution on them without the delay or charge of a scire facias. Litt. Rep. 89. That a capias lies not on a recognizance, but only a scire facias; see 1 Brownl. 83: Co. Lit. 291: 2 Inst. 469: F. N. B. 296: Bro. Recog. 17.

Also as to recognizances at Common Law, and statutes and recognizances introduced by Statute Law, we must further distinguish; that if on the first the conusee dies before execution sued, his executor shall not sue it, even within the year, without bringing a scire facias against the conusor; the reason is, because the Law presumes the debt might have been paid to the testator, and therefore will not suffer the debtor to be molested, unless it appear that he hath omitted to perform the judgment; and this is to be done by scire facias brought by the executor, for the alteration of the person altereth the process at Common Law; but this tending to delay, the scire facias is taken away in statutes and recognizances by Statute Law, by the several Acts of Parliament which introduced them; and therefore upon the death of the conusee of a statute merchant, &c. his executors may come into Chancery, and upon their producing the testament and the statute, shall have execution without a scire facias, as the testator himself might. 2 Inst. 395, 471: Bro. Stat. Merch. 16, 43, 50.

If a man be bound in a recognizance to the King, upon condition to be of good behaviour, &c. he cannot be indicted for breach of the good behaviour, by which he forfeits his recognizance, without a scire facias; for if a scire facias had been brought, he might have pleaded some matter in discharge thereof. 4 Inst 181: 1 Rol. Abr. 900. What shall be said a breach, see Cro. Car. 498; and how to be assigned, see 3 Bulst. 220: Cro. Jac. 415: Stil. 369: And this Dict. title Surety of the Peace.

If a man acknowledges a recognizance, to be paid at a day within the year after the date of the recognizance, in this case he may have execution by fieri facias or elegit within the year after the day of payment, though the year be past from the date of the recognizance. 21 Ed 3. 22, b: 1 Rol. Abr. 899, 900: 2 Inst. 471. See 2 Rol. Abr. 468: Co Lit. 292.

If a man recovers an annuity, he shall have execution for every time that occurs after by fieri facias or elegit within the year after the time incurred; though the year be past from the judgment; but not after the year without a scire facias. 1 Rol. Abr. 900: 2 Inst. 471: Salk. 258, 600.

If two acknowledge a recognizance of 100*l.* jointly and severally, the conusee may sue several scire facias's against the conusors upon this recognizance. 2 Inst. 395.

Scire facias upon a Recognizance in Chancery, may be sued out to extend lands, &c. If, upon a scire facias upon a recognizance in Chancery, the record be transmitted into B. R. to try the issue, and the plaintiff is nonsuit; he may bring a new scire facias in B. R. upon the record there. 2 Saund. 27. Where a statute is acknowledged, and the cognisor afterwards confesseth a judgment, and the land is extended thereon; in this case the cognisee shall have a scire facias to avoid the extent of the lands; but if the judgment be on goods, it is otherwise. 1 Brownl. 37: 3 Nelf. Abr. 186. Scire facias lies on recognizance of the peace, &c. removed into B. R. See title Surety of the Peace.

IV. Scire facias may be pleaded to, before judgment given upon it; afterwards it is too late: Though a writ of error may be brought to reverse the judgment on the scire facias, if that be not good on which the judgment was grounded. 2 Inst. 503. Payment was no plea at Common Law to a scire facias upon a judgment; because it is a debt upon record. 3 Lev. 120; But this was altered by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 12, which gives the defendant liberty to plead such payment.

Whatever is pleadable to the original action in abatement, shall not be pleaded to disable the plaintiff from having execution on a scire facias; because the defendant had admitted him able to have judgment. 1 Salk. 2.—If a judgment be obtained against an executor, and afterwards a scire facias is brought against him upon that judgment, he cannot plead a judgment recovered against his testator, and that he hath not assets ultra, &c. because he might have pleaded it to the first action; for it is a settled rule that if a defendant hath a matter proper for his defence, and he neglects to plead it in bar to the action at the time he may, he shall never take advantage of it after. 2 Strange 732.—In scire facias on a judgment in debt, or other personal action, the defendant cannot plead non-tenure of the land generally, where it is contrary to the return of the Sheriff; though he may plead a special non-tenure: But on a scire facias to have execution in a real action, the defendant may plead non-tenure generally, because the freehold is in question, and that is favoured in Law; and the ter-tenants may plead there are other ter-tenants not named, and pray judgment if they ought to answer till the others are summoned, &c. though it would be otherwise if the scire facias had been against particular tenants by name. 2 Salk. 601. —On a scire facias to have execution upon a judgment in action of debt, every ter-tenant is to be contributory; and therefore one shall not answer, as long as he can shew that another is liable and not warned: Contrà on a scire facias upon a judgment in a real action; for every tenant is to answer for that which he hath, and one may be contributory, and the other not. 2 Cro. 507.

On a scire facias against the heir and ter-tenants to reverse a common recovery of lands, the scire facias is to issue against all the ter-tenants, for they are to gain or lose by the judgment in the recovery. Raym. 16: 3 Mod. 274.—A scire facias to have execution of a fine, shall not be sued against lessee for years; but against him who hath the freehold, who may have some matter to bar the execution. Cro. Eliz. 471: 2 Brownl. 144. In ejectment, it was adjudged, that a scire facias might be brought by the lessee, though he was but nominal, and that it may be had by the lessor himself; as either of them may have a writ of error on the judgment: And that it might be brought against those who were strangers to the judgment, and against the executors of the defendant, &c. 2 Lutw. 1267.

If a judgment be above ten years' standing, the plaintiff cannot sue a scire facias without a motion in Court, on affidavit that the debt is due, the judgment unsatisfied, and the defendant living; in B. R. But in C. B. by motion of course, signed by a Serjeant, unless it is of twenty years standing, when a motion must be made in Court, on affidavit: If under ten, but above seven, he cannot have a scire facias without a motion at the side bar; which side bar rule is obtained of course, without any motion by counsel. Note; after such motion, and judgment revived by scire facias, if the defendant dies before execution, the plaintiff must sue a new scire facias, but may have it without motion, for the judgment was revived before. Salk. 598. Sellon's Pract.

In the King's Bench, and in all cases, there must be either one scire facias, with a scire feci returned, or two scire facias's with nihils. 2 Inst. 272: 2 Mod. 227.—But in C. B. whenever the scire facias is to revive a judgment against the same defendant, who was party and privy to the judgment, one scire facias is sufficient, though a nihil be returned thereto. Dy. 186: Salk 599.—But not so where the defendant is not party to the record. The time however between the teste and return, in both Courts, is in effect the same: For in C. B. the one scire facias must have fifteen days between the teste and return; whereas, in K. B. there must be fifteen days between the teste of the first and the return of the second scire facias. So, in C. B., where two scire facias's are necessary.—If only one scire facias and a scire feci in K. B. such scire facias should have fifteen days between the teste and return.—So must every scire facias when the proceeding is by original: But if inclusive both of teste and return, it is good. Sellon's Pract.

Although the intent of the scire facias is to give the party, against whom execution is about to issue, notice or warning thereof, yet by the general practice it is wholly defeated, for the defendant may be summoned or not, as the party thinks fit: And, indeed, the usual way is to revive the judgment without giving the party any notice. Sellon's Pract. And it seems that the party may always always search the office, and on finding a scire facias left there for a return, he may appear though he is not warned or summoned. J. M.

No alias scire facias must issue till the first writ of scire facias is returnable. R. T. 8 W. 3.—And in C.B. not until the appearance day of the return of the first.—The alias shall bear teste the day of the return of the first. Salk. 599: And in C. B. on the appearance day, as must the alias scire facias by original. Sellon's Pract.

A defendant being summoned upon a scire facias, and the summons returned, if he doth not appear, but lets judgment go by default, he is for ever barred. 1 Lev. 41, 42.—If the Sheriff hath returned him warned, he shall not have auditâ querelâ on a release, &c. for the defendant might have pleaded the same on the return of the scire facias; but if the Sheriff return nihil, on which an execution is awarded, he shall have auditâ querelâ. New Nat. Br. 230.—In the first case, he might have appeared and pleaded; in the other, not being warned, he was not bound to appear. Where there has been no scire feci, and only two nihils, the Court will often relieve upon motion, and not put the party to an auditâ querelâ. Salk. 93. 264: 2 Strange 1075.

Where the plaintiff in the judgment releaseth the defendant of all judgments and executions, &c. the defendant may, upon his release, sue out a writ of scire facias against the plaintiff in the judgment ad cognoscendum scriptum suum relaxationis; and he need not sue out his auditâ querelâ. Hil. 5 W. & M. B. R.

Damages are not recoverable in a scire facias. 3 Burr. 1791. Also it was formerly held that the plaintiff could not in a scire facias recover costs: but this is now remedied by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. Dal. 95: 3 Bulst. 322.

But the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the defendant has appeared and pleaded: And no costs are payable by the plaintiff, on moving to quash his own writ before plea, nor after a plea in abatement. Cas. Pract. C. B. 74: 1 Stra. 638.—There is a proviso in the statute, that it shall not extend to executors or administrators; and thence it has been determined that in scire facias they are not liable, when plaintiffs, to the payment of costs. 1 Stra. 188.

Scire Facias; against Bail. If a Capias ad satisfaciendum (see that title, and title Execution) is sued out against a defendant, and a non est inventus is returned thereon, the plaintiff may sue out a process against the Bail (where Bail were given); for they stipulate, in this triple alternative; that the defendant shall, if condemned in the suit, satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs; or, that he shall surrender himself a prisoner; or, that they will pay it for him.—As therefore the two former branches of the alternative are neither of them complied with, the latter must immediately take place. In order to which a writ of scire facias may be sued out against the Bail, commanding the Sheriff to make known to them the judgment, and that they shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against them for his debt and damages: And in such writ, if they shew no sufficient cause, or the defendant does not surrender himself on the day of the return, or of shewing cause, (for afterwards it is not sufficient,) the plaintiff may have judgment against the Bail, and take out a writ of ca. sa. or other process of execution against them. 3 Comm. c. 26. p. 416: See this Dictionary title Bail I.

There is no attempt, in point of fact, to find the principal on this ca. sa. but it is merely as a warning that the plaintiff means to proceed against the Bail; or rather, the ca. sa. against the principal, being left in the Sheriff's office, is as notice to the Bail, that the plaintiff will proceed against the person, and it is incumbent on the Bail to search whether any ca. sa. is left in the office. 4 Burr. 1360.

A writ of error is a supersedeas of execution from the time of its allowance, provided Bail, when requisite, be put in thereon in due time. But it does not prevent the plaintiff from proceeding by action of debt, or scire facias on the judgment, against the principal, or by scire facias, or action of debt on the recognizance, against the Bail. In such cases however, if the writ of error be not evidently brought for the mere purpose of delay, the Court will stay the proceedings upon terms, pending the writ of error. But this is not a matter of course; and if it be apparent to the Court, that the writ of error is brought merely for delay, they will not stay the proceedings. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

In order to stay the proceedings in an action of debt, or scire facias, on a judgment, pending a writ of error, it is necessary that the defendant should be first in Court, by putting in Bail. And where an action is brought upon a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, the Court of K. B. will not stay proceedings, pending a writ of error, without the defendant's giving judgment in the second action, and undertaking not to bring a writ of error upon that judgment. But if the action be brought upon a judgment of the Court of K B. these terms make no part of the rule; because, in general, actions on judgments are vexatious, and the plaintiff might have his execution on the first judgment. Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the authorities there cited.

On a scire facias, or action of debt on recognizance, against Bail, when a writ of error is allowed, and the Bail apply within their time for surrendering the principal, the Court will stay the proceedings, until the writ of error is determined; the Bail undertaking to pay the condemnation-money, or surrender the defendant into the custody of the Marshal, within four days next after the determination of the writ of error, in case the same shall be determined in favour of the defendant in error. And in one case, where the writ of error was allowed before the time was expired for surrendering the principal, though notice of such allowance was not given to the plaintiff's attorney, nor the application consequently made, till after the expiration of that time, the Court gave the Bail the same terms, as are usual when they apply within the time granted, by the course of the Court, for surrendering the principal. But, in general, when the Bail do not apply to stay the proceedings, pending error, till their time to surrender is out, the Court will not give them any time for that purpose, but only four days to pay the money in, after the judgment is affirmed, Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the authorities there.

Where error was not brought till it was too late for the Bail to surrender, the Court, in one case, would not stay the proceedings. But, in a subsequent case, proceedings were staid; the Bail undertaking to pay the condemnation-money, and the costs on the scire facias, in four days after affirmance; but in this case, there being no Bail on the writ of error, the Court made the Bail also undertake to pay the costs, on the writ of error, in case the judgment was affirmed; and said, it was a favour they were asking, and they would make them submit to equitable terms. 1 Stra. 443: 2 Stra. 887. By the affirmance of the judgment, in these cases, is meant the final affirmance of it; and therefore where the judgment, on a writ of error, was affirmed in the Exchequer-chamber, and afterwards another writ of error was brought, returnable in Parliament, the proceedings against the Bail were further staid, till the determination of the second writ of error. 5 Burr. 2819.

The plaintiff got judgment on the scire facias against Bail, pending error by the principal, and took them in execution; and on their moving to be discharged, the Court said, though they might have applied, and had the proceedings staid, yet the Court would not set them aside. 1 Stra. 526: Barnes 202: But see 4 Burr. 2454: 3 Term Rep. 643: semb. contrà.

See further, this Dictionary, titles Error; Bail, &c.

There must be a particular warrant of attorney to a scire facias against the Bail; for a warrant in the principal action is no warrant to the scire facias, because these are distinct actions; and the particular warrant is to be entered when the suit commences, which is when the writ is returned. 2 Salk. 603.—When a scire facias is brought against the Bail, it must be in cû parte; and where it is brought against the defendant in the principal action, it is to be in hac parte. 2 Salk. 599.

Scire Facias ad audiendum Errores, To hear the Errors assigned.—When a Writ of Error is brought, as soon as the transcript is entered on record, and the plaintiff hath also assigned his Errors, and entered the same on record, if the defendant does not immediately plead or join in Error, the plaintiff may sue out this scire facias: And if the defendant in Error does not come in, and plead or join to the assignment of Errors, upon the return of this writ the plaintiff may have an alias scire facias, and upon default thereto the plaintiff must proceed to argument, and will be heard ex parte. But this writ of scire facias is now seldom sued out, as the defendant usually appears gratis; or the plaintiff in Error, after his assignment of Errors, takes out a rule for defendant to appear thereto, and serves a copy on the defendant. Carth. 40: Sellon's Pract.

Scire Facias in Detinue. In Detinue, after judgment, the plaintiff shall have a distringas, to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated distresses of his chattels; or else a scire facias against any third person in whose hands they may happen to be, to shew cause why they should not be delivered. 3 Comm. 413. See this Dictionary, title Execution; in the Introduction to that title.

Scire Facias to remove an Usurper's Clerk. On a quare impedit, and ne admittas sued out, if the Bishop after receipt of the latter writ, admit any person, even though the Patron's right may have been found in a jure patronatûs, then the plaintiff, after he has obtained judgment in the quare impedit, may remove the Incumbent, if the Clerk of a stranger, by writ of scire facias. 3 Comm. 248. See Quare impedit; Quare incumbravit.

Scire Facias to repeal Letters-patent and Grants. Where the Crown hath unadvisedly granted any thing by Letters-patent, which ought not to be granted, or where the Patentee hath done an act that amounts to a forfeiture of the Grant, the remedy to repeal the Patent, is by writ of scire facias in Chancery. This may be brought either on the part of the King, in order to resume the thing granted; or if the Grant be injurious to a Subject, the King is bound of right to permit him (upon his petition) to use his royal name for repealing the Patent in a scire facias. And so, also, if upon an office untruly found for the King, he grants the land over to another, he who is grieved thereby, and traverses the office itself, is entitled, before issue joined, to a scire facias against the Patentee, in order to record the Grant. 3 Comm. c. 17. p. 260, 1. See this Dictionary, tit. Grant of the King; Inquest of Office.

A scire facias to repeal a Patent, must be brought where the record is, which is in Chancery; and there are to be two of these writs sued out of the Petty-bag office directed to the Sheriff of Middlesex, who, by a letter under the seal of his office, must send notice to the Corporation, or person whose concern the Patent is, that there is a scire facias issued out returnable at such a time, and remaining with him, for the revocation of such a Patent, and that if they do not appear thereunto, judgment will be had against them by default; and this letter to be delivered to the Corporation, or person interested in such Patent, by some person who can make oath thereof. Dalton's Sheriff. On a scire facias out of Chancery returnable in B. R. to repeal Letters-patent, it was held, that if the Letters-patent are granted to the prejudice of any person, as if a fair is granted to the damage of the fair of another, &c. he may have a scire facias on the inrolment of such Grant in Chancery, as well as the King in other cases; but it may be a question, whether a scire facias upon a record in Chancery is returnable in B. R. though after it is made returnable into B. R. that Court, and not the Chancery, hath the jurisdiction of it. Mod. Cas. 229. In all cases at Common Law, where the King's title accrues by a judicial record, and he grants his estate over; the party grieved could not have a scire facias against the Patentee, but was forced to his petition to the King; otherwise it is when his title is by conveyance on record, which is not judicial. 4 Rep. 59. The King hath a right to repeal a Patent by scire facias, where he was deceived in his Grant, or it is to the injury of the Subject. 3 Lev. 220. And where a common person is obliged to bring his action, there, upon an inquisition or office found, the King is put to his scire facias, &c. 9 Rep. 96. A scire facias to repeal Letters-patent doth not abate by the demise of the Crown. 1 Strange 43.

Scire Facias's have issued to repeal the grants of offices, for conditions broken, non-attendance, &c. For disability, or in case of forfeiture, the offices may be seized without scire facias. 3 Kelf. Abr. 201, 202. See title Office IV.

SCOLDS, In a legal sense, are troublesome and angry women, who, by their brawling and wrangling amongst their neighbours, break the public peace, increase discord, and become a public nuisance to the neighbourhood. They are indictable in the Sheriff's tourn, and punished by the cucking-stool, &c. Kitch. 13: 6 Mod. 213. See title Castigatory.

SCOT AND LOT, Sax. Sceat, pars, and Llot, i. e. Sors.] Signifies a customary contribution laid upon all subjects, according to their ability. Spelm. Nor are these old words grown obsolete, for whoever in like manner (though not by equal proportion) are assessed to any contribution, are generally said to pay Scot and Lot. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 9. See also stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 18, as to elections in London.

SCOTAL, or SCOTALE, Is where any officer of a forest keeps an alehouse within the forest, by colour of his office, causing people to come to his house, and there spend their money for fear of his displeasure: It is compounded of scot and ale, which by transposition of the words is otherwise called an aleshot. This word is often used in the Charter of the Forest, c. 8. Manwood 216.

SCOTTARE. Those tenants are said scottare, whose lands are subject to pay scot. Mon. Aug. i. 875.

SCOTLAND.

THE KINGDOM OF SCOTLAND, notwithstanding the union of the Crowns on the accession of their King, James VI. to that of England, continued an entirely separate and distinct kingdom for above a century more, though an union had been long projected; which was judged to be the more easy to be done, as both kingdoms were antiently under the same government, and still retained a very great resemblance, though far from an identity, in their laws. By an act of Parliament 1 Jac. 1. c. 1, it was declared, that these two mighty, famous, and antient kingdoms were formerly one. And Sir Edward Coke observes, how marvellous a conformity there was, not only in the religion and language of the two nations, but also in their antient laws, the descent of the Crown, their Parliaments, their titles of nobility, their officers of state and of justice, their writs, their customs, and even the language of their laws. Upon which account he supposes the Common Law of each to have been originally the same; especially as their most antient and authentic book, called Regiam Majestatem, and containing the rules of their antient Common Law, is extremely similar to that of Glanvil, which contains the principles of ours, as it stood in the reign of Henry II. 4 Inst. 345. The many diversities, now subsisting between the two laws at present, may be well enough accounted for, from a diversity of practice in two large and uncommunicating jurisdictions; and from the acts of two distinct and independent Parliaments, which have in many points altered and abrogated the old Common Law of both kingdoms. See 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 95, and the note there.

In the reigns of King James II. and King Charles II. Commissioners were appointed to treat with Commissioners of Scotland, concerning an union. But the bringing about this great work was reserved for the reign of Queen Anne. The stat. 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 14, ordained articles to be settled, by Commissioners, for the union of the two kingdoms, &c. and by stat. 5 Ann. c. 8, the Union was effected.

By this statute, 5 Ann. c. 8, the Twenty-Five Articles of Union, agreed to by the Parliaments of both nations, were ratified and confirmed; the purport of the most considerable being as follows:

1. That on the first of May 1707, and for ever after, the Kingdoms of England and Scotland shall be united into one Kingdom, by the name of GREAT BRITAIN.

2. The succession to the Monarchy of Great Britain shall be the same as was before settled with regard to that of England.

3. The united Kingdom shall be represented by one Parliament.

4. There shall be a communication of all rights and privileges between the Subjects of both Kingdoms, except where it is otherwise agreed.

9. When England raises 2,000,000*l.* (accurately 1,997,763*l.* 8*s.* 4½*d.*) by a Land-tax, Scotland shall raise 48,000*l.*

16, 17. The standards of the coin, of weights, and of measures, shall be reduced to those of England, throughout the united Kingdoms.

18. The laws relating to trade, customs, and the excise, shall be the same in Scotland as in England. But all the other laws of Scotland shall remain in force; though alterable by the Parliament of Great Britain. Yet with this caution, that laws relating to public policy are alterable at the discretion of the Parliament; laws relating to private right are not to be altered, but for the evident utility of the people of Scotland.

22. Sixteen Peers are to be chosen to represent the Peerage of Scotland in Parliament, and forty-five members to sit in the House of Commons.

23. The sixteen Peers of Scotland shall have all privileges of Parliament: And all Peers of Scotland shall be Peers of Great Britain, and rank next after those of the same degree a the time of the Union, and shall have all privileges of Peers, except sitting in the House of Lords, and voting on the trial of a Peer.

It was formerly resolved by the House of Lords, that a Peer of Scotland claiming to sit in the British House of Peers, by virtue of a patent, passed under the Great Seal of Great Britain, had no right to vote in the election of the sixteen Scotch Peers; and that no patent of honour granted to any Peer of Great Britain, who was a Peer of Scotland at the time of the Union, should entitle him to sit in Parliament. But in 1782, on the claim of the Duke of Hamilton to sit as Duke of Braudon, the question being referred to the Judges, they were unanimously of opinion, that the Peers of Scotland were not disabled from receiving, subsequently to the Union, a patent of Peerage of Great Britain, with all the privileges usually incident thereto; and the House accordingly admitted the Duke of Hamilton to sit as Duke of Brandon. No objection was ever made to an English Peer's taking a Scotch Peerage by descent; and therefore, formerly, when it was designed to confer an English title on a noble family of Scotland, the eldest son of the Scotch Peer was created in his father's life-time an English Peer, and this creation was not affected by the annexation by inheritance of the Scotch Peerage.—It seems now to be settled, that a Scotch Peer, m[illegible] a Peer of Great Britain, has a right to vote in the el[illegible]on of the sixteen Scotch Peers: And that if any of the sixteen Scotch Peers are created Peers of Great Britain, they thereby cease to sit as representatives of the Scotch Peerage; and new Scotch Peers must be elected in their room. See 1 Comm. 97, n. 7.

25. All laws and statutes in either kingdom, so far as they are contrary to these articles, shall cease and become void: And hence it seems that the Royal prerogative of granting a charter to unrepresented places to send Members to Parliament, is virtually abolished; since the exercise of it would necessarily destroy the population of the representatives of the two kingdoms. 1 Comm. 97, n. See this Dictionary, title Parliament VI (B) 1. (b).

In the said statute, 5 Ann. c. 8, two acts of Parliament were also recited; the one of Scotland, whereby the Church of Scotland, and also the four Universities of that kingdom, are established for ever, and all succeeding Sovereigns are to take an oath inviolably to maintain the same; the other of England, 5 Ann. c. 6, whereby the Acts of Uniformity of 13 Eliz. and 13 Car. 2. (except as the same had been altered by Parliament at that time) and all other acts then in force for the preservation of the Church of England, are declared perpetual; and it is stipulated, that every subsequent King and Queen shall take an oath inviolably to maintain the same within England, Ireland, Wales, and the town of Berwick upon Tweed. And it is enacted, that these two acts "shall for ever be observed as fundamental and essential conditions of the Union."

Upon these Articles and Act of Union, it is to be observed, 1st, That the two kingdoms are now so inseparably united, that nothing can ever disunite them again; except the mutual consent of both, or the successful resistance of either, upon apprehending an infringement of those points which, when they were separate and independent nations, it was mutually stipulated should be fundamental and essential conditions of the Union. 2dly, That whatever else may be deemed fundamental and essential conditions, the preservation of the two churches, of England and Scotland, in the same state that they were in at the time of the Union, and the maintenance of the Acts of Uniformity which establish our common prayer, are expressly declared so to be. 3dly. That therefore any alteration in the constitution of either of those churches, or in the Liturgy of the Church of England, (unless with the consent of the respective churches, collectively or representatively given,) would be an infringement of these fundamental and essential conditions, and greatly endanger the Union. 4thly. That the municipal laws of Scotland are ordained to be still observed in that part of the island, unless altered by Parliament: and, as the Parliament has not yet thought proper, except in a few instances, to alter them, they still (with regard to the particulars unaltered) continue in full force. Wherefore the municipal or common laws of England are, generally speaking, of no force or validity in Scotland. See 1 Comm. 97, 98; and the note there.

At the time of the Union it was agreed, that the mode of the election of the Peers and Commons should be settled by an act passed in the Parliament of Scotland; which was afterwards recited, ratified, and made part of the Act of Union. As to the election of the sixteen Peers, see stat. 6 Ann. c. 23. With respect to the forty-five Commoners, it was, by an act of the Scotch Parliament, (and see stat. 6 Ann. c. 6,) enacted, that of the forty-five, thirty should be elected by the Shires, and fifteen by the Boroughs: That the City of Edinburgh should elect one; and that the other Royal Boroughs should be divided into fourteen districts, and that each district should return one: and it was also provided, that no person should elect or be elected one of the forty-five, but who would have been capable of electing, or of being elected, a representative of a shire or borough to the Parliament of Scotland: Hence the eldest son of any Scotch Peer cannot be elected one of the forty-five; such eldest son being incapable, prior to the Union, of sitting in the Scotch Parliament. Neither can such eldest son be entitled to be inrolled, and vote as a freeholder for any commissioner of a shire, though otherwise qualified; as determined by the House of Peers in Lord Daer's case, 1793. But the eldest sons of Scotch Peers may represent any place in England, as many do. 2 Hats. Prec. 12.

The two stats. 9 Ann. c. 5: 33 Geo. 2. c. 20, requiring knights of shires and members for boroughs to have respectively 600*l.* and 300*l.* a-year, are expressly confined to England: But a commissioner of a shire must be a freeholder; and it is a general rule, that none can be elected but those who can elect. And it was formerly supposed, that it was necessary that every representative of a borough should be admitted a burgess of one of the boroughs which he represented; till the contrary was determined by a Committee of the House of Commons in the case of the Borough of Wigtown. 2 Doug. El. 181. It still holds generally true in shires in Scotland, that the qualifications of the electors and elected are the same; or that eligibility and a right to elect are convertible terms. See 1 Comm. 97, n. 6.

The election of members of Parliament for Scotland, is further regulated by English statutes: the Magistrates are required to summon the Councils of boroughs; and an oath is to be taken by every freeholder and voter as to the estates to qualify them, that they are actually their own, and not fictitious: Sheriffs or stewards not to make any false return, &c. under the penalty of 500*l.* recoverable in a summary way: No Judge of the Court of Session, or Baron of the Exchequer, in Scotland, shall be elected a member of Parliament. Stats. 7 Geo. 2. c. 16: 16 Geo. 2. c. 11: and see stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 81.

Acts of Parliament, in general, passed since the Union, extend to Scotland; but where a statute is not applicable to Scotland, and where Scotland is not intended to be included, the method is to declare by proviso, that it does not extend to Scotland. 3 Burr. 853. As to Berwick, see this Dictionary under that title.

Several acts of Parliament have been passed, from time to time, for the internal regulation of this part of the kingdom; for which see the Index to the Statutes, and Williams's Digest of the Statute Law. It may be sufficient in this place to notice the following acts.

By stat. 6 Ann. c. 26, a Court of Exchequer is erected in Scotland, to be a Court of Record, Revenue, and Judicature, for ever; and Barons of the said Court to be appointed, who shall be Judges there.

An Act for disarming the Highlands of Scotland; and requiring bail of persons for their loyal and peaceable behaviour, &c. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 54.—Persons summoned are to bring in and deliver up their arms, or, refusing to do it, shall be taken as listed soldiers to serve his Majesty beyond the seas; and concealing their arms, are liable to penalties: Also the Lords Lieutenants, or Justices of the Peace, may appoint persons to search houses for arms, &c. Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 26.

By the stats. 19 Geo. 2. c. 39: 20 Geo. 2. c. 51: 21 Geo. 2. 34: 26 Geo. 2. c. 29; Provisions are further made for disarming the Highlands, and restraining the use of the Highland dress; and the masters, and teachers of private schools, chaplains, tutors, and governors of youth and children, are to take the oaths to his Majesty.

When any ordinary place is vacant in the Court of Sessions in Scotland, the King may nominate a person, who is to be examined by the Lords of the Session, and then admitted, &c. Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 18.

The City of Edinburgh, in Scotland, was fined 2000*l.* on account of the murder of Captain Porteus; (who was hanged by the mob, on pretence that he had ordered his soldiers to fire upon persons hissing at an execution;) and a reward of 200*l.* ordered for apprehending the offenders. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 34.

By stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 43, the heritable jurisdictions are taken away and restored to the Crown, and more effectual provision is made for the administration of justice by the King's Courts and Judges there: And all persons acting as procurators, writers or agents in the Law, are to take the oaths.—By stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 50, the tenure of ward-holding is taken away, and converted into blanch and fen-holding. The casualties of single and liferent escheats, incurred by horning and denunciation for civil causes, are taken away. A summary process is given to heirs and successors against superiors. The attendance of vassals at Head-Courts is discharged. Heirs and possessors of tailzied estates, are empowered to sell to the Crown.

By stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 20, certain doubts are obviated, that had arisen with regard to the admission of the vassals of the principality of Scotland, and payment of their rents and duties.

Peers of Scotland, and all officers, civil and military, &c. are to take the Oath of Abjuration, &c. A Peer committing High Treason or felony in Scotland may be tried by commission under the Great Seal, constituting Justices to inquire, &c. in Scotland: And the King may grant commissions of oyer and terminer in Scotland, to determine such treason, &c. Stats. 6 Ann. c. 14; 7 Ann. cap. 21.

Persons having lands in Scotland, guilty of High Treason by corresponding with, assisting, or remitting money, &c. to the Pretender, on conviction, are to be liable to the pains of treason; and their vassals, continuing in dutiful allegiance, shall hold the said lands of his Majesty in fee and heritage for ever, where the lands were so held of the Crown by the offender: And tenants continuing peaceable, and occupying land, are to hold the same two years, rent-free. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 20.

By stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 9, every Juror for trial of High Treason, or misprision of treason, shall be possessed in his own or his wife's right of lands, &c. as proprietor or liferenter within the shire, &c. of the yearly value of 40*s.* sterling at least, or valued at 30*s.* sterling per ann. in the tax-roll.

By stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 19, offences of High Treason, committed in the shire of Dumbarton, Stirling, Perth, Kincardine, Aberdeen, Inverness, Nairn, Cromartie, Argyl, Forfar, Bamf, Sutherland, Caithness, Elgine, and Ross, or the shire or stewartry of Orkney, may be inquired of in any shire in Scotland, as shall be assigned by the King. Jurors may come out of adjoining counties. The practice of taking down evidence in writing, in crimes not affecting life or member, abrogated.

By the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 48, the Court before whom any indictment for High Treason, or misprision of High Treason, in Scotland, shall be found, may issue writs of capias, proclamation, and exigent against the party, if not in custody; whereon the defendant not appearing, shall be deemed outlawed and attainted of High Treason, or misprision of High Treason; persons out of the kingdom, and returning within a year, may traverse the indictment.

By stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 41, forfeited estates in Scotland were annexed to the Crown inalienably, and satisfaction made to the lawful creditors thereupon; and the rents thereof applied for the better civilizing the Highlands.

SCOTS. Assessments by Commissioners of Sewers are so called.

SCRIPTURE. All profane scoffing of the Holy Scripture, or exposing any part thereof to contempt and ridicule, is punished by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. See Reviling, &c.

SCRIVENERS, Are mentioned in the statute against Usury and excessive interest of money. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 16. Money-Scriveners were understood to be those who received money to place it out at interest; and who supplied those who wanted to raise money on security; thus rendering themselves useful to, and receiving a profit from, both parties. If a Scrivener is intrusted with a bond, he may receive the interest; and if he fails, the obligee shall bear the loss; and so it is if he receive the principal, and deliver up the bond; for being intrusted with the security itself, it shall be presumed he is trusted with power to receive the principal and interest; and the giving up the bond on payment of the money is a discharge thereof: But if a Scrivener be intrusted with a mortgage deed, he hath only authority to receive the interest, not the principal; the giving up the deed in this case not being sufficient to restore the estate, but there must be a reconveyance, &c. 1 Salk. 157. It is held, where a Scrivener puts out his client's money on a bad security, which on inquiry might have been easily found so, yet he cannot be charged in equity to answer the money; for no one would venture to put out money of another upon a security, if he were obliged to warrant and make it good, in case a loss should happen, without any fraud in him. Preced. Chanc. 146, 149. See 19 Vin. Abr. 289—292: and this Dictionary, titles Bond; Mortgage; Trustee; Attorney, &c.

SCUTAGE,

SCUTAGE, Scutagium, Sax. Scildpenig.] Was a tax or contribution, raised by those that held lands by knights-service, towards furnishing the King's army, at one, two, or three marks for every knight's fee. Henry the Third, for his voyage to the Holy Land, had a tenth granted by the Clergy, and Scutage, three marks of every knight's fee, by the Laity. Baronag. Angliæ, Part. 1. fol. 211, b. This was also levied by Henry II., Richard I., and King John. See titles Taxes; Tenures II. 8.

SCUTAGIO HABENDO, A writ that anciently lay against tenants by knights-service, to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or to pay a certain sum, &c. F. N. B. 83. See titles Taxes; Tenures.

SCUTE, A French gold coin of 3*s*. 4*d*. In the reign of King Henry V., Catherine Queen of England had an assurance made her of sundry castles, manors, lands, &c. valued at the sum of forty thousand Scutes, every two whereof were worth a noble. Rot. Parl. 1 Hen. 6.

SCUTELLA, from Scutum, Sax. Scutel.] A scuttle, any thing of a flat and broad shape, like a shield.

SCUTELLA ELEEMOSYNARIA, An alms basket or scuttle. Paroch. Antiq.

SCUTUM ARMORUM, A shield or coat of arms. See Seal.

SCYLDWIT, Sax.] A mulct for any fault; from the Saxon Scild, i. e. Delictum, & Wite, pœna. Leg. Hen. 1.

SCYRA, A fine imposed on such as neglected to attend the scyregemot Court, which all tenants were bound to do. Mon. Ang. i. 52.

SCYRE-GEMOT, Sax.] Shiremote; A Court held by the Saxons twice every year by the Bishop of the diocese, and the earldorman, in shires that had earldormen; and by the Bishop and Sheriff, where the counties were committed to the Sheriff, &c. wherein both the ecclesiastical and temporal Laws were given in charge to the county. Seld. Tit. Hon. 628. This Court was held three times in the year, in the reign of King Canutus the Dane. Leg. Canut. c. 38. And Edward the Confessor appointed it to be held twelve times in a year. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 35. See Term.

SEA, Mare.] By statute 18 E. 3. c. 3, the Sea is to be open to all merchants. The main Sea, beneath the low water mark, and round England, is part of England; for there the Admiral hath jurisdiction. 1 Inst. 260: 5 Rep. 207. The Seas which environ England are within the jurisdiction of the King of England. 1 Roll. Abr. 528. As to the sovereignty of the Sea, see title Navy.

SEA-BANKS. See Banks. By the statute 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. § 5, made perpetual by stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 42. § 3, it is made felony without benefit of clergy, maliciously to cut down any river or Sea-bank, whereby lands may be overflowed. And by stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32, a penalty of 20*l*. is imposed on any person cutting up or removing any piles, chalk, &c. used in securing Sea walls. And stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 33, imposes penalties on persons cutting or pulling up Star or Bent on the sand hills on the north-west coast of England.

SEAL, Sigillum.] Is taken either for wax impressed with a device, and attached to deeds, &c. or for the instrument with which the wax is impressed. In Law the former is the most usual sense. The first sealed charter we find extant in England, is that of King Edward the Confessor, upon his foundation of Westminster Abbey. Dugdale's Warwickshire, fol. 138, b. Yet we read of a Seal in the manuscript history of Offa, King of the Mercians. And that Seals were in use in the Saxons' time, see Taylor's History of Gavelkind, fol. 73. It was usual in the time of Henry II. and before, to seal all grants with the sign of the Cross, made in gold, on the parchment. Monast. iii. fol. 7: Ordericus Vitalis, lib. 4. That most of the charters of the English-Saxon Kings were thus signed, appears by Ingulphus, and in the Monasticon. But it was not so much used after the Conquest. Cowell. The Royal Seal was most frequently in green, to signify (as it has been quaintly expressed) rem in perpetuo vigore permansuram. Coats of arms on Seals were introduced about the year 1218. We read of a charter sealed with the royal tooth, called his wang-tooth. Wang is the jaw. Chaucer. See title Deed II. 6: and see further as to the Great and Privy Seal, titles Treason; Grant of the King; Privy Seal, &c. As to Seals of Corporations, see that title.

Writs touching the Common Law not to go out under any of the petty Seals, 28 Ed 1. st. 3. c. 6. See Writs.

SEA-LAWS, Laws relating to the sea; as the Laws of Oleron, &c. See Oleron Laws.

SEALER, Sigillator.] An officer in Chancery appointed by the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, to seal the writs and instruments there made in his presence.

SEA-MARKS; See title Beacons.

SEAMEN; See title Navy, particularly under Division II.

SEAMEN'S WAGES, Are one proper object of the Admiralty jurisdiction, even though the contract be made for them upon the land. 11 Ventr. 146. Yet the Courts of Common Law have jurisdiction; and an action may be maintained for work and labour. See title Admiral and Admiralty.

SEAN-FISH, Seems to be that sort of fish which is taken with a large and long net, called a Sean. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 12.

SEARCHER, An officer of the Customs, whose business it is to search and examine ships outward-bound, if they have any prohibited or uncustomed goods on board, &c. This officer is mentioned in the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 8. And there are Searchers concerned in alnage duties; of leather; and in divers other cases.

SEA-REEVE, In villis maritimis est qui maritimam Domini jurisdictionem curat, littus lustrat, & ejectum maris (quod wreck appellatur) Domino colligit. Spelm.

SEA-ROVERS, Pirates and robbers at Sea. See tit. Pirates.

SECONDARY, Secondarius] An officer who is second, or next to the chief officer; as the Secondaries to the Prothonotaries of the Courts of B. R. and C. B. The Secondary of the Remembrancer in the Exchequer; Secondary of the Compter, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 506 Secondary of the King's Bench, may have clerks. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23.

SECONDARY OF THE OFFICE OF PRIVY SEAL, Is taken notice of in the old stat. 1 Edw. 4. c. 1.

SECONDARY CONVEYANCES, Those which presuppose some other Conveyance, precedent; and only serve to confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original Conveyance. See titles Conveyance; Deed IV.

SECONDARY USE, A Use, though executed, may change from one to another by circumstances ex post facto: as if A. makes a feoffment to the Use of his intended wife and her eldest son for their lives, upon the marriage the wife takes the whole Use in severalty; and, upon the birth of a son, the Use is executed jointly in them both. This is sometimes called a Secondary, sometimes a Shifting Use. See title Use.

SECOND DELIVERANCE, secunda deliberatione.] Is a judicial writ that lies, after a nonsuit of the plaintiff in replevin, and a returno habendo of the cattle replevied, adjudged to him that distrained them; commanding the Sheriff to replevy the same cattle again, upon security given by the plaintiff in the replevin for the re-delivery of them, if the distress be justified. It is a second writ of replevin. F. N. B. 68. See title Replevin.

SECOND MARRIAGE; See titles Bigamy; Polygamy.

SECONDS, To duellers. See title Homicide.

SECOND SURCHARGE, Writ of. If after admeasurement of common, upon a writ of admeasurement of pasture, the same defendant surcharges the common again, the plaintiff may have this writ of Second Surcharge, de secunda superoneratione, which is given by the statute Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 8. See title Common III.

SECRETARY, Secretarius, à Secretis.] A title given to him that is ab Epistolis & Scriptis Secretis; as to the Secretaries of State, &c. The Secretaries of State have an extraordinary trust which renders them very considerable in the eyes of the King, and of the Subject also; whose requests and petitions are for the most part lodged in their hands, to be represented to his Majesty, and to make dispatches thereupon, pursuant to his Majesty's directions. They are Privy Counsellors, and a Council is seldom or never held without the presence of one of them; they wait by turns, and one of these Secretaries always attends the Court, and by the King's warrant, prepares all bills or letters for the King to sign, not being matter of Law. And depending on them is the office called the Paper Office, which contains all the public writings of State, negotiations, and dispatches, all matters of State and Council, &c. and they have the keeping of the King's seal, called the signet, because the King's private letters are signed with it. There was but one Secretary of State in this kingdom, till about the end of the reign of King Hen. VIII. but then that great and weighty office was thought proper to be discharged by two persons, both of equal authority, and styled Principal Secretaries of State. The correspondence with all parts of Great Britain is managed by either of the Secretaries, without distinction; but in respect to foreign affairs, all nations which have intercourse of business with Great Britain, are divided into two provinces, the Southern and the Northern: of which the Southern is under the senior, and the Northern is under the junior, Secretary, &c. There are now in fact several persons holding the offices of Principal Secretaries of State; for the Home Department; for Foreign Affairs; the Colonies, &c.

As to the power of Secretaries of State to commit, see this Dictionary, titles Commitment; Justices; Bail, &c. Blackstone states shortly, that they are allowed the power of commitment in order to bring offenders to trial; and cites 1 Leon. 70: 2 Leon. 175: Comb. 143: 5 Mod. 84: Salk. 347: Carth. 291.

SECTA, or SUIT, à sequendo.] By this word was antiently understood the witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. See title Pleading I. 1.

SECTA AD CURIAM, Is a writ that lies against him who refuses to perform his suit either to the County Court or Court Baron. F. N. B. 158. See further, title Suit of Court.

SECTA AD JUSTITIAM FACIENDAM, A service which a man is bound to perform by his fee. Bracton, lib. 2. c. 16. num. 6.

SECTA CURIÆ, Suit and service done by tenants at the Court of their Lord. Paroch. Antiq. p. 3. See title Suit of Court.

SECTA FACIENDA PER ILLAM QUÆ HABET ENICIAM PARTEM, Is a writ to compel the heir, who hath the elder's part of the coheirs, to perform service for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. fol. 177.

SECTA AD MOLENDINUM, A writ lying where a man by usage, time out of mind, &c. hath ground his corn at the mill of a certain person, and afterwards goeth to another mill with his corn, thereby withdrawing his suit to the former. And this writ lies especially for the Lord against his tenant, who holds of him to do suit at his mill. Reg. Orig. 153: F. N. B. 122. The count in this writ may be on the tenure of the land; or upon prescription, viz. That the tenant, and all those who held those lands, have used to do their suit at the plaintiff's mill, &c. New Nat. Br. 272. Secta ad molendinum, like assizes of nuisance, and many other old suits are now much turned into actions of the case, to repair the party injured in damages. See 3 Comm. c. 15. p. 235.

SECTA REGALIS, A suit by which all persons were bound twice in a year to attend the Sheriff's tourn. It was called Regalis, because the Sheriff's tourn was the King's leet, wherein the people were to be obliged by oath to bear true allegiance to the King, &c.

SECTA UNICA TANTUM FACIENDA PRO PLURIBUS HÆREDITATIBUS, A writ for an heir who is distrained by the Lord to do more suits than one, in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Reg. Orig.

SECTIS NON FACIENDIS, A writ for a woman, who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of Court. Reg. Orig. fol. 174. It lay also for one in wardship to be freed of all suits of Court during his wardship. Reg. Orig. fol. 173; but see stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

SECUNDARY; See Secondary.

SECUNDA SUPERONERATIONE PASTURÆ; See Second Surcharge, Writ of.

SECURITATEM INVENIENDI quod se non divertat ad partes exteras sine Licentia Regis. An antient writ lying for the King against any of his Subjects, to stay them from going out of this kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is, that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth, as the King shall think fit. F. N. B. 85. See Ne exeat Regnum.

SECURITATIS PACIS, Is a writ that lies for one who is threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him which so threatens; and is issued out of the Chancery directed to the Sheriff, &c. Reg. Orig. 88. See Supplicavit; Surety of the Peace.

SECURITY FOR GOOD BEHAVIOUR, the PEACE, and of PERSON, &c. See Surety of the Peace.

SE DEFENDENDO, A plea for him that is charged with the death of another person, by alleging that he was was driven unto what he did in his own defence; and the other so assaulting him that, if he had not done as he did, he must have been in danger of his own life; which danger ought to be so great, as that it appears to have been otherwise inevitable. Staundf. P. C. lib. 1. c. 7. See title Homicide II.

SEDITIOUS CONVENTICLES, To the disturbance of the peace, &c. See titles Conventicles; Heresy.

SEDITIOUS MEETINGS and ASSEMBLIES; See title Riots.

SEDUCTION OF WOMEN CHILDREN; See title Marriage.

SEED-COD, from the Sax. sæd, seed, and codde, a purse, or such like continent.] A basket or other vessel of wood, carried on one arm of the husbandman or sower of ground, to bear the seed or grain which he sows, and spreads abroad with the other hand. In Westmorland, a bolster or pillow is called a cod; and in other Northern parts a pin-cushion is termed a pin-cod.——Pro uno Seed-cod empto 4*d*. Paroch. Antiq. 549: Kennett's Gloss.

SEEDER, A seedsman, or one who sows the land. Blount.

SEIGNIOR, Fr. Seigneur, i. e. Dominus.] Is in general signification as much as Lord; but particularly used for the Lord of the fee, or of a manor, as Seigneur among the Feudists is he who grants a fee or benefit out of the land to another; and the reason is, because, having granted away the use and profit of the land, the property or dominum he still retains in himself. Hotom.: F. N. B. 23.

SEIGNIOR IN GROSS, Seemeth to be one that is a Lord, but of no manor, and therefore can keep no Court. F. N. B. fol. 3. See Seigniory.

SEIGNIORAGE, A royalty or prerogative of the King, whereby he claims an allowance of gold and silver brought in the mass, to be exchanged for coin. As Seigniorage, out of every pound weight of gold, the King had for his coin 5s. of which he paid to the Master of the Mint for his work sometimes 1s. and sometimes 1s. 6*d*. Upon every pound weight of silver, the Seigniorage answered to the King, in the time of Edw. III. was eighteen pennyweights, which then amounted to about 1s. out of which he sometimes paid 8*d*. at others 9*d*. to the Master: In the reign of King Henry V. the King's Seigniorage of every pound of silver was 15*d*. &c. Stat. antiq. 9 Hen. 5. c. 1: Hale's Sher. Acc. p. 3.

SEIGNIORY, Dominium, from the French seigneurie, i. e. dominatus, imperium, principatus.] A manor or lordship, Seigniory de Sokemans: Kitchin, fol. 80. Seigniory in gross seems to be the title of him who is not Lord by means of any manor, but immediately in his own person; as tenure in capite, whereby one holds of the King as of his crown, is Seigniory in gross. Kitchin, fol. 206. See Seignior.

SEISIN, Fr. seisine, Lat. seisina.] In the Common Law signifies possession. To seise is to take possession of a thing; and primer Seisin is the first possession. Co. Litt. 152. There is a Seisin in deed or in fact, and a Seisin in Law; a Seisin in deed is when an actual possession is taken; and Seisin in Law is where lands descend, and one hath not actually entered on them, &c. 1 Inst. 31. Seisin in Law is a right to lands and tenements, though the owner is by wrong disseised of them: And he who hath an hour's actual possession quietly taken, hath seisin de droit et de claime, whereof no man may disseise him, but must be driven to his action. Perk. 457, 458. A Seisin in Law is sufficient to avow upon; but, to the bringing an assise, actual Seisin is required, &c. 4 Rep. 9. Seisin of a superior service, is Seisin of all inferior services which are incident thereto: And Seisin of homage is a Seisin of all other services, because in the doing thereof the tenant takes upon himself to do all services. 4 Rep. 80: 1 Danv. Abr. 647. The Seisin of rent, or other annual services, is a sufficient Seisin of casual services. 4 Rep. 80. But Seisin of one annual service is not Seisin of another annual service; as if there be lord or tenant by fealty, ten shillings rent, and three days' work in the year; in this case Seisin of the rent is no Seisin of the work, nor is Seisin of the rent Seisin of the suit of Court, which is annual. 4 Rep. 9: 1 Danv. Abr. 647: 2 Lil. 507. The Seisin of the father is not sufficient for the heir: Though if a fine be levied to one for life, the remainder to another in tail, and the tenant for life takes Seisin of the services, this will be a good Seisin for him in remainder; and the Seisin of a lessee for years is sufficient for him in reversion. 2 Hen. 6. 7: 45 Ed. 3. 26: 1 Danv. 646, 805. Where a man is seised of a reversion, depending upon an estate for life, the pleading of it is that he was seised of it ut de feodo, leaving out the word dominico; but if it be a reversion in fee, expectant upon the determination of a lease for years, there he may plead that he was seised of it in dominico suo ut de feodo. Dyer 185, 257: 1 Rep. 20, 27: 4 Rep. 62. Seisin is never to be alleged, but where it is traversable: and when a defendant allegeth a Seisin in fee in any one under whom he claims, the plaintiff cannot allege a Seisin in another, without traversing, confessing, or avoiding of the Seisin alleged by the defendant. Cro. El. 30: 1 Brownl. 70. If a Seisin in fee is alleged, it shall be intended a lawful Seisin till the contrary appears. 2 Lutw. 1337. But the party is to shew of what estate he is seised, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 215. See further, titles Livery of Seisin; Disseisin; Estate, &c.

SEISINA HABENDA, quia Rex habuit Annum, Diem et Vastum. A writ for delivery of Seisin to the Lord of lands or tenements; after the King, in right of his prerogative, hath had the year, day, and waste, on a felony committed, &c. Reg. Orig. 165.

SEISING OF HERIOTS, Is the seising of the best beasts, &c. (where an Heriot is due) on the death of the tenant. It is a species of self-remedy, not much unlike that of taking of cattle or goods in distress; only in the latter case they are seised as a pledge, in the former, as the property of the person for whom seised. 3 Comm. c. 1. VI. See title Heriot.

SEISURE OF GOODS FOR OFFENCES. No goods of a felon or other offender can be seised to the use of the King, before forfeited: And there are two Seisures, one verbal only, to make an inventory, and charge the town or place, when the owner is indicted for the offence; and the other actual, which is the taking of them away afterwards on conviction, &c. 3 Inst. 103. See title Forfeiture.

SEL, Denotes the bigness of a thing to which it is added; as Selwood is a great wood.

SELDA, from the Sax. selde, a seat, or stool.] A shop, shed, or stall in a market. Ass. 9 R. 1. It is also made to signify a wood of sallows or willows: And Sir Edward Coke takes selda for a salt-pit. Co. Lit. 4.

SELF-BANE. Sax. ſelf-bana.] Self-murder; See title Homicide III. 1.

SELF-DEFENCE; See title Homicide II.

SELF-MURDER; See title Homicide III. 1.

SELF-PRESERVATION; See titles Homicide I. 3; II.; Larceny I. 1.

SELION OF LAND, ſelio terræ; from the French ſeillon.] A ridge of ground riſing between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but ſometimes more and ſometimes leſs: Therefore Crompton ſays, that a Selion of Land cannot be in demand, becauſe it is a thing uncertain. Cromp. Juriſd. 221.

SEME, Saxon, ſeam, i. e. onus.] A horſe-load or eight buſhels of corn. Blount. A Seme of glaſs is twenty-four ſtone, each ſtone five pounds weight.

SEMEBOLE, A pipe or half a ton of wine. Merch. Dict.

SEMINARIES, Popiſh; See Papiſt; Præmunire.

SENAGE, Senagium, from ſenatus, ſometimes uſed for ſynod.] Money paid for ſynodals.

SENATOR, Lat.] A Member of Parliament. In the Laws of King Edward the Confeſſor, we are told, that the Britons called thoſe Senators whom the Saxons afterwards termed aldermen, and borough-maſters; though not for their age, but their wiſdom; for ſome of them were young men, but very well ſkilled in the Laws. Kenulph, King of the Mercians, granted a charter, which ran thus, viz. Conſilio & conſenſu epiſcoporum & Senatorum gentis ſuæ largitus fuit dicto monaſterio, &c. Staundf. P. C. cap. 18.

SENDAL, A kind of thin fine ſilk, mentioned in the ſtat. 2 R. 2. c. 1.

SENESCHAL, Seneſchallus, from the Germ. Scin, a houſe or place, and Schale, an officer.] A ſteward; and ſignifies one who hath the diſpenſing of juſtice, in ſome particular caſes: As the High Seneſchal, or Steward of England; Seneſchal de la Hotel de Roy, Steward of the King's Houſehold; Seneſchal, or Steward of Courts, &c. Co. Litt. 61: Croke's Juriſd. 102: Kitch. 83. See Steward.

SENESCHALLO ET MARESHALLO QUOD NON TENEANT PLACITA DE LIBERO TENEMENTO; A writ directed to the Steward, and Marſhal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their Court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185, 191.

SENEUCIA, Widowhood. If a widow, having dower after the death of her huſband ſhall marry, vel filium, vel filiam in ſeneuciâ peperit, ſhe ſhall forfeit and loſe her dower in what place ſoever, in Kent. Tenen. in Gavelkind. Plac. Trin. 17 E. 3.

SENEY-DAYS, Play-days, or times of pleaſure and diverſion. Regiſt. Eccl. Ebor. anno 1562.

SENNA, Is among the drugs liable to a duty on importation. See title Navigation Acts.

SEPARIA, ſeparaia.] Several, or ſevered and divided from other ground. Paroch. Antiq. 336.

SEPARATION, ſeparatio.] Is the living aſunder of man and wife. See titles Baron and Feme; Divorce.

SEPTENNIAL ELECTIONS; See Parliament VIII.

SEPTUAGESIMA, The third Sunday before Quadrageſima Sunday in Lent. It is called Septuageſima, becauſe it is about the ſeventieth day before Eaſter; as Sexageſima and Quinquageſima, are thus denominated from their being, the one about ſixty, and the other about fifty days before the ſame feaſt; which are all of them days appropriated by the church to acts of penance and mortification, preparatory to the devotion of Lent. From Septuageſima Sunday until the Octaves after Eaſter, the ſolemnizing of marriage is forbidden by the Canon Law; and the Laws of King Canutus ordained a vacancy from Judicature, from Septuageſima to Quindena Paſchæ. See ſtat. Weſtm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 51.

SEPTUAGINT, The ſeventy interpreters of the Bible: who were in truth ſeventy-two, viz. ſix for every one of the twelve tribes. Lat. Dict.

SEPTUM, An encloſure; ſo called, becauſe it is encompaſſed cum ſepe & foſſa, with a hedge and a ditch, at leaſt with a hedge; and it ſignifies any place paled in.

SEPULCHRE, ſepulchrum.] The place where any body lies buried; but a monument is ſet up for the memorial of the deceaſed, though the corpſe lie not there. Cowell.

SEPULTURA, An offering made to the prieſt for the burial of a dead body. Domeſd. See Mortuary.

SEQUATUR SUB SUO PERICULO, A writ that lies where a ſummons ad warrantizand' is awarded, and the Sheriff returns that the party hath nothing whereby he may be ſummoned; then goes forth an alias and a pluries, and if he come not in on the pluries, this writ ſhall iſſue. Old Nat. Br. 163.

SEQUELA CAUSÆ, The proceſs and depending iſſue of a cauſe for trial.

SEQUELA CURIÆ, Suit of Court. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 253.

SEQUELA MOLENDINI; Vide Secta ad Molendinum.

SEQUELA VILLANORUM, The retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the abſolute diſpoſal of the Lord. In former times, when any Lord ſold his villein, it was ſaid dedi B. nativum meum cum tota ſequelâ ſuâ; which included all the villein's offſpring. Paroch Antiq. 216, 288.

SEQUENDUM; ET PROSEQUENDUM, To follow a cauſe; as where a guardian is admitted ad proſequend' for an infant, &c. 1 Vent. 74.

SEQUESTER, ſequeſtrare.] A term uſed in the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Law for renouncing; as when a widow comes into Court, and diſclaims having any thing to do, or to intermeddle with her huſband's eſtate who is deceaſed, ſhe is ſaid to ſequeſter. Now, more uſually, to renounce. See title Executor.

SEQUESTRATION,

SEQUESTRATIO.] Signifies the ſeparating or ſetting aſide of a thing in controverſy, from the poſſeſſion of both the parties that contend for it; and it is two-fold, voluntary and neceſſary; voluntary, is that which is done by conſent of each party; neceſſary, is what the Judge of his authority doth, whether the party will or not. Forteſcue, c. 50: Dyer 232, 256.

There is alſo a Sequeſtration, in the nature of a diſtreſs infinite, on a perſon's ſtanding out all the proceſſes of contempt for non-appearance in Chancery, upon a bill exhibited; ſo, where obedience is not yielded to a decree, the Court will grant a Sequeſtration of the lands of the party, &c.

A Sequeſtration is alſo a kind of execution for debt: eſpecially in the caſe of a beneficed clerk, of the profits of the benefice, to be paid over to him that hath the judgjudgment, till the debt is satisfied. 2 Inst. 472: 2 Rol. Abr. 471. See title Execution; Introductory part, Div. 3. But the most usual Sequestration of a benefice is upon a vacancy, for the gathering up the fruits of the benefice to the use of the next incumbent: The profits of the church, being in abeyance, are to be received by the Churchwardens by appointment of the Bishop, to make provision for the cure during the vacancy, &c. Stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 11.

Sequestration is also the act of the Ordinary, disposing of the goods of one that is dead, whose estate no man will meddle with. See Kennet's Glossary in v. Sequestrare.

Sequestration in the Court of Chancery is a commission usually directed to seven persons therein named, and empowering them to seize the defendant's real and personal estate into their hands, (or it may be some particular part or parcel of his lands,) and to receive and sequester the rents and profits thereof, until the defendant shall have answered the plaintiff's bill, or performed some other matter which has been ordered and enjoined him by the Court, for not doing whereof he is in contempt. Curs Canc. 89.

If upon a Commission of Rebellion (see that title) a non est inventus is returned, the Court of Chancery sends a Serjeant at Arms in quest of the defendant; and if he eludes the search of the Serjeant, a Sequestration issues. 3 Comm. c. 27.

It appears that there were great struggles between the Common Law Courts and Courts of Equity, before this process came to be established; the former holding that a Court of Conscience could only give remedy in personam, and not in rem; that Sequestrators were trespassers, against whom an action lay; and in the case of Colston v. Gardiner, the Chancellor cites a case, where they ruled, that if a man killed a Sequestrator in the execution of such process, it was no murder. Cro. Eliz. 651: Brograve v. Watts: 1 Mod. 259.

But these were such bloody and desperate resolutions, and so much against common justice and honesty, which requires that the decrees of this Court, which preserved men from deceit, should not be rendered illusory, that they could not long stand; but this process got the better of these resolutions on this ground; 1st, That the extraordinary jurisdiction might punish contempts by the loss of estate as well as the imprisonment of the person, because that liberty being a greater benefit than property, if they had a power to commit the person, they might take from him his estate till he had answered his contempts. 2dly, To say that a Court should have power to decree about things, and yet should have no jurisdiction in rem, is a perfect solecism in the constitution of the Court itself. 2 P. Wms. 621: 2 Ch. Ca. 44.

And see 2 Mod. 258, that the Chancellor having issued such Sequestration, it will be as binding as any other process, according to the rules of the Common Law. 2 Chanc. Ca 44.

It has been said, that the first instance of a Sequestration, after a decree, was Sir Thomas Read's case in Lord Coventry's time; and that it was afterwards awarded in Chancery, in the case of Hyde v. Pitt, 1666, and affirmed in Parliament: And by the Court of Exchequer, Graves v. Fountaine, 1687, and since, without scruple. The doubt formerly was, that lands were not liable to execution before the statute Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. st. 1. c. 18: 1 Ch. Ca. 92: 2 Ch. Ca. 44.

Sequestrations were first introduced (according to the Commentaries) by Sir Nic. Bacon, Lord Keeper, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; before which the Court found some difficulty in enforcing its process and decrees. See 1 Vern. 421, 423. After an order for a Sequestration issued, the plaintiff's bill is to be taken pro confesso, and a decree to be made accordingly; so that this Sequestration does not seem to be in the nature of process to bring in the defendant, but only intended to enforce the performance of the decree. 3 Comm. 444.

I. In what Cases a Sequestration is to be awarded; by the Court of Chancery.

II. The Power and Duty of the Sequestrators; and when a Sequestration is determined.

I. A SEQUESTRATION nisi is the first process against a Peer or Member of the House of Commons. 2 P. Wms. 385: 1 Ch. Ca. 61, 138. A Sequestration is also the first process against the menial servant of a Peer, within the words and meaning of the statute 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 3; for that otherwise such servant would have greater privilege than his Lord. 1 P. Wms. 535. If there be a Sequestration nisi against a Peer for want of an answer, and the Peer puts in an answer, that is insufficient; yet the order for a Sequestration shall not be absolute, but a new Sequestration nisi. 2 P. Wms. 385. See this Dict. title Privilege III.

Notwithstanding the superintendant power formerly possessed by the Courts in this kingdom over those in Ireland, and what is said in some of our books, it seems to have always been the better opinion, that the Court of Chancery here could not award a Sequestration against lands in Ireland. 1 Vern. 76: 2 Ch. Ca. 189: 2 P. Wms. 261.

It was said, that such process had been awarded to the Governor of North Carolina; but herein it was doubted whether such Sequestration should not be directed by the King's Council, to which alone an appeal lies from the decrees in the Plantations. 2 P. Wms. 261.

Copyholds may be sequestered, though not extendible at Common Law, or under the statute of Westm. 2, for Courts of Equity have potestatem extraordin' & absolutam; but it seems a doubt whether such a Sequestration can be revived against the heir of a copyholder; which arises from the difficulty of obliging the Lord to admit, and depriving the Lord of his fine, &c. upon the death of his tenant. 2 Ch. Ca. 46. Vide 1 Barn. C. 431.

A Sequestration out of Chancery is more effectual than an execution by fieri facias at Law, for a Sequestration may lie against the goods, though the party is in custody upon the attachment; whereas in Law, if a capias ad satisfaciendum is executed, there can be no fi. fa. issue. Cases in Lord Talbot's Time, 222.

Where the Sequestrators seize the real estate of the party, any tenant or other person who claims title to the estate, so sequestered, either by mortgage, judgment, lease, or otherwise, who hath a title paramount to the Sequestration, shall not be obliged to bring a bill to contest such a title; but he shall be let in to contest such a title in a summary way. He may move by his counsel, as of course, to be examined pro interesse suo; and in this case the plaintiff is to exhibit interrogatories, in order to examine him for a discovery of his title to the estate,

eſtate, and he muſt be examined upon ſuch Interrogatories accordingly; and the Maſter muſt ſtate the matter to the Court; and the parties may enter into proof touching the title to the eſtate in queſtion; and when the Maſter hath ſtated the whole matter, the Court proceeds to give judgment therein upon the report; and if it appears that the party who is examined pro intereſſe ſuo hath a plain title to the eſtate, and is not affected with the Sequeſtration, then it is to be diſcharged as againſt him, with or without coſts, as the Court ſhall determine upon the circumſtances of the caſe, and ſo vice verſa. See Com. 712: 1 P. Wms. 308.

The Sequeſtration binds from the time of awarding the commiſſion, and not only from the time of executing it and its being laid on by the Commiſſioners; for if that ſhould be admitted, then the inferior officer would have ligandi & non ligandi poteſtatem. 1 Vern. 58.

II. The Sequeſtrators are officers of the Court, and as ſuch are amenable to the Court, and are to act from time to time in the execution of their office as the Court ſhall direct; they are to account for what comes to their hands, and are to bring the money into Court as the Court ſhall direct, to be put out at intereſt, or otherwiſe, as ſhall be found neceſſary; but this money is not uſually paid to the plaintiff, but is to remain in Court until the defendant hath appeared or anſwered, and cleared his contempt, and then whatſoever hath been ſeized ſhall be accounted for and paid over to him; however, the Court hath the whole under their power, and may do therein as they pleaſe, and as ſhall be moſt agreeable to the juſtice and equity of the caſe. Dict.

The plaintiff's Counſel may move and obtain an order for tenants to attorn and pay their rents to the Sequeſtrators, or for the Sequeſtrators to ſell and diſpoſe of the goods of the party, and to keep the money in their hands, or to bring it into Court, as ſhall be moſt adviſable and diſcretionary, and fitting for the Court to do. Dict.

Sequeſtrators on meſne proceſs are accountable for all the profits, and can retain only ſo far as to ſatisfy for contempt. 1 Vern. 248.

If Sequeſtrators, having power to ſell timber, diſpoſe of 7000*l* worth, and only bring 2000*l* to account, they, as officers and agents of the Court, are reſponſible, and not the plaintiff. 1 Vern. 161.

A Sequeſtration is in nature of a levari at Common Law, and the party ſequeſtering has neither jus in rem, vel in re; the legal eſtate of the premiſes remaining in every reſpect as before. 1 P. Wms. 307.

Sequeſtrators being in poſſeſſion of a great houſe in St. James's Square, which was the defendant's for life, the Court ordered that the Maſter allow a tenant for the houſe, and the Sequeſtrators to make a leaſe, and the tenant to enjoy. 3 Ch. Rep. 87.

It was moved, that the irregularity of a Sequeſtration might be referred to the deputy, which was taken out againſt the defendant for not appearing, by reaſon of its being taken out ſooner than by the courſe of the Court it could, and yet the Sequeſtrators had taken the goods off the premiſes, and threatened to ſell them; the Chief Baron ſaid, that as to the carrying the goods off the premiſes, it was clear the Sequeſtrators could do that, becauſe a Sequeſtration upon meſne proceſs anſwers to a diſtringas at Law; but, however, as to ſelling them, the Court agreed in the preſent caſe it could not be lawful, and ſaid it had lately been ſettled on debate; and obſerved further, that Courts of Equity could not authoriſe Sequeſtrators to ſell goods, even upon a decree, until Lord Stamford's caſe, which makes decrees in this reſpect equivalent to a judgment; and even now, the Counſel ſaid, Sequeſtrators cannot ſell but by leave of the Court; however, the Court ſaid this was a matter proper for them to conſider upon another occaſion, and therefore only referred the irregularity of the Sequeſtration as to the point of time to the deputy. 1 Barn. Rep. in Scacc 212.

A Sequeſtration that iſſues as a meſne proceſs of the Court will be diſcontinued and determined by the death of the party; but where a Sequeſtration iſſues in purſuance of a decree, and to compel the execution of it, there, though the ſame be for a perſonal duty, it ſhall not be determined by the death of the party. 1 Vern. 58.

A Sequeſtration was againſt the father, who appeared to be only a tenant for life, and on his death the Sequeſtration was diſcharged. 1 Ch. Ca. 241: 2 Ch. Ca. 46.

Sequestration, in London; Is made upon an action of debt; and the courſe of proceeding in it is thus: The action being entered, the officer goes to the ſhop or warehouſe of the defendant, when there is no body within, and takes a padlock and hangs it upon the door, &c. uſing theſe words, viz. "I do ſequeſter this warehouſe, and the goods and merchandizes therein of the defendant in the action, to the uſe of the plaintiff," &c. and ſo puts on his ſeal, and makes return thereof at the Compter; then four Court-days being paſt, the next Court after, the plaintiff may have judgment to open the doors of the ſhop or warehouſe, and to appraiſe the goods therein by a Serjeant, who takes a bill of appraiſement, having two freemen to appraiſe them, for which they are to be ſworn at the next Court holden for that Compter; and then the officer puts his hand to the bill of appraiſement, and the Court giveth judgment: Though the defendant in the action may put in bail before ſatisfaction, and ſo diſſolve the Sequeſtration; and after ſatisfaction, may put in bail ad diſproband' debitum, &c. Pract. Solic. 429.

SEQUESTRO HABENDO, A writ judicial for the diſcharging a Sequeſtration of the profits of a church benefice granted by the Biſhop at the King's command, thereby to compel the parſon to appear at the ſuit of another; upon his appearance, the parſon may have this writ for the releaſe of the Sequeſtration. Reg. Judic. 36. See titles Sequeſtration; Execution.

SEREMENT, Fr.] An oath. See Oath.

SERJEANT, or SERGEANT, Lat. Serviens.] A word diverſely uſed in our Law, and applied to ſundry offices and callings. Firſt, a Serjeant at Law, (Serviens ad legem,) otherwiſe called Serjeant Counter, or of the Coif, is the higheſt degree in the Common Law, as a Doctor is in the Civil Law; but, according to Spelman, a Doctor of Law is ſuperior to a Serjeant, for the very name of a Doctor is magiſterial, but that of a Serjeant is only miniſterial. To theſe Serjeants, as men beſt learned and experienced in the law and practice of the Courts, one Court is ſevered to plead in, by themſelves, which is that of the Common Pleas, where the Common Law of England is moſt ſtrictly obſerved; yet they are not so limited as to be restrained from pleading in any other Court, where the Judges call them brothers, and hear them with great respect; and of which one or more are styled the King's Serjeants, being commonly chosen out of the rest, in respect of their great learning, to plead for the King in all his causes, especially upon indictments for treason, &c. In other kingdoms the King's Serjeant is called Advocatus Regis: and here in England, in the time of King Edward the Sixth, Serjeant Benloe wrote himself solus serviens ad legem, there being for some time none but himself; and in Ireland at this day there is only a King's Serjeant. Serjeants at Law are made by the King's writ, directed unto such as are called, commanding them to take upon them that degree by a certain day; and by the writ or patent of creation it appears, that the honour of Serjeant at Law is a state and dignity of great respect: In confering these degrees, much ceremony was anciently used; and the Serjeants now make presents to the Judges, &c. of gold rings to a considerable value, &c. Fortescue, c. 50: 3 Cro. 1: Dyer 72: 2 Inst. 213, 214. As to their privilege of being impleaded in C. B. &c. see Privilege.

In old times, it was necessary that Serjeants should have been Barristers for sixteen years previously to their being called to be Serjeants, but it seems that no precise time is now necessary to qualify them. Serjeants at Law are bound by a solemn oath to do their duty to their clients. 2 Inst. 214. And by custom, the Judges of the Courts of Westminster are always admitted into this venerable order before they are advanced to the Bench; the original of which was probably to qualify the puisnè Barons of the Exchequer to become Justices of Assise according to the exigence of the statute, 14 E. 3. c. 16: 3 Comm. 27: and see titles Barrister; Precedence.

Serjeants at Arms. Their office is to attend the person of the King; to arrest persons of condition offending, and give attendance on the Lord High Steward of England, sitting in judgment on any traitor, &c. There may not be above thirty Serjeants at Arms in the realm, who shall not oppress the people, on pain to lose their offices, and be fined. Stat. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 6. Two of these, by the King's allowance, do attend on the two Houses of Parliament; the office of him in the House of Commons is, the keeping of the doors, and the execution of such commands touching the apprehension and taking into custody of any offender, as that House shall enjoin him. Another of them attends on the Lord Chancellor in the Chancery; and one on the Lord Treasurer of England. Also one upon the Lord Mayor of London on extraordinary solemnities, &c. They are in the old books called Virgatories, because they carried silver rods gilt with gold, as they now do maces, before the King. Crompt. Jur. 9: Fleta, lib. 2. c. 38.

Serjeants, of a more inferior kind, Are Serjeants of the Mace, whereof there is a great band in the city of London, and other corporate towns, that attend the Mayor, or other head officer, chiefly for matters of justice, &c. Kitch. 143. Formerly all the Justices in Eyre had certain officers attending them called Serjeants, who were in the nature of tip-staves. See stat. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 30. And the word Serjeant is used in Britton for an officer belonging to the county; which is the same with what Bracton calls Serjeant of the Hundred, being no more than bailiff of the hundred. Bract. lib. 5. c. 4. And we read of Serjeants of Manors, of the Peace, &c.

Serjeants of the Household, Officers who execute several functions within the King's Household, mentioned in the statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 12.

SERJEANTY, serjeantia] A service that cannot be due from a tenant to any Lord but to the King only; and this is either Grand Serjeanty, or Petit; the first is a tenure whereby one holds his lands of the King by such services as he ought to do in person to the King at his coronation; and may also concern matters military, or services of honour in peace, as to be the King's butler, carver, &c. Petit Serjeanty, is where a man holds lands of the King, to furnish him yearly with some small thing towards his wars; and in effect payable as rent. Though all tenures are turned into socage by stat 12 Car. 2. c. 24, yet the honorary services of Grand Serjeanty still remain, being therein excepted. Lit. § 153, 159: 1 Inst. 105, 108.

Knight-Service proper, (see title Tenures III. 2;) consisted in attending the King in his wars. There were also some other species of Knight service, so called, though improperly, because the service or render was of a free and honourable nature, and equally uncertain as to the time of rendering as that of Knight-service proper; and because they were attended with similar fruits and consequences. Such was the tenure by Grand Serjeanty, per magnum servitium; whereby the tenant was bound, instead of serving the King generally in his wars, to do some special honorary service to the King in person; as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like: or to be his butler, champion, or other officer, at his coronation. Litt. § 153. It was in most other respects like Knight-service, only he was not bound to pay aid or escuage; and when tenant by Knight-service paid 5*l.* for a relief on every Knight's fee, tenant by Grand Serjeanty, paid one year's value of his land were it much or little. Litt. § 154, 158: 2 Inst. 233. Tenure by cornage, which was to wind a horn, when the Scots or other enemies entered the land, in order to warn the King's Subjects, was (like other services of the same nature) a species of Grand Serjeanty. Litt. § 156. See 2 Comm. c. 5.

Generally the service of Grand Serjeanty was of such a kind as necessarily to be within the realm: but some services which amount to Grand Serjeanty might be due out of the realm as well as within; and both Littleton and Coke give instances of such reservations. See 1 Inst. 105, b. to 108, b.; and the notes there.

Petit Serjeanty, bears a great resemblance to Grand Serjeanty; for as that is a personal service, so this is a rent or render, both tending to some purpose relative to the King's person. Petit Serjeanty, as defined by Littleton, consists in holding lands of the King, by the service of rendering to him annually some small implement of war as a bow, a sword, a lance, an arrow, or the like. Litt. § 159. This, he says, (§ 160,) is but socage in effect, for it is no personal service but a certain rent; and it may be added, (says Blackstone,) it is clearly no predial service, or service [illegible] liberum et commune socagium [illegible] it is by way of eminence [illegible] with the title of parvum servitium regis, or petit serjeanty. And Magna Carta respected it in this light, when, by c. 27, [illegible] acted that no wardship of the lands or body should be claimed by the King, in virtue of a tenure by Petit Serjeanty. 2 Comm. c. 6. p. 81, 82.

See further, titles Tenures; Socage.

SERMONIUM, Was an interlude or historical play, acted by the inferior orders of the clergy, assisted by youths, in the body of the church, suitable to the solemnity of some high procession day; and before the improvements of the stage, these ruder sorts of performances were even a part of the unreformed religion. Collect. Matt. Hutton, Ex. Reg. Eccl. Lincoln, MS.

SERPLES, A mantle or upper coat; from the Lat. superpellicium. Blount.

SERVAGE. Mentioned in stat. 1 Rich. 2. c. 6.] That is, when each tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, finds one or more workmen for his lord's service. See Service. King John brought the Crown of England in Servage to the See of Rome. 2 Inst. 174.

SERVANTS,

PERSONS employed by men of trades and professions, under them, to assist them in their particular callings; or such persons as others retain to perform the work and business of their families, which comprehends both men and women: And Servants are menial, or not so; menial, being domesticks living within the walls of the house. Wood's Inst. 51.

The first sort of Servants acknowledged by the laws of England, (to which Slaves are unknown; see that title;) are menial Servants; so called from their being intrà mœnia or Domesticks.—The contract between them and their masters arises upon the hiring; if the hiring be general, without any particular time limited, the Law construes it to be a hiring for a year; upon a principle of natural equity, that the Servant shall serve, and the master maintain him, throughout all the revolutions of the respective seasons; as well when there is work to be done, as when there is not: But the contract may be made for any longer or shorter period. 1 Comm. 425: See Poor IV. 8.

All single men between twelve years old and sixty, and married ones under thirty years of age, and all single women between twelve and forty, not having any visible livelihood, are compellable, by two Justices, to go out to service in husbandry, or certain specific trades, for the promotion of honest industry: And no master can put away his Servant, or Servant leave his master, after being so retained, either before or at the end of his term, without a quarter's warning, unless upon reasonable cause, to be allowed by a Justice of the peace: But they may part by consent, or make a special bargain. See the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4; from which the following are extracts.

Every person under the age of thirty years, that has been brought up in handicraft trades, and hath not lands of inheritance, or for life, of the yearly value of forty shillings, or is not worth ten pounds in goods, and so allowed by two Justices of peace; and not being retained with any person in husbandry, or in the said arts, not being lawfully hired as a Servant with any nobleman or gentleman, or having any farm or other holding whereupon he may employ his labour; shall, upon request made by any person using the mystery wherein such person hath been exercised, be obliged to serve him as a Servant therein, on pain of imprisonment.

By the same statute, persons are compellable to serve in husbandry, by the year, with any person that keepeth or useth husbandry, and who will require any proper person to serve; and the Justices of peace have authority herein, and to assess the wages of such Servants in husbandry, order payment, &c. Also two Justices, and Mayors or head officers of any city or town, may appoint any poor woman of the age of twelve years, and under forty, unmarried, to go to service by the year, &c. for such wages and in such manner as they think fit; and if any such woman shall refuse to go abroad as a Servant, then the said Justices, &c. may commit such woman until she is bound to service. If any master shall give more wages than assessed by the Justices; or any Servant takes more, or refuses to serve for the statute wages, they are punishable; but a master may reward his Servant as he pleases, so as it be not by way of contract on the retainer: And a master cannot put away a Servant, nor a Servant depart before the end of his term, without some reasonable cause, to be allowed by one Justice; nor after the end of the term, without a quarter's warning given before witnesses; if a master discharges a Servant otherwise, he is liable to a penalty of forty shillings: And where Servants quit their service, testimonials are to be given by two constables and two householders, &c. declaring their lawful departure; and a Servant not producing such a testimonial to the constable where he designs to dwell, is to be imprisoned till he gets one; and in default thereof, be whipped as a vagabond; masters retaining them without such a testimonial, shall forfeit five pounds. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.: And see title Labourers.

It is not settled whether Justices of peace have jurisdiction over any Servants, except those who are employed in husbandry. The title of the statute is "An Act containing divers Orders for Artificers, Labourers, Servants of Husbandry, and Apprentices." But as some of the clauses in the Act speak expresly of Servants of husbandry, and others of Servants generally, it is reasonable to conclude, that the Legislature meant to extend the jurisdiction to all Servants, where they did not expresly confine it to Servants of husbandry: And as this is supported by the practice of the Justices, and by general convenience, it seems certain that the Courts of Westminster-Hall would determine in favour of the general jurisdiction, if a case were brought to them. Cald. 14.

Servants of another sort are called Apprentices, as to whom, see this Dictionary under that title.

A third species of Servants are Labourers, who are only hired by the day or the week, and do not live intrà mœnia as part of the family; concerning whom the statutes have made many very good regulations. 1. Directing that all persons who have no visible effects may be compelled to work: 2. Defining how long they must continue at work in summer and in winter: 3. Punishing such as leave or desert their work: 4. Empowering the Justices at Sessions, or the Sheriff of the county, to settle their wages: and 5. Inflicting penalties on such as either give, or exact, more wages than are so settled. 1 Comm. c. 14. See title Labourers.

There is yet a fourth species of Servants, if they may be so called, being rather in a superior, a ministerial, capacity; capacity; such as Stewards, Factors, and Bailiffs; whom however the Law considers as Servants pro tempore, with regard to such of their acts as affect their master's or employer's property. This leads to the consideration of the manner in which this relation, of service, affects either the master or Servant. And, first, by hiring and service for a year, or apprenticeship under indentures, a person gains a settlement in that parish wherein he last served forty days. See title Poor IV.—In the next place persons, serving seven years as apprentices to any trade, have, by stat. 5 Eliz. c 4. § 31, an exclusive right to exercise that trade in any part of England This Law, with regard to the exclusive part of it, has by turns been looked upon as a hard Law, or as a beneficial one, according to the prevailing humour of the times; which has occasioned a great variety of resolutions in the Courts of Law concerning it; and attempts have been frequently made for its repeal, though hitherto without success. At Common Law every man might use what trade he pleased; but this statute restrains that liberty to such as have served as apprentices: the adversaries to which provision say, that all restrictions (which tend to introduce monopolies) are pernicious to trade; the advocates for it allege, that unskilfulness in trades is equally detrimental to the public, as monopolies. This reason indeed only extends to such trades, in the exercise whereof skill is required: but another of their arguments goes much farther; viz. that apprenticeships are useful to the Commonwealth, by employing of youth, and learning them to be early industrious; but that no one would be induced to undergo a seven years' servitude, if others, though equally skilful, were allowed the same advantages without having undergone the same discipline: and in this there seems to be much reason. However, the resolutions of the Courts have in general rather confined than extended the restriction. No trades are held to be within the statute, but such as were in being at the making of it: For, trading in a country village, apprenticeships are not requisite: And following the trade seven years without any effectual prosecution (either as a master or a Servant) is sufficient, without an actual apprenticeship. 1 Comm. 428. See title Apprentice III.

A master may by Law correct his apprentice for negligence or other misbehaviour, so it be done with moderation: Though if the master or master's wife beats any other Servant of full age, it is good cause of departure; or at least of complaint to a Magistrate, in order to be discharged. But if any Servant, workman, or labourer assaults his master or dame, he shall suffer one year's imprisonment, and other open corporal punishment, not extending to life or limb. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

By service, all Servants and labourers, except apprentices, become entitled to wages; According to their agreement, if menial Servants; or, according to the appointment of the Sheriff or Sessions, if labourers or Servants in husbandry: for the statutes for regulation of wages, in strictness, seem to extend to such Servants only; and the reason given is, that it is impossible for any Magistrate to be a Judge of the employment of menial Servants, or of course to assess their wages. But it is the practice of Justices in disputed cases to assess the wages of all Servants; a practice which probably may be supported under stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. See 1 Comm. 428, n. and ante.

Next as to frauds or robberies committed by Servants on their masters.

Where a Servant damages goods of his master, action lies against him; and being employed to sell goods in his master's shop, if the Servant carries away and converts them to his own use, action of trespass may be brought by the master against the Servant; for the Servant cannot meddle with them in any other manner than to sell them. 5 Rep. 14: 1 Leon 88: Moor 244: But if a Servant be robbed, without his default, &c. he shall be excused, and allowed it in his account. 1 Inst. 9.

Servants being of the age of 18, and not apprentices, going or making away with, embezzling or purloining any of their master's goods, to the value of 40*s.* are guilty of felony, by the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 7.

By the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 17, Clergy was taken away in this case, if the indictment were laid specially upon the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 7; and pursuant to the same, and by the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 2, this stat. of 21 H. 8. c. 7, was made perpetual; but by the stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12, these acts were both repealed: But again, by the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 10, this stat. 21 H. 8. c. 7, was re-enacted and revived; but it did not revive the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 7, for taking away clergy. The statute 12 Ann. st 1. c. 7, however, takes away the benefit of clergy from persons stealing in a dwelling house or out-house to the value of 40*s.* unless committed against their masters by apprentices under the age of 15. See title Larceny II. 1. and 1 Hawk. P. C c. 33. § 16.

The statute 21 H. 8. c. 7, extends only to such as were Servants to the owner of the goods, both at the time they were delivered, and also at the time when they were stolen. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 12.

Therefore a receiver, who having received his master's rents, runs away with them, or a Servant, who being intrusted to sell goods, or receive money due on a bond sells the goods, &c. and departs with the money, is not within the statute. A Servant who receives his master's goods from another Servant to keep for the master, is as much guilty as if he had received them from the master's own hands; because such delivery is looked upon as a delivery by the master. Dyer 5. p. 2, 3: 3 Inst. 105: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 13.

By the Common Law it was not larceny in any Servant to run away with the goods committed him to keep, but only a breach of civil trust. 4 Comm. c. 17. p 230. But if the Servant had not the possession, but only the care and oversight of the goods, as the butler of the plate, the shepherd of the sheep, and the like, the embezzling of them was felony, even at the Common Law. 1 Hal. P. C. 506. And it seems, that now the Judges, in every case, determine that the property of the master, delivered by him into the custody of the Servant, still remains in the possession of the master; and if it is embezzled by the Servant, or converted to his use, he is guilty of felony. And when Servants are convicted of robbing their masters, as the security of families so much depends on their honesty, and as the violation of the confidence reposed in them is a high aggravation of the crime, they are always punished with the utmost rigour, which the Law admits. 4 Comm. c. 17. p. 230, n.

By stat. 33 H. 6. c. 1, the Servants of persons deceased, accused of embezzling their master's goods, may by writ out of Chancery, (issued by the advice of the Chief Justices and Chief Baron, or any two of them,) and proclamation made thereupon, be summoned to appear personally in the Court of K. B. to answer their master's executors in any civil suit for such goods, and shall on default of appearance be attainted of felony. 4 Comm. 230.

Justices

Lastly, we come to consider how Strangers may be affected by this relation of master and Servant: Or, how a master may behave towards others on behalf of his Servant; and what a Servant may do on behalf of his master.

And, first, the master may maintain, that is, abet and assist, his Servant in any action at Law against a stranger: whereas, in general, it is an offence against public justice to encourage suits and animosities, by helping to bear the expence of them, and is called in Law maintenance. 2 Roll. Abr. 115. A master may also bring an action against any man for beating, confining, or disabling his Servant: but in such case he must assign, as a special reason for so doing, his own damage by the loss of his service; and this loss must be proved upon the trial. 9 Rep. 113.

This is an action on the case, generally called a per quod servitium amisit; and the Servant may also maintain his action of battery or imprisonment against the aggressor. See 1 Comm. 429: 3 Comm. 142.

This action by a master for assault, &c. on his Servant, has been contrived, by a species of fiction, to be extended to a parent, to enable him to recover a pecuniary compensation, under some circumstances, for the seduction of his daughter. See 3 Comm. 142, n.

A master likewise may justify an assault in defence of his Servant, and a Servant in defence of his master: the master, because he has an interest in his Servant, not to be deprived of his service; the Servant, because it is part of his duty, for which he receives his wages, to stand by and defend his master. 2 Rol. Abr. 546.

Also if any person do hire or retain my Servant, being in my service, for which the Servant departeth from me and goeth to serve the other, I may have an action for damages against both the new master and the Servant, or either of them: But if the new master did not know that he is my Servant, no action lies; unless he afterwards refuse to restore him upon information and demand. F. N. B. 167, 168: Winch. 51.

In case an action is brought for enticing away, or retaining or employing a Servant, it is advisable to give notice to the intended defendant, that the party is servant to the plaintiff, and to demand him; and proving such notice and a subsequent employment during the time for which the plaintiff hired, retained, took, and engaged the Servant, will entitle the plaintiff to a verdict. To this proof must be added proof of the contract between the plaintiff and the Servant, and that the time was not expired. But if a man do retain another's Servant, not knowing that he was in the service of the other, he shall not be punished for so doing, if he do not retain him after notice of his first service: And if a person do retain one to serve him forty days, and another doth afterwards retain him to serve for a year, the first covenant is avoided, because the retainer was not according to the statute. New Nat. Br. 374, 375.

But there are many cases, where Servants may be retained for a longer or shorter term than a year, not within the above statute, in which cases, enticing away or retaining after notice of such Servants, will subject the offender to an action. Dict.

The reason and foundation upon which all this doctrine is built, seem to be the property that every man has in the service of his domesticks; acquired by the contract of hiring, and purchased by giving them wages. 1 Comm. 429.

As for those things which a servant may do on behalf of his master, they seem all to proceed upon this principle, that the master is answerable for the act of his Servant, if done by his command, either expresly given or implied; nam qui facit per alium, facit per se. 4 Inst. 109. Therefore, if the Servant commit a trespass by the command or encouragement of his master, the master shall be guilty of it; though the Servant is not thereby excused, for he is only to obey his master in matters that are honest and lawful. If an innkeeper's Servants rob his guests, the master is bound to restitution; for as there is a confidence reposed in him, that he will take care to provide honest Servants, his negligence is a kind of implied consent to the robbery; nam qui non prohibet, cum prohibere possit, jubet. See title Inns. So likewise, if the drawer at a tavern sells a man bad wine, whereby his health is injured, he may bring an action against the master; for although the master did not expresly order the Servant to sell it to that person in particular, yet his permitting him to draw and sell it at all, is impliedly a general command. 1 Comm. 430.

In the same manner, whatever a Servant is permitted to do in the usual course of his business, is equivalent to a general command. If I pay money to a banker's Servant, the banker is answerable for it: If I pay it to a clergyman's or a physician's Servant, whose usual business it is not to receive money for his master, and he embezzles it, I must pay it over again. If a steward lets a lease of a farm without the owner's knowledge, the owner must stand to the bargain; for this is the steward's business. A wife, a friend, a relation, that use to transact business for a man, are quoad hoc his Servants, and the principal must answer for their conduct; for the Law implies that they act under a general command; and without such a doctrine as this, no mutual intercourse between man and man could subsist with any tolerable convenience. If I usually deal with a tradesman by myself, or constantly pay him ready money, I am not answerable for what my Servant takes up upon trust; for here is no implied order to the tradesman to trust my Servant; But if I usually send him upon trust, or sometimes on trust and sometimes with ready money, I am answerable for all he takes up; for the tradesman cannot possibly distinguish when he comes by my order, and when upon his own authority. 1 Comm. 430.

If a man has a Servant known to be such, and he send him to fairs and markets to buy or sell, his master shall be charged, if the thing come to his use; though if the Servant makes a contract in his master's name, the contract will not be binding unless it were by the master's command or assent; and where a Servant borrows money in his master's name, without order, that does not bind the master. Doct. & Stud. dial. 2. c. 42. A Servant buys things in his own name, the master shall not be charged, except the things bought come to his use, and he have notice of it. Kitch. 371.

A master

A master used to give his Servant money every Saturday, to defray the charges of the foregoing week, and the Servant kept the money; per Holt, Ch. J. the master is here chargeable; for the master at his peril ought to take care what Servant he employs; and it is more reasonable that he should suffer for the cheats of his Servants, than strangers and tradesmen who do not employ them. 3 Salk. 234. Where a Servant usually buys goods for his master upon tick, and takes up things in his master's name, but for his own use, the master is liable; but it is not so where the master usually gives him ready money. If the master gives the Servant money to buy goods for him, and he converts the money to his own use, and buys the goods upon tick, yet the master is answerable, if the goods come to his use; otherwise he is not. Also a note under the hand of an apprentice shall bind his master, where he is allowed to deliver out notes, though the money is never applied to the master's use; but if he be not allowed or accustomed to deliver out notes, his note shall not bind the master, if the money be not applied to the use of the master. 3 Salk. 234, 235.

The act of a Servant shall not bind the master, unless he acts by authority of his master; and therefore if a master sends his Servant to receive money, and the Servant instead of money takes a bill, and the master as soon as told thereof disagrees, he is not bound by this payment: But acquiescence, or any small matter, will be proof of his master's consent, and that will make the act of the Servant the act of his master. 2 Salk. 442. For what is within the compass of a Servant's business, the master shall be generally chargeable; and also have advantage of the same against others, Noy's Max. An assumpsit of the Servant, by order and appointment of the master, shall bind his master; and a promise to my Servant is good to me. If my bailiff buy cattle to stock my ground, I shall be chargeable in debt for the money; and if he sell corn for me, I may have action in my own name against the buyer. Bro. 24: Godb. 360. If one owe me money, and I send my Servant for it, and he pay it to him, this is a good payment and discharge, though the Servant do not bring the same to me; but if I send him not, it is otherwise. Doct. & Stud 138.

If a Servant is cozened of his master's money, the master may have action on the case against the person that cozened him. 9 Rep. 113. 10 Rep. 130. 1 Roll. Abr. 98.

If a Servant, lastly, by his negligence, does any damage to a stranger, the master shall answer for his neglect; if a smith's Servant lames a horse while he is shoeing him, an action lies against the master, and not against the Servant. But in these cases the damage must be done while he is actually employed in the master's service, otherwise the Servant shall answer for his own misbehaviour. Upon this principle, by the Common Law, if a Servant kept his master's fire negligently, so that his neighbour's house was burned down thereby, an action lay against the master, because this negligence happened in his service; otherwise if the Servant, going along the street with a torch, by negligence set fire to a house; for there he is not in his master's immediate service, and must himself answer the damage personally. But now the Common Law is, in the former case, altered by stat. 6 Ann. c. 31, which ordains that no action shall be maintained against any, in whose house or chamber any fire shall accidentally begin; for their own loss is sufficient punishment for their own or their Servant's carelessness. See title Waste. But if such fire happens through negligence of any Servant, (whose loss is commonly very little,) such Servant shall forfeit 100*l*. to be distributed among the sufferers: and, in default of payment, shall be committed to some workhouse, and there kept to hard labour for eighteen months. See stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78; and this Dictionary, title Fire. A master is also chargeable, if any of his family layeth or casteth any thing out of his house into the street or common highway, to the damage of any individual, or the common nusance of his Majesty's liege people; for the master hath the superintendance and charge of all his household. 1 Comm. 431. See title Nusance.

A master is answerable for the actions and trespasses of his Servant in many cases; but not for trespass of battery, &c. nor in criminal cases, unless done by his command. Noy's Max. 99. And if the master order his Servant to distrain another man's cattle, and after he hath distrained he kills or abuses the distress, the master shall not answer it. Noy 111.

A master sends his Servant with deceitful wares to market, and orders him to sell them, but says not to whom; if he sells them, no action will lie against the master: Though if he had bid the Servant sell them to such a man in particular, and he had done so, the master would be chargeable in an action on the case. 11 Ed. 4: Keeb. 185. Where a carrier's Servant loses things delivered to him, the master must answer it, and action lies against him; and if goods be undertaken to be carried safely for hire, but by negligence are spoiled, it has been held, that whosoever employs another, is answerable for him, and undertakes for his care to all that make use of him. 2 Salk. 440. See title Carrier. If a surgeon undertakes the cure of a person, and, by sending medicines by his Servant, the wound is hurt and made worse, the patient shall have action against the master, and not against the Servant. 18 Hen. 8.

In all the cases here put, the master may be frequently a loser by the trust reposed in his Servant, but never can be a gainer; he may frequently be answerable for his Servant's misbehaviour, but never can shelter himself from punishment, by laying the blame on his agent. The reason of this is still uniform and the same; that the wrong done by the Servant is looked upon in law as the wrong of the master himself; and it is a standing maxim, that no man shall be allowed to make any advantage of his own wrong. 1 Comm. 432.

The Law which obliges masters to answer for the negligence and misconduct of their Servants, though oftentimes apparently severe on an innocent person, is founded upon principles of public policy; in order to induce masters to be careful in the choice of their Servants, upon whom both their own security and that of others so greatly depends. And to prevent masters from being imposed upon in the characters of their Servants, it is enacted by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 56, that if any person shall give a false character of a Servant, or a false account of his former service; or if any Servant shall give such false account, or shall bring a false character, or shall alter a certificate of a character, he shall, upon conviction before a Justice of the peace, forfeit 20*l*. with 10*s*. costs. The informer is a competent witnefs; but if any Servant will inform againft an accomplice, he fhall be acquitted.

An action was tried at the Sittings after Trin. T. 1792, at Guildhall, againft a perfon who had knowingly given a falfe character of a man to the plaintiff, who was thereby induced to take him into his fervice. But this Servant foon afterwards robbed his mafter of property to a great amount, for which he was executed. And the plaintiff recovered damages againft the defendant, to the extent of his lofs. This was an action of great importance to the public, and there can be no doubt but it was founded in ftrict principles of law and juftice. 1 Comm. 432, in n.

SERVI, Bondmen, or fervile tenants. Our Northern Servi had always a much eafier condition than the Roman flaves. Servis non in noftrum morem defcriptis per familiam minifteriis utuntur. Suam quifque fedem, fuos penatis regit. Frumenti modum dominus, aut pecoris, aut veftis, colono, injungit, & fervus hactenus paret —Tacitus de Moribus Germanorum. Which plainly defcribes the condition of our Saxon and Norman fervants, natives, and villains, whofe fervitude did more refpect their tenure, than their perfons. No author has fixed the diftinction between Servus and Villanus; though undoubtedly their fervile ftate was different, for they are all along in the Domefday-Book diftinguifhed from each other. So in Burcefter there were——Quinque Servi, & viginti octo Villani, &c. It is fuppofed the Servi were thofe, whom our Lawyers have fince called pure villains, and villains in grofs, who, without any determined tenure of land, were at the arbitrary pleafure of the Lord appointed to fuch fervile works, and received their wages or maintenance at difcretion of the Lord. The other were of a fuperior degree, and were called villani, becaufe they were villæ & glebæ adfcripti, i. e. held fome cottage and lands, for which they were burdened with fuch ftated fervile offices, and were conveyed as appurtenant to the manor or eftate to which they belonged. See Kennett's Gloffary.

The name and quality of their bondage do often occur in Domefday regifter: And their condition, no doubt, was worfe than that of the bordarii or Cotfeti, who performed likewife fome fervile offices for their Lord, and yet as to their perfons and goods were not obnoxious to fervitude, as the proper Servi were. Thefe were of four forts: 1. Such as fold themfelves for a livelihood. 2. Debtors that were to be fold, for being incapable to pay their debts. 3. Captives in war, retained and employed as perfect flaves. 4. Nativi, fuch as were born fervants, and by fuch defcent belonged to the fole property of the Lord.—All thefe had their perfons, their children, and their goods, at the difpofal of their Lord, incapable of making any wills, or giving away any thing. Cowell. There are alfo faid to be fervi teftimentales, thofe which we now call covenant fervants. Leg. Athelft. c. 34. See titles Villain; Slaves.

SERVICE, Servitium.] That duty which the tenant, by reafon of his fee or eftate, oweth unto the Lord. Our ancient law books make many divifions of it; as into perfonal and real; free and bafe; continual or annual; cafual and accidental; intrinfic and extrinfic, &c. Bract. lib. 2: Brit. c. 66: 4 *Co. The ftatute of Magna Charta ordains, that no freeman fhall fell fo much of his lands, but that of the refidue the lord may have his Services. 9 Hen. 3. c. 32. In feoffments to a man and his heirs, the feoffee fhall hold the land of the Lord by the fame Services, as the feoffor, &c. Stat. 18 Ed. 1. And where Services are entire, and cannot be divided; upon the alienation of parcel of the lands by the tenant, the Services fhall be multiplied, and every alienee render the whole Service; though by the purchafe of parcel by the Lord, the whole is extinct, except in cafe of fealty and heriot cuftom. 6 Rep. 1: Wood's Inft. 133. SESSION, GREAT, of Wales. By stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26, a Session is to be held in Wales, twice in every year, in each county, by Judges appointed by the King, to be called the Great Sessions of Wales; in which all pleas of real and personal actions shall be held, with the same form of process, and in as ample a manner, as in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster: And writs of error shall lie from judgments therein (it being a Court of Record) to the Court of King's Bench at Westminster. 4 Comm. 77. See title Wales.

SESSION OF GAOL DELIVERY. A Session held for delivering a Gaol of the prisoners therein being. See titles Justices; Gaol-Delivery.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

THE COURT of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace is a Court that must be held in every county once in every quarter of a year. See title Quarter Sessions. It is held before two or more Justices of the peace, one of which must be of the Quorum. The jurisdiction of this Court, by stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1, extends to the trying and determining all felonies and trespasses whatsoever: though they seldom, if ever, try any greater offence than small felonies within the benefit of clergy; their commission providing, that, if any case of difficulty arises, they shall not proceed to judgment, but in the presence of one of the Justices of the Courts of King's Bench or Common Pleas, or one of the Judges of Assise. And therefore murders, and other capital felonies, are usually remitted for a more solemn trial to the Assises.

It is the practice to try all simple larcenies at the Quarter Sessions, whatever may be the value of the article stolen; but it is stated in the indictment to be of some value not exceeding a shilling, in order to reduce the crime to petty larceny. The Justices never try any felonies, upon conviction for which the prisoner must pray the benefit of clergy, or now the benefit of the statute. For before the stat. 5 Ann. c. 6, sentence of death in all such cases must have been passed upon those who could not read: and it may still be doubted, whether it must not be passed on a convict who obstinately refuses to pray the benefit of that statute. 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 271, n: and see this Dictionary, titles CLERGY, Benefit of; Mute.

They cannot try any new-created offence, without express power given them by the statute which creates it. 4 Mod. 379: Salk. 406: Ld. Raym. 1144. But there are many offences, and particular matters, which by particular statutes belong properly to this jurisdiction, and ought to be prosecuted in this Court: as, the smaller misdemeanors, against the public or commonwealth, not amounting to felony; and especially offences relating to the game, highways, alehouses, bastard children, the settlement and provision for the poor, vagrants, servants' wages, apprentices, and popish recusants. Some of these are proceeded upon by indictment; and others in a summary way by motion and order thereupon; which order may for the most part, unless guarded against by particular statutes, be removed into the Court of King's Bench, by writ of certiorari facias, and be there either quashed or confirmed. See post.

The records or rolls of the Sessions are committed to the custody of a special officer, denominated the Custos Rotulorum, who is always a Justice of the Quorum. The nomination of this Custos Rotulorum (who is the principal civil officer in the county, as the Lord Lieutenant is the chief in military command) is by the King's sign manual: And to him the nomination of the Clerk of the Peace belongs; which office he is expresly forbidden to sell for money. See titles Custos, &c.; Clerk, &c.

In most Corporation-towns there are Quarter Sessions kept before Justices of their own, within their respective limits; which have exactly the same authority as the General Quarter Sessions of the county, except in a very few instances; one of the most considerable of which is the matter of appeals from orders of removal of the poor, which, though they be from the orders of Corporation Justices, must be to the Sessions of the county, by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. In both corporations and counties at large, there is sometimes kept a special or petty Session, by a few Justices, for dispatching smaller business in the neighbourhood between the times of the General Sessions; as for licensing alehouses, passing the accounts of parish officers, and the like.

As to the jurisdiction of the Sessions, in points relative to the Poor-laws, the following summary of decisions is taken from Const's edition of Bott's Poor Laws: For its connection with the subject, see this Dict. title Poor: and, for further information, Burn's Justice, and Const, as above referred to.

The Sessions cannot make an original order of removal; but they may adjudge the pauper to be settled in any of the parishes that are parties to the order, although they cannot appoint a new place of settlement, for they can only affirm or quash the order, in the whole or in part. Nor can they review an order, on which they have determined at a preceding Sessions; but they may make a new order, vacating a former order made the same Sessions: and it seems that on quashing an order of removal, they can only direct the pauper to be sent back to the respondent parish, and cannot adjudge his settlement in a third parish. If the Magistrates present are equally divided, no order can be made; but whatever a majority decide, is, as to matters of fact, conclusive, and also as to matters of law, unless they consent to a special case; but this they are not compellable to grant, nor will a bill of exceptions lie.

In stating a special case, the Sessions must state their conclusion from the facts, and not refer the evidence to the opinion of the superior Court.—But they need not set forth the reason of their judgment, nor even state the evidence upon which their judgment is founded; but if they do state all the evidence, the Court will thereupon examine whether they have drawn a right conclusion; except in the case of fraud, for that is a fact that must be expresly found by the Sessions; and the Court will not infer it from the strongest evidence. But the Court may send the case back, and order the Sessions to inquire into that fact; as well as they may any other defective case, to be amended by stating a particular fact: But the Sessions are not in this case obliged to hear new evidence, although they should proceed in it as if it were a new business. The Court, however, will not send a case to be re-stated because the Sessions have admitted hearsay evidence; or on affidavit that the Clerk of the peace has not stated the case truly. Justices of both the contending parishes, who are rated to the poor, are excluded from voting at Sessions, upon any question relating to the removal of a pauper belonging to either parish. 4 Term Rep. 81.

Not only the pauper removed, but the parish, or any of the parishioners, may appeal against an order of removal. The reasonable notice which the stat. 9. Geo. 1. c. 7, requires to be given, before an appeal can be heard, means such notice as is usual in the practice of the particular Session where the appeal is brought; but they cannot quash an order for want of notice, but must adjourn it to the next Session, unless it clearly appears to the Court that there has been sufficient time since the removal for the appellants to give notice, and come prepared, to try the appeal at the Sessions where it is lodged. And it has been determined that this clause does not relate to the receiving, but to the hearing, of the appeal; and therefore they are bound to receive an appeal though no notice has been given. The appeal must be to the next Sessions after the order of removal is served, or the parties are aggrieved, whether it be an original or an adjourned Session; but as to the time which shall intervene between the order and the appeal, respecting what shall be considered the next Sessions, it must depend upon the special circumstances of the case; for if, from the distance, between the parish to which the pauper has been removed and the place where the Sessions are held, there is not time to lodge an appeal at the Sessions held immediately subsequent to the removal, the first Sessions ensuing are to be considered as the next Sessions, and the Justices are bound to receive the appeal at such Sessions. It must however be so short an interval that the reasonable notice required cannot be given: This time of appealing to the next Sessions is not suspended by the matter being referred to arbitration; for the consent of the parties that the Sessions shall delegate their authority, concludes such parties, and gives validity to all acts of the Sessions in consequence of such consent. The Sessions however may, if they think proper, adjourn the appeal; but it cannot be to a time beyond that within which it is required by stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 4, that a Sessions should be held; and every order made at such adjourned Session must state when the original Session commenced; and on adjourning a Session, the continuance of it by the adjournment must be regularly entered, for unless the Session be regularly adjourned they cannot hear the appeal. The allowance of costs is in the discretion of the Sessions; and in ordering them they need not state the particular sum expended; but they cannot direct costs to attend the event of a presumed appeal; nor can they order costs on a mere adjournment of an appeal.

The proceedings, as has been already noticed, may be removed from the Sessions into the Court of King's Bench by Certiorari. But by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18, "No Certiorari shall be granted to remove any conviction, judgment, order, or other proceedings before any Justice of the Peace, or Sessions, unless it be applied for in six calendar months after such proceedings had or made; and unless it be duly proved on oath, that the party suing forth the same hath given six days' notice in writing to the Justice or Justices, or two of them, before whom such proceedings have been; to the end that such Justices, or the parties therein concerned, may shew cause, if they think fit, against issuing the Certiorari."

By stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19, "No such Certoirari shall be allowed unless the party enter into a recognizance of 50*l.* with condition to prosecute the same at his own costs and charges, with effect and without delay; and to pay the party, in whose favour the judgment or order was made, within a month after the same shall be confirmed, his full costs: and if he shall not enter into such recognizance, or shall not perform the condition, the Justice may proceed, and make such further order for the benefit of the party for whom judgment shall be given, as if no certiorari had been granted. And if the order shall be confirmed by the Court, the person entitled to the costs, for the recovery thereof, within ten days after demand made, upon oath of such demand, and refusal of payment, shall have an attachment granted for the contempt; and the recognizance not to be discharged till the costs are paid, and the order complied with."

This

This writ of Certiorari cannot be applied for until after the appeal is allowed; but if it be granted before, and the writ be filed, it is too late to object. It may be directed to the Session, and returned by them. If a Session's case, removed by certiorari into the King's Bench, be sent down again to the Sessions to be restated, and the prosecutor abandon it when it is returned, the Court will discharge his recognizance for the costs; but not if he dispute the amended order. See further title Certiorari.

SESSIONS FOR WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, In London, four Justices, from among the Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen, (of which the Mayor or Recorder to be one,) may hold a Sessions to inquire into offences of selling by false Weights and Measures, contrary to the statutes; and to receive indictments, punish the offenders, &c. Char. K. Cha. I.

SET-OFF. A mode of defence, whereby the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand, but on the other, sets up a demand of his own to counterbalance it, either in the whole or in part.

At Common Law, if the plaintiff was as much, or even more, indebted to the defendant, than the defendant was to him, yet he had no method of striking a balance: The only way of obtaining relief, was by going into a Court of Equity. To remedy this inconvenience, it was enacted by the stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 13, "That where there are mutual debts between the plaintiff and defendant, or, if either party sue or be sued as executor or administrator, where there are mutual debts between the testator or intestate and either party, one debt may be set against the other; and such matter may be given in evidence upon the general issue, or pleaded in bar, as the nature of the case shall require; so as at the time of his pleading the general issue, where any such debt of the plaintiff, his testator or intestate, is intended to be insisted on in evidence, Notice shall be given of the particular sum or debt so intended to be insisted on, and upon what account it became due; or otherwise such matter shall not be allowed in evidence, upon the general issue." This clause was made perpetual, by stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 24. § 4; and it having been doubted, whether mutual debts of a different nature could be set against each other, it was by the last-mentioned statute, (§ 5,) further enacted and declared, "That, by virtue of the said clause, mutual debts may be set against each other, either by being pleaded in bar, or given in evidence on the general issue, in the manner therein mentioned; notwithstanding that such debts are deemed in Law to be of a different nature; unless in cases where either of the said debts shall accrue by reason of a penalty, contained in any bond or specialty; and in all cases, where either the debt for which the action hath been or shall be brought, or the debt intended to be set against the same, hath accrued, or shall accrue, by reason of any such penalty, the debt intended to be set off shall be pleaded in bar; in which plea shall be shewn, how much is truly and justly due on either side; and in case the plaintiff shall recover in any such action or suit, judgment shall be entered for no more than shall appear to be truly and justly due to the plaintiff, after one debt being set against the other as aforesaid." And where the debt due to the defendant is less than that due from him, he must, on pleading such Set-off, pay the remaining balance into Court. 3 Comm. c. 20. p. 304.

The actions in which a Set-off is allowable, upon these statutes, are Debt, Covenant, and Assumpsit, for the non-payment of money; and the demand intended to be set off must be such, as might have been made the subject of one or other of these actions. A Set-off, therefore, is never allowed in actions upon the case, trespass, or replevin, &c.; nor of a penalty, in debt on bond conditioned for the performance of covenants, &c. nor of general damages in Covenant or Assumpsit: But where a bond is conditioned for the payment of an annuity, or of liquidated damages, a Set-off may be allowed. A debt barred by the Statute of Limitations cannot be set off; and if it be pleaded in bar to the action, the plaintiff may reply the Statute of Limitations; or if given in evidence, on a notice of Set-off, it may be objected to at the trial. Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the authorities there cited.

The debts sued for, and intended to be set off, must be mutual, and due in the same right; therefore a joint debt cannot be set off against a separate demand, nor a separate debt against a joint one; but a debt due to a defendant, as surviving partner, may be set off against a demand on him in his own right. In an action of debt against a man on his own bond, he cannot set off a debt due to him in right of his wife. Neither, for the same reason, can a defendant, sued as executor or administrator, set off a debt due to himself personally; nor, if sued for his own debt, can he set off what is due to him as executor or administrator. But where an action is brought by or against a trustee, a Set-off may be made, of money due to or from the Cestui que trust. It was formerly holden, that the statutes of Set-off did not extend to assignees of a bankrupt; but it has since been determined, that in an action at their suit, the defendant may set off a debt due to him, at the time of the bankruptcy; but a note indorsed to him afterwards cannot be set off. Tidd's Pract. K. B. And in actions by or against the assignees of a bankrupt, the sum really due may be recovered under stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30, without either pleading or giving notice of a Set-off. 1 Term Rep. 115: 3 Comm. c. 20, n.

Where either of the debts accrues by reason of a penalty, the debt intended to be set off must, by the stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 24, be pleaded in bar; and the defendant, in his plea, must aver what is really due; which averment has been held to be traversable: But, in all other cases, the defendant may either plead or give notice of Set-off, at his election. If, at the time of the action brought, a larger sum was due from the plaintiff to the defendant, than from him to the plaintiff, the action being barred, it seems more proper to plead the Set-off; and it is usually pleaded in country causes, to save the trouble and expence of proving the service of a notice. But where the sum intended to be set off is less than that for which the action is brought, a notice of Set-off should be given. Tidd.

The Notice of Set off should regularly be given with, or at the time of pleading the general issue. Though if it be not then given, the Court, (it is settled) will give the defendant leave to withdraw the general issue, and plead it again, with a notice of Set-off; and such notice may be given with the general issue, after the defendant has been ruled to abide by his plea. In point of form, a notice of Set-off ſhould be almoſt as certain as a declaration. The notice of Set-off is uſually written underneath the plea, and delivered therewith to the plaintiff's attorney; and a copy of the notice ſhould be kept by the defendant's attorney, it being neceſſary to prove the delivery of it, at the trial of the cauſe. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

SEVERAL ACTION; See title Action.

SEVERAL COVENANT, A Covenant by two or more ſeverally; i. e. ſeparately. See title Covenant.

SEVERAL FISHERY; See FISHERY, Right of.

SEVERAL INHERITANCE, An Inheritance conveyed, ſo as to deſcend or come to two perſons ſeverally by moieties, &c. See titles Eſtate; Limitation; Inheritances.

SEVERAL TAIL, Is that whereby land is given and intailed ſeverally to two. Co. Lit. See titles Limitation; Tail.

SEVERAL TENANCY, Tenura ſeparalis.] A plea or exception taken to a writ that is laid againſt two perſons as joint-tenants, who are ſeveral. Bro. 273. See title Joint-tenants.

SEVERALTY, Eſtates in. He that holds lands or tenements in Severalty, or is ſole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other perſon being joined or connected with him in point of intereſt, during his eſtate therein. 2 Comm. c. 12. p. 179.

SEVERANCE, The ſeparating or ſevering of two or more, joined in one writ or action. There is a Severance of the tenants in an aſſiſe, when one of two diſſeiſees appear upon the writ, and not the other. Book Intr. 81. A Severance in debet, where two executors, &c. are plaintiffs, and one refuſeth to act or proſecute. Ibid. 220. Severance in quare impedit; in attaints, &c. 5 Rep. 97. And it lies in real, as well as perſonal actions; and on writs of error. F. N B. 78: 10 Rep. 135. In writ of error, if three defendants in the action bring error, and one releaſes the errors, he may be ſummoned and ſevered, and then the other two ſhall proceed to reverſe the judgment. 6 Rep. 26. And if in error where there are ſeveral plaintiffs, one only appears and aſſigns errors; this is not good, without ſummoning and ſevering the reſt. Cro. Eliz. 893.

It has been held, that Summons and Severance lies in partition; yet he who was ſevered ſhall have his part: For partition muſt be made of the whole. Jenk Cent. 211. And in caſe of joint-tenants of lands, by Severance the proſecution of the ſuit is ſevered, but not the jointure; for where one alone recovers afterwards, the other may enter into the moiety recovered. Ibid. 40. Summons and Severance is uſually before appearance; as nonſuit is after appearance. 10 Rep. 134. But, according to Hale, there are two ſorts of Severances, one when a plaintiff will not appear; and the other when ſeveral plaintiffs appear, but ſome will not proceed and proſecute. Hard. 317: 3 Nelſ. Abr. 255. If a plaintiff or defendant on a writ of Summons and Severance, ſued out againſt him by another, doth not come in upon it, judgment ſhall be had ad proſequendum ſolum; and this hath been done in B. R. by giving a rule to appear and come in. 2 Lil. Abr. 539. See Summons and Severance.

SEVERANCE OF CORN. The cutting and carrying it from off the ground; and ſometimes the ſetting out the tithes from the reſt of the corn, is called Severance. 2 Cro. 325. See title Tithes. Where executors of tenants for life, &c. dying before Severance, ſhall have corn ſown, ſee Emblements.

SEVERANCE OF JOINT-TENANCY; See title Joint-tenants.

SEVERN, A recompence for robberies done on the river Severn in Glouceſterſhire, may be had by action of debt, according to the ſtatute of Wincheſter, 8 H. 6. See title Paſſage.

SEWARD, (rather SEA-WARD,) A Saxon word for him who guards the ſea-coaſts; it ſignifies Cuſtos Maris.

SEWER, Sewera] A freſh water trench, or little river encompaſſed with banks on both ſides, to carry the water into the ſea, and thereby preſerve the lands againſt inundations, &c. The Kings of England uſed to grant Commiſſions of Sewers long before any ſtatute was enacted in Parliament for the purpoſe: and during the reigns of King Henry VI., Ed[illegible], and Hen. VII., ſeveral ſtatutes were made for appointing Commiſſions of Sewers in all parts of the realm where needful; ſome to endure ten years, ſome fifteen years, and others five years, &c. with certain powers to the Commiſſioners: which commiſſions, by ſtat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 5, are to be ſettled by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treaſurer, and the two Chief Juſtices, or any three of them, whereof the Lord Chancellor to be one; and are to continue ten years, unleſs repealed by a new commiſſion: And by this Law, the Commiſſioners' oath is appointed: they are to be qualified as to eſtates, by having lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in fee or for life, worth forty marks per annum, beſides repriſes; (except they are reſiſident in and free of a corporation; and have moveables worth 100*l*:) and if they execute the commiſſion, not being thus qualified, or before ſworn, they incur a forfeiture of 40*l*. Commiſſioners that may lawfully act, have an allowance for their pains 4*s*. per Diem, and their clerks 2*s*. out of the taxes to be laid and levied.

By the ſaid ſtat. 23 H. 8. c. 5, the Commiſſioners of Sewers had power to make and ordain Laws, but they were not to continue in force longer than their commiſſion. But by a ſubſequent ſtatute, all laws, and ordinances of the Commiſſioners, are to remain in force till repealed, notwithſtanding the determination of their commiſſion; and Clerks of Commiſſioners of Sewers are to eſtreat fines and penalties impoſed by the Commiſſioners yearly into the Exchequer. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 9.

The buſineſs of the Commiſſioners of Sewers is to repair ſea-banks and walls, ſurvey rivers, public ſtreams, ditches, &c. and make orders for that purpoſe. They have authority, grounded on the ſtatutes, to inquire of all nuſances, and offences committed by the ſtopping of rivers, erecting mills, not repairing of banks and bridges, &c. and to tax and aſſeſs all whom it may concern, for the amending of defaults, which tend to the obſtruction or hindrance of the free paſſage of the water through its ancient courſes: and they may arreſt carts and horſes, and take trees, paying a reaſonable price for them, for reparations; reparations; appoint workmen, bailiffs, surveyors, and other officers, &c. Terms de Ley 541: 4 Inst. 275: Laws Sew. 86, 96.

The Court of Commissioners of Sewers is classed, by Blackstone, among those whose jurisdiction is private and special: Their jurisdiction being confined to such county or particular district, as the Commission expressly names. The Commissioners are a Court of Record, and may fine and imprison for contempts. 1 Sid. 145. And in the execution of their duty may proceed by a Jury, (who may amerce for neglects,) or upon their own view; and may take order for the removal of any annoyances, or the safeguard and conservation of the Sewers within their commission, either according to the laws and customs of Romney Marsh; (see that title;) or otherwise at their own discretion; but they may not imprison persons for disobedience to their orders: Nor can they intermeddle where there is not a public prejudice; nor can they make a new river. Laws Sew.: 3 Comm c. 6.

Upon the statute 23 Hen. 8 c. 5, the Commissioners decreed, that a new river should be made out of another large river, through the main land for seven miles, unto another part of the old river; and for that purpose they laid a tax of a sum in gross upon several towns: Adjudged that the Commissioners have no power to make a new river, or any new invention to cast out water, &c for such things are to be done in Parliament; but they may order an old bank to be new made, or alter a Sewer upon any inevitable necessity. The tax of a sum in gross is not warranted by their commission, they being to tax every owner or possessor of the lands, according to the quality of their lands, rents, and number of acres, and their respective portions and profits, whether of pasture, fishing, &c. 10 Rep. 141.

The Commissioners may assess such rates or scots upon the owners of lands within their district, as they shall judge necessary: and if any person refuses to pay them, the Commissioners may levy the same by distress of his goods and chattels; or they may, by the stat. 23 H. 8. c. 5, sell his freehold lands; and by stat. 7 Ann. c. 10, his copyhold also, to pay such rates and assessments.

The Commissioners are to tax all equally, who are in danger to receive any damage by the waters, and not only those whose lands are next adjoining; because the rage of the waters may be so great, that the land contiguous may not be of the value to make the banks; and therefore the statutes will have all that are in danger to be contributory. 5 Rep. 100.

There are several causes and considerations for which persons may be obliged to repair and maintain Sewers; as frontagers were bound to the repairs of the walls and banks, &c. by reason of frontage. 37 Lib. Assis. pl. 10. The being owner of a bank, wall, or other defence, is a sufficient inducement to impose the charge of the repairs thereof upon such owner. 1 Hen. 7.—Prescription and custom are much of the same nature, and the Law takes notice of them in this case; but prescription doth not bind a man to the repairs, except it be ratione tenuræ. 21 Ed. 4. 38: 19 Hen. 7.—By tenure of land, a person may be bound to repair a wall, bank, or defence mentioned in the Statute of Sewers. 12 H. 4.—A man may bind himself and his heirs by covenant expresly to repair a bank, wall, or sewer, and be good; yet this shall not bind the heir after his death, where assets are not left from the ancestor, who entered into the covenant. Callis's Reading on Sewers.

The use of defences may tie a man to the reparation thereof; if one and his ancestors have had the use of a river by sailing up and down the same, or have used a ferry on or over it, &c.—If no person or grounds can be known, who ought to make repairs by tenure, prescription, custom, or otherwise, then the Commissioners are to tax the level. Laws Sewers 57, 67, 68.

The decrees of Commissioners of Sewers are to be certified into Chancery: Their conduct is under the controul of the Court of King's Bench, which will prevent or punish any illegal or arbitrary proceedings. Cro. Jac. 336. And yet in the reign of King Jac. I. (8th Nov. 1616,) the Privy Council took upon them to order that no action or complaint should be prosecuted against the Commissioners, unless before that Board; and committed several to prison who had brought such actions at Common Law, till they should release the same; and one of the reasons for discharging Sir Ed. Coke from his office of Lord Chief Justice, was for countenancing those proceedings at Law. Moor 825, 826: See 3 Comm. 55, 74. But now it is clearly established that this (like other inferior jurisdictions) is subject to the discretionary coercion of the Court of King's Bench. 1 Vent. 66, 67: Salk. 146.

If it is found before Commissioners of Sewers, that a certain person ought to repair a bank; and this is removed into B. R. the Court will not quash the inquisition, or grant a new trial, except he repair it; and if afterwards he is acquitted, he shall be reimbursed. Sid 78.—In cases of Sewers, the Court of King's Bench inquire into the nature of the fact, before they grant a certiorari to remove orders; that no mischief may happen by inundations in the mean time, which is a discretionary execution of their power. 1 Salk. 146.

The Court commonly hears counsel on both sides, where orders of Commissioners of Sewers are removed by certiorari, before such orders are filed; for, if good, the Court will grant a procedendo, which cannot be done after they are filed: But they will file them in any case, where there is no danger likely to ensue. 1 Salk. 145.—If Commissioners of Sewers proceed after a certiorari delivered out of B. R. attachment will issue against them, and they may be fined. 3 Nels. Abr. 218. An order of Sewers was made for levying of 9*d. per* acre on thirteen hundred and twelve acres, to be paid to the clerk, to be applied towards defraying of charges in and about the execution of the commission; and held to be good; the act does not require it should be on the occupiers; and there is an express power to allow charges. 2 Str. 1127: 10 Co. 139.

Orders of Sewers being removed by certiorari, the Court would not file the orders till they had heard the objections debated, so as to have it in their power to send the orders back again. 2 Str 1263.—The Court held, that a certiorari to bring up an order made by the Commissioners, for the removal of their own clerk, was of common right, and not discretionary, as in the case of other orders, where great inconveniences may follow by inundations in the mean time. 1 Str. 609.

The sea, creeks, and bays, on the coasts, are all within the Statutes of Sewers, in point of extent; but they and the shores, and the relinquished grounds, are out of the commission of Sewers, to be determined thereby: bu, but ports and havens, as well as the walls and banks of waters, are within the commission of Sewers; and the shore and grounds left by the sea, when they are put in gainage and made profitable, are then within the power of the commission of Sewers: And though before, the ground left by the sea is not, as to defence, within the commission of Sewers; yet a wall or bank may be thereon raised, for the succour of the country, although not for any private commodity; the commission of Sewers aiming at the general good. Callis 31, 32. The stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 14, ordains, that all ditches, banks, bridges, streams, and watercourses, within two miles of London, falling into the Thames, shall be subject to a commission of Sewers: And the Lord Mayor, &c. is to appoint persons who have power of Commissioners of Sewers.

Breaking down sea-banks, whereby lands shall be damaged, is felony, by stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. And persons removing piles, &c. used to prevent inundations of rivers, shall forfeit 20*l.* or be sent to the house of correction for six months. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. Though this paper was able to impose on such great antiquaries as Spelman and Dugdale, it is proved by Dr. Brady (Ans. to Petyt, p. 11, 12,) to have been a forgery." *Hume's Hist. SHEPWAY, Court of; A Court held before the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. A writ of error lies from the Mayor and Jurats of each port, to the Lord Warden, in this Court of Shepway, and from thence to the King's Bench. See title Cinque Ports.

SHERFFEE. The body of the lordship of Caerdiff in South Wales is so called, excluding the members of it. Powel's Hist. Wal. 123.

SHERIFF;

SHIRE-REVE, or SHIRIFF:

THE REEVE, Bailiff, or Officer of the Shire; Lat. Vicecomes; Sax. Scire geresa, from the Sax Scyrian, to divide.] The Chief Officer, under the King, in every Shire or County; being so called from the first division of the kingdom into counties. Camd. Brit.

I. Of Sheriffs generally.

II. Who are qualified for, or exempt from, serving the Office of Sheriff: And see III.

III. Manner of appointing him, and of his Oath.

IV. The Sheriff can execute no other Office; how long to continue in Office; and of his Jurisdiction.

V. The Sheriff cannot dispose of his Bailiwick; and of his Power and Duty in appointing an Under-Sheriff.

I. IT SEEMS that anciently the government of the County was by the King lodged in the Earl or Count, who was the immediate officer to the Crown; and this high office was granted by the King at will; sometimes for life, and afterwards in fee; but when it became too burdensome, and could not be commodiously executed by a person of so high rank and quality, it was thought necessary to constitute a person, duely qualified, qualified, to officiate in his room and stead; from hence he is called in Latin Vice-comes, as being deputy of the Earl or Comes: and Sheriff, from Shire-reeve, i. e. Governor of the Shire or County. He is likewise considered in our books as Bailiff to the Crown; and his county, of which he hath the care, and in which he is to execute the King's writs, is called a Bailiwick. Dav. 60: Savil 43: 1 Rol. Rep. 274: Co. Lit. 168. Vide Pref. to 9 Rep. 33.

It is said by Coke and by Dalton, that Earls, by reason of their high employments and attendance upon the King, being not able to follow all the business of the county, were delivered of all that burthen, and only enjoyed the honour as they now do, and that labour was laid upon the Sheriff; so that now the Sheriff doth all the King's business in the county; and the Sheriff, though he be still called Vicecomes, yet all he doth, and all his authority, is entirely independent of and not subject to the Earl, being immediately from and under the King, and not from or under the Earl; so that, at this day, the Sheriff hath all the authority for the administration and execution of justice, which the Count or Earl had; the King, by his letters-patent now committing to the Sheriff custodiam comitatûs. 9 Co. 49: Dalt. Sher. 2.

He is at this day considered as an officer of great antiquity, trust, and authority; having, as Dalton observes, from the King the custody, keeping, command, and government (in some sort) of the whole county committed to his charge and care; and, according to Coke, he is said to have triplicem custodiam, viz. vitæ justitiæ, vitæ legis, & vitæ reipublicæ, &c. Vitæ justitiæ, to serve process, and to return indifferent juries for the trial of men's lives, liberties, lands, and goods; vitæ legis, to execute process and make execution, which is the life of the Law; and vitæ reipublicæ, to keep the peace. Co. Lit. 168: Dalt. Sh. 5.

It seems that, anciently, Sheriffs were elected by the freeholders of the county, as the Coroners are at this day; and consequently that their offices did not determine by the death of the King. 2 Inst. 558: 2 Brownl. 282. See post. III.

And though at this day the King hath the sole appointment of Sheriffs, except in counties palatine, and where there are jura regalia, yet it hath been adjudged, that the office of Sheriff is an entire thing, and that therefore the King cannot apportion or divide it; that is, he cannot determine it in part, as for one town or one hundred; neither can he abridge the Sheriff of any thing incident to or belonging to his office. Dav. 60: 4 Co. 33; Mitton's case: Dalt. Sh. 6: Hob. 13: Raym. 363.

The Lord Mayor and citizens of London have the Shrievalty of London and Middlesex in fee, by charter; and two Sheriffs are annually elected by them, for whom they are to be answerable: If one of these Sheriffs dies, the other cannot act till another is made; and there must be two Sheriffs of London, which is a city and county; though they make but one Sheriff of the county of Middlesex: They are several as to plaints in their respective Courts. 3 Rep. 72: Show. Rep. 289. See post. III.

II. It is provided by several acts of Parliament, that no man shall be Sheriff in any county, except he have sufficient lands within the same county where he shall be Sheriff, whereof to answer the King and his people, in case that any person shall complain against them; and that none that is steward or bailiff to a great lord shall be made Sheriff. Stats. 9 Ed. 2. st. 2: 2 Ed. 3. c. 4: 4 Ed. 3. c. 9: 5 Ed. 3. c. 4: 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 1. § 7.

This is the only qualification required from a Sheriff: That it was the intention of our ancestors, that the lands of a Sheriff should be considerable, abundantly appears from their having this provision so frequently repeated; and at the same time that they obtained a confirmation of Magna Carta and their most valuable liberties. As the Sheriff, both in criminal and civil cases, may have the custody of men of the greatest property in the county, his own estate ought certainly to be large, that he may be above all temptation to permit them to escape, or to join them in their flight. In ancient times, this office was frequently executed by the Nobility, and persons of the highest rank in the kingdom. Spelm. Gloss. in v. Vicecomes.—Bishops also were not unfrequently Sheriffs: Richard Duke of Gloucester (afterwards Richard III.) was Sheriff of Cumberland five years together.—It does not appear that there is any express law to exclude the Nobility from the execution of this office; though it has long been appropriated to Commoners. 1 Comm. c. 9. p. 346, n.

The office of Sheriff doth not determine by the party's becoming a Peer on the death of his father, but that he still remains Sheriff ad voluntatem Regis. Cro. Eliz. 12. Sir Lewis Mordant's case.

It is holden that the King hath an interest in every Subject, and a right to his service; and that no man can be exempt from the office of Sheriff, but by Act of Parliament, or letters-patent. Sav. 43: 9 Co. 46.

And on this foundation, it was adjudged, in Sir John Read's case, who was made High Sheriff of Hertfordshire at the time he was excommunicated for non-payment of alimony, that an information properly lay against him for not executing the office; though it was objected, on his behalf, that the oath and sacrament injoined by Act of Parliament are necessary qualifications for all Sheriffs, which he was disabled to take by reason of the excommunication: But the Court held, that he was punishable for not removing the disability, it being in his power to get himself absolved from the excommunication; and that therefore it could be no excuse. 2 Mod. 299.

Though, in the above case, it was admitted that the Subject was bound to serve the King in such capacity as he is in at the time of the service commanded, yet it was insisted upon, that he was not obliged to qualify himself to serve in every capacity; and that therefore a prisoner for debt is not bound nor compellable to be Sheriff, no more than a person is bound to purchase lands to qualify himself to be either a Coroner or Justice of the peace: And it was likewise said that, by statute, every recusant is disabled; he may conform, but he is not bound to it; for if he submits to the penalty, it is as much as is required by Law. 2 Mod. 301. And it is now settled that Dissenters are not compellable to serve the office of Sheriff.

riff. Harrison (Chamberlain of London) v. Evans, in the House of Lords, 1766. See title Dissenters.

If a man is disabled by a judgment in Law to bear an office, he is excused; nam judicium redditur in invitum; for though his fault or neglect was the occasion of such judgment, yet it is a mark set upon him by the Government. Salk. 168: 4 Mod. 273.

And as nothing but an invincible necessity can exempt a person from serving the office of Sheriff, &c. on this foundation a bye-law made in London, that no freeman chosen Sheriff, &c. shall be excused unless he voluntarily swears he is not worth 10,000*l.* &c. [now 15,000*l.*] and that if he openly refuses to take the office, then to forfeit the sum of 400*l.* was adjudged good. Salk. 142: Carth. 480: 5 Mod. 438. City of London v. Vanacre.—In the year 1748, the Corporation of London made a bye-law, imposing a fine of 600*l.* on persons refusing to serve the office of Sheriff.

The vast expence, which custom had introduced in serving the office of High-Sheriff, was grown such a burthen to the Subject, that it was enacted, by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 21, that no Sheriff (except of London, Westmorland, and towns which are counties of themselves) should keep any table at the assizes, except for his own family, or give any presents to the Judges or their servants, or have more than forty men in livery: Yet, for the sake of safety and decency, he may not have less than twenty men in England and twelve in Wales; upon forfeiture, in any of these cases, of 200*l.*

III. The High Sheriff hath his authority given him by two patents; by the one the King commits to him the custody of the county; by the other the King commands all other his Subjects within that county to be aiding and assisting to him in all things belonging to his office. Dalt. Sh. 7, where see the form of such patents.

Sheriffs were formerly chosen by the inhabitants of the several counties. In confirmation of which it was ordained by stat. 28 Edw. 1. c. 8, that the people should have election of Sheriffs in every shire, where the Shrievalty is not of inheritance. For anciently in some counties the Sheriffs where hereditary; as it seems they were in Scotland till the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 43; and still continue in the county of Westmorland to this day: The City of London have also the inheritance of the Shrievalty of Middlesex vested in their body, by charter. 3 Rep. 72.

The Earl of Thanet is hereditary Sheriff of Westmorland, which office may descend to and be executed by a female, for Anne Countess of Pembroke had the office, and exercised it in person; and, at the Assizes at Appleby, sate with the Judges on the Bench. 1 Inst. 326, n.—The election of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, was granted to the citizens of London, in consideration of their paying 300*l.* a-year to the King's Exchequer, 1 Comm. c. 9, n.

The reason of these popular elections is assigned in stat. 28 E. 1. c. 13; "That the Commons might choose such as would not be a burthen to them." And herein appears plainly a strong trace of the democratical part of our constitution; in which form of government it is an indispensable requisite, that the people should choose their own Magistrates. This election was in all probability not absolutely vested in the Commons, but required the royal approbation. For, in the Gothic constitution, the Judges of the County Courts (which office is executed by our Sheriff) were elected by the people, but confirmed by the King; and the form of their election was thus managed: The people, or incolæ territorii chose twelve electors, and they nominated three persons, ex quibus rex unum confirmabat. But with us in England these popular elections, growing tumultuous, were put an end to by the stat. 9 Edw. 2 st. 2; which enacted, that the Sheriffs should from thenceforth be assigned by the Chancellor, Treasurer, and the Judges; as being persons in whom the same trust might with confidence be reposed. By stats. 14 Edw. 3. c. 7: 23 Hen. 6. c. 8, the Chancellor, Treasurer, President of the King's Council, Chief Justices, and Chief Baron, are to make this election; and that on the Morrow of All Souls in the Exchequer. And the King's letters patent, appointing the new Sheriffs, used commonly to bear date the sixth day of November. Stat. 12 Edw. 4. c. 1. The statute of Cambridge, 12 Ric. 2. c. 2, ordains that the Chancellor, Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King's House, the King's Chamberlain, Clerk of the Rolls, the Justices of the one Bench and the other, Barons of the Exchequer, and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make Justices of the peace, Sheriffs, and other officers of the King, shall be sworn to act indifferently, and to appoint no man that sueth either privily or openly to be put in office, but such only as they shall judge to be the best and most sufficient. And the custom now is (and has been at least ever since the time of Fortescue, who was Chief Justice and Chancellor to Henry the Sixth) that all the Judges, together with the other great officers and Privy Counsellors, meet in the Exchequer on the Morrow of All Souls yearly, (which day is now altered to the Morrow of St. Martin by the last Act for abbreviating Michaelmas term,) and then and there the Judges propose three persons, to be reported (if approved of) to the King, who afterwards appoints one of them to be Sheriff. See 1 Comm. c. 9. p. 340, 341: Fort. de L. L. c. 24.

The following is the present mode of nominating Sheriffs in the Exchequer, on the Morrow of St. Martin:

The Chancellor, Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Judges and several of the Privy Council assemble, and an officer of the Court administers an oath to them, in old French, that they will nominate no one from favour, partiality, or any improper motive: This done, the same officer, having the list of the counties in alphabetical order, and of those who were nominated the year preceding, reads over the three names, and the last of the three he pronounces to be the present Sheriff: But where there has been a Pocket-Sheriff (see post,) he reads the three names upon the list, and then declares who is the present Sheriff. If any of the Ministry or Judges has any objection to a person named, he mentions it and another gentleman is nominated in his room: If no objection is made, some one rises and says, "To the two gentlemen I know no objection, and I recommend A. B. Esq. in the room of the present Sheriff."

Another officer has a paper, with a number of names, given him by the Clerk of Assise for each county, which paper generally contains the names of the gentlemen upon the former list, and also of gentlemen who are likely to be nominated; and whilst the three are nominated, he prefixes 1, 2, or 3 to their names according to the order in which they are placed; which, for greater certainty, he afterwards reads over twice. Several objections are made to gentlemen; some perhaps at their own request; such as, that they are abroad, that their estates are small and incumbered, that they have no equipage, that they are practising barristers, or officers in the militia, &c.

The new Sheriff is generally appointed about the end of the following Hilary Term: This extension of the time was probably in consequence of the stat. 17 E. 4. c. 7, which enables the old Sheriff to hold his office over Michaelmas and Hilary Terms. 1 Comm. c. 9. p. 341, n.

This custom, of the twelve Judges proposing three persons, seems borrowed from the Gothic constitution before mentioned; with this difference, that, among the Goths, the twelve nominors were first elected by the people themselves. And this usage, it is suggested by Blackstone, was, at its first introduction, founded upon some statute, though not now to be found among our printed laws: First, because it is materially different from the direction of all the statutes before mentioned; which it is hard to conceive that the Judges would have countenanced by their concurrence, or that Fortescue would have inserted in his book, unless by the authority of some statute: And also, because a statute is expresly referred to in the record, which Sir Edward Coke says he transcribed from the Council-Book of 3d March, 34 Hen. VI. and which is in substance as follows:—The King had of his own authority appointed a man Sheriff of Lincolnshire, which office he refused to take upon him; whereupon the opinions of the Judges were taken, what should be done in this behalf: And the two Chief Justices, Sir John Fortescue and Sir John Prisot, delivered the unanimous opinion of them all; "that the King did an error, when he made a person Sheriff that was not chosen and presented to him according to the statute; that the person refusing was liable to no fine for disobedience, as if he had been one of the three persons chosen according to the tenor of the statute; that they would advise the King to have recourse to the three persons that were chosen according to the statute, or that some other thrifty man be entreated to occupy the office for this year; and that, the next year, to eschew such inconveniences, the order of the statute, in this behalf made, be observed." 1 Comm. c. 9.

Mr. Christian expresses his dissent from the foregoing opinion of the learned Commentator, that the present practice originated from a statute which cannot now be found; because, if such a statute ever existed, it must have been passed between the date of this record, 34 H. 6, and the stat. 23 H. 6. c. 8, before referred to; for that statute recites and ratifies the stat. 14 E. 3. st. 1. c. 7, which provides only for the nomination of one person to fill the office when vacant; yet the former stat. 9 E. 2. st. 2, leaves the number indefinite; viz. Sheriffs shall be assigned by the Chancellor, &c.; and if such a statute had passed in the course of those eleven years, it is probable that it would have been referred to by subsequent statutes. Mr. Christian conceives that the practice originated from the consideration, that as the King was to confirm the nomination by his patent, it was more convenient and respectful to present three to him than only one; and though this proceeding did not exactly correspond with the directions of the statute, yet it was not contrary to its spirit, or, in strictness, to its letter; and therefore the Judges might perhaps think themselves warranted in saying, that the three persons were chosen according to the tenor of the statute. 1 Comm. c. 9. p. 342, n.

Notwithstanding the unanimous resolution of all the Judges of England, entered, as before mentioned, in the Council-Book, and the stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26. § 61, which expresly recognizes this to be the Law of the land; some have affirmed that the King, by his prerogative, may name whom he pleases to be Sheriff, whether chosen by the Judges or not. Jenk. 229. This is grounded on a very particular case in the fifth year of Queen Elizabeth, when, by reason of the plague, there was no Michaelmas Term kept at Westminster, so that the Judges could not meet there in Crastino Animarum, to nominate the Sheriffs; whereupon the Queen named them herself, without such previous assembly, appointing for the most part one of the two remaining in the last year's list. Dyer 225. And this case, thus circumstanced, is the only authority in our books for the making these extraordinary Sheriffs. It is true, the Reporter adds, that it was held that the Queen by her prerogative might make a Sheriff without the election of the Judges, non obstante aliquo statuto in contrarium: but the doctrine of non obstante's, which sets the Prerogative above the Laws, was effectually demolished by the Bill of Rights at the Revolution, and abdicated Westminster-Hall when King James abdicated the kingdom. However, it must be acknowledged, that the practice of occasionally naming what are called Pocket-Sheriffs, by the sole authority of the Crown, hath uniformly continued to the reign of his present Majesty; in which, few (if any) compulsory instances have occurred. 1 Comm. c. 9.

They were called Pocket-Sheriffs, who were appointed by the King, not being one of the three nominated in the Exchequer. The unanimous opinion of the Judges above referred to, from 2 Inst. 559, seems to preclude the possibility of a compulsory appointment. 1 Comm. 342, n.

The Sheriffs in every of the shires of Wales shall be nominated yearly by the Lord President, Council, and Justices of Wales, and shall be certified up by them; and after, appointed and elected by the King, as other Sheriffs be. 34 Hen. 8. cap. 26: Dalt. Sh. 6. See title Wales.

The Sheriff, before he doth exercise any part of his office, and before his patent is made out, is to give security in the King's Remembrancer's Office in the Exchequer, under pain of 100*l.* for the payment of his proffers, and all other profits of the Sheriffwick; but these securities are never sued, unless there is a deficiency in the Sheriff's effects. Dalt. Sh. 7.

The Sheriff, before he takes upon him the exercise of his office, must not only take the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, enjoined to all officers by divers acts of Parliament, but all Sheriffs, except those of Wales and the counties palatine, must take the oath appointed by stat. 3 G. 1. c. 15. § 18, for the due execution of their office.

If a person refused to take upon him the office of Sheriff, it was usual to punish him in the Star-chamber; and he may now be proceeded against by information in the Court of King's Bench. Also, if he refuses to take the oaths injoined him, or officiates in the office before he hath thus qualified himself, the Court, which hath a general superintendancy over all officers and ministers of justice, will grant an information against him: And it hath been held, that a refusal of oaths injoined to be taken, amounts to a refusal of the office. Dalt. Sh. 15: Dyer 167: 3 Lev. 116: Carth. 307.

A Sheriff, at the entrance into his Shrievalty, is to go to the Remembrancer's Office in the Exchequer, and there enter into a recognizance with sureties, with conditions for payment of his proffers or accounts: Then his attorney, &c. will write him a note, signifying that he is chosen Sheriff of such a county, and hath entered a recognizance; which he must deliver to one of the Six Clerks in Chancery, to make his patent by; with the writ of assistance, and writ of discharge to his predecessor: And, in the next place, the new Sheriff is to go to a Master in Chancery, if he be in London, to take the oaths. Dalt. Sher. 291.

If the Sheriff be not in London, the oath may be taken by dedimus potestatem, directed to any two Justices of the peace of the same county, one to be of the quorum, or to any other commissioner or commissioners, or before one of the Judges of assise for that county, or one of the Masters in Chancery, who, it is said, may, as well as the Judge, administer such oath without any dedimus. Dalt. Sher. 13, 14.

If the commissioners return the commission or writ, and that the oaths are taken, when they are not taken, they are finable. Dyer 168: Dalt. Sher. 14.

When a Sheriff is chosen, the old Sheriff continues Sheriff of the county till the new is sworn, which completes him in his office: But the office of the old Sheriff ceases and is at an end when the writ of discharge comes to him.

IV. A Sheriff cannot be elected Knight of the Shire for that county for which he is Sheriff. 4 Inst. 48: Lit. Rep. 326. See title Parliament.

By stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 7, no Sheriff shall tarry or abide in his office above one year, upon pain to forfeit 200*l.* a year as long as he occupieth the office; and every pardon made for such offence or forfeiture shall be void: And see stat. 42 E. 3. c. 9, post. V. London, Middlesex, &c. are not within these statutes. See stat. 3 G. 1. c. 15. § 21.

Notwithstanding these old statutes, it hath been said, 4 Rep. 32, that a Sheriff may be appointed durante bene placito, or during the King's pleasure; and so is the form of the royal writ. Therefore, till a new Sheriff be named, his office cannot be determined, unless by his own death, or the demise of the King; in which last case, it was usual for the successor to send a new writ to the old Sheriff; but now by stat. 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 8, all officers appointed by the preceding King may hold their offices for six months after the King's demise, unless sooner displaced by the successor. See Dalt. 7, 8.

By stat. 1 Rich. 2. c. 11, it is enacted, that none that hath been Sheriff of any county a year, shall be within two years next chosen again, or put in the same office, if there be other sufficient.

And by stat. 1 H. 5. c. 4, it is enacted, that they that be Bailiffs of Sheriffs one year, shall be in no such office by three years next following, except Bailiffs of Sheriffs which inherit in their office.

By stat. 4. H. 4. c. 5, it is enacted, that every Sheriff shall be dwelling in proper person within his bailiwick, for the time he shall be such officer; and that the Sheriff shall be sworn to do the same.

Hence it is clear that a Sheriff hath no jurisdiction in any other county, nor can he do a judicial act, in which his personal presence is required, out of his county; but it is held, that he may do a ministerial act, as make a panel, or return a writ, out of his county, unless he is beyond sea. Dalt. Sh. 22: 9 H. 4. 1.—See farther, Plowd. 37: Dalt. Sher. 23.

A Sheriff may make and deliver the return of a writ any where. 1 Wils. 328. A Sheriff gives out a blank warrant upon a writ which is filled up by an attorney, this is ill. 2 Wils. 47. See title Commitment.

Until a different regulation was made by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 16, in a great many instances two counties had one and the same Sheriff: This is still the case in the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon.

It will appear to be of the utmost importance to have the Sheriff appointed according to Law, when we consider his power and duty. These are either as a Judge, as the Keeper of the King's Peace, as a ministerial officer of the superior Courts of justice, or as the King's Bailiff. 1 Comm. c. 9.

In his judicial capacity, he is to hear and determine all causes of 40*s.* value, and under, in his County Court (see that title); and he has also a judicial power in divers other civil cases. Dalt. c. 4 He is likewise to decide the elections of Knights of the Shire, (subject to the control of the House of Commons,) of Coroners, and of Verderors; to judge of the qualification of voters, and to return such as he shall determine to be duly elected. 1 Comm. c. 9.

As the Keeper of the King's Peace, both by Common Law and Special Commission, he is the first man in the county, and superior in rank to any nobleman therein, during his office. 1 Roll. Rep. 237. He may apprehend, and commit to prison, all persons who break the peace, or attempt to break it; and may bind any one in a recognizance to keep the King's peace. He may, and is bound ex officio to pursue, and take all traitors, murderers, felons, and other misdoers, and commit them to gaol for safe custody. He is also to defend his county against any of the King's enemies when they come into the land; and for this purpose, as well as for keeping the peace and pursuing felons, he may command all the people of his county to attend him; which is called the posse comitatûs, or power of the county: And this summons every person above fifteen years old, and under the degree of a Peer, is bound to attend upon warning, under pain of fine and imprisonment. Stat. 2 Hen. 5. st. 1. c. 8. See title Riot. But though the Sheriff is thus the principal conservator of the peace in his county, yet by the express directions of the great charter, (c. 17.) he, together with the constable, coroner, and certain other officers of the King, are forbidden to hold any pleas of the Crown; or, in other words, to try any criminal offence. For it would be highly unbecoming, that the executioners of justice should be also the Judges; should impose, as well as levy, fines and amercements; should one day condemn a man to death, and personally execute him the next. Neither may he act as an ordinary Justice of the peace during the time of his office: For this this would be equally inconfiftent; he being in many refpects the fervant of the Juftices. Stat. 1 Mar. ft. 2. c. 8.

In his minifterial capacity the Sheriff is bound to execute all procefs iffuing from the King's Courts of juftice. In the commencement of civil caufes, he is to ferve the writ, to arreft, and to take bail; when the caufe comes to trial, he muft fummon and return the Jury; when it is determined, he muft fee the judgment of the Court carried into execution. In criminal matters, he alfo arrefts and imprifons, he returns the Jury, he has the cuftody of the delinquent, and he executes the fentence of the Court, though it extend to death itfelf. See title Execution.

As the King's Bailiff, it is his bufinefs to preferve the rights of the King within his Bailiwick; for fo his county is frequently called in the writs: A word introduced by the Princes of the Norman line; in imitation of the French, whofe territory is divided into bailiwicks, as that of England into counties Fortefc. de L. L. c. 24. He muft feife to the King's ufe all lands devolved to the Crown by attainder or efcheat; muft levy all fines and forfeitures; muft feife and keep all waifs, wrecks, eftrays, and the like, unlefs they be granted to fome Subject; and muft alfo collect the King's rents within the bailiwick, if commanded by procefs from the Exchequer. Dalt. c. 9.

V. By ftat. 23 H. 6. c. 9, it is provided, "that no Sheriff fhall let to farm, in any manner, his county, nor any of his bailiwicks, hundreds, or wapentakes."

In the conftruction hereof it hath been holden, that this is a particular law, and muft be pleaded, otherwife the Judges cannot take notice of it. 3 Keb. 678.

It hath been held, that a leafe thereof, though no rent was ever received, is within the ftatute: the intent thereof being that Sheriffs fhould keep their counties in their own hands. 20 Hen. 7. 13. See Dalt. Sher. 23, 24: Plowd. 87: Moor 781.

To execute his various duties, the Sheriff has under him many inferior officers; an Under-Sheriff, Bailiffs, and Gaolers; who muft neither buy, fell, nor farm their offices, on forfeiture of 500*l*.

By ftat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15, "it fhall not be lawful for any perfon to buy, fell, let, or take to farm, the office of Under Sheriff or Deputy-Sheriff, Seal keeper, County-clerk, Shire-clerk, Gaoler, Bailiff, or any other office pertaining to the office of High-Sheriff, or to contract for any of the faid offices, on forfeiture of 500*l.* one moiety to his Majefty, the other to fuch as fhall fue in any Court at Weftminfter, within two years after the offence." § 10.

"Provided, that nothing in this act fhall hinder any High-Sheriff from conftituting an Under-Sheriff or Deputy-Sheriff, as by Law he may; nor to hinder the Under-Sheriff in any cafe of the High-Sheriff's death, when he acts as High-Sheriff, from conftituting a Deputy; nor to hinder the receipt of, or accounting to the Sheriff, &c. for legal fees. See Dalt. 3, 514: Hob. 13: 2 Brownl. 281.

The High-Sheriff may execute the office himfelf; and the Under-Sheriff hath not, nor ought to have, any eftate or intereft in the office itfelf; neither may he do any thing in his own name, but only in the name of the High-Sheriff, who is anfwerable for him. Dalt. Sher. 3: Salk. 96.

By § 8 of the above ftatute, 3 Geo. 1. c. 15, it is enacted, "that if any Sheriff fhall die before the expiration of his year, or before he be fuperfeded, the Under-Sheriff fhall neverthelefs continue in his office, and execute the fame in the name of the deceafed, till another Sheriff be appointed and fworn; and the Under-Sheriff fhall be anfwerable for the execution of the office during fuch interval, as the High-Sheriff would have been; and the fecurity given by the Under-Sheriff, and his pledges, fhall ftand a fecurity to the King, and all perfons whatfoever, for the performing of his office during fuch interval."

The Under-Sheriff, before he intermeddle with the office, is to be fworn; this was firft injoined by ftat. 27 Eliz. c. 12, and the form of the oath there prefcribed. Before this ftatute the Under-Sheriff was never fworn. 1 Rol. Rep 274, per Coke. And now by ftat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 19, it is enacted, that all Under-Sheriffs of any counties in South Britain, except the counties in Wales, and county palatine of Chefter, before they enter upon their offices, fhall take an oath, appointed by that act, for the execution of their office.

A Sheriff cannot appoint two Deputy-Sheriffs extraordinary. 2 Wilf. 378.

The Under-Sheriff ufually performs all the duties of the office; a very few only excepted, where the perfonal prefence of the High Sheriff is neceffary. But no Under-Sheriff fhall abide in his office above one year; ftat. 42 Ed. 3. c. 9; and if he does, by ftat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 8, he forfeits 200*l* a very large penalty in thofe early days. And no Under-Sheriff or Sheriff's officer fhall practife as an attorney, during the time he continues in fuch office; for this would be a great inlet to partiality and oppreffion. Stat. 1 H. 5. c. 4. But thefe falutary regulations are fhamefully evaded, by practifing in the names of other attornies, and putting in fham deputies by way of nominal Under-Sheriffs; by reafon of which, fays Dalton, the Under-Sheriffs and Bailiffs do grow fo cunning in their feveral places, that they are able to deceive, and it may well be feared that many of them do deceive, both the King, the High-Sheriff, and the county. Dalt. c. 115.

I. Simony is defined to be Studiosa voluntas emendi vel vendendi aliquid spirituale aut spirituali annexum opere subsecuto.—Also venditio rei sacræ. And some authors mention Simony per munus triplex; as per munus à manu, i.e. by bribery, where money is paid down for a benefice; per munus à lingua, by favour and flattery; per munus ab obsequio, i.e. by a sordid subjection to the patron, or doing him services: To which has been added, the making of presents, without taking any notice of expecting a church benefice.

Some authors tell us of a person who took off the cap of Grosulan, an Archbishop of Milan, and shaking it, told the people, Iste Grosulanus qui est sub ista cappa (& non de alio dico) est Simoniacus, &c. per munus à manu, i.e by bribery; per munus à lingua, i.e. by favour and flattery; per munus ab obsequio, i.e. by a sordid subjecting himself to the patron. Cowell.

Simony is defined by Blackstone to be, the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice, for money, gift, or reward [or benefit]. It was, by the Canon Law, a very grievous crime; and is so much the more odious, because, as Coke observes, it is ever accompanied with perjury, for the presentee is sworn to have committed no Simony. 3 Inst. 156, 176. However, it was not an offence punishable in a criminal way at the Common Law, it being thought sufficient to leave the Clerk to ecclesiastical censures. But as these did not affect the Simoniacal patron, nor were efficacious enough to repel the notorious practice of the thing, divers acts of Parliament have been made to restrain it by means of civil forfeitures; which the modern prevailing usage, with regard to spiritual preferments, calls aloud to put in execution. 2 Comm. c. 18.

Simony is generally said to be the buying or selling holy orders, or some ecclesiastical benefice. An ecclesiastical benefice, in the larger sense of it, in which it is here used, comprehends not only parochial benefices, but all ecclesiastical dignities and promotions. As by this offence worthy and learned men are kept out of the church, and a door is, to the great scandal of religion and prejudice of morality, opened to persons by no means qualified to discharge the duties of the sacred function, it is of the utmost consequence to society that it be prevented. With a view to this, canons were anciently made, by which a very strict oath was injoined; and it was punished with deprivation or disability, as the case required.

Simony is mentioned as a thing so detestable in the eye of the Common Law, that a plaintiff in quare impedit could not, before the statute of Westm. 2, recover damages for the loss of his presentation, it being considered as a thing of no value; nor could a guardian in socage present to an advowson in the right of his heir, because, as he could take nothing for it, he could not bring it to account. 1 Inst 17, b; 89, a.

In Cro. Ch. 353, it is said that this has, by the law of God and of the land, been always accounted a great offence. In Hob. 167, it is laid down, that a bond on a Simoniacal contract is against Law, because ex turpi causâ, and contra bonos mores; nay, that it is as void as an usurious bond, which, if paid by an executor, is a devastavit. The same is held in Cro. Car. 425. In Carth. 252, such bonds are said to be void as being against law, although they are not so declared by the statute. But as has been already remarked, since neither the consideration of the heinousness of the offence, nor the provision made against it by the Canon or Common Law, was sufficient to put a stop to this mischief, it was at length restrained by the Statute Law.

By the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6, it is, for avoiding of Simony, enacted, that if any patron for any corrupt consideration, by gift or promise, directly or indirectly, shall present or collate any person to an ecclesiastical benefice or dignity; such presentation shall be void, and the presentee be rendered incapable of ever enjoying the same benefice: and the Crown shall present to it for that turn only. The words of the statute are, "that if any person or persons, Bodies-politick or corporate, shall for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit, or benefit, or by reason of any promise, agreement, grant, bond, or covenant, of or for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit, or benefit; present or collate any person to any benefice, &c. every such presentation, collation, &c. shall be utterly void, and it shall be lawful for the Queen, her heirs and successors, to present, &c. unto such benefice, &c. and that every person or persons, Bodies-politick or corporate, that shall give or take any such sum of money, &c. or take or make any such promise, &c. shall forfeit the double value of one year's profit of every such benefice, &c. and the person so corruptly taking, &c. such benefice, &c. shall be adjudged a disabled person in law to enjoy the same." § 5.

"If any person shall for any sum of money, reward, &c. admit, institute, instal, induct, invest, or place any person in or to any benefice, &c. every such person shall forfeit the double value of one year's profit of every such benefice, and the same shall be void; and the patron collate thereto, as if the party admitted were dead." § 6.

But if the presentee dies, without being convicted of such Simony in his life-time, it is enacted by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 16, that the simoniacal contract shall not prejudice any other innocent patron, on pretence of lapse to the Crown or otherwise. Also by the stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 12, if any person for money or profit shall procure, in his own name, or the name of any other, the next presentation to any living ecclesiastical, and shall be presented thereupon, this is declared to be a simoniacal contract; and the party is subjected to all the ecclesiastical penalties of Simony; is disabled from holding the benefice, and the presentation devolves to the Crown.—Before this statute, it was doubted whether it was Simony for a clerk to purchase the next turn in a living for himself.

Upon these statutes many questions have arisen, with regard to what is, and what is not Simony. And, among others, these points seem to be clearly settled: 1. That to purchase a presentation, the living being actually vacant, is open and notorious Simony; this being expressly in the face of the statute. Cro. Eliz. 788: Moor 914. Lord Hardwicke was of opinion, that the sale of an advowson, during a vacancy, is not within the statute of Simony, as the sale of the next presentation is: but it is void by the Common Law. Ambl. 268. See 2 Comm. 22, in n.

2. For a Clerk to bargain for the next presentation, the incumbent being sick and about to die, was Simony, even before the statute of Queen Anne. Hob. 165. And now, by that statute, to purchase, either in his own name or another's, the next presentation, and to be thereupon

thereupon presented at any future time to the living, is direct and palpable Simony.

3. For a father to purchase such a presentation, in order to provide for his son, is not Simony; for the son is not concerned in the bargain, and the father is by nature bound to make a provision for him. Cro. Eliz. 686: Moor 916.—But where a father, the church being void, contracts with the grantee of the void turn to permit the grantor to present his son, and it is done, this is a simoniacal promotion. Cro. Jac. 533. So if a father, in consideration of a clerk's marrying his daughter, doth covenant with the father of the clerk, to procure for him a presentation to a certain church when it shall become void, and he is afterwards thereto presented, it is a simoniacal promotion. Cro. Car. 425.

By § 8, of the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6, if persons also corruptly resign or exchange their benefices, both the giver and taker shall forfeit double the value of the money, or other corrupt consideration. Under this clause it has been held, that any resignation or exchange for money is corrupt, however apparently fair the transaction; as where a father, wishing that his son in orders should be employed in the duties of his profession, agreed to secure by bond the payment of an annuity exactly equal to the annual produce of a benefice, in consideration of the incumbent's resigning in favour of his son: The annuity being afterwards in arrear, the bond was put in suit, and the defendant pleaded the simoniacal resignation in bar: The Court, though they declared that it was an unconscientious defence, yet as the resignation had been made for money, determined, that it was corrupt and simoniacal, and in consequence that the bond was void. Young v. Jones, E. T. 1782, cited 4 Comm. c. 4. p. 62, n.

4. If a simoniacal contract be made with the patron, the clerk not being privy thereto, the presentation for that turn shall indeed devolve to the Crown as a punishment of the guilty patron; but the clerk, who is innocent, does not incur any disability or forfeiture. 3 Inst. 154: Cro. Jac. 385.

5. Bonds given to pay money to charitable uses, on receiving a presentation to a living, are not simoniacal, provided the patron or his relations be not benefited thereby; for this is no corrupt consideration, moving to the patron. Noy 142: Stra. 534.

6. Bonds of resignation, in case of non-residence or taking any other living, are not simoniacal; there being no corrupt consideration herein, but such only as is for the good of the public. Cro. Car. 180. So also bonds to resign, when the patron's son comes to canonical age, are legal; upon the reason before given, that the father is bound to provide for his son. Cro. Jac. 248, 274: but see post. II. ad finem

7. Lastly, General Bonds to resign at the Patron's request, were heretofore, by frequent determinations, allowed to be legal; as they possibly might be given for one of the legal considerations before mentioned; and where there is a possibility that a transaction may be fair, the Law will not in general suppose it iniquitous without proof. Cro. Car. 180: Stra. 227: and see post II.—But in the case of the Bishop of London v. Ffytche, it was adjudged, by the House of Lords, that general bonds to resign at the Patron's request, are simoniacal and illegal. See post. II. ad finem.—At all times, however, if the party could prove the contract to have been a corrupt one, such proof was admitted, in order to shew the bond simoniacal, and therefore void. Neither would the patron be suffered to make an ill use of such a general bond of resignation; as by extorting a composition for tithes, procuring an annuity for his relation, or by demanding a resignation wantonly or without good cause, approved by law; as for the benefit of his own son, or on account of non-residence, plurality of livings, or gross immorality in the incumbent. 1 Vern. 411: 1 Eq. Ab. 86, 87: Stra. 534: 2 Comm. c. 18. See post. II.

The following determinations will further elucidate this part of the subject.

It was agreed by all the Justices, Trin. 8 Jac. that if the patron present any person to a benefice with cure, for money, that such presentation, &c. is simoniacal, though the presentee were not privy to it. 12 Rep. 74.—Simony may be by compact between strangers, without the privity of the incumbent or patron. 1 Cro. 331: Hob. 165: Noy 22: 3 Inst. 153.

A donative is not within the words of the statute; yet, as a corrupt presentation thereto is within the mischief intended to be thereby remedied, it is within the meaning of it. Cro. Car. 331. For the same reason the corrupt promoting to, or obtaining of a curacy, has been held to be Simony. Carth. 485.

This offence is more frequently committed when a church is void; but it may be committed when it is full. If a contract be, when a church is full, to give a sum of money for a presentation to it, when it shall become void, this is a simoniacal contract. 1 Brownl. 7. So the buying when a church is full, with intent to present a certain person, and the presenting that person when the living becomes void, is Simony. Lane 102: Noy 25. So the purchase of the next avoidance of a church when the incumbent is sick or near dying, with intent to present a certain person, and the presenting him, is Simony. Winch 63: Noy 25: Hughes 390. But the purchase of an advowson in fee, when the incumbent was on his death-bed, without any privity of the clerk afterwards presented, has been held not to be simoniacal; and not to vacate the next presentation. 2 Black. Rep. 1052.

From all these authorities it appears, that although it be lawful, except in the cases excepted, to purchase the next avoidance when a church is full, there is great danger of being guilty, at least in foro conscientiæ, of this offence. It is fit it should be so, else men would be for ever purchasing for their sons and friends, and the almost necessary consequence of such a traffic in livings, would be the filling the church with very improper persons. 4 New Abr. 469.

It is equally Simony where the presentation is by a person usurping the right to present, as if it had been by the person having a good right. 3 Inst. 153. So if a presentation be by one usurping the right of patronage, and pending a quare impedit for removing his clerk, who is after removed, the living is sold; this is Simony, for the church was never full of that clerk: And by this means the statute might be eluded, for it would only be getting an usurper to present while the living was void, and then selling it. 3 Lev. 115: 2 Vent. 32. A corrupt contract with the wife of the patron is simoniacal, although the patron is not privy to it. 1 Rol. Rep. 255: Cro. Jac. 385. If a clerk contracts to give money for being presented to a church, and is after presented gratis, this is Simony. Lane 103. In this case the clerk is an unfit person, for having at that time been capable of intending to buy a living corruptly. It also implies some defect in him; for the presumption is, that persons well qualified will always be preferred, and have therefore no need to purchase. This offence may be by a corrupt contract between strangers, even when neither the patron nor incumbent is privy to it; for if there be a corrupt contract, it matters not by whom it is made: But in this case the presentee is not simoniacus, and only simoniacè promotus. Cro. Car. 331: Sid. 329: 3 Lev. 337: Lane 73, 103.

If a stranger, the church being void, contracts with the patron for a grant of the void turn, and presents a clerk not privy to the contract; yet, although the grant being of a chose in action, is void, as the incumbent comes in by a simoniacal contract, he is not to be considered as an usurper, but as one simoniacè promotus. Cro. Eliz. 788.

By the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6, corrupt elections and resignations, in Colleges, Hospitals, and other eleemosynary Corporations, are also punished with forfeiture of double the value, vacating the place or office, and a devolution of the right of election for that turn to the Crown. §§ 2, 3.

In an action by the Incumbent for the use and occupation of his glebe, the defendant cannot give in evidence the simoniacal presentation of the plaintiff. 5 Term Rep. 4. But it may be given in evidence by a defendant who is sued for the tithes. Hob. 168. See title Residence.

II. Premising that it has finally been determined, that General Bonds of Resignation are simoniacal and illegal, in the case stated at the end of this division; it may be useful to preserve the following series of decisions and reasoning on the whole of this part of the subject.

A Bond of Resignation is a bond given by the person intended to be presented to a benefice, with condition to resign the same; and is special or general. The condition of a special one is to resign the benefice in favour of some certain person, as a son, kinsman, or friend of the patron, when he shall be capable of taking the same. By a general bond, the incumbent is bound to resign on the request of the patron. 4 New Abr. 470.

A bond with condition to resign within three months after being requested, to the intent that the patron might present his son when he should be capable, was held good; and the judgment was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber; for that a man may, without any colour of Simony, bind himself for good reasons, as if he takes a second benefice, or if he be non-resident, or that the patron may present his son, to resign: But if the condition had been to let the patron have a lease of the glebe or tithes, or to pay a sum of money, it had been simoniacal. Cro. Jac. 248, Jones v. Lawrence.

The doctrine laid down in Jones and Lawrence, which was in the case of a special bond, was, not many years after, extended to that of a general bond; and the judgment in this last was also affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Cro. Car. 180, Babington v. Wood.

The authority of those two cases having been repeatedly recognised, at length it was considered as a point settled, that a general bond of resignation was good, and the Court have even refused to let the validity of it be called in question. Str. 227, Peele v. Countess of Carlisle.

If a bond of resignation, which ought only to be made use of to keep the incumbent to residence or good behaviour, be made an improper use of, the Court of Chancery will interpose. Chan. Prec. 513: 2 Chan. Rep. 399.—A perpetual injunction was granted against such a bond, because it appeared, on hearing the cause, that the patron had made use of it to prevent the incumbent from demanding his tithes. 1 Vern. 411.

An injunction has been granted where an ill use has been made of the bond, i. e. by taking an annuity from the incumbent, for the use of the nephew, for whom the living was intended. Str. 534.

A bill being brought to be relieved against a judgment obtained on a bond to resign upon request, it appeared to have been offered to the incumbent, that if he would give 700*l*. he should not be sued upon it. Satisfaction was ordered to be entered upon the judgment, and a perpetual injunction was granted. A new bond of resignation in penalty of 200*l*. a much less sum, was indeed decreed; but no action was to be brought on it without leave of the Court: And the Lord Keeper said, he did not know that such bonds were used before the statute; that they had been since allowed only to preserve the benefice for the patron himself, or some child or friend of his, or to prevent non-residence or a vitious course of life in an incumbent; and that though a bond be to resign generally, he would not allow it to be put in suit, unless some such reason was shewn for requiring a resignation, because a door would be thereby opened for Simony. Eq. Cases Abr. 86.

On a bill to be relieved against a judgment on such a bond, the defendant proved misbehaviour, and it was for that reason dismissed. Eq. Cases Abr. 228. So a bond to resign on request shall not be made use of to turn out the incumbent, unless there be non-residence or gross misbehaviour; and if any other use be made of it, the Court will grant an injunction. Chanc. Prec. 513.

Even when it seemed to be settled, that such bonds were good both in Law and Equity; a question arose, whether the Ordinary was obliged to accept a resignation on such a bond? It was said to be in the power of the Ordinary to discourage the use of such bonds, for he might refuse to accept a resignation made by constraint of one of them. Wats. Com. Inc. 24.

The Bishop refused to accept a resignation on such a bond, and ordered the incumbent to continue to serve the cure, declaring that he would never countenance such unjust practices. 2 Chan. Rep. 398. An Ordinary is not obliged to accept a resignation on such a bond, unless there be just cause to turn the incumbent out of the benefice. Chan. Prec. 513.

A grant was to a clerk of the two first of three livings which should fall, provided he was capable when they did fall of holding them. In order to make himself capable of taking one of these benefices, Griffith the clerk tendered a resignation of another benefice to the Ordinary, but he refused to accept it. One of the questions made in this case was, whether the Ordinary was obliged to accept this resignation? It was insisted on one side, that no case could be adduced to shew that the Ordinary can arbitrarily refuse to accept a resignation of a benefice. On the other side, this objection was answered, with saying, that the plainest points, having scarce ever been called in question, are supported by the fewest authorities. No decree was made as to this point; but Lord Hardwicke intimated it once or twice so strongly to be his opinion, that the Ordinary ought to have accepted the resignation, that he did afterwards accept it. This was not indeed in the case of a resignation bond; but it was perhaps a stronger case. Rockingham (Marq.) v. Griffith, Pasch. 27 Geo 2. And see more fully, this Dictionary, title Resignation.

Whatever doubt was entertained as to the Ordinary's being obliged to accept a resignation on such a bond, two points were determined; that the patron could not present again till he had accepted it; and that, whether he did or not, the obligor was liable to the penalty of the bond, if he undertook, as is usually done, for the acceptance of the Ordinary. 4 New Abr. 473. If a presentation be made before the Bishop accepts the resignation of the last incumbent, it is void. Noy 147: Cro. Jac. 198. If the obligor binds himself to resign a benefice, it is upon him to procure the Ordinary's acceptance of his resignation. Lutw. 693.

To an action upon a bond, with condition so to resign on request that the patron may present again, it was pleaded, that the Ordinary would not accept the defendant's resignation. On a demurrer, this plea was held bad; and per Cur', it should have been averred that the Ordinary accepted the resignation; for his acceptance being (as is laid down Cro. Jac. 198.) necessary to complete the resignation, it was the duty of the obligor, who undertook to resign, to procure this. So if one undertakes to enfeoff another, he undertakes to make livery as incident thereto. The Bishop, as to the obligee, is a stranger; and if an obligor undertakes for the act of a stranger, he is at his peril (as is held 1 Saund. 215,) to procure it. MS. Reports, Hil. 28 G. 2. Ilescott v. Gray.

The result of the whole seemed fully settled, that bonds of resignation were good in Law, and that Equity would restrain all improper use of them. The writer from whom the above abridgment is taken remarks, that tho' it is not always true, yet it is much oftener so than superficial and hasty thinkers imagine, that the Law, and particularly that part of it which is deduced from judicial determinations, is founded in solid reason; and it may perhaps be shewn that it is so in the present case. The attempting this will at least be excusable, because some great and good men have expressed their dislike of these bonds. 4 New Abr. 473.

The principal of the particular objections was that which is reported to have fallen from Holt Ch. J. (Comb. 394,) that a resignation-bond comes as near Simony as possible; it being easy to procure a round sum of money thereby. By making the penalty of the bond adequate to the value of the benefice, and agreeing privately that the money shall be paid, it would without doubt be an oblique way of selling it, and more than come near, for it would be downright Simony. If there was no other way, (it was argued,) or not as easy a one, to do the same thing, this objection would be insurmountable; but if there was, it could never be of much importance to stop this up. The same clerk, whose conscience would allow him to do this, might as well advance the money agreed upon at first; or, if that did not suit him, give an absolute bond to pay the money at a future day. As the same crime might still be committed, and with as much secresy, what good end would it answer to prohibit such bonds, which, as is allowed by all, may be made use of by a patron to punish neglect of duty or immoral conduct in the incumbent, and for other good purposes? 4 New Abr. 473, 474.

Another objection is, that when the patron takes a general bond of resignation, it is only a presentation during pleasure. Be it so (it has been answered); and suppose, which is the utmost that can be supposed, that it is not taken with a design to awe the incumbent into greater care in the discharge of his duty, but to let some friend or relation afterwards into the benefice: It by no means necessarily follows that the church, which is the grand thing to be guarded against, will therefore be filled with an unfit person. If the successor, which may be the case, is better qualified for the office, the interests of religion will be advanced by the exchange. If he be not so well qualified, it is a misfortune; but it is such a one as, in the present circumstances of things, cannot be entirely prevented. While the right of patronage, or while human nature continues as it is, there will be mistakes in judgment, and patrons will be induced by partiality to judge too well of the abilities of a relation or friend; but it makes no difference whether either of these happens when the benefice is at first void, or at any given time after; or if there be any, it is in favour of the practice, for the mischief, for so long at least as the first incumbent holds the living, is thereby postponed. 4 New Abr. 474.

These arguments are now however finally put at rest. For, in the great case of the Bishop of London v. Ffytche, it was determined by the House of Lords, that a General Bond of Resignation is simoniacal and illegal. The circumstances of that case were briefly these: Mr. F. the patron, presented Mr. Eyre, his clerk, to the Bishop of London for institution. The Bishop refused to admit the presentation, because Mr. Eyre had given a general bond of resignation. Upon this Mr. Ffytche brought a Quare impedit against the Bishop; to which the Bishop pleaded, that the presentation was simoniacal and void, by reason of the bond of resignation; and to this plea Mr. Ffytche demurred. From a series of judicial decisions, (many of them noticed above,) the Court of Common Pleas thought themselves bound to determine in his favour; and that judgment was affirmed by the Court of King's Bench. But these judgments were afterwards reversed by the House of Lords. The principal question was this, viz. whether such a bond was a reward, gift, profit, or benefit, to the patron, under stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6? If it were so, the statute had declared the presentation to be simoniacal and void. Such a bond is so manifestly intended by the parties to be a benefit to the patron, that it seems surprising that it should have been ever argued and decided, that it was not a benefit within the meaning of the statute. Yet many learned men have expressed themselves dissatisfied with this determination of the Lords, and are of opinion that their judgment would be different if the question were brought before them a second time. But it is generally understood that the Lords, from a regard to their dignity, and to preserve a consistency in their judgments, will never permit a question, which they have once decided, to be again debated in their House. See 2 Comm. c. 18. p. 280, n.; and Bro. P. C. 8vo. ed. title Clergy. ca. 3, where it appears that Six Judges delivered their opinions in favour of the bond, and only two against it. The decision of the House was made by a division of 19 to 18.

 Judges

In subsequent cases it has been determined, that a bond given by an incumbent to the patron on presentation, to reside on the living, or to resign if he did not return to it after notice, and also not to commit waste, &c. on the parsonage-house, was good. 4 Term Rep. 78. And where a bond was given to resign a rectory when the patron's son came of age, and before that time to reside and keep the chancel and rectory-house in repair; it was decided by the Court of King's Bench in favour of the bond, without argument. 4 Term Rep. 359.—Though it is suggested that this determination was expected to be carried by appeal to the House of Lords, it is believed the parties acquiesced in it, on the ground that it essentially differed from that of the Bishop of London v. Ffytche. See 2 Comm. c. 18. p. 280, n: Treat. Eq. c. 4. § 5, n.

SIMPLE CONTRACT, Debt by. Debts by Simple-contract are such, where the Contract upon which the obligation arises, is neither ascertained by matter of record, nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence, the most simple of any; or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and (therefore only) better than a verbal promise. 2 Comm. c. 30. p. 466. See titles Assumpsit; Fraud, &c.

Simple-Larceny; See title Larceny.

SIMPLEX, simple, or single; as Charta simplex is a deed-poll, or single deed.

Simplex Beneficium, A minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice opposed to a cure of souls; and which, therefore, is consistent with any parochial cure, without coming under the name of pluralities.

Simplex Justiciarius; This style was anciently used for any puisne Judge, that was not chief in any Court: And there is a form of a writ in the Register, beginning thus:—I, John Wood, a simple Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, &c.

SIMUL CUM: together with.] Words used in indictments, and declarations of trespass against several persons, where some of them are known, and others not known: As, the plaintiff declares against A. B. the defendant, together with C. D., E. F., and divers others unknown, for that they committed such a trespass, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 469. If a writ is generally against two or more persons, the plaintiff may declare against one of them, with a simul cum; but if a man bring an original writ against one only, and declares with a simul cum, he abates his own writ. Comber. 260. See titles Action; Joinder in Action.

SINE ASSENSU CAPITULI, A Writ, where a Bishop, Dean, Prebendary, or Master of an hospital, aliens the lands holden in right of his bishoprick, deanry, house, &c. without the assent of the chapter or fraternity; in which case his successor shall have this writ. F. N. B. 195. And if a Bishop or Prebendary be disseised, and afterwards he releaseth to the disseisor, this is an alienation, upon which may be brought a writ De sine assensu capituli: But the successor may enter upon the disseisor, if he doth not die seised, notwithstanding the release of his predecessor; for, by the release, no more passeth than he may rightfully release. A person may have this writ of lands upon demises of several predecessors, &c. New Nat. Br. 432.

SINE-CURE, Is where a Rector of a parish hath a Vicar under him, endowed and charged with the Cure; so that the Rector is not obliged either to duty or residence. And when a church is fallen down, and the parish becomes destitute of parishioners, it is said to be a Sine cure. Wood's Inst. 153. See title Parson I.

Sine Die, without day; See title Day.

SINGLE-BOND, Simplex Obligatio. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another at a day appointed. See title Bond.

SI NON OMNES, A Writ on association of Justices, by which, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more of them may finish the business. Reg. Orig. 202: F. N. B. 185. And after the writ of association, it is usual to make out a writ of Si non omnes, directed to the first Justices, and also to those who are so associated to them; which, reciting the purport of the two former commissions, commands the Justices, that if all of them cannot conveniently be present, such a number of them may proceed, &c. F. N. B. 111. See title Assises, &c.

SINKING FUND; See title National Debt.

SIPESSOCNA, A Franchise, Liberty, or Hundred. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 6: Rot. Parl. 16 H. 2. Sithesoca.

SI RECOGNOSCAT, A Writ that, according to the old Books, lay for a creditor against his debtor, who had acknowledged before the Sheriff in the County-Court, that he owed his creditor such a sum received of him. Old Nat. Br. 68.

SITE; See Scite.

SITHCUNDMAN, Sax.] Such a man as had the office to lead the men of a town or parish. Leg. Ina, cap. 56. Dugdale says, that in Warwickshire the Hundreds were formerly called Sithesoca; and that Sithsocundman and Sithcundman was the chief officer within such a division, i. e. the High Constable of the Hundred. Dugd. Antiq. Warw.

SITHESOCA; See Sipessocna.

SIX CLERKS IN CHANCERY; Officers in Chancery of ancient continuance; who were heretofore spiritual persons, as may appear by stat. 14 & 15 Hen. 8, which was made to enable them to marry. They transact and file all proceedings by bill and answer; and also issue some patents that pass the Great Seal, as pardons of men for chance-medley, patents for ambassadors, Sheriffs' patents, and some others. They likewise sign all office copies in order to be read in Court, and also certificates; and attend upon the Court in Term, by two at a time, at Westminster, and there read the pleadings. See title Chancellor.

SIXHINDI, Servants of the same nature with Rodknights, viz. bound to attend their Lord wherever he went; but they were accounted among the English Saxons as freemen, because they had lands in fee, subject only to such tenure. Leg. Inæ, cap. 26. See Hindeni.

SIZEL; Where pieces of money are cut out from the flat bars of silver, after being drawn through a mill, into the respective sizes or dimensions of the money to be made; the residue is called by this name, and is melted down again. Lowndes's Ess. upon Coin, p. 96.

SKARKALLA, Seems to be an engine for catching of fish. 2 Inst. 38.

SKERDA, A scar or wound. Bract. lib. 3.

SKERRIES (Island, or Rock). Patent granted to William French, Esq. for a light-house there, confirmed, stat 3 Geo. 2. c. 36.

SKINNERS. None shall retain any servant, journeyman, &c. to work in the trade of a Skinner, unless he himself hath served seven years as an apprentice in the same trade, on pain to forfeit double the value of his ware wrought. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 9. See title Leather.

SKINS. None shall take the wool from any sheep-skin or lambskin, or buy Skins, but to make leather or parchment, &c. Stat. 5 El. c. 22. § 1. None but artizans skinners shall dress or export black coney-skins, 3 Jac. 1. c. 9. See further, titles Leather; Navigation Acts.

SKYVINAGE, The precincts of Calais. Stat. Antiq. 27 H. 6. c. 2.

SLADES, Sax. Slæd.] A long narrow piece or slip of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 465.

SLANDER, The maliciously defaming of a man in his reputation, profession, or livelihood, by words; as a Libel is by writing; which is actionable, &c. See titles Action II. 1; Libel.

SLAVES AND SLAVERY. Pure and proper Slavery does not, nay cannot, subsist in England; such, that is, whereby an absolute and unlimited power is given to the Master, over the life and fortune of the Slave. And, indeed, it is repugnant to reason, that such a state should subsist any where; and the Law of England abhors, and will not endure, the existence of Slavery within this nation: So that when an attempt was made to introduce it, by stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 3, which ordained, that all idle vagabonds should be made Slaves, and fed upon bread and water, or small drink, and refuse meat, should wear a ring of iron round their necks, arms, or legs; and should be compelled by beating, chaining, or otherwise, to perform the work assigned them, were it never so vile; the spirit of the nation could not brook this condition, even in the most abandoned rogues; and therefore this statute was repealed in two years afterwards, by stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 16. And now it is laid down, that a Slave, or Negro, the instant he lands in England, becomes a freeman; that is, the Law will protect him in the enjoyment of his person, and his property. Salk. 666. Yet, with regard to any right which the master may have lawfully acquired to the perpetual service of John or Thomas, this, says Blackstone, will remain exactly in the same state as before: [what that right is not, we shall presently see:] Hence too it follows, that the infamous and unchristian practice of withholding baptism from Negro servants, lest they should thereby gain their liberty, is totally without foundation, as well as without excuse. The Law of England acts upon general and extensive principles: it gives liberty, rightly understood, that is, protection to a Jew, a Turk, or a Heathen, as well as to those who profess the true religion of Christ; and it will not dissolve a civil obligation between master and servant, on account of the alteration of faith in either of the parties; but the Slave is entitled to the same protection in England before, as after, baptism; and, whatever service the heathen Negro owed of right to his American master, by general not by local law, the same (whatever it be) is he bound to render when brought to England and made a Christian. See 1 Comm. c. 14.

In the celebrated case of James Somersett, it was decided, that a heathen Negro, when brought to England, owes no service to an American, or any other, master. James Somersett had been made a Slave in Africa, and was sold there: from thence he was carried to Virginia, where he was bought, and brought by his master to England: Here he ran away from his master, who seized him and carried him on board a ship, where he was confined, in order to be sent to Jamaica to be sold as a Slave. Whilst he was thus confined, a habeas corpus was granted, ordering the captain of the ship "to bring up the body of James Somersett, with the cause of his detainer."—The above-mentioned circumstances being stated on the return to the writ, after much discussion in the Court of King's Bench, the Court were unanimously of opinion, that the return was insufficient, and that Somersett ought to be discharged. See Mr. Hargrave's excellent argument for the Negro. 11 St. Tr. 340; and the case reported in Lofft's Reports 1.

In consequence of this decision, if a ship laden with Slaves was obliged to put into an English harbour, all the Slaves on board might (and Mr. Christian says ought to) be set at liberty. Though there are acts of Parliament which recognise and regulate the Slavery of Negroes, yet it exists not in the contemplation of the Common Law: and the reason they are not declared free before they reach an English harbour, is only because their complaints cannot sooner be heard and redressed by the process of an English Court of Justice. 1 Comm. c. 14. p. 425, n.

Liberty, by the English Law, depends not on the complexion; and what was said even in the time of Queen Elizabeth is now substantially true, that the air of England is too pure for a Slave to breathe in. 2 Rushw. 468.

By stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 33, (continued and amended by stats. 31 Geo. 3. c. 54: 32 Geo. 3. c. 52, and subsequent acts; and explaining and amending a former statute of 29 Geo. 3. c. 66;) several humane provisions are made to restrain the cruelties practised in the African Slave-Trade. Bounties are given to the masters and surgeons of ships delivering the Slaves well at their destined port, &c. This, perhaps, is a happy prelude to the abolition of that detestable commerce; if it can by any means be accomplished with propriety, and safety to the general interests of the nation. See also stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 90: and the Journals of the House of Commons.

AN AFRICAN COMPANY is also established by stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 55, for carrying on a trade between Great Britain and the coasts and countries of Africa; and a Colony is for that purpose established on the Peninsula of Sierra Leone. This Company is intended to supersede, in time, the necessity of the African Slave-trade, by raising sugars there by native Africans; it being one of the conditions of the act, that the Company shall not deal in or employ Slaves. The Company is to last for thirty-one years from July 1, 1791.

SLEDGE. A Sledge or hurdle is generally allowed to draw offenders guilty of high treason to the gallows, to preserve them from the extreme torture of being dragged on the ground or pavement. 1 Hal. P. C. 82. See titles Execution of Criminals; Treason.

SLIPPA,

SLIPPA, A stirrup; and there is a tenure of land by holding the King's stirrup, in Cambridgeshire. Cart. 5. Hen. 7.

SLOUGH-SILVER, A rent paid to the castle of Wigmore, in lieu of certain days' work in harvest, heretofore reserved to the lord from his tenants. Pat. 43 Eliz.

SLUICE, Exclusa.] A frame to keep or let water out of a ground. By stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20, to destroy any Sluice or lock on any navigable river, is made felony without benefit of clergy. See title Locks.

SMAKA, A smack, or small light vessel. Cowell.

SMALL DEBTS, COURTS FOR. See title Courts of Conscience.

SMALT, Ital. Smalto.] That of which painters make their blue colouring; mentioned in stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

SMOKE-FARTHINGS, The Pentecostals or customary oblations, offered by the dispersed inhabitants within a diocese, when they made their procession to the mother cathedral church, came by degrees into a standing annual rent, called Smoke-farthings. Cowell.

SMOKE-SILVER. Lands were holden in some places by the payment of the sum of 6*d*. yearly to the Sheriff, called Smoke-silver. Pat. 4 Ed. 6.—Smoke-silver and Smoke-penny are to be paid to the ministers of divers parishes, as a modus in lieu of tithe-wood: And in some manors, formerly belonging to religious houses, there is still paid, as appendant to the said manors, the ancient Peter-pence, by the name of Smoke-money. Twisd. Hist. Vindicat. 77.

SMUGGLERS, Those persons who conceal prohibited goods, and defraud the King of his customs on the sea-coasts, by importing goods without paying the duties, imposed by the laws of Customs and Excise. See these titles, particularly the first.

SNOTTERING-SILVER. There was a custom in the village of Wylegh, that all the servile tenants should pay for their tenements a small duty called Snottering-silver, to the Abbot of Colchester. Placit. 18 Edw. 1.

SNUFF, OR SNUSH; Mixing and colouring it with oaker, umber, or fustick, yellow ebony, tobacco dust, sand, &c. incurs a penalty of 3*l*. for every pound weight. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 46. The penalties of adulterating tobacco, extended to snuff, stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 11. See titles Excise; Navigation-Acts; Tobacco.

SOAP; See Sopa.

SOC; See Soke.

SOCAGE, OR SOCCAGE, Socagium; from Fr. Soc, vomer, a coulter or plough-share.]. A tenure of lands by or for certain inferior services of husbandry, to be performed to the Lord of the fee. See further, title Tenures III. 3.

Skene de verbor. signif. says, Socage is a tenure of lands, when a man is enfeoffed freely, without any service, ward, relief, or marriage; and pays to his lord such duty as is called petit-serjeanty, &c.

This was a tenure of so large an extent, that Littleton tells us, all the lands in England, which were not held in knights-service, were held in Socage. So that it seems the land was divided between these two tenures; and as they were of different natures, so the descent of these lands was in a different manner; for the lands held in knights-service descended to the eldest son; but these held in villano Socagio, equally among all the sons; yet if there was but one messuage, the eldest son was to have it, so as the rest had the value of that messuage to be divided between them. Bracton, l. 2. c. 35, 36. See title Tenures III. 3, &c.

SOCAGERS, SOCMANS, SOCMEN, OR SOKEMANS, Socmanni.] Such tenants as hold their lands and tenements by Socage-tenure, Kitchin, fol. 81. Sokemans of base tenures, ibid.; and Sokemans of ancient demesne; which last seem most properly to be styled Sockmans. Cowell. See title Tenures.

The husbandmen among our Saxon ancestors were of two sorts; one, that hired the Lord's outland, or tenementary land, like our farmers; the other, that tilled and manured his inland or demeans; (yielding operam, not censum, work, not rent;) and were thereupon called his Sockmen, or ploughmen. Spelman of Feuds, cap. 7. But after the Conquest, the proper Sockmanni, or Sokemanni, often mentioned in Domesday, were those tenants who held by no servile tenure, but commonly paid their rent as a Soke or sign of freedom to the Lord, though they were sometimes obliged to customary duties for the service and honour of their Lord. Cowell. See also Britton, c. 66: Fleta, l. 1. c. 8.

SOCNA; See Soke.

SOCOME, A custom of grinding corn at the Lord's mill; and Bond Socome is where the tenants are bound to it. Blount.

SODOMY; See B.

SODOR AND MAN, BISHOPRICK OF, Was formerly within the province of Canterbury, but annexed to that of York, by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 31. See title MAN, Isle of.

SOKE, SOK, SOC, SOCA; Liberty or privilege of tenants excused from customary burdens and impositions. Soka, or Soke, also signifies the power of administering justice, and the territory or precinct in which the chief Lord did exercise his Sac, Sake, or Saka, his liberty of keeping Court, or holding trials within his own Soke or jurisdiction. Sometimes it signified a payment or rent to the Lord for using his land with such liberty and privilege as made the tenant a Socman or freeholder, upon no other conditions than a quit-rent. Cowell. Vide Bract. lib. 3: Lamb. Leg. H. 1. 244: Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 47.

SOKEMANS; See Socagers; Villenage; Tenures.

SOKEMANRIES, The tenures of Socagers.

SOKE-REEVE, The Lord's rent-gatherer in the Soke or Soken. Fleta.

SOLARIUM, A Sollar, upper room, or garret.

SOLDIERS.

THE MILITARY STATE of the Kingdom includes the whole of the Soldiery; or, such persons as are peculiarly appointed among the rest of the people for the safeguard and defence of the realm.

In a land of liberty it is extremely dangerous to make a distinct order of the profession of arms. In absolute monarchies this is necessary for the safety of the Prince, and arises from the main principle of their constitution, which is that of governing by fear: But in free States the profession of a Soldier, taken singly and merely as a profession, is justly an object of jealousy. In these no man should take up arms, but with a view to defend his country, and its laws; he puts not off the citizen when he he enters the camp; but it is because he is a citizen, and would wish to continue so, that he makes himself for a while a Soldier. The Laws therefore and constitution of these kingdoms know no such state as that of a perpetual standing Soldier, bred up to no other profession than that of war: And it was not till the reign of Henry VII. that the Kings of England had so much as a guard about their persons.

In the time of our Saxon ancestors, as appears from Edward the Confessor's Laws, the military force of this kingdom was in the hands of the Dukes or Heretochs, who were constituted through every province and county in the kingdom; being taken out of the principal nobility, and such as were most remarkable for being "sapientes, fideles, et animosi." Their duty was to lead and regulate the English armies, with a very unlimited power; and because of this great power they were elected by the people in their full assembly, or folkmote, in the same manner as Sheriffs were elected. But it appears from History, that this large share of power, thus conferred by the people, though intended to preserve the liberty of the Subject, was unreasonably detrimental to the prerogative of the Crown.

Upon the Norman Conquest the Feodal Law was introduced here in all its rigour, the whole of which is built on a military plan. It is not necessary here to enter into the particulars of that constitution; it is sufficient to observe, that, in consequence thereof, all the lands in the kingdom were divided into what were called Knights' fees, in number above sixty thousand; and, for every Knight's fee, a Knight or Soldier, miles, was bound to attend the King in his wars, for forty days in a year; in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, the campaign was generally finished, and a kingdom either conquered or victorious. By this means the King had, without any expence, an army of sixty thousand men always ready at his command. This personal service, however, as early as the reign of Hen. II. degenerated into pecuniary commutations or aids; and at length all military tenures were entirely abolished by stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24.

Other measures were also pursued for the internal defence of the kingdom; which terminated in the establishment of the Militia, as at present regulated by our Statute Law. See title Militia.

When the nation was engaged in war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline were esteemed to be necessary, than could be expected from a mere Militia. And therefore at such times more rigorous methods were put in use for the raising of armies, and the due regulation and discipline of the Soldiery; which are to be looked upon only as temporary excrescences bred out of the distemper of the State, and not as any part of the permanent and perpetual laws of the kingdom. Martial Law has been said to be, in truth and reality, no law, but something indulged rather than allowed as a law. The necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the King's Courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land. Wherefore, Thomas Earl of Lancaster being condemned at Pontefract, 15 Edw. II. by martial law, his attainder was reversed (1 Ed. 3.) because it was done in time of peace. The Petition of Right (3 Car. 1.) enacted, that no Soldier shall be quartered on the Subject without his own consent; and that no commission should issue to proceed within this land according to martial law. And after the Restoration, King Charles II. kept up about five thousand regular troops, by his own authority, for guards and garrisons; which King James II. having by degrees increased to no less than thirty thousand, all paid from his own civil list; it was made one of the articles of the Bill of Rights, that the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of Parliament, is against law. Stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2.

But, as the fashion of keeping standing armies has of late years universally prevailed over Europe, it has also, for many years past, been annually judged necessary by by our Legislature, to maintain, even in time of peace, a standing body of troops, under the command of the Crown; who are, however, ipso facto disbanded at the expiration of every year, unless continued by Parliament. And it was enacted by stat. 10 W. 3. c. 1, that not more than twelve thousand regular forces should be kept on foot in Ireland, though paid at the charge of that kingdom; which permission is extended by stat. 8 Geo. 3. c. 13, to 16,235 men, in time of peace.

To prevent the Executive Power from being able to oppress, says Montesquieu, it is requisite that the armies with which it is entrusted should consist of the people, and have the same spirit with the people. Nothing then, according to these principles, ought to be more guarded against in a free State, than making the military power, when such a one is necessary to be kept on foot, a body too distinct from the people. Like ours, it should wholly be composed of natural Subjects; it ought only to be enlisted for a short and limited time; the Soldiers also should live intermixed with the people; no separate camp, no barracks, no inland fortresses, should be allowed. And perhaps it might be still better, if, by dismissing a stated number, and enlisting others at every renewal of their term, a circulation could be kept up between the army and the people, and the citizen and the Soldier be more intimately connected together. 1 Comm. c. 13.

It has been well remarked, that since the above was written with a genuine love of liberty by the Author, experience has proved that the most formidable enemy the people of England have to dread, is their own lawless mobs. Care ought, therefore, to be taken that Soldiers may not become too familiar with the people in great towns, lest they should be more inclined to join, than to quell a riot. Christian's Note on 1 Comm. ub. sup.—As to the principles of Martial Law, as modified to the state of present times, see this Dictionary, title Court Martial.

To keep this body of troops in order, an annual act of Parliament passes, "to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army, and their quarters." This regulates the manner in which they are to be dispersed among the several innkeepers and victuallers throughout the kingdom; and establishes a law martial for their government. By this, among other things, it is enacted, that if any Officer or Soldier shall excite, or join any mutiny, or, knowing of it, shall not give notice to the commanding officer; or shall desert, or list in any other regiment, or sleep upon his post, or leave it before he is relieved, or hold correspondence with a rebel or enemy, or strike or use violence to his superior officer, or shall disobey his lawful commands: such offender shall suffer such punishment as a Court Martial shall inflict, though it extend to death itself. See title Court Martial.

he

However expedient the most strict regulations may be in time of actual war, yet, in times of profound peace, a little relaxation of military rigour would not, one should hope, be productive of much inconvenience. And, upon this principle, though by our statute laws (still remaining in force, though not attended to) desertion in time of war is made felony, without benefit of clergy, and the offence is triable by a Jury, and before Justices at the Common Law; yet by our militia laws, a much lighter punishment is inflicted for desertion in time of peace. But our Mutiny Act makes no such distinction: for any of the faults above-mentioned are, equally at all times, punishable with death itself, if a Court Martial shall think proper. This discretionary power of the Court Martial is indeed to be guided by the directions of the Crown; which, with regard to military offences, has almost an absolute Legislative power. "His Majesty, says the act, may form articles of war, and constitute Courts Martial, with power to try any crime by such articles, and inflict penalties by sentence or judgment of the same." A vast and most important trust! an unlimited power to create crimes, and annex to them any punishments, not extending to life or limb! These are indeed forbidden to be inflicted, except for crimes declared to be so punishable by this act; which crimes, have been just enumerated, and, among which, any disobedience to lawful commands is one. 1 Comm. c. 13.

Blackstone observes, that one of the greatest advantages of our English Law is, that not only the crimes themselves which it punishes, but also the penalties which it inflicts, are ascertained and notorious; nothing is left to arbitrary discretion: the King by his Judges dispenses what the Law has previously ordained; but is not himself the legislator: The learned Commentator then expresses his regret, that a set of men, whose bravery has so often preserved the liberties of their country, should be reduced, to what he terms, a state of servitude in the midst of a nation of freemen! The policy of his observations, at least in the strong manner in which he enforces them, may perhaps be a little doubted, when the absolute necessity of preserving discipline, and of guarding against seduction and disloyalty in this powerful body of men, is fully considered. See ante; and further, title Court Martial.

But as Soldiers, by this annual act, are thus put in a worse condition than any other Subjects, so by the humanity of our standing laws, they are in some cases put in a much better. By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 3, a weekly allowance is to be raised in every county, for the relief of Soldiers that are sick, hurt, and maimed; and the Royal Hospital at Chelsea is established for such as are worn out in their duty. Officers and Soldiers, that have been in the King's service, are, by several statutes enacted at the close, or during the continuance of wars, at liberty to use any trade or occupation they are fit for, in any town in the kingdom, (except the two Universities,) notwithstanding any statute, custom, or charter to the contrary. And Soldiers in actual military service may make nuncupative wills, and dispose of their goods, wages, and other personal chattels, without those forms, solemnities, and expences, which the Law requires in other cases. Stats. 29 Car. 2. c. 3: 5 W. 3. c. 21. § 6. See title Wills.

The following statutes seem most of them in force; though in a great measure, if not entirely, superseded by the provisions of the Mutiny Act, and other acts before alluded to.

The stat. 7 Hen. 7. cap. 1, enacts, that if a captain shall not have the whole number of his Soldiers, or not pay them their due wages within six days after he hath received it, he shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and suffer imprisonment. The stat. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 4, ordains, that if any person go beyond sea, to serve any foreign Prince as a Soldier, and he do not take the oath of allegiance before he goes, it is felony; and if he is a gentleman or officer that is going to serve a foreign Prince, he is to be bound with two sureties not to be reconciled to the See of Rome, &c. or it will be felony.

By stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 1, no Soldiers shall be quartered on any persons without their consent; and inhabitants of places may refuse to quarter any Soldier, notwithstanding any order whatsoever.

By stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 2, no Soldier shall be taken out of the service by any process, except it be for some criminal matter, or for a real debt amounting to 10*l.* of which affidavit is to be made; and if any Soldier be otherwise arrested, a Justice of peace, by warrant under his hand, shall discharge him: Yet the plaintiff may file an appearance in an action of debt, upon notice thereof given, and proceed to judgment and execution, other than against the body of such Soldier. A serjeant in the guards cannot be arrested under 10*l.* 1 Wils. 216.

By stat. 5 Geo. 1. cap. 5, [not now in force] when an officer or Soldier was accused of a capital crime, the commanding officer, on application made to him, was to use his utmost endeavours to deliver over the criminal to the civil Magistrate; and he was not to be tried by a Court Martial in eight days, within which time application was to be made; but after that the criminal might be tried by a Court Martial. See title Court Martial.

If any Subject, here or in Ireland, shall list or enter himself, or any one procure him, to go beyond the seas, with an intent to be enlisted as a Soldier to serve any foreign Prince or State, without leave of his Majesty, he shall be guilty of felony; but if such person listed, in fourteen days after, discover, upon oath before any Justice, &c. the person by whom he was drawn in, so as he may be apprehended and convicted, the party discovering is to be indemnified. Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 30. See stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 50, as to issuing money for army services, and the duty of the Paymaster-general.

SOLE CORPORATIONS; See Corporation.

SOLET ET DEBET; Vide Debet et Solet.

SOLE TENANT, solus tenens.] He that holds land by his own right only, without any other joined; and if a man and his wife hold lands for their lives, with remainder to their son for life; here the man dying, the Lord shall not have an heriot, because he dies not sole Tenant. Kitch. 134.

SOLICITOR, Solicitator.] A person employed to follow and take care of suits depending in Courts of Equity.

Equity. Solicitors are to be sworn and admitted by the Judges, like unto attornies, before they shall practise in the Common Law Courts; and attornies may be admitted Solicitors in the Courts of Equity, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 23. See title Attorney.

There is also a Solicitor General to the King, who is a great officer next the Attorney General. See title Precedence.

SOLIDATUM, Used in the neuter gender, is taken for that absolute right or property which a man hath in any thing. Malmsb. lib. 1.

SOLINUS TERRÆ. In Domesday book, this word is only used in Kent, and no other county. Septem solini terræ sunt 17 Carucatæ. 1 Inst. fol. 15. According to this computation solinus terræ is about 160 acres, and 7 solini are about 1120 acres, which is less than 17 carucatæ, for at the lowest carucata terræ is 100 acres. But Lord Coke was of opinion, that it did not consist of any certain number of acres. This word solinus was probably from the Sax. sulk a plough, but what quantity of land this solin, sulling, or swoling did contain, is not so easily determined. It seems to have been the same with a plough land; so that in Domesday, Se defendit pro uno solino, is, it is taxed for one carucate or plough-land. Cowel.

SOLLER, or SOLAR, solarium.] A chamber or upper room. Cowel.

SOLVENDO ESSE, A term of art, signifying that a man hath wherewith to pay, or is a person solvent.

SOLVERE PŒNAS, To pay the penalty; or undergo the punishment inflicted for offences. 3 Salk. 32.

SOLVIT AD DIEM, A plea in an action of debt on bond, &c. that the money was paid at the day limited. See titles Bond; Payment.

SOLUTIONE feodi militis Parliamenti, and Solutione feodi Burgens. Parliamenti, Writs whereby Knights of the Shire and Burgesses might recover their wages or allowance, if it were denied. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 11. See title Parliament.

SOMERSET-HOUSE, Assured to Queen Charlotte for life. Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 1. See title Queen.

SOMERSETSHIRE, Its fishery how preserved. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 23.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE, A justification in an action of Assault and Battery; because the plaintiff made the first Assault, and what the defendant did was in his own defence. 2 Lil. Abr. 523. See titles Assault; Pleading.

SONTAGE, A tax of forty shillings heretofore laid upon every Knight's fee. Stow, p. 284.

SOPE, Is one of the many articles liable to the duty of Excise. See that title.

SOPHIA, (Princess,) Naturalized, stat. 4 Ann. c. 1 & 4. See title King I.

SORCERY; See Conjuration.

SORS, In sums of money lent upon usury, the principal was anciently called Sors, to distinguish it from the interest. Pryn's Collect. ii. 161.

SORUS ACCIPITER, A sor, or soar hawk: King John granted to Robert de Hose, land in Berton of the honour of Nottingham, to be held by the service of yielding the King yearly one soar-hawk, &c. Cartular. S. Edmund. MS.

SOTHAIL, or SOTHALE, Is conceived to be mistaken for Scotale. Bract. lib. 3.

SOTHSAGA, or SOTHSAGE, An old word signifying history: From the Sax. soth, verum, and saga testimonium; for all histories should be true, or true sayings; from hence we derive our English word soothsayer. Cowell.

SOVERAIGN, or SOVEREIGN, A chief or supreme person, one highest of all; as a King, &c.

SOVEREIGN, a piece of gold coin current at 22 s. anno 1 H. 8. when, by indenture of the Mint, a pound weight of gold of the old standard was to be coined into twenty-four Sovereigns: Anno 34 H. 8, Sovereigns were coined at 20 s. a-piece, and half Sovereigns at 10 s. But anno 4 Ed. 6, the Sovereign of gold passed for 24 s. and anno 6 Ed. 6, at 30 s.

SOVEREIGN POWER, or SOVEREIGNTY. By this is truly meant, the power of making laws; for, wherever that power resides, all others must conform to and be directed by it, whatever appearance the outward form and administration of the government may put on. For it is at any time in the option of the Legislature to alter that form and administration by a new edict or rule, and to put the execution of the laws into whatever hands it pleases. And all the other powers of the State must obey the legislative power in the execution of their several functions, or else the constitution is at an end. 1 Comm. 49. In our constitution the Law ascribes to the King the attribute of Sovereignty, but that is to be understood in a qualified sense, i. e. as supreme magistrate, not as sole legislator, as the legislative power is vested in the King, Lords, and Commons, not in any one of the three estates alone. See this Dict. title Parliament.

SOUL-SCOT, A mortuary is so called in the laws of King Canute, c. 13. See title Mortuary.

SOUND, A narrow sea; as Mare Balticum, the Sound; and to sound is to make trial how many fathom a sea is deep. Merch. Dict.

SOUTH-DOOR; See Suthdure.

SOUTH-SEA ANNUITIES; See South-Sea Company.

SOUTH-SEA BONDS, Stealing them made felony, stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 3.

SOUTH-SEA COMPANY, A Company of Merchants trading to the South-Sea. They were incorporated, on lending the Government ten millions of money towards paying the debts of the army, &c. They may purchase lands not exceeding 1000 l. per annum; and besides an interest for the money advanced the Government, 8000 l. a-year is to be paid them out of the funds towards the management of this Company: But see stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 11. The Corporation shall have the sole trade from the river Oroonoko (called Aranoka in the act) on the east side of America to the southermost part of Terra del Fuego, and from thence through the South-Sea, &c. And the Company to be owners of all islands, ports, &c. they can discover. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 21. SPAWN AND FRY OF FISH; See title Fish.

SPEAKER OF THE PARLIAMENT; See title Parliament VII.

SPEAKING WITH PROSECUTOR. It is not uncommon when a person is convicted of a misdemeanor, which principally and more immediately affects some individual, as a battery, imprisonment, or the like, for the Court to permit the defendant to speak with the Prosecutor, before any judgment is pronounced; and, if the Prosecutor declares himself satisfied, to inflict but a trivial punishment. It is usual, on satisfaction made to the Prosecutor, for him to give the person convicted a release, the execution of which being proved, is tantamount to the Prosecutor's acknowledgment of being satisfied. See 4 Comm. c. 27. ad finem, as to guarding against the probable abuse of this indulgence of the Court.

SPECIALTY, Specialitas,] A bond, bill, or such like instrument; a writing or deed, under the hand and seal of the parties. Litt. These are looked upon as the next class of debts after those of record; being confirmed by special evidence under seal. 2 Comm. c. 30. p. 465. SPELEUM, The cell of a monk. Malmsb. lib. 3.

SPICES, Are among the numerous articles liable to duties of Customs; and subject to regulations, to avoid frauds both in payment of the duty and manufacturing the article: by a variety of statutes.

SPIGURNEL, Spigurnellus.] The sealer of the King's writs, from the Sax. Spicurran, to shut up or inclose: but the following original has been given of this word; that Galfridus Spigurnel being by King Hen. III. appointed to be sealer of his writs, was the first in that office; and therefore in after-times the persons that enjoyed the office were called Spigurnels. Pat. 11 H. 3: 4 Edw. 1. This office was also known by the name of Spicurnantia or Espicurnantia; and Oliver de Standford held lands in Nettlebed in Com. Oxon. per Serjantiam Spicurnantiæ in Cancellariâ Domini Regis. 27 Ed. 1.

SPINACIUM, A sort of vessel which we now call a Pinnace. Knight. Ann. 1338.

SPINDULÆ, Were those three golden pins which were used about the archiepiscopal pall; and from thence Spindulatus signified to be adorned with the pall. Du Cange.

SPINSTER, An addition in law proceedings usually given to all unmarried women; and it is a good addition for the estate and degree of a woman. See title Abatement I. 3. (c).

SPITTLE-HOUSE, A corruption from Hospital; or it may be taken from the Teuton. Spital, an hospital or alms-house: It is mentioned in stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 9.

SPOLIATION, spoliatio.] A writ or suit for the fruits of a church, or the church itself, to be sued in the Spiritual Court, and not in the temporal; that lies for one incumbent against another, where they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage doth not come in question: As if a parson be created a Bishop, and hath dispensation to hold his benefice, and afterwards the patron presents another incumbent, who is instituted and inducted; now the Bishop may have a Spoliation in the Spiritual Court against the new incumbent, because they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage doth not come in debate; and for that the other incumbent came to the possession of the benefice, by the course of the Spiritual Law, viz. by institution and induction; for otherwise, if he be not instituted and inducted, a Spoliation lies not against him, but writ of trespass, or assise of Novel disseisin. F. N B. 36, 37.—So it is where a parson that hath a plurality accepts of another benefice, by reason whereof the patron presents another clerk, who is instituted and inducted; in this case one of them may have Spoliation against the other, and then shall come in question, whether he hath a sufficient plurality, or not: And it is the same of deprivation, &c. Terms de Ley. And see 3 Comm. c. 7. p. 90.

SPONTE-

SPONTE-OBLATA, A free gift or present to the King.

SPORTULA, Gifts and gratuities, forbidden to be received by the clergy.

SPOUSALS; See Espousals.

SPOUSE-BREACH, Adultery, as opposed to simple fornication: The Lady Katharine was accused to the King of incontinent living before her marriage, and of Spouse-breach after the marriage. Fox Act. Mon. ii. 540.

SPRINGING USES, or Contingent uses; See title Uses.

SPULLERS OF YARN, Persons that work at the spole or wheel; or triers of Yarn to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. Stat. 1 Mar. st. 1. c. 7.

SPUR-ROYAL, Spurareum aureum.] An ancient gold coin. Paroch. Antiq. 321.

SQUIBS; See Fire-works.

STABBING; See title Homicide III. 2.

STABILIA, A writ called by that name, on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the Prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided; whereupon he had this writ, Breve de Stabilia: To this a charter of King Hen. I. alludes in Pryn's lib. Angl. tom. i. pag. 1204.

STABILITIO VENATIONIS, The driving deer to a Stand. Stabilitas, the place where one ought to stand in hunting. Leg. H. 1. c. 17.

STABLE-STAND, Stabilis statio, vel stans in stabulo.] Is where a man is found at his Standing in the forest, with a cross or long bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or standing close by a tree, with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip: And it is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a person is convicted of intending to steal the King's deer in the forest: the other three are dog-draw, back-bear, and bloody-hand. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 18.

STACK, A quantity of wood three feet long, as many feet broad, and twelve feet high. Merch Dict.

STADIUM, A furlong of land; the eighth part of a mile. Domesday.

STAFF-HERDING, The following of cattle within a forest: And where persons claim common in any forest, it must be inquired by the ministers whether they use Staff-herding, for it is not allowable of common right; because by that means the deer, which would otherwise come and feed with the cattle, are frighted away, and the keeper or follower will drive the cattle into the best grounds, so that the deer shall only have their leavings: Therefore if any man who hath right of common, under colour thereof use Staff-herding, it is a cause of seizing his common till he pay a fine for the abuse. 1 *Jon. STAGNES, Stagna.] Pools of standing water. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 21. A pool consists of water and land; and therefore, by the name of Stagnum, the water and land shall pass also. Inst. 5.

STAL-BOAT, A kind of fishing boat, mentioned in stat. 27 Eliz. c. 21.

STALKING, The going gently step by step, under cover of a horse, &c. to take game; none shall stalk with bush or beast to any deer, except in his own forest or park, under the penalty of 10 l. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 11.

STALKERS, Certain fishing-nets. See stat. 13 R. 2. c. 19.

STALLAGE, Stallagium, from the Sax. stal. i. e. stabulum statio.] The liberty or right of pitching and erecting Stalls in fairs or markets: or the money paid for the same. Kennet's Gloss.

STALLARIUS, Is mentioned in our historians, and signifies præfectus stabuli; it was the same officer which we now call master of the horse. Spelm. Sometimes it hath been used for him who hath a Stall in a market. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 28.

STAMP-DUTIES, A branch of the perpetual revenue of this kingdom. (See title Taxes.) They are a tax imposed upon all parchment and paper whereon any legal proceedings, or private instruments of almost any nature whatever, are written: and also upon licences for retailing wines, letting horses to hire, and numerous other purposes: And upon all almanacks, news-papers, advertisements, cards, dice, and pamphlets containing less than six sheets of paper. These imposts are very various, according to the nature of the thing stamped or taxed, rising gradually from one penny to ten pounds; (and indeed in many cases, as legacies, administrations, &c. to an amount proportioned to the property conveyed.) The first institution of the Stamp-duties was by stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 21; and they have since been increased to an amount which nothing but the absolute necessity of their being imposed could prevent us from styling enormous. These Duties are managed by Commissioners appointed for the purpose. They now extend to such an astonishing variety of articles, and depend on such a multiplicity of statutes, which are continually varying (by increasing) the amount, that no table or compendium which could be framed would probably be of any service to the reader after one Session of Parliament; nor would it be consistent with the general nature of this Work to enter into any further elucidation of the subject.

STAND, A weight from two hundred and a half to three hundred of pitch. Merch. Dict.

STANDARD, From the Fr. Estandart, &c. signum, vexillum,] In the general signification, is an Ensign in War. And it is used for the standing measure of the King, to the scantling whereof all the measures in the land are or ought to be framed, by the clerks of markets, aulnagers, or other officers, according to Magna Charta and divers other statutes. This is not without good reason called a Standard, because it standeth constant and immoveable, having all measures coming towards it for their conformity; even soldiers in the field have their Standard or colours, for their direction in their march, &c. to repair to. Britton, c. 30. There is a Standard of Money, directing what quantity of fine silver and gold, and how much allay, are to be contained in coin of old Sterling, &c. And Standard of Plate, and silver manufactures. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 11. See titles Gold; Money; Allay; Weights and Measures, &c.

STANDARDUS, True Standard, or legal weight or measure. Cartular S. Edmund MS. 268.

STANDEL, A young store oak tree, which in time may make timber; and twelve such young trees are to be left standing in every acre of wood, at the felling thereof, by stat. 35 H. 8. c. 17—And see stat. 13 Eliz. c. 25. § 18; and this Dict. title Wood.

STANDING-ARMY, Not to be kept in time of peace without consent of Parliament. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 2. See title Soldiers.

STANLAW, A stony hill. Domesd.

STANNARIES, Stannaria, from the Lat. stannum, tin.] The mines and works where Tin metal is got and purified; as in Cornwall and Devonshire, &c. Camden Britt. 199. The tinners are called Stannary-men.

The Stannary Courts in Devonshire and Cornwall, for the administration of justice among the Tinners therein, are Courts of Record, but of a private and exclusive nature. They are held before the Lord Warden and his substitutes; in virtue of a privilege granted to the workers in the tin-mines there; to sue and be sued only in their own Courts, that they may not be drawn from their business, which is highly profitable to the public, by attending their law-suits in other Courts, 4 Inst. 232. The privileges of the tinners are confirmed by a charter 33 Ed. I; and fully expounded by a private statute, (given at length in 4 Inst. 232,) 50 Ed. 3, which has since been explained by a public act, stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 15.

All tinners and labourers in and about the Stannaries shall, during the time of their working therein, bona fide, be privileged from suits of other Courts, and be only impleaded in the Stannary Court; in all matters, excepting pleas of land, life, and member. No Writ of Error lies from hence to any Court in Westminster hall: But an appeal lies from the Steward of the Court to the Under Warden, and from him to the Lord Warden; and thence to the Privy Council of the Prince of Wales, as Duke of Cornwall, when he hath had livery or investiture of the same; and from thence the appeal lies to the King himself in the last resort. 3 Comm. c. 6. p. 79, 80. cites 4 Inst. 230, 231: 3 Bulst. 183: Dodr. Hist. Cornw. 94.

Transitory actions between tinner and tinner, &c. though not concerning the Stannaries, or arising therein, if the defendant be found within the Stannaries, may be brought into these Courts, or at Common Law; but if one party alone is a tinner, such transitory actions which concern not the Stannaries, nor arise therein, cannot be brought in the Stannary-Courts. 4 Inst. 251. Labourers in the Stannaries may recover their wages before Justices of peace. Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 6.

STANNARIUS, A pewterer or dealer in tin; of or belonging to tin. Lat. Dict.

STAPLE, Stapulum.] From the Fr. estape, i. e. forum vinarium, a market or Staple for wines, which formed the principal commodity of France; or rather from the Germ. stapulen, which signifieth to gather, or heap any thing together: in an old French book it is written à Calais Estape de la Laine, &c. i. e. the Staple for wool: And with us, it hath been a public mart appointed by Law to be kept at the following places, viz. Westminster, York, Lincoln, Newcastle, Norwich, Canterbury, Chichester, Winchester, Exeter, and Bristol, &c. A Staple Court was held at the Wool Staple in Westminster, the bounds whereof began at Temple-Bar and reached to Tuthill; in other cities and towns, the bounds are within the walls; and where there are no walls, they extend through all the towns, and the Court of the Mayor of the Staple is governed by the Law merchant in a summary way, which is the Law of the Staple. 4 Inst. 235. See stat. 27 Ed. 3. st. 2. The Staple goods of England are wool, woolfels, (or skins,) leather, lead, tin, cloth, butter, cheese, &c. as appears by the statute 14 R. 2. c. 1. Though some allow only the five first; and yet of late Staple goods are generally understood to be such as are vendible, of any kind, and not subject to perish. See Statute Staple; Customs on Merchandise.

STAR, Starrum, a contraction from the Hebr. shetar, a deed or contract.] All the deeds, obligations, &c. of the Jews, were anciently called Stars, and written for the most part in Hebrew alone, or in Hebrew and Latin; one of which yet remains in the treasury of the Exchequer, written in Hebrew, without points, the substance whereof is expressed in Latin just under it, like an English condition under a Latin obligation: This bears date in the reign of King John; and many Stars, as well of grant and release, as obligatory, and by way of mortgage, are pleaded and recited at large in the Plea rolls. Pasch. 9 Ed. 1. See Star-Chamber.

In one of the statutes of the University of Cambridge, the antiquity of which is not known, the word starrum is twice used for a schedule or inventory. 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 266, n.

STAR AND BENT; See title Sea Banks.

STAR-CHAMBER, Camera stellata, otherwise called Chambre des estoylles.] A Chamber at Westminster so called, (as Sir Thomas Smith, de Rep. Anglor. lib. 2. c. 4. conjectures,) because at first the cieling thereof was adorned with images of gilded Stars. And in the stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 1, it is written the Starred Chamber. It was ordained by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1, and 21 Hen 8. c. 2, That the Chancellor, assisted by others there named, should have power to punish routs, riots, forgeries, maintenances, embraceries, perjuries, and other such misdemeanors as were not sufficiently provided for by the Common Law, and for which the inferior Judges were not so proper to give correction.

But by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10, this Court, commonly called the Star-chamber, and all jurisdiction, power, and authority thereto belonging, are abolished. Cowell.

Molloy and Blackstone seem to think it was called the Star-chamber, because the recognizances which the Jews formerly entered into, to the Crown, and which were called Stars, were kept in that Chamber. See ante, Star.

See 4 Comm. c. 19, in the notes, for some particulars relative to this Court. Hudson's Treatise of the Court of Star-chamber, there referred to, is now published at the beginning of the second volume of Collectanea Juridica.

STARCH AND STARCH POWDER. Are articles subject to the duties and control of the Excise, and liable to to several regulations accordingly, by various statutes. Thus, Starchmakers are to make use of square or oblong boxes only, for boxing and draining green Starch, before it is dried in the stove, under the penalty of 10*l.* and shall give notice to the officers for the duties, when they box and dry their Starch; and not remove the Starch made, before it is weighed, and an account taken thereof, on pain of forfeiting 50*l.* Officers may search for Starch concealed, by virtue of a Justice's warrant, and seize the same, &c. A penalty is likewise inflicted on makers of hair-powder, perfumers, peruke-makers, barbers, &c. mixing any powder of alabaster, chalk, lime, &c. with Starch-powder, or making hair-powder of any other materials than powder of Starch. And makers of powder for hair, are to make entries of their workhouses at the office of Excise, &c. &c.

STATED DAMAGES; See titles Damages; Bonds; Covenant, &c.

STATICKS, Statice, scientia ponderum.] Knowledge of weights and measures; or the art of balancing or weighing in scales. Merch. Dict.

STATIONARIUS; The same as Stagiarius.

STATUARIUM, A tomb adorned with Statues. Ingulph. 853.

STATUS DE MANERIO, The state of a manor: All the tenants within the manor, met in the Court of their Lord to do their customary suit, and enjoy their rights and usages, were termed omnis Status de manerio. Paroch. Antiq. 456.

STATUTE,

STATUTUM,] Has divers significations: First, It signifies an act of Parliament; and Secondly, it is a short writing called a Statute-Merchant, or Statute-Staple, (see those titles,) which are in the nature of bonds, &c. and called Statutes, as they are made according to the form expressly provided in certain Statutes.

THE ACTS OF PARLIAMENT, STATUTES or Edicts, made by the King's Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, compose the Leges Scriptæ, the written laws of the kingdom. The oldest of these now extant, and printed in our Statute-books, is the famous Magna Charta, as confirmed in Parliament 9 Hen. 3: though doubtless there were many acts before that time, the records of which are now lost, and the determinations of them perhaps at present currently received for the maxims of the old Common Law.

The making of these Statutes has been already considered under title Parliament, Div. VII.—To what is there said we may here only add, that the Royal assent, when given, is indorsed upon the several acts. That till the reign of Rich. III, all the Statutes were either in French or Latin, generally French: And that by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 13, it is enacted, that when the operation of an act of Parliament is not directed to commence from any time specified within it, the clerk of the Parliaments shall indorse upon it the day upon which it receives the Royal assent: (and which, since this act, is added, in the printed Statutes immediately after the title:) And that day shall be the date of its commencement.—This Statute has obviated much inconvenience (not to say injustice) which arose from the former maxim, that an act of Parliament operated from the first day of the Session; the whole Session, like the whole term, being considered as one day; and thus many Statutes had the force of ex post facto laws.

The method of citing these acts of Parliament is various. Many of our antient Statutes are called after the name of the place where the Parliament was held that made them; as the Statutes of Merton and Marlebrge (Marlborough), of Westminster, Gloucester, and Winchester. Others are denominated entirely from their subject; as the Statutes of Wales and Ireland, the Articuli Cleri, and the Prærogativa Regis. Some are distinguished by their initial words, a method of citing very antient: As the Statute of Quia Emptores, and that of Circumspecte Agatis. But the most usual method of citing them, especially since the time of Edward II. is by naming the year of the King's reign in which the Statute was made, together with the chapter, or particular act, according to its numeral order, as, 9 Geo. 2. c. 4. For all the acts of one Session of Parliament taken together make properly but one Statute: And therefore when two Sessions have been held in one year, we usually mention stat. 1 or 2. Thus the Bill of Rights is cited, as 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2; signifying that it is the second chapter or act, of the second Statute, (or the Laws made in the second Session of Parliament,) in the first year of King William and Queen Mary.

We are now to consider,

I. The different Kind of Statutes.

II. Some general Rules with regard to their Construction.

I. STATUTES are either general or special, public or private. A general or public act is an universal rule, that regards the whole community: And of this the Courts of Law are bound to take notice judicially and ex officio; without the Statute being particularly pleaded, or formally set forth by the party who claims an advantage under it. Special or private acts are rather exceptions than rules, being those which only operate upon particular persons, and private concerns: And of these (which are not promulgated with the same notoriety as the former) the Judges are not bound to take notice, unless they be formally shewn and pleaded. Thus, to shew the distinction, the Statute 13 Eliz. c. 10, to prevent Spiritual Persons from making leases for longer terms than twenty-one years, or three lives, is a public act; it being a rule prescribed to the whole body of Spiritual Persons in the nation: but an act to enable the Bishop of Chester to make a lease to A. B. for sixty years, is an exception to this rule; it concerns only the parties and the Bishop's successors; and is therefore a private act. 1 Comm. Introd. § 3. p. 85, 86.

Some Statutes (says another authority) are general, and some are special: And they are called general from the genus, and special from the species; as for instance: The whole body of the Spiritualty is the genus, but a Bishop, Dean, and Chapter, &c. is the species: Therefore Statutes which concern all the Clergy, are general laws; but those which concern Bishops only are special. 4 Rep. 76. The Statute 21 H. 8. c. 13, which makes the the acceptance of a second living by clergymen, an avoidance of the first, is a general law, because it concerns all spiritual persons.

All Statutes concerning mysteries and trades in general, are general or public acts; though an act which relates to one particular trade is a private Statute. Dyer 75. A Statute which concerns the King is a public act; and yet the stat. 23 H. 8, concerning Sheriffs, &c. is a private act. Plowd. 38; Dyer 119.—It is a rule in Law, that the Courts at Westminster ought to take notice of a general Statute, without pleading it; but they are not bound to take notice of particular or private Statutes unless they are pleaded. 1 Inst. 98.

Statutes are also either declaratory of the Common Law, or remedial of some defects therein; or, to speak more strictly, they are either declaratory of the old law, or introductory of a new law. Remedial Statutes being generally mentioned in contradistinction to penal Statutes. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the Parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium, and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the Common Law is and ever hath been. Thus the Statute of Treasons, 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 2, doth not make any new species of treasons; but only, for the benefit of the Subject, declares and enumerates those several kinds of offence, which before were treason at the Common Law. Remedial, or Introductory, Statutes, are those which are made to supply defects, and abridge such superfluities, in the Common Law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned (or even learned) Judges, or from any other cause whatsoever. And this being done, either by enlarging the Common Law where it was too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it was too lax and luxuriant, hath occasioned another subordinate division, of these remedial introductory acts of Parliament, into Enlarging and Restraining Statutes. To instance again in the case of treason. Clipping the current coin of the kingdom was an offence not sufficiently guarded against by the Common Law; therefore it was thought expedient by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 11, to make it High Treason, which it was not at the Common Law: So that this was an enlarging Statute. At Common Law also Spiritual Corporations might lease out their estates for any term of years, till prevented by the Statute 13 Eliz. c. 10, before mentioned: This was therefore a restraining Statute. 1 Comm. 86, 87.

It is remarked by Mr. Christian, that the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 11, above referred to, hardly corresponds with the general notion either of a remedial, or an enlarging Statute. In ordinary legal language, remedial Statutes are (as has been already noticed) contradistinguished to penal Statutes. An enlarging or an enabling Statute is one which increases, not restrains, the power of action: As stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, which gave Bishops and all other sole Ecclesiastical Corporations, except parsons and vicars, a power of making leases which they did not possess before, is always called an enabling Statute. The stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, which afterwards limited that power, is, on the contrary, styled a restraining or disabling Statute. 1 Comm. 87, n. See also 2 Comm. c. 20: and this Dictionary, title Lease II.

II. The rules to be observed with regard to the construction of Statutes are principally these which follow:

1. There are three points to be considered in the construction of all remedial Statutes; the old law, the mischief, and the remedy: that is, how the Common Law stood at the making of the act; what the mischief was for which the Common Law did not provide; and what remedy the Parliament hath provided to cure this mischief. And it is the business of the Judges so to construe the act, as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy, 3 Rep. 7: Co. Litt. 11, 42. Let us instance again in the same restraining Statute, 13 Eliz. c. 10: By the Common Law, Ecclesiastical Corporations might let as long leases as they thought proper: the mischief was, that they let long and unreasonable leases, to the impoverishment of their successors: The remedy applied by the Statute was, by making void all leases by Ecclesiastical Bodies, for longer terms than three lives or 21 years. Now in the construction of this Statute it is held, that leases, though for a longer term, if made by a Bishop, are not void during the Bishop's continuance in his See; or, if made by a Dean and Chapter, they are not void during the continuance of the Dean; for the act was made for the benefit and protection of the successor. Co. Litt. 45: 3 Rep. 60: 10 Rep. 58. The mischief is therefore sufficiently suppressed by vacating them after the determination of the interest of the grantors; but the leases, during the continuance of that interest, being not within the mischief, are not within the remedy. 1 Comm. 87.

2. A Statute, which treats of things or persons of an inferior rank, cannot, by any general words, be extended to those of a superior. So a Statute, treating of "Deans, Prebendaries, Parsons, Vicars, and others having spiritual promotion," is held not to extend to Bishops, though they have spiritual promotion; Deans being the highest persons named, and Bishops being of a still higher order. 2 Rep. 46.

3. Penal Statutes must be construed strictly. Thus the Statute 1 Edw. 6. c. 12, having enacted that those who are convicted of stealing horses should not have the benefit of clergy, the Judges conceived that this did not extend to him that should steal but one horse, and therefore procured a new act for that purpose in the following year, stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 33: Bac. Elem. c. 12. Tho' Lord Hale states the true reason of the difficulty to have arisen from the circumstance of a doubt, as to the benefit of clergy attaching where only one horse was stolen, on account of the words in the old stat. 37 H. 8. c. 8, respecting stealing a horse. 2 H. P. C. 365. To mention a more modern and more applicable instance; by the Statute 14 Geo. 2. c. 6, stealing sheep, or other cattle, was made felony without benefit of clergy. But these general words, "or other cattle," being looked upon as much too loose to create a capital offence, the act was held to extend to nothing but mere sheep. And therefore, in the next Sessions, it was found necessary to make another Statute, (15 Geo. 2. c. 34,) extending the former to bulls, cows, oxen, steers, bullocks, heifers, calves, and lambs by name.

4. Statutes against frauds are to be liberally and beneficially expounded. These are generally called remedial Statutes. And it is a fundamental rule of construction, that penal Statutes shall be construed strictly, and these remedial statutes liberally. See 1 Comm. 88, & n. This may seem a contradiction to the last rule, most Statutes against frauds being in their consequences penal. But this difference is here to be taken: where the Statute acts upon the offender, and inflicts a penalty, as the pillory or a fine, it is then to be taken strictly; But when the Statute acts upon the offence, by setting aside the fraudulent transaction, here it is to be construed liberally. Upon this footing, the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. which avoids all gifts of goods, &c. made to defraud creditors and others, was held to extend, by the general words, to a gift made to defraud the Queen of a forfeiture. 3 Rep. 82. It has also been held, that the same words of the same Statute will bear different determinations, according to the nature of the suit or prosecution instituted upon them. For example; the stat. 9 Ann. c. 14, against gaming, enacts, that if any person shall lose at any one time or sitting 10*l.* and shall pay it to the winner, he may recover it back within three months; and if the loser does not within that time, any other person may sue for it, and treble the value besides: In a case where an action was brought to recover back 14 guineas which had been won and paid after a continuance at play, except an interruption during dinner; the Court held the Statute was remedial, as far as it prevented the effects of gaming, without inflicting a penalty; and therefore, in this action, they considered it one time or sitting: But they said, if an action had been brought by a common informer for the penalty, they would have construed it strictly, in favour of the defendant, and would have held that the money had been lost at two sittings. 2 Black. Rep. 1226: 1 Comm. 88, 89, & n.

5. One part of a Statute must be so construed by another, that the whole may, if possible, stand; ut res magis valeat, quam pereat. As if land be vested in the King and his heirs by act of Parliament, saving the right of A.; and A. has at that time a lease of it for three years: Here A. shall hold it for his term of three years, and afterwards it shall go to the King. For this interpretation furnishes matter for every clause of the Statute to work and operate upon. But, 6, A saving, totally repugnant to the body of the act, is void. If, therefore, an act of Parliament vests land in the King and his heirs, saving the right of all persons whatsoever; or vests the land of A. in the King, saving the right of A.: In either of these cases, the saving is totally repugnant to the body of the Statute, and (if good) would render the Statute of no effect or operation; and therefore the saving is void, and the land vests absolutely in the King. 1 Rep. 47: 1 Comm. 89.

7. Where the Common Law and a Statute differ, the Common Law gives place to the Statute; and an old Statute gives place to a new one. And this upon a general principle of universal Law, Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. But this is to be understood only when the latter Statute is couched in negative terms, or where its matter is so clearly repugnant that it necessarily implies a negative. As if a former act says, that a juror upon such a trial shall have 20 pounds a-year; and a new Statute afterwards enacts that he shall have 20 marks; here the latter Statute, though it does not express, yet necessarily implies a negative, and virtually repeals the former. For if 20 marks be made qualification sufficient, the former Statute which requires 20 pounds is at an end. Jenk. Cent. 2, 73. But if both acts be merely affirmative, and the substance such that both may stand together, here the latter does not repeal the former, but they shall both have a concurrent efficacy. If, by a former Law, an offence be indictable at the Quarter Sessions, and the latter Law makes the same offence indictable at the Assises; here the jurisdiction of the Sessions is not taken away, but both have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the offender may be prosecuted at either; unless the new Statute subjoins express negative words, as, that the offence shall be indictable at the Assises, and not elsewhere. 11 Rep. 63: 1 Comm. 89, 90.

8. If a Statute, that repeals another, is itself repealed afterwards, the first Statute is hereby revived, without any formal words for that purpose. So when the Statutes of 26 H. 8. c. 1: 35 Hen. 8. c. 3, declaring the King to be the Supreme Head of the Church, were repealed by a Statute 1 & 2 P. & M. and this latter Statute was afterwards repealed by an act of 1 Eliz. there needed not any express words of revival in Queen Elizabeth's Statute, but these acts of King Henry were impliedly and virtually revived. 4 Inst. 325: 1 Comm. 90.

9. Acts of Parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent Parliaments bind not. So the Statute 11 Hen. 7. c. 1, which directs, that no person for assisting a King de facto shall be attainted of treason by act of Parliament or otherwise, is held to be good only as to common prosecutions for high treason; but will not restrain or clog any parliamentary attainder. 4 Inst. 43. Because the Legislature, being in truth the Sovereign Power, is always of equal, always of absolute authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior Legislature must have been, if its ordinances could bind a subsequent Parliament. 1 Comm. 90.

Statutes against the power of subsequent Parliaments are not binding; notwithstanding the Statute 42 Ed. 3. c. 3, declares that any Statute made against Magna Charta shall be void: and this is evident, seeing many parts of Magna Charta have been repealed and altered by subsequent acts. Read. on Stat. Vol. 4. p. 340. And the Law has been mistaken in this point; for the Statutes which intervene between the 9 Hen. 3, and 42 E. 3, are not repealed, though they vary from, and are contrary to, Magna Charta: Jenk. Cent. 2.

10. Lastly, Acts of Parliament that are impossible to be performed are of no validity: and if there arise out of them collaterally any absurd consequences, manifestly contradictory to common reason, they are, with regard to those collateral consequences, void. Blackstone lays down the rule with these restrictions; though he allows it is generally laid down more largely, that acts of Parliament contrary to reason are void. But if the Parliament will positively enact a thing to be done which is unreasonable, I know of no power (says the Commentator) in the ordinary forms of the Constitution, that is vested with authority to control it: and the examples usually alleged in support of this sense of the rule do none of them prove, that, where the main object of a Statute is unreasonable, the Judges are at liberty to reject it; for that that were to set the judicial power above that of the Legislature, which would be subversion of all government. But where some collateral matter arises out of the general words, and happens to be unreasonable; there the Judges are in decency to conclude that this consequence was not foreseen by the Parliament, and therefore they are at liberty to expound the Statute by equity, and only quoad hoc disregard it. [or, to state it perhaps more correctly, it will not be presumed that any construction can be agreeable to the intention of the Legislature, the consequences of which are unreasonable.] Thus, if an act of Parliament gives a man power to try all causes, that arise within his manor of Dale; yet if a cause should arise in which he himself is party, the act is construed not to extend to that, because it is unreasonable that any man should determine his own quarrel. 8 Rep. 118. But, if we could conceive it possible for the Parliament to enact, that he should try as well his own causes as those of other persons, there is no Court that has power to defeat the intent of the Legislature, when couched in such evident and express words, as leave no doubt whether it was the intent of the Legislature or no. 1 Comm. 91, and n.

The following notes will still further assist the student in his researches on this subject; though perhaps some few lines in them may seem a little tautologous, compared with the foregoing copious extracts from Blackstone.

It is the general rule, that to Statutes enacted in Parliament, there must be the assent of the King, Lords, and Commons, without which there can be no good act of Parliament; but there are many acts in force, though these three assents are not mentioned therein, as Dominus Rex Statuit in Parliamento, and Dominus Rex in Parliamento suo Statuta edit, and de communi concilio Statuit, &c. Plowd. 97: 2 Bulst. 186. And Sir Edw. Coke says, that several Statutes are penned like charters in the King's name only: though they were made by lawful authority. 4 Inst. 25. Before the invention of printing, all Statutes were proclaimed by the Sheriff in every county, by virtue of the King's writ. 2 Inst. 526, 644.

Statutes continue in force although the records of them are destroyed, by the injury of time, &c. 2 Inst. 587.

Statutes consist of two parts, the words, and the sense; and it is the office of an expositor, to put such a sense upon the words of the Statute, as is agreeable to equity and right reason: Equity must necessarily take place in the exposition of Statutes; but explanatory acts are to be construed according to the words, and not by any manner of intendment; for it is incongruous for an explanation to be explained. Plowd. 363, 465: Cro. Car. 23.

The preamble of a Statute, which is the beginning thereof, going before, is, as it were, a key to the knowledge of it, and to open the intent of the makers of the act; it shall be deemed true, and therefore good arguments may be drawn from the same. 1 Inst. 11. It is the most natural and genuine exposition of a Statute, to construe one part by another part of the same Statute, for that best expresses the meaning of the makers: the words of an act of Parliament are to be taken in a lawful and rightful sense; and though, as has been already said, the construction of Statutes in general must be made in suppression of the mischief, and for the advancement of the remedy, intended by the Statute; but so that no innocent person by a literal construction shall receive any damage. 1 Inst. 24, 381.

The best way to expound a Statute, is to consider what answer the lawgivers would probably have given to the question made, if proposed to them. Plowd. 465: 3 Nels. Abr. 245.

Where a Statute gives a remedy for any thing, it shall be presumed there was no remedy before at Common Law: And the rules to construe acts of Parliament are different from the strict rules of the Common Law; though, in the construction of a Statute, the reason of the Common Law gives great light. Raym. 191, 355: 2 Inst. 301. If an act of Parliament is dubious, long usage may be good to expound it by; and the meaning of things spoken and written must be as hath been constantly received; but where usage is against the obvious meaning of a Statute, by the vulgar and common acceptation of words, then it is rather an oppression than an exposition of the Statute. Vaugh. 169, 170. An Election Committee refused to admit evidence of usage to explain the words of a Stamp Act; on the question, whether deeds were valid, which conveyed several freeholds to several voters, which had only one stamp. Tomlins's Election Cases 155. See 3 Lud. 177.

A Statute which alters the Common Law, shall not be strained beyond the words, except in cases of public utility, where the end and design of the act appears to be larger than the words themselves. Vaugh. 179. Relative words in any Statute, may make a thing pass as well as if particularly expressed; and cases of the same nature shall be within the same remedy. Raym. 54.

Such Statutes as are beneficial to the People, shall be expounded largely, and not with restriction. Style 302. The exposition of Statutes concerning the Ecclesiastical Courts, belongs to the Common Law Courts: And a Statute made in imitation of the Common Law, is to be expounded by it. Hob. 83, 97. The affirmative words of Statutes do not change the Common Law, without negative words added therein: Thus the Statute of Wills, being in the affirmative, doth not take away the custom to devise land in places where it existed before the Statute. Jenk. Cent. 212: Dyer 155: 1 Inst. 111. If a Statute be made only in affirmance of the ancient Common Law, and doth not enact any thing new, but what was before provided for, it is nevertheless a Statute, and may be pleaded; but the defendant hath a plea at Common Law. Style's Reg. 301. An act of Parliament in affirmance of the Common Law, extends to all times after, though it mentions only to give remedy for the present; and where a thing is granted by Statute, all necessary incidents are granted with it. 1 Inst. 235.

Wherever a Statute gives or provides a thing, the Common Law supplies all manner of requisites. Hard. 62. Every Statute made against an injury, gives a remedy by action, expressly or implicitly. 2 Inst. 55, 74. And besides an action upon the Statute, as the Subject's private remedy, the offender may be punished for contempt at the King's suit, by fine, &c. 2 Co. Inst. 131, 163.

Statutes made for the public good are to be expounded so as to attain their end. 1 Strange 253, 258. Keble's edition of the Statutes and Raftal's differed, and they who were for adhering to Keble, proved they had examined examined him with the Parliament-roll. The Chief Justice ruled it was enough, and Keble was read. 1 Str. 446. Where an act of Parliament only gives a remedy to the party grieved, it shall not be considered as a penal Statute. Wilson, par. 1. fol. 412.

STATUTE OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE KING, LORDS, AND COMMONS, in Parliament. 51 Hen. 3.

STATUTE MERCHANT, A Bond of record, acknowledged before the Clerk of the Statutes-Merchant, and Lord Mayor of the city of London, or two merchants assigned for that purpose; and before the Mayors of other cities and towns, or the Bailiff of any borough, &c.; sealed with the seal of the debtor and the King; upon condition that, if the obligor pays not the debt at the day, execution may be awarded against his body, lands, and goods, and the obligee shall hold the lands to him, his heirs and assigns, till the debt is levied. Terms de Ley.

Estates by Statute-Merchant and Statute-Staple are classed by Blackstone among the species of estates defeasible on condition subsequent; and are said to be very nearly related to the vivum vadium, or estate held till the profits thereof shall discharge a debt liquidated or ascertained: For both the Statute-Merchant and Statute-Staple are securities for money; the one entered into before the Chief Magistrate of some trading town, pursuant to the Statute 13 Edw. 1. stat. 3. de mercatoribus, and thence called a Statute-Merchant; the other pursuant to the Statute 27 Edw. 3. c. 9, before the Mayor of the Staple, that is to say, the grand mart for the principal commodities or manufactures of the kingdom, formerly held by act of Parliament in certain trading towns; from whence this security is called a Statute-Staple. They are both securities for debts acknowledged to be due; and originally permitted only among traders, for the benefit of commerce; whereby not only the body of the debtor may be imprisoned, and his goods seized in satisfaction of the debt, but also his lands may be delivered to the creditor, till out of the rents and profits of them the debt may be satisfied: And, during such time as the creditor so holds the lands, he is tenant by Statute-Merchant or Statute-Staple. There is also a similar security, the recognizance, in the nature of a Statute-Staple, acknowledged before either of the Chief Justices, or (out of Term) before their substitutes, the Mayor of the Staple at Westminster, and the Recorder of London; whereby the benefit of this mercantile transaction is extended to all the King's Subjects in general, by virtue of the Statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 6, amended by stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 25; which direct such recognizances to be enrolled and certified into Chancery. But these, by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3, are only binding upon the lands in the hands of bonâ fide purchasers, from the day of their enrolment, which is ordered to be marked on the record. 2 Comm. c. 10. p. 160. See further, titles Recognizance; Execution.

These estates, though sometimes referred to in argument, seem now nearly unknown in practice; but as the law relating to them is in force, and as it may serve to elucidate other subjects by analogy, the following information on the subject has been preserved, as useful to the Student, if not to the Practitioner.

The Statute of Acton Burnel, 11 Ed. 1, and Stat. de Mercatoribus, 13 Ed. 1. stat. 3, enact, that the merchant shall cause his debtor to appear before the Mayor of the city of London, or other city or town, and there acknowledge the debt, &c. by recognizance, which is to be enrolled; the roll whereof must be double, one part to remain with the Mayor, and the other with the clerk appointed by the King; and then one of the clerks is to write the obligation, which shall be sealed with the debtor's seal, and that of the King, &c.

By these Statutes, if the debt be not paid at the day upon the merchant's account, the Mayor is to cause the debtor to be imprisoned, if to be found, and in prison to remain until he hath agreed the debt; and if the debtor cannot be found, the Mayor shall send the recognizance into the Chancery, from whence a writ shall issue to the Sheriff of the county where the debtor is, to arrest his body, and keep him in prison till he agree the debt; and, within a quarter of a year, his lands and goods shall be delivered to him to pay the debt; but if the debtor do not satisfy the debt within that time, all his lands and goods shall be delivered to the merchant by a reasonable extent, to hold until the debt is levied thereby; and in the mean time he shall remain in prison; but when the debt is satisfied, the body of the debtor is to be delivered, together with his lands. If the Sheriff return a non est inventus, &c. the merchant may have writs to all the Sheriffs where he hath any land; and they shall deliver all the goods and lands of the debtor by extent; and the merchant shall be allowed his damage, and all reasonable costs, &c.

All the lands in the hands of the debtor, at the time of the recognizance acknowledged, are chargeable; (but see stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3. before referred to;) though, after the debt is paid, they shall return to grantees, if they are granted away, as shall the rest to the debtor: The debtor or his sureties dying, the merchant shall not take the body of the heir, &c. but shall have his lands until the debt is levied. If the debtor have sureties, they shall be proceeded against in like manner as the debtor; but so long as the debt may be levied of the goods of the debtor, the sureties are to be without damage. Also the merchant shall, besides the payment of his debt, be satisfied for his stay and detainer from his business. In London, out of the commonalty two merchants are to be chosen and sworn by this Statute, and the seal shall be opened before them, whereof one piece is to be delivered to the said merchants, and the other remain with the clerk; and before these merchants, &c. recognizances may be taken. A fee of 1*d. per* pound is allowed to the clerk for fixing the King's seal; and a seal is to be provided that shall serve for fairs, &c.; but the Statute extends not to Jews. Cro. Car. 440, 457.

Statutes-Merchant were contrived for the security of merchants only, to provide a speedy remedy to recover their debts; but at this day they are used by others who follow not merchandize, and are become one of the common assurances of the kingdom. Bridg. 21: Owen 82. And all obligations made to the King are of the nature of these Statutes-Merchant. 12 Rep. 2, 3.

STATUTE-STAPLE, A Bond of record, acknowledged before the Mayor of the Staple, in the presence of all or one of the Constables; to this end, says the Statute, there shall be a seal ordained, which shall be affixed to all obligations made on such recognizance acknowledged in the Staple: This seal of the Staple is the only seal the Statute requires to attest this contract; but it is no more under the power or disposal of the Mayor, than that appointed by the Statute-Merchant; for though the Statute appoints him the custody of it, yet it is in such a manner, that he cannot affix it to any obligation without their consent, it being to remain in the Mayor's hands, under the security of their own seals. 2 Rol. Abr. 466: Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 9. See title Statute-Merchant.

To understand a little of the original and constitution of the Staple, and the advantage the nation had by this establishment, we must observe, that the place of residence, whither the merchants resorted with their Staple commodities, was anciently called Estaple, which signifies no more than mart or market; and this was formerly appointed out of the realm, as at Calais, Antwerp, &c. and other ports on the Continent, which were nearest to us, and whither the merchants might with safety coast it. 4 Inst. 238.

But besides these Staple ports appointed abroad, there were others appointed at home; whither all the Staple commodities were carried in order to their exportation, such as London, Westminster, Hull, &c. This was found to be of great use and consequence to the Prince in particular, and to the interest and credit of the nation in general; for at these Staple ports were the King's customs easily collected, and were by the officers of the Staple, at two several payments, returned into the Exchequer; besides, at these Staples, all Merchants' goods were carefully viewed and marked by the proper officers of the Staple; and this necessarily avoided the exportation of decayed goods, or ill-wrought manufactures, and consequently fixed a stamp of credit on the merchandizes exported, which, upon the view, always answered the expectation of the buyer. Maline's Lex Merc. 337, 338.

The Staple merchandizes, according to Lord Coke, are only wool, woolfells, leather, lead, and tin; others, butter, cheese, and cloths; but, whatever they were, the Mayor and Constables had not only conusance of all contracts and debts relating to them, but they had likewise jurisdiction over the people, and all manner of things touching the Staple; this power was given them, lest the merchants should be diverted and drawn from their business and trade, by applying to the Common Law, and running through the tedious forms of it, for a determination of their differences; and for the greater encouragement of merchants, that they might have all imaginable security in their contracts and dealings, and the most expeditious method of recovering their debts, without going out of the bounds of the Staple. 4 Inst. 238: Maline's Lex Mer. 337.

By this it appears, that this security was only designed for the merchants of the Staple and for debts only on the sale of merchandizes brought thither; yet in time others began to apply it to their own ends, and the Mayor and Constable would take recognizances from strangers, surmising it was made for the payment of money for merchandizes brought to the Staple. To prevent this mischief, the Parliament, in 23 H. 8, reduced the Statute-Staple to its former channel, and laid a penalty of 40 l. on the Mayor and Constables who should extend the benefit of the Statute to any but those of the Staple. But though the stat. 23 H. 8. c. 6, deprived them of this benefit, yet it framed the new sort of security known by the name of a Recognizance, in the nature of a Statute-Staple; so called because this act limits and appoints the same process, execution, and advantage, in every particular, as is set down in the Statute-Staple. Co. Lit. 290.

A Recognizance, therefore, in nature of a Statute-Staple, as the words of the act declare, is the same with the former, only acknowledged under other persons; for, as the Statute runs, the Chief Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, or, in their absence, out of Term, the Mayor of the Staple at Westminster, and the Recorder of London, jointly together, shall have power to take Recognizances for payment of debt in the form set down in the Statute. In this, as in the former cases, the King appoints a seal to attest the contract. Co. Lit. 290, a: 4 Inst. 238: 2 Rol. Abr. 466: Co. Ent. 12.

Debt lies as well upon a Statute-Staple as upon a bond: And a Statute acknowledged on lands is a present duty, and ought to be satisfied before an obligation; a debt due on an obligation being but a chose in action, and recoverable by law, and not a present duty by law, as a debt upon a Statute, judgment, or recognizance is, upon which present execution is to be taken without farther suit. Cro. Eliz. 355, 461, 494: 2 Lil. Abr. 536.

But a judgment in a Court of record shall be preferred, in case of execution, before a Statute: Though, if one acknowledge a Statute, and afterwards confess judgment, if the land be extended thereon, the cognisee shall have a scire facias to avoid the extent upon the judgment. It is otherwise as to goods, for there, he that comes first shall be first served. 6 Rep. 45: 1 Brownl. 37. The cognisor of a Statute grants his estate to the cognisee; by this the execution of the Statute will be suspended. 2 Cro. 424. But if the cognisee, before execution of a Statute, release to the cognisor all his right to the land; it will not be a discharge of the whole execution: for, notwithstanding, he may sue execution of his body and goods. 3 Shep. Abr. 326. Upon a Statute-Staple, a Capias and extent of lands, goods, and chattels, are contained in one writ; but it is not so on a Statute-Merchant. Jenk. Cent. 163. In Chancery, the proceedings on a Statute-Staple are in the Petty-bag Office; and Statutes-Staple are suable in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, as well as in Chancery. Cro. Eliz. 208. On a Statute's being satisfied, it is to be vacated by entering satisfaction, &c. Statutes-Staple and Statutes-Merchant are to be entered within six months, or shall not be good against purchasers. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4. See stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 5, for preventing delays in extending Statutes.

He that is in possession of lands on a Statute Merchant, or Staple, is called Tenant by Statute-Merchant, or Statute-Staple, during the time of his possession: And creditors shall have freehold in the lands of debtors, and recovery by novel disseisin, if put out; but if tenant by Statute-Merchant or Statute-Staple hold over his term, he that hath right may sue out a Venire facias ad computand', or enter, as upon an elegit. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 9.

Statutes of a Corporation, See Corporation.

Statuto Mercatorio, The ancient writ for imprisoning him that had forfeited a Statute-Merchant bond, until the debt were satisfied: And of these writs, one was against lay-persons, and another against persons ecclesiastical. Reg. Orig. 146, 148.

Statuto Stapulæ, The ancient writ that lay to take the body to prison, and seize upon the lands and goods of one who had forfeited the bond called Statute-Staple. Reg. Orig. 151.

Statutum de Laborariis, An ancient writ for the apprehending of such labourers as refused to work according to Statute. Reg. Judic. 27.

Statutum Sessionum, The Statute-Sessions; a meeting, in every Hundred, of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between the masters and servants, rating of servants' wages, &c. See stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 4.

STAURUM, Any store or standing stock of cattle, provision, &c. Mat. Westm. anno 1259.

STEALING; See Larceny; Robbery.

Stealing an Heiress; See title Marriage.

STEEL; See Iron.

STEORESMAN, Sax. A pilot.

STERLING, Sterlingum.] Was the epithet for silver money current within this kingdom, and took its name from this; that there was a pure coin stamped first in England by the Easterlings, or merchants of East Germany, by the command of King John; and Hoveden writes it Esterling. Instead of the pound Sterling, we now say so many pounds of lawful English money; but the word is not wholly disused, for though we ordinarily say lawful money of England, yet in the Mint they call it Sterling Money; and when it was found convenient, in the fabrication of monies, to have a certain quantity of baser metal to be mixed with the pure gold and silver, the word Sterling was then introduced; and it has ever since been used to denote the certain proportion or degree of fineness, which ought to be retained in the respective coins. Lowndes's Essay on Coins 14. See title Coin.

STEWARD, Seneschallus; compounded of the Sax. Steda, i. e. Room, or Stead, and Weard, a ward or keeper; i. e. a man appointed in my place or stead.] The term hath many applications, but always denotes an officer of chief account within his jurisdiction. The greatest of these officers is, The Lord High Steward of England, who anciently had the supervising and regulating, next under the King, the administration of justice, and all other affairs of the realm, whether civil or military; and the office was hereditary, belonging to the Earls of Leicester, till forfeited to King Henry III. But the power of this officer being very great, of late the office of High Steward of England hath not been granted to any one, only pro hac vice, either for the trial of a Peer of the realm on an indictment for a capital offence; or for the determination of the pretensions of those who claim to hold by grand serjeanty, to do certain honourable services to the King at his coronation, &c. for both which purposes he holds a Court, and proceeds according to the laws and customs of England; and he to whom this office is granted must be of nobility and a Lord of Parliament. 4 Inst. 58, 59: Crompt. Jur. 84: 13 Hen. 8. 11: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. See titles Peers of the Realm IV.; Parliament. Of the nine great officers of the Crown, the Lord High Steward is the first; but when the special business, for which he is appointed, is once ended, his commission expires. The first Lord High Steward, that was created for the solemnizing of a Coronation, was Thomas, second son of Henry IV.; and the first Lord Steward, for the trial of a Peer, was Edward Earl of Devon, on the arraignment of John Holderness, Earl of Huntingdon, in the same reign. Lex Constitution. 170.

There is a Lord Steward of the Household mentioned stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 13; whose name was changed to that of Great Master of the Household, anno 32 Hen. 8. But this statute was repealed by 1 Mar. c. 4, and the office of Lord Steward of the Household revived. He is the chief officer of the King's Court, to whom is committed the care of the King's house: he has authority over all officers and servants of the household, except those belonging to the chapel, chamber, and stable; and the palace royal is exempted from all jurisdiction of any Court, but only of the Lord Steward, or, in his absence, of the Treasurer and Comptroller of the Household, with the Steward of the Marshalsea; who, by virtue of their offices, without any Commissioner, hear and determine all treasons, murders, felonies, breaches of the peace, &c. committed in the King's palace: Besides the Treasurer and Comptroller, the Lord Steward hath under him a Cofferer, several Clerks of the Green Cloth, &c. He attends the King's person at the beginning of Parliaments; and is a white staff officer, which he breaks over the hearse on the death of the King, and thereby discharges all officers under him. Of this officer's antient power, read Fleta, lib. 2; and F. N. B. 241. See titles Court of Marshalsea; Court of the Lord Steward.

In the liberty of Westminster, an officer is chosen and appointed, called High Steward, and there is a Deputy Steward of Westminster. See title Police. The word Steward is of so great diversity, that in most Corporations, and all houses of honour, an officer is found of this name and authority. So there are Stewards of Copyhold Courts, Manors, &c. See the several titles.

STEWS, Places anciently permitted in England to women of professed incontinency. See Bawdy-House.

STICA, A brass Saxon coin, of the value of half a farthing, four of them making a helfing.

STICK OF EELS, A quantity or measure of twenty-five. A bind of Eels contains ten Sticks, and each Stick twenty-five Eels. Stat. of Weights and Measures.

STICKLER, An inferior officer who cuts wood within the King's parks of Clarendon. Rot. Parl. 1 H. 6.

STILE; See Style.

STILYARD, or STEELYARD; Otherwise called the Style-house, in the parish of Allhallows in London, was by authority of Parliament assigned to the merchants of the Hanse; and to Almaine or Easterling merchants, to have their abode in for ever, with other tenements, rendering to the Mayor of London a certain yearly rent. Stat. 14 Ed. 4. In some records it is called Gildhalda Teutonicorum; and it was at first denominated Stilyard, of a broad place or court where Steel was sold, upon which that house was founded. See stats. 19 H. 7. c. 32: 22 H. 8. c. 8: 1 Ed. 6. c. 13.

STINT, Common without, See title Common.

STIPULA, Stubble left standing in the field after the corn is reaped and carried away. Cart. Antiq.

STIPULATION IN THE ADMIRALTY COURTS. The first process in these Courts is frequently by arrest of the defendant's person; when they take recognizances or Stipulation of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, and, in case of default, may imprison both them and their principal. 3 Comm. 108. See title Admiral.

STIREMANNUS, sturemannus, Sax. steer-man.] A pilot of a ship, or Steers-man. Domesday.

STIRPES, Distribution per; See title Executor V. 9.

STIRPES, Succession in; See titles Descent; Canon IV.

STOCK AND STOVEL, A forfeiture where any one is taken carrying stipites & pabulum out of the woods; for stoc signifies sticks, and Stovel pabulum. Antiq. Chart.

STOCK, or STOKE, Syllables added to the names of places, from the Sax. Socce, i. e. Stipes, Truncus; as Woodstock, Basingstoke, &c.

STOCK AND FAMILY. If lands were devised generally to a Stock or Family; it shall be understood of the heir principal of the house. Hob. 33. See Tylwith; and titles Will; Descent.

STOCKJOBBERS, in Exchange Alley. All Stock-jobbing not authorized by act of Parliament, or by charter, or used by obsolete charters, shall be void, and the undertakings are declared Nusances. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18.—All præmiums to deliver or receive, accept or refuse any public Stock, or share therein, and contracts in nature of wagers, putts and refusals relating to the value of the Stock, shall be void; and the præmiums, shall be returned, or may be recovered by action, with double costs; and the persons entering into or executing any such contract, shall forfeit 500*l.* No money shall be given to compound any difference, for not delivering or transferring Stock, or not performing contracts; but the whole money agreed, is to be paid, and the Stock transferred, on pain of 100*l.* Persons buying, on refusal or neglect to transfer at the day, may buy the like quantity of Stock, of any other person, and recover the damage of the first contractor: And contracts for sale of any Stock, where contractors are not actually possessed of or entitled unto the same, to be void; and the parties agreeing to sell, &c. incur a penalty of 500*l.* Brokers making agreements, &c, and acting contrary, are also liable to penalties. But this act not to hinder lending money on Stocks, or contracts for re-delivering or transferring thereon, so as no præmium be paid for the loan more than legal interest. Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 8; made perpetual by stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 8. It is to be lamented, that these acts of Parliament are openly and impudently transgressed, by gambling in the Public Funds: The bargains are understood to be upon honour: It has been in contemplation of the gamblers, who have for years been in the daily habit of violating the laws of their country, ever since the passing of the above statutes, to attempt a repeal of these statutes; and obtain a law by which their iniquitous bargains should be rendered binding. An insolence, however, which has hitherto received very little encouragement.

STOCKS, or Public Funds; See titles National Debt; Taxes.

STOCKS, cippus.] A wooden engine to put the legs of offenders in, for the securing of disorderly persons, and by way of punishment in divers cases ordained by statute, &c. And it is said that every vill within the precinct of a torn is indictable for not having a pair of Stocks, and shall forfeit 5*l.* Kitch. 13. See title Drunkenness.

STOCKLAND (or STOKELAND) AND BONDLAND. In the manor of Wadhurst in Sussex, there are two sorts of copyhold estates, called Stokeland and Bondland, descendible by custom in several manors: As if a man be first admitted to Stockland, and afterwards to Bondland, and dies seised of both, his eldest son and heir shall inherit both estates; but if he be admitted first to Bondland, and after to the other, and of these dieth seised, his youngest son shall inherit: And Bondland held alone, descends to the youngest son. 2 Leon. 55.

STOLA, A garment or hood formerly worn by priests. Sometimes it is taken for the archiepiscopal pall. Eadmer, c. 188. Also a vestment which matrons wore. Cowell.

STOLEN GOODS; See titles Larceny; Restitution; Rewards.

STONE, A weight of 14 pounds, used for weighing of wool, &c. The Stone of wool ought to weigh 14 pounds; but in some places, by custom, it is less, as 12 pounds and a half: A Stone of wax is eight pounds; and in London the Stone of beef is no more. 11 Hen. 7. c. 4: Rot. Parl. 17 Ed. 3. See tit. Weights and Measures.

STORES OF WAR; See Naval Stores.

STOTARIUS, He who had the care of the Stud or breed of young horses. Leg. Alfred. c. 9.

STOW, Sax. A place; it is often joined to other words; as Godstow is a place dedicated to God.

STOWAGE, Money paid for a room where goods are laid. See Housage.

STRAITS, A narrow sea between two lands, or an arm of the sea. Also there is a narrow coarse cloth anciently so called. Stat. Antiq. 18 Hen. 6. c. 16.

STRAND, Sax. Any shore or bank of a sea or great river. Hence the street in the west suburbs of London, which lay next the shore or bank of the Thames, is called the Strand. An impunity from custom, and all impositions upon goods or vessels, by land or water, was usually expressed by Strand and stream. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 4.

STRANDED Goods; See this Dictionary, titles Wreck; Insurance II. 1.

STRANGER, from the Fr. estranger, alienus.] Born out of the realm, or unknown: An Alien. In law it hath also a special signification, for him that is not privy to an act: As a Stranger to a judgment, is he whom a judgment doth not affect; and in this sense it is directly contrary to party or privy. Old Nat. Br. 128. Strangers to deeds shall not take advantage of conditions of entry, &c. as parties and privies may; but they are not obliged to make their claims on a fine levied till five years; whereas privies, such as the heirs of the party that passed the fine, are barred presently. 1 Inst. 214: 2 Inst. 516: 3 Rep. 79. Strangers have either a present or future right; or an apparent possibility of right, growing afterwards, &c. Wood's Inst. 245. See titles Privies; Fines; Judgments, &c.

STREPITUS JUDICIALIS, The circumstances of noise and crowd, and other turbulent formalities at a process or trial in a public Court of Justice. And therefore our wise ancestors did in many cases provide, that right and justice should be done in a more private and quiet manner. Cowell. Paroch. Antiq. p. 344.

STRETWARD, An officer of the Streets; of old, like our surveyor of the highways, or rather a scavenger. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 187.

STRIKING in the King's superior Courts of Justice, in Westminster Hall, or at the Assizes, whether blood be drawn or not; or even assaulting the Judge sitting in the Court, by drawing a weapon, without any blow struck, is punishable with the loss of the right hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, and of the profits of the offender's lands during life. Staundf. P. C. 38: 3 Inst. 140, 141: 4 Comm. 125: And see title Rescue. Maliciously Striking in the King's palace, wherein his Royal person resides, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment, and fine at the King's pleasure; and also with loss of the offender's right hand, the solemn execution of which sentence is described at length in the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. This offence is triable in the Court of the Lord Steward of the Houshold; by a Grand and Petit Jury, as at Common Law, taken out of the officers and sworn servants of the King's Houshold. 4 Comm. 276. As to Striking in Churches, see title Church. See also title Assault.

STYLE, appello.] To call, name, or intitle one; as, the Style of the King of England is George the Third, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

There is an Old and New Style of the Calendar. See title Year.

SUB-DEACON, An ancient officer in the church, made by the delivery of an empty platter and cup by the Bishop, and of a pitcher, bason, and towel by the Archdeacon: His office was to wait on the Deacon with the linen on which the body, &c. was consecrated, and to receive and carry away the plate with the offerings at sacraments, the cup with the wine and water in it, &c. He is often mentioned by the Monkish historians, and particularly in the Apostolical Canons, 42, 43.

SUBJECTS, subditi.]. The members of the Commonwealth under the King their Head. Wood's Inst. 22.

SUBINFEUDATION; See Feoffment; Was where the inferior lords, in imitation of their superiors, began to carve out and grant to others minuter estates than their own, to be held of themselves, and were so proceeding downwards, in infinitum, till stopped by various legislative provisions. SUBLEGERIUS, from Sax. sybleger, incestus.] One who is guilty of incestuous whoredom.

SUB-MARSHAL, An officer in the Marshalsea, who is Deputy to the Chief Marshal of the King's House, commonly called the Knight Marshal, and hath the custody of the prisoners there. He is otherwise termed Under Marshal. Cromp. Jurisf. 104.

SUBMISSION to award; See title Award.

SUBNERVARE, To ham-string, by cutting the sinews of the legs and thighs: And it was an old custom in England, meretrices & impudicas mulieres subnervare.

SUBORNATION, subornatio] A secret underhand preparing, instructing, or bringing in a false witness; and from hence Subornation of Perjury is the preparing or corrupt alluring to perjury. Subornation of Witnesses we read of in stat 32 Hen. 8. c. 9. See title Perjury.

SUBPŒNA, A writ whereby common persons are called into Chancery, in such cases where the Common Law hath provided no ordinary remedy; the name of which proceeds from the words therein, which charge the party called to appear at the day and place assigned, sub pœnâ centum librarum, &c (under penalty of 100*l.*) West. Symb par. 2: Cromp. Jurisdict. 33. The Subpœna is the leading process in the Courts of Equity. There are several of these writs in Chancery; as the Subpœna ad respondend', Subpœna ad replicand' & ad rejungend', Subpœna ad testificand' & ad audiend' judicium, &c. which writs are to be made out by the proper clerks of the Subpœna Office. Subpœnas to answer must be personally served by being left with the defendant, or at his house with one of the family, on affidavit whereof, if the defendant do not answer, attachment shall be had against him, &c. As to the origin of the writ of Subpœna in Chancery, see this Dict. title Equity: And as to stats. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16: 5 Geo. 2. c. 25, see title Chancery.

SUBPOENA AD TESTIFICANDUM lies for the calling in of witnesses to testify in any cause, not only in Chancery, but in all other Courts; and in that Court, and in the Exchequer, it is made use of in Law and Equity. The two chief writs of Subpœna are to appear and to testify; and the latter issues out of the Court where the issue is joined, upon which the evidence is to be given. 2 Lill. Abr. 536. As to which, see this Dict. title Evidence, Introd. Col. 2. and II. 2.

SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM, A writ or process of the same kind with the Subpœna ad testificandum, including a clause of requisition, for the witness to bring with him and produce books and papers, &c. in his hands, belonging to, or wherein the parties are interested; or tending to elucidate the matter in question. 3 Comm. 382.

SUBSIDY, subsidium.] An aid, tax, or tribute, granted to the King for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every Subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods.

History does not mention that the Saxon Kings had any Subsidies after the manner of ours at present; but they had both levies of money and personal services towards the building and repairing of cities, castles, bridges, military expeditions, &c. which they called Burgbote, Brigbote, Hereyfare, Heregeld, &c. But when the Danes harrassed the land, King Ethelred submitted to pay them for redemption of peace several great sums of money yearly. This was called Danegeld, for the levying of which every hide of land was taxed yearly at twelve pence, lands of the church only excepted; and thereupon it was after called, hydagium, and that name remained afterwards upon all taxes and Subsidies imposed upon lands; but sometimes it was laid upon cattle, and then was termed horngeld. The Normans called these sometimes taxes, sometimes tallages, otherwise auxilia & subsidia. The Conqueror had these taxes, and made a Law for the manner of their levying, as appears in Emendationibus ejus, pag. 125. sect. Volumus & firmiter, &c. Many years after the Conquest they were levied otherwise than now, as every ninth lamb, every ninth fleece, and every ninth sheaf. See stat. antiq. 14 E. 3. st. 1. c. 20. Of which you may see great variety in Rastall's Abridgment, titles Taxes; Tenths; Fifteenths; Subsidies, &c. and 4 Inst. 26, 33. Whence we may gather there is no certain rate, but as the Parliament shall think fit. Subsidy is in our statutes sometimes confounded with customs. 11 H. 4. c. 7. Cowell. See this Dict. titles Taxes; Customs on Merchandize.

SUBSTITUTE, Substitutus.] One placed under another person to transact some business, &c. See Attorney; Militia.

SUCCESSOR, Lat.] He that followeth or cometh in another's place. Sole Corporations may take a fee-simple estate to them and their Successors; but not without the word Successors: And such a Corporation cannot regularly take in succession goods and chattels; and therefore if a lease for a hundred years be made to a person and his Successors, it hath been adjudged only an estate for life: Nor may a Sole Corporation bind the Successors. 4 Rep. 65; 1 Inst. 8, 46, 94: 4 Inst. 249. An Aggregate Corporation may have a fee-simple estate in succession without the word Successors; and take goods and chattels in action or possession, and they shall go to the Successors. Wood's Inst. 114. SUFFERANCE. Tenant at Sufferance, is he who holdeth over his term at first lawfully granted. Terms de Ley. A person is Tenant at Sufferance that continues after his estate is ended, and wrongfully holdeth against another, &c. 1 Inst. 57.

An Estate at Sufferance, is where one comes into possession of land by lawful title, but keeps it afterwards without any title at all. As if a man takes a lease for a year, and, after the year is expired, continues to hold the premises without any fresh leave from the owner of the estate. Or, if a man maketh a lease at will, and dies, the estate at will is thereby determined; but if the tenant continueth possession, he is Tenant at Sufferance. Co. Litt. 57. But a lease at will being now considered as a lease from year to year, which cannot be vacated without half a year's notice to quit, the tenant cannot be ejected at the death of the lessor without half a year's notice from his heir. 2 Term Rep. 159. And it is also necessary, in case of the death of the tenant, to give that notice to his personal representative. 3 Wils. 25.

No man can be Tenant at Sufferance against the King, to whom no laches or neglect, in not entering and ousting the tenant, is ever imputed by Law; and his tenant, so holding over, is considered as an absolute intruder. 1 Inst. 57. But, in the case of a Subject, this estate may be destroyed whenever the true owner shall make an actual entry on the lands and oust the tenant; for, before entry, he cannot maintain an action of trespass against the tenant by Sufferance as he might against a stranger; and the reason is, because the tenant being once in by a lawful title, the Law (which presumes no wrong in any man) will suppose him to continue upon a title equally lawful, unless the owner of the land, by some public and avowed act, such as entry is, will declare his continuance to be tortious, or, in common language, wrongful. 1 Inst. 57: 2 Comm. c. 9. p. 150.

Thus stands the Law with regard to Tenants by Sufferance; and landlords are obliged, in those cases, to make formal entries upon the lands, and recover possession by the legal process of ejectment: And at the utmost, by the Common Law, the tenant was bound to account for the profits of the land so by him detained. But now, by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, in case any tenant for life or years, or other person claiming under or by collusion with such tenant, shall wilfully hold over after the determination of the term, and demand made and notice in writing given by the landlord, or him to whom the remainder or reversion of the premises shall belong, for delivering the possession thereof; such person, so holding over or keeping the other out of possession, shall pay, for the time he detains the lands, at the rate of double their yearly value. And, by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, in case any tenant, having power to determine his lease, shall give notice of his intention to quit the premises, and shall not deliver up the possession at the time contained in such notice, he shall thenceforth pay double the former rent for such time as he continues in possession. See also stat. 6 Ann. c. 18. § 1, against holding over by guardians or trustees of infants, and by husbands seised in right of their wives, and by all others having particular estates determinable on any life or lives, by which they are considered as trespassers. These statutes have have almost put an end to the practice of tenancy by Sufferance, unless with the tacit consent of the owner of the tenement. 2 Comm. c. 9. ad fin.

Where a tenant has a lease for a term certain, and holds over after the expiration of it, it is not necessary for the landlord to give him any notice to quit, in order to recover possession by ejectment. 1 Term Rep. 53, 162. But if the landlord afterwards receives rent, or does any act by which he proves his assent to the continuance of the tenant, this turns the estate at Sufferance into a tenancy from year to year. The notice under stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, may be given previous to the end of the Term. Black. Rep. 1075. And it seems that it may also be given afterwards; though the double value can only be recovered from the delivery of the notice and demand of the possession. This notice by the landlord must be in writing; but that by the tenant, under stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, may be by parol. 3 Burr. 1603. The double value can only be recovered by action of debt; but the double rent may be recovered by distress or otherwise, like single rent. 1 Black. Rep. 535. No length of time is necessary to the validity of these notices, under the statutes, to entitle the landlord to double value or double rent. 2 Comm. c. 9. ad fin. in n.

SUFFERENTIA PACIS, A grant or sufferance of peace or truce, Clauf. 16 Ed. 3.

SUFFRAGAN, Suffraganus, Chorepiscopus, Episcopi vicarius.] A Titular Bishop, ordained to aid and assist the Bishop of the diocese in his spiritual function; or one who supplieth the place instead of the Bishop. Some writers call these Suffragans by the name of Subsidiary Bishops, whose number is limited by the stat. 26 H. 8. c. 14: by which statute it was enacted, That it should be lawful for every Bishop, at his pleasure, to elect two honest and discreet spiritual persons within his diocese, and to present them to the King, that he might give to one of them such title, style, and dignity of such of the Sees in the said statute mentioned, as he should think fit: And that every such person should be called Bishop Suffragan of the same See, &c. This act sets forth at large for what places such Suffragans were to be nominated by the King; and if any one exercise the jurisdiction of a Suffragan, without the appointment of the Bishop of the diocese, &c. he shall be guilty of a præmunire. See Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 639: and this Dictionary, title Bishops.

SUGAR, Is liable to certain duties of Customs on its importation; which is regulated by the Navigation Acts, and other statutes. See the respective titles.

SUGGESTION, suggestio.] A surmise, or representing of a thing: By Magna Charta no person shall be put to his law on the Suggestion of another, but by lawful witnesses. 9 H. 3. c. 28.—Suggestions upon record are grounds to move for prohibitions to suits in the Spiritual Courts, &c. See title Prohibition III. Though matters of record ought not to be staid upon the bare Suggestion of the party; there ought to be an affidavit made of the matter suggested, to induce the Court to grant a rule for staying the proceedings upon the record, 2 Lill. 537. There are Suggestions in replevin, for a returno habendo; which, it is said, are not traversable; as they are for prohibitions to the Spiritual or Admiralty Courts. 1 Plowd. 76. Breaches of covenants and deaths of persons must be suggested upon record, &c. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 10. See titles Abatement; Amendment. Blackstone terms the proceeding by Information, a prosecution by Suggestion. See title Information.

SUICIDE; See title Homicide III. 1.

SUIT, secta, Fr. suite, i. e. consecutio, sequela.] Signifies a following another; but in divers senses. The first is a Suit in Law, and is divided into Suit real and personal; which is all one with action real and personal. See titles Action; Chancery.—2. Suit of Court, an attendance which the tenant owes to the Court of his Lord. 3. Suit covenant, when a man hath covenanted to do Suit in the Lord's Court. 4. Suit custom, where I and my ancestors owe Suit time out of mind. 5. Suit is the following one in chase, as fresh suit: See title Hue Cry.—And this word is used for a petition made to the King, or any great personage.

Suit and Service. When the tenant had professed himself to be the man of his superior or Lord, the next consideration was concerning the Service, which, as such, he was bound to render for the land he held. This, in pure, proper, and original feuds, was only twofold: To follow, or do Suit to, the Lord in his Courts in time of peace; and in his armies or warlike retinue, when necessity called him to the field. 2 Comm. 54. See title Tenures.

Suit of Court, That is, Suit to the Lord's Court, is that service which the feudary tenant was bound to do at the Lord's Court. At first it was expresly mentioned in the grant how often these Courts should be held. This appears by Fleta, l. 2. c. 71. p. 14. Sometimes one or more, but never exceeding three, in a year. Thorn mentions two, viz. Michaelmas and Easter. But all the Lord's tenants were not bound to attend his Courts, but only those to whom their estates were granted upon that condition: Every man was, however, bound to attend the Sheriff's turn twice in every year. See Tourn. And if the inheritance, by reason whereof the tenant was bound to attend only at one Court, did descend to coheirs, he who had capitalem partem, was bound to attend the Lord's Court both for himself and all his coheirs. Cowell.

None to be distrained for Suit of Court, but they who are bound to it by charter or prescription. Joint-tenants and parceners shall make but one Suit. The remedy against the Lord distraining for it, where it is not due, and against the tenant withholding it, where it is due. Stat. Marleb. 52 H. 3. c. 9. This is not taken away, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See this Dictionary, title Tenures.

SUMMER-HUS-SILVER. A payment to the Lord of the wood in the Wealds of Kent, who used to visit those places in Summer-time, when their under-tenants were bound to prepare little Summer-houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money. Custum. de Sittingburn, MS.

SUMMONEAS, A writ judicial of great diversity, according to the divers cases wherein it is used. Tabl. Reg. Judic. See title Process.

SUMMONERS, summonitores.] Petty officers that cite and warn men to appear in any Court; and these ought to be boni homines, &c. Fleta, lib. 4. The summonitores were properly the apparitors, who warned in delinquents at a certain time and place, to answer any charge or complaint exhibited against them: And in citations from a superior Court, they were to be equals of the party cited; at least the Barons were to be summoned by none under the degree of Knights. Paroch. Antiq. 177 See title Process.

SUMMONITORES SCACCARII, Officers who assisted in collecting the King's revenues, by citing the defaulters therein, into the Court of Exchequer.

SUMMONS, summonitio.] In the English Law, is as much as vocatio in jus, or citatio among the Civilians. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 6. In general, it is a writ to the Sheriff, to warn one to appear at a day; and must be by certain Summoners on the tenant's land, not his goods, &c. And, if against an heir, shall be on the lands that did descend; or making default, at the grand cape he may wage his law of Non-Summons. 6 Rep. 54. As to the Summons in real actions, see title Process I.

SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. This title is distinguished in the books by the name of Summons and Severance; but the proper name is Severance; for the Summons is only a process, which must, in certain cases, issue before judgment of Severance can be given. 4 New Abr. 660. Severance is a judgment, by which, where two or more are joined in an action, one or more of these is enabled to proceed in such action without the other or others. 4 New Abr. 660. See Severance.

It is a principle of Law, where two or more have a joint right to a thing, they must join in an action for the recovery thereof. 4 New Abr. 660. Joint-tenants must implead jointly; for they claim under one and the same title. 1 Inst. 180. So Parceners, who make but one heir, must, in order to recover the possession of their ancestor, be joined in præcipe. 1 Inst. 163, 164. So Executors, because the right of their testator devolves on all of them, must likewise all join in an action for the recovery thereof. Salk. 3: Carth. 61.

And wherever the right of action is in two or more persons, and they have not all joined in any action that is brought, the defendant may plead in abatement: for, if one could recover in such case singly, every other might do the same; and by this means a defendant would be liable to answer in divers actions for the same thing. Cro. Eliz. 554: 9 Rep. 37: Salk. 3, 32: 2 Lev. 113: 1 Bro. 354: 1 Mod. 102. See title Abatement.

It is indeed in the power of any one or more, where two or more have a joint right of action, to commence a suit in the name of all whose such right is: but, notwithstanding that a plea in abatement would be thereby prevented, it would still be in the power of any one of them, by neglecting to appear, or refusing to proceed afterwards in such suit, to render it fruitless. 1 Inst. 139. —Bro. Summ. & Sev. pl. 17. For if two or more join in bringing an action, and one makes default, the nonsuit of him is the nonsuit of them all. Bro Summ. & Sev. pl. 5, 7. So, if divers join in a writ of error, the assignment of errors cannot be by one without the others. Cro. Eliz. 192.

To prevent the great inconvenience, and the failure of justice, which would be, if persons, in whom there is a joint right of action, should be precluded, by the negligence or collusion of any one of them, from having the effect of a suit for the recovery of such right; the law has provided, that if any one of those persons, in whose name a joint action is commenced, does not appear, or after appearance makes default, the other or others may have judgment ad sequendum solum, or, in other words, a judgment of Severance. Hard. 48: Bro. Summ. & Sev. pl. 4, 16. And see ib. pl. 18: F. N. B. 128: 1 Inst. 139.

The consequence of this judgment is, that, notwithstanding the Severance of one or more who did not appear, or who made default, the other plaintiff or plaintiffs in the action may proceed in the suit. 4 New Abr. 661.

Where two or more are plaintiffs in an action, and one of these has not appeared, he must be summoned before judgment of Severance can be given against him: For it is a general rule, that a nonsuit is in no case peremptory before appearance, because a writ may have been purchased in the plaintiff's name without his privity. 1 Inst. 139: Bro. Summ. & Sev. pl. 10: 2 Rol. Abr. 488.

But if two joint plaintiffs have both appeared, and afterwards one makes default, the Court may, without issuing any Summons, immediately give judgment of Severance. Bro. Summ. & Sev. pl. 10: 10 Rep. 135: Hard. 317. No judgment of Severance can be given in a writ of error, unless it is prayed before the defendant has pleaded in nullo est erratum. Cro. Jac. 117. But such judgment may be after joinder in the assignment of error. 2 Lil. Pr. Reg. 663.

SUMPTUARY LAWS, Sumptuaria Lex, from Sumptuarius, of or belonging to expences.] Are laws made to restrain excess in apparel, and prohibit costly clothes, of which heretofore we had many in England; but they are all repealed by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 25: 3 Inst. 199. See title Luxury.

SUNDAY, Dies Dominicus.] The Lord's Day; set apart for the service of God, to be kept religiously, and not be profaned.

Profanation of the Lord's Day, vulgarly (but improperly) called Sabbath-breaking, is classed by Blackstone amongst offences against God and religion, punished by the Laws of England. For, besides the notorious indecency and scandal, of permitting any secular business to be publicly transacted on that day, in a country professing Christianity, and the corruption of morals which usually follows its profanation, the keeping one day in seven holy, as a time of relaxation and refreshment, as well as for public worship, is of admirable service to a State, considered merely as a civil institution. The Laws of King Athelstan forbade all merchandizing on the Lord's Day, under very severe penalties. And by the stat. 27 Hen 6. c. 5, no fair or market shall be held on the principal festivals, Good Friday, or any Sunday, (except the four Sundays in harvest,) on pain of forfeiting the goods exposed to sale. And, by the stat. 1 Car. 1. c. 1, no person shall assemble, out of their own parishes, for any sport whatsoever, upon this day; nor, in their parishes, shall use any bull or bear baiting, interludes, plays, or other unlawful exercises, or pastimes; on pain that every offender shall pay 3s. 4d. to the poor. This statute does not prohibit, but rather impliedly allows, any innocent recreation or amusement, within their respective parishes, even on the Lord's Day, after divine service is over. But by stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7, no person is allowed to do any worldly labour on the Lord's Day, (except works of necessity and charity,) or to use any boat or barge, or expose any goods to sale; except meat in public houses, and milk before nine in the morning, and after four in the afternoon, on forfeiture of 5s. Nor shall any drover, carrier, or the like, travel upon that day, under pain of 20s. Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 2.

The goods exposed to sale on a Sunday, to be forfeited to the poor, &c. on conviction before a Justice of the Peace, who may order the penalties and forfeitures to be levied by distress; and may allow one third to the informer: But this is not to extend to dressing meat in families, inns, cook-shops, or victualling-houses.

Mackarel may be sold on Sundays, before and after divine service; stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 24.—Forty watermen are permitted to ply on the Thames, between Vauxhall and Limehouse, on Sundays; stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 21.—Fish carriages are allowed to travel on Sundays, either laden or returning empty; stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 15.—Bakers were permitted to dress dinners on a Sunday, as a work of a necessity. 5 Term Rep. 449. But, by stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 61, every baker shall be subject to a penalty of 10s. to the use of the poor, for exercising his business in any manner as a baker on the Lord's Day: except that he may sell bread between nine in the morning and one in the afternoon; and may also, within that time, bake meat, puddings, and pies for any person who shall carry or send the same to be baked.

By stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 49, passed to restrain an indecent practice which had become very prevalent, it is enacted, That any house or place opened for public entertainment, or for publicly debating on any subject, upon the Lord's Day, and to which persons shall be admitted by money or tickets sold, shall be deemed a disorderly house. And the keeper (or person acting as such) shall forfeit 200*l*, and be punished as in the case of keeping a disorderly house. And the person managing such entertainment, or acting as President, &c. of any public debate, shall forfeit 100*l*. And every servant receiving money or tickets from the persons coming, or delivering out tickets of admission, shall forfeit 50*l*. §§ 1, 2. And every person advertising, or printing an advertisement, of such meeting, shall also forfeit 50*l*. Actions to be brought within six months. § 5.

An indictment for exercising the trade of a butcher must be laid to be contra formam statuti; for it was no offence at Common Law. 1 Strange 702.

Persons exercising their calling on a Sunday are only subject to one penalty; for the whole is but one offence, or one act of exercising, though continued the whole day. Cowp 640.

Law processes are not to be served on Sunday, unless it be in cases of treason or felony; or on an escape, by virtue of stat 5 Ann. c. 9. See title Escape. Sunday is not a day in Law for proceedings, contracts, &c. And hence it is, that a sale of goods on this day in a market overt is not good: And if any part of the proceedings of a suit in any Court of Justice, be entered and recorded to be done on a Sunday, it makes it all void. 2 Inst. 264: 3 Bulstr. 102. The service of a citation on a Sunday is good, and not restrained by the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. And, by two Judges, the delivery of a declaration upon a Sunday may be well enough, it not being a process; but Holt, Ch. J. thought it ill, because the act intended to restrain all sorts of legal proceedings. 2 Ld. Raym. 706. A writ of inquiry cannot be executed on a Sunday. 1 Strange 387. See titles Arrest; Process, &c.

SUPERCARGO, A person employed by merchants to go a voyage, and oversee their cargo, and dispose of it to the best advantage. Merch. Dict.

SUPER-INSTITUTION, super-institutio.] One Institution upon another; as where A. B. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and C. D. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another. 2 Cro. 463. See title Institution.

SUPER-JURARE, A term used in our ancient Law, when a criminal endeavoured to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious, that he was convicted by the oaths of many more witnesses. This was called super-jurare. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 74: Leg. Athelstan. c. 15.

SUPERONERATIONE PASTURÆ, A judicial writ that lies against him who is impleaded in the County-Court for the surcharging or overburthening a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same Court, and the cause is removed into one of the Courts at Westminster. Reg. Judic. See title Common III.

SUPER PRÆROGATIVA REGIS, A writ which formerly lay against the King's tenant's widow for marrying without the King's licence. F. N. B. 174.

SUPERSEDEAS, A writ that lies in a great many cases; and signifies in general a command to stay some ordinary proceedings at Law, on good cause shewn, which ought otherwise to proceed. F. N. B. 236. A supersedeas is used for the staying of an execution, after a writ of error is allowed, and bail put in: But no supersedeas can be made out on bringing writ of error, till bail is given, where there is judgment upon verdict, or by default, in debt. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. Nor in actions for tithes, promises for payment of money, trover, covenant, detinue, and trespass. Stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. And execution shall not be staid in any judgment after verdict (except in the case of executors) by writ of error or supersedeas thereon, unless bail be put in. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. § 3. See title Error Introd. & II. 2.

A writ of error is said to be in judgment of Law a supersedeas, until the errors are examined, &c. that is to the execution; not to action of debt on the judgment at law. From the time of the allowance, a writ of error is a super a fuperfedeas: And if the party had notice of it before the allowance, it is a fuperfedeas from the time of fuch notice; but this muft be where execution is not executed, or begun to be executed. Cro. Jac. 534: Raym. 100: Mod. Ca. 130: 1 Salk. [illegible]

If, before execution, the defendant bring a writ of error, and the Sheriff will [illegible] a fieri facias and levy the money, the Court will [illegible] a fuperfedeas, quia erronice emanavit, and [illegible] reftitution of the money. Stile 414. After an [illegible] there was a fuperfedeas, quia executio [illegible], &c. iffued; and there being no claufe of reftitution in the fuperfedeas, it was infifted that the execution was executed before the fuperfedeas awarded; and that a faulty fuperfedeas is no fuperfedeas; but the Court ordered another fuperfedeas, with a claufe of reftitution. Mod. 466.

The fuperfedeas, quia erronice emanavit, lies to reftore a poffeffion, after an habere facias feifinam, when fued out erroneoufly; fo of a fuperfedeas after execution upon a capias ad fatisfaciend. if it be immediately delivered to the Sheriff. Jenk. Cent. 58, 92. It appearing, upon affidavit, that there were two writs of execution executed upon one judgment; the party moved for a fuperfedeas, becaufe there cannot be two fuch executions, but where the plaintiff is hindered either by the death of the defendant, or by fome act in Law, that he can have no benefit of the firft; and fo it was adjudged. Stile 255. A fuperfedeas is grantable to a Sheriff to ftay the return of an habeas corpus; and if he return it afterwards, and the parties proceed to trial, it is error; and fo are all the proceedings in an inferior Court, after an habeas corpora delivered, unlefs a procedendo is awarded, in which cafe a fuperfedeas is not to be granted. Cro. Car. 45, 350.

When a certiorari is delivered, it is a fuperfedeas to inferior Courts below; and being allowed, all their proceedings afterwards are erroneous; and they may be punifhed. If a Sheriff holds plea of 40*s.* debt in his County-Court, the defendant may fue forth a fuperfedeas, that he do not proceed, &c. Or, after judgment, he may have a fuperfedeas directed to the Sheriff, requiring him not to award execution upon fuch judgment; and upon that an alias, a pluries, and an attachment, &c. New Nat. Br. 432. See title Certiorari.

Superfedeas may be granted by the Court for fetting afide an erroneous judicial procefs, &c. Alfo a prifoner may be difcharged by fuperfedeas; as a perfon is imprifoned by the King's writ, fo he is to be fet at liberty; and a fuperfedeas is as good a caufe to difcharge a perfon, as the firft procefs is to arreft him. Finch 453: Cro. Jac. 379. If a privileged perfon is fued in any jurifdiction foreign to his privilege, he may bring his fuperfedeas. Plowd. [illegible]. It is falfe imprifonment to detain a man in cuftody after a fuperfedeas delivered, for the fuperfedeas is to be obeyed; and in fuch cafe it is a new caption without any caufe. [illegible] There is a fuperfedeas where an audita querela is fued; and out of the Chancery, to fet a perfon at liberty, taken upon an exigent, on giving fecurity to appear, &c. And in cafes of furety of the peace and good behaviour, where a perfon is already bound to the peace in the Chancery, &c. New Nat. Br. 524, [illegible]. [illegible] warrant iffues againft a man, on an indictment found againft him, for a mifdemeanor, or other bailable offence, and he, having notice of it, doth, before caption, duly put in bail, to appear and traverfe the indictment, &c. he is entitled to a fuperfedeas, to prevent a caption. SUPERSEDING A COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT. See title Bankrupt.

SUPER STATUTO 1 Ed. 3. cap. 12, 13. A writ that lay againft the King's tenants holding in chief, who aliened the King's land without his licence. F. N. B. fol. 175. See title Tenures.

SUPER STATUTO DE ARTICULIS CLERI, Cap. 6. A writ againft the Sheriff or other officer that diftrains in the King's highway, or in the lands anciently belonging to the church. F. N. B. 173.

SUPER STATUTO FACTO POUR SENESCHAL ET MARSHAL DE ROY, &c. A writ againft the Steward, or Marfhal, for holding plea in his Court, of freehold, or for trefpafs or contracts not made and arifing within the King's houfehold. F. N. B. 241.

SUPER STATUTO VERSUS SERVANTES ET LABORATORES, A writ againft him who keeps Servants departed out of their fervices contrary to Law. F. N. B. 167.

SUPER STATUTO DE YORK, QUE NULL SERRA VITELLER, &c. A writ againft a perfon that ufes victualling, either in grofs, or by retail, in a city or borough-town, during the time he is mayor, &c. F. N. B. 172.

SUPERSTITIOUS USES; See title Mortmain.

SUPERVISOR, Lat.] A Surveyor or Overfeer: It was formerly and ftill is a cuftom, in cafes of great concern, to make a Supervifor of a will, to fupervife and overfee the executors that they punctually perform the will of the teftator; but this office is of late very carelefsly executed, fo as to be to little purpofe or ufe.—Supervifor (now Surveyor) of the Highways is mentioned in the ftat. 5 Eliz. c. 13. See title Highways.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL IN EQUITY. A fuit in Equity, imperfect in its frame, (or become fo by accident, before its end has been obtained,) may in certain cafes be rendered perfect by a new Bill which is not confidered as an original Bill, but merely as an addition to, or continuance of, the former Bill; or both. A Bill of this kind may be, 1ft, A Supplemental Bill, which is merely an addition to the original Bill—2d, A Bill of Revivor, which is a continuance of the original Bill: See title Revivor—3d, A Bill both of Revivor and Supplement, which continues a fuit upon abatement, and fupplies defects arifen from fome event fubfequent to the inftitution of the fuit. Mitford's Treatife on Chanc. Plead. 53. And fee further pp. 59—67; and this Dict. title Revivor.

If the intereft of a plaintiff or defendant, fuing or defending in his own right, wholly determines, and the fame property becomes vefted in another perfon, not claiming under him; as in the cafe of an ecclefiaftical perfon fucceeding to a benefice, or a remainder-man in a fettlement becoming entitled upon the death of a prior tenant under the fame fettlement: The fuit cannot be continued by Bill of Revivor (fee that title); nor can its defects be fupplied by a Supplemental Bill: For though the fucceffor in the firft cafe, and the remainder-man in the fecond, have the fame property which the predeceffor or prior tenant enjoyed; yet they are not, in many cafes, bound by his acts, nor have they, in fome cafes, precifely the fame rights: But in general, by an original Bill, in the nature of a Supplemental Bill, the benefit benefit of the former proceedings may be obtained. If the party, whose interest is thus determined, was not the sole plaintiff or defendant, or if the property, which occasions a Bill of this nature, affects only part of a suit, the Bill, as to the other parties, and as to the rest of the suit, is supplemental merely.—There seems to be this difference between an original Bill in the nature of a Bill of Revivor, and an original Bill in the nature of a Supplemental Bill: Upon the first, the benefit of the former proceedings is absolutely obtained; so that the pleadings in the first cause, and the depositions of witnesses, if any have been taken, may be used in the same manner as if filed or taken in the second cause; and if any decree has been made in the first cause, the same decree shall be made in the second: But in the other case, a new defence may be made; the pleadings and depositions cannot be used in the same manner as if filed or taken in the same cause; and the decree, if any has been obtained, is no otherwise of advantage, than as it may be an inducement to the Court to make a similar decree. Mitford's Treatise 67, 68, and the authorities there cited; and see this Dictionary, title Revivor.

A Supplemental Bill must state the original Bill and the proceedings thereon; and if it is occasioned by an event subsequent to the original Bill, it must state that event, and the consequent alteration with respect to the parties; and, in general, the Supplemental Bill must pray, that all the defendants may appear and answer to the charges it contains. For if the Supplemental Bill is not for a discovery merely, the cause must be heard upon it at the same time that it is heard on the original Bill, if it has not been before heard: And if the cause has been before heard, it must be further heard upon the supplemental matter.—If, indeed, the alteration or acquisition of interest happens to a defendant, or a person necessary to be made a defendant, the Supplemental Bill may be exhibited by the plaintiff in the original suit against such person alone, and may pray a decree upon the particular supplemental matter alleged against that person only; unless, which is frequently the case, the interests of other defendants may be affected by that decree. Where a Supplemental Bill is merely for the purpose of bringing formal parties before the Court as defendants, the parties, defendants to the original Bill, need not, in any case, be made parties to the Supplemental Bill. Mitford's Treatise 69, 70.

A Bill in the nature of a Supplemental Bill, in the cases above mentioned, must state the original Bill, the proceedings upon it, the event which has determined the interest of the party by or against whom the former Bill was exhibited, and the manner in which the property has vested in the person become entitled. It must then shew the ground upon which the Court ought to grant the benefits of the former suit to or against the person so become entitled; and pray the decree of the Court, adapted to the case of the plaintiff in the new Bill. This Bill, though partaking of the nature of a Supplemental Bill, is not an addition to the original Bill, but another original Bill, which, in its consequences, may draw to itself the advantage of the proceedings on the former Bill. Mitford's Treatise 90.

SUPPLETORY OATH. See 3 Comm. 270; and this Dictionary, title Evidence.

SUPPLICAVIT, A writ issuing out of Chancery, for taking surety of the peace, when one is in danger of being hurt in his body by another; it is directed to the Justices of the Peace and Sheriff of the county, and is grounded upon the stat. 1 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 16, which ordains, that certain persons shall be assigned by the Chancellor to take care of the peace, &c. F. N. B. 80, 81. When a man hath purchased a writ of supplicavit, directed to the Justices of the Peace, against any person, then he, against whom the writ is sued, may come into the Chancery, and there find sureties that he will not do hurt or damage unto him that sueth the writ; and upon that he shall have a writ of supersedeas, directed to the Justices, &c. reciting his having found sureties in Chancery, according to the writ of supplicavit; and also reciting that writ, and the manner of the security that he hath found, &c. commanding the Justices, that they cease to arrest him, or to compel him to find sureties, &c. And if the party who ought to find sureties cannot come into the Chancery to find sureties, his friend may sue a supersedeas in Chancery for him; reciting the writ of supplicavit, and that such a one and such a one are bound for him in the Chancery in such a sum, that he shall keep the peace according to it; and the writ shall be directed to the Justices, that they take surety of the party himself according to the supplicavit, to keep the peace, &c. and that they do not arrest him; or if they have arrested him for that cause, that they deliver him. New Nat. Br. 180.

Sometimes the writ of supplicavit is made returnable into the Chancery at a certain day; and if so, and the Justices do not certify the writ, nor the recognizance, and the security taken, the party who sued the supplicavit shall have a writ of certiorari directed unto the Justices of Peace to certify the writ of supplicavit, and what they have done thereupon, and the security found, &c. New N. B. 180. If a recognizance of the peace be taken in pursuance of a writ of supplicavit, it must be wholly governed by the directions of such writ; but if it be taken before a Justice of Peace below, the recognizance may be at the discretion of such Justice. Lamb. 100: Dalt. c. 70.

At the Common Law it was sufficient, in order to obtain this process for surety of the peace from the Court of Chancery, if the party who demanded it made oath, that he was in fear of some corporal hurt, and that he did not crave the same out of malice, but for the safety of his body. F. N. B. 79, 80.

But by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 8, all process of the peace shall be void, unless granted on motion in open Court on affidavit in writing.

When articles of the peace are exhibited in the Court of Chancery, and oath is made that the surety of the peace is not craved by the party through malice, but for the safety of his life, a writ of supplicavit issues, directed to the Justices of the peace generally, or to some one Justice of the peace, or to the Sheriff, commanding them or him to take security in the sum thereon indorsed; and, if the party refuses to find such security, to commit him to the next gaol, until he does find such security. F. N. B. 80. Vide Bro. Off. pl. 39: F. N. B. 81: Bro. Peace, pl. 9: Lamb. 101, 107.

If there be no proceedings on a supplicavit within a year, the recognizance is of course discharged; and if the party be committed after the expiration of that time, he shall be discharged upon very slight security. Fitz. 268. If taken below, and the party appear pursuant ant to the condition, no indictment being lodged, he must be discharged. Harow. Ca. But the Court in discretion may refuse to discharge a recognizance, even though the exhibitant appear and consent; for a breach against any other person is equally a forfeiture. 11 Mod. 109. See title Surety of the Peace.

SUPPLIES, Extraordinary grants to Government, by Parliament, to supply the exigencies of the State. See title Taxes.

SUPREMACY, Sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence; the highest estate. King Henry VIII. was the first Prince that shook off the yoke of Rome here in England, and settled the Supremacy in himself, after it had been long held by the Pope. See stats. 25 H. 8. cc. 19, 20: 26 H. 8. c. 1: 1 Eliz. c. 1. By these laws the great power of Rome was suppressed; and the act of 1 Eliz. Sir Edward Coke says, was an act of restitution of the ancient jurisdiction ecclesiastical, which always belonged of right to the Crown of England; and that it was not introductory of a new law, but declaratory of the old; and that which was, or of right ought to be, by the fundamental laws of this realm, parcel of the King's jurisdiction; by which laws, the King, as Supreme Head, had full and entire power in all causes ecclesiastical as well as temporal: And as, in temporal causes, the King doth judge by his Judges in the Courts of Justice, by the temporal laws of England; so, in causes ecclesiastical, they are to be determined by the Judges thereof, according to the King's ecclesiastical laws. 5 Rep. 9: Cawdrey's case. And in this case it was resolved by all the Judges, that, by our ancient laws, this kingdom is an absolute empire and monarchy; consisting of one head, which is the King, and of a body politic, made up of many well-agreeing members; all which the Law divides into two several parts, the Clergy and the Laity, both of them, immediately under God, subject and obedient to the head. And the kingly head of this politic body, is furnished with prerogative and jurisdiction, to render justice and right to every part and member of this body, of what estate or degree soever, otherwise he would not be at the head of the whole. 5 Rep. 8.

There are several instances of ecclesiastical jurisdiction exercised by the Kings of England in former ages; and, in this respect, the King is said to be persona mixta & unita cum sacerdotibus. The King is the supreme Ordinary, and by the ancient laws of the land might, without any act of Parliament, make ordinances for the government of the Clergy; and if there be a controversy between spiritual persons concerning jurisdiction, the King is arbitrator, and it is a right of his Crown to declare their bounds, &c. Moor 755: 1043: Hob. 17. SURETY OF THE PEACE,

AND GOOD BEHAVIOUR.

SECURITAS PACIS.] Either because the party who was in fear, is thereby secured; or for that the suspected party gives such security.

I. What this Security is.

II. Who may take or demand it.

1. As relates both to the Peace and good Behaviour.
2. As to the Peace only.
3. As to good Behaviour, or good Abearance, only; which includes Security for the Peace, and somewhat more.

III. How it may be forfeited; or discharged.

1. As to both Peace and good Behaviour.
2. As to the Peace.
3. As to the good Behaviour.

I. THIS is considered by Blackstone as a species of preventive justice; by obliging persons, whom there is a probable ground to suspect of future misbehaviour, to stipulate with, and to give full assurance to the Public, that such offence as is apprehended from them shall not happen; through the means of Pledges or Sureties for keeping the peace, or for their good behaviour. 4 Comm. c. 18.

By the Saxon constitution these Sureties were always at hand, by means of King Alfred's wise institution of decennaries or frankpledges; wherein the whole neighbourhood or tithing of freemen, were mutually pledges for each other's good behaviour. But this great and general security being now fallen into disuse, and neglected, there hath succeeded to it the method of making suspected persons find particular and special Securities for their future conduct: of which we find mention in the Laws of King Edward the Confessor; "tradat fidejussores de pace et legalitate tuenda." Cap. 18.

This security, therefore, at present consists in being bound, with one or more Sureties, in a recognizance or obligation to the King, entered on record, and taken in some Court, or by some judicial officer; whereby the parties acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the Crown in the sum required, (for instance 100*l.*) with condition to be void and of none effect, if the party shall appear in Court on such a day, and in the mean time shall keep the peace; either generally, towards the King, and all his liege people; or particularly, also, with regard to the person who craves the security. Or, if it be for the good behaviour, then on condition that he shall demean and behave himself well, (or be of good behaviour,) either generally or specially, for the time therein limited, as for one or more years, or for life. This recognizance, if taken by a Justice of the Peace, must be certified to the next Sessions, in pursuance of the stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1: and if the condition of such recognizance be broken, by any breach of the peace in the one case, or any misbehaviour in the other, the recognizance becomes forfeited or absolute; and, being estreated or extracted, (taken out from among the other records,) and sent up to the Exchequer, the party and his Sureties, having having now become the King's absolute debtors, are sued for the several sums in which they are respectively bound. 4 Comm. c. 18.

II. 1. Any Justices of the Peace, by virtue of their commission, or those who are ex officio conservators of the peace, may demand such Security according to their own discretion: But a Secretary of State or Privy Counsellor are not, ex officio, such conservators, and therefore they cannot bind to the peace or good behaviour. 11 St. Tr. 317. Or it may be granted at the request of any Subject, upon due cause shewn, provided such demandant be under the King's protection; for which reason it has been formerly doubted, whether Jews, Pagans, or persons convicted of a præmunire, were entitled thereto. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. § 3. Or, if the Justice is averse to act, it may be granted by a mandatory writ, called a supplicavit, issuing out of the Court of King's Bench or Chancery; which will compel the Justice to act, as a ministerial and not as a judicial officer; and he must make a return to such writ, specifying his compliance, under his hand and seal. F. N. B. 80. 2 P. Wms. 202. See title Supplicavit. But this writ is seldom used; for, when application is made to the superior Courts, they usually take the recognizances there, under the directions of the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 8. And indeed a Peer or Peeress cannot be bound over in any other place, than the Courts of King's Bench or Chancery; though a Justice of the Peace has a power to require Sureties of any other person, being compos mentis, and under the degree of nobility, whether he be a fellow Justice or other magistrate, or whether he be merely a private man. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. § 5. Wives may demand it against their husbands; (so Peeresses against their Lords;) or husbands, if necessary, against their wives. But femecoverts, and infants under age, ought to find Security by their friends only, and not to be bound themselves: for they are incapable of engaging themselves to answer any debt; which, is the nature of these recognizances or acknowledgments. See title Recognizance; & 4 Comm. 253, 4.

If the person against whom it is demanded, be present, the Justice of the Peace may commit him immediately, unless he offers Sureties; and à fortiori he may be commanded to find Sureties, and be committed for not doing it. Bro. Mainp. pl. 39: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. But if he is absent, a warrant for committing him cannot be granted, till a warrant is issued commanding him to find Sureties; and this warrant, which must be under seal, ought to shew the cause for which it is granted, and at whose suit. Lamb. 85: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

The Justice of the Peace who grants this last-mentioned warrant, may in this case make it special for bringing the party before himself only; for, as he has most knowledge of the matter, he is best qualified to do justice in it. 5 Co. 59: Foster's case; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. But if the warrant be in general terms to carry the party before any Justice of the Peace, the officer who executes it has his election to carry him before what Justice he pleases; and may carry him to gaol, by virtue of the same warrant, if he refuses to find Sureties before such Justice; for the warrant has these words in it, if he shall refuse to find Surety, &c. Bro. Fals Impris. pl. 11: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: 5 Co. 59.

If one, however, who apprehends that the Surety of the Peace will be demanded against him, finds Sureties before any Justice of the peace of the same county, either before or after a warrant is issued against him, he may have a supersedeas from such Justice; and this shall prevent or discharge him from an arrest, under the warrant of any other Justice, at the suit of the same party, for whose security he has found such Sureties. Lamb. 95, 96: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

The recognizance for keeping the peace, which a Justice of the Peace takes upon complaint below, is to be regulated, as to the number and sufficiency of the Sureties, the largeness of the sum, and the time it is to continue in force, by the discretion of such Justice. Lamb. 100: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. It has been said that a recognizance taken by a Justice of Peace, to keep the peace as to A. B. for a year, or for life, or without expressing any certain time, which shall be intended to be for life, although no time or place is fixed for the party's appearance, or he is not bound to keep the peace as to all the King's liege people, is good. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: Lamb. 100. But it seems to be the safest way to bind the party to appear at the next Sessions of the Peace, and in the mean time to keep the peace as to the King and all his liege people, and especially as to the party who has demanded the Surety of the Peace. Lamb. 105: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

If one of the Sureties of a man who is bound to keep the peace dies, he shall not be obliged to find a new Surety; for the executors or administrators of him who is dead are bound by the recognizance. Lamb. 113: Bro. Peace, pl. 17: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

2. Any Justice of the Peace may, ex officio, bind all those to keep the peace, who, in his presence, make any affray; or threaten to kill or beat another; or contend together with hot and angry words; or go about with unusual weapons or attendance, to the terror of the People; and all such as he knows to be common barretors; and such as are brought before him by the Constable for a breach of the peace in his presence; and all such persons as, having been before bound to the peace, have broken it and forfeited their recognizances. Also wherever any private man hath just cause to fear that another will burn his house, or do him a corporal injury, by killing, imprisoning, or beating him; or that he will procure others so to do; he may demand Surety of the Peace against such person: And every Justice of the Peace is bound to grant it, if he who demands it will make oath that he is actually under fear of death or bodily harm; and will shew that he has just cause to be so, by reason of the other's menaces, attempts, or having lain in wait for him; and will also farther swear, that he does not require such Surety out of malice or for mere vexation. This is called Swearing the Peace against another: And, if the party does not find such Sureties as the Justice in his discretion shall require, he may immediately be committed till he does. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

Surety of the Peace may be demanded by a wife, if her husband gives her unreasonable correction. Mow 874: Godb. 215: F. N. B. 80. Surety of the Peace ought not to be granted to a man for fear of danger to his servant or cattle. Lamb. 83. It hath however ever been said, that a man may have the Surety of the Peace against one who threatens to hurt his wife or child. Dalt. 266. The Surety of the Peace ought not to be granted for any past battery, unless there is a fear of some present or future danger; But the offender must, in such case, be punished by action or indictment. Dalt. 266. The demand of the Surety of the Peace ought to be soon after the cause of fear; for the suffering much time to pass before it is demanded, shews that the party has been under no great terror. 6 Mod. 132.

It is said, the fear of one cannot be the fear of another; and therefore every recognizance must be separate. But in Mich. 23 Geo. 2. B. R. the Court allowed three women to file joint articles of the peace against three men, R. v. Nettle, cited 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. § 5. Leach's note. Although the fact from which the fear arises be pardoned, the Court of K. B. will receive it as a ground to grant the Security upon. Stra. 473.

At the Common Law, the oath of the party was a sufficient ground for the Court of King's Bench to grant the Surety of the Peace; but this cannot be done since the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 8. unless Articles of the Peace are exhibited in Court, upon motion in open Court. F. N. B. 79. 80.

Where Articles of the Peace are exhibited in the Court of King's Bench, and oath is made that the party does not crave the Security of the Peace out of hatred or malice, but merely for the preservation of his life and person from danger, an attachment of the peace issues to the Sheriff, commanding him to take bond for the appearance of the party at the return of the writ, to put in bail to the articles in this Court: and, if such bond is not given, to commit the party to the next gaol, Comb. 429; Russel's case: F. N. B. 79. Where the party, against whom Articles of the Peace are exhibited, comes into Court to put in bail, the Articles must be read to him. 6 Mod. 132. An affirmation is not sufficient on which to grant Surety of the Peace. Stra. 527: 12 Mod. 243.

The Court will not permit the truth of the allegations to be controverted by the defendant, but will order Security to be taken immediately, if no objections arise upon the face of the Articles themselves. Stra. 1202. But if, on application for the assistance of the Court to enforce the subsequent process, the Articles should manifestly appear, from the corroborated affidavit of the defendant, to have been a malicious, voluntary, and gross perjury, the Court will resist the application, and commit the offender. 2 Burr. 806: 3 Burr. 1922.

Robert Parnel having exhibited Articles of the Peace against Sir Thomas Allen, Bart. and three others, an attachment of the peace issued against them. Before bail was put in, Parnel, in a petition to the Court, recited some of the facts sworn to in the Articles, and endeavoured to explain them. Hereupon the counsel for the defendants moved for a rule to review the Articles, and some affidavits were read to contradict the facts therein charged. Upon reading the petition and these affidavits, in which the facts were flatly contradicted by five or six persons, a rule was made to shew cause why the Articles should not be reviewed, and that Parnel should appear upon the day for shewing cause. He did attend; and the Court was, upon the whole, so satisfied of his having been guilty of perjury, that he was immediately committed for wilful and corrupt perjury; and a rule was made, that all farther proceedings upon the Articles should stay. The rule was pronounced in these terms; "and not to take the Articles off the file; in order to give the defendants an opportunity, which could not otherwise have been done, of prosecuting Parnel for perjury." MS. Rep. Rex v. Sir Thomas Allen, Bart. and others, Hil. 32 Geo. 2.

Articles of the Peace having been exhibited by John Brown against Hannah Bennett and three others, a rule was made, upon reading the affidavits of the defendants, to shew cause why these Articles should not be reviewed. In these affidavits it was sworn, that the defendants did not know any such person as Brown the Articulant; and, besides other strong facts sworn to, it was suggested, that this was a contrivance of the defendant, Bennett's husband, to oppress her. No cause being shewn, the Articles were ordered to be taken off the file. MS. Rep. Rex v. Bennett and others, East. 32 Geo. 2.

If a defendant, through infirmity of age or sickness, be unable to attend the Court, a mandamus will be granted to the Justices in the country, to take such Security. See Stra. 835: Comb. 427. But, that this is a singular instance, see Say. 253.

The Court will not receive Articles of the Peace, if the parties live at a distance in the country, unless they have previously made application to a Justice in the neighbourhood. 2 Burr. 780. And if the Court do receive them, the Secondary may indorse the attachment in the form required, and order a Justice of the County to take the security. 2 Burr. 1039: 1 Bl. 233.

When Surety of the Peace is granted by the Court of King's Bench, if a supersedeas comes from the Court of Chancery, to the Justices of that Court, their power is at an end; and the party as to them discharged. Bro. Peace, pl. 17. Sed. qu.?

3. Justices of Peace are empowered by the stat. 34 Edw. 3. c. 1. to bind over to the good behaviour towards the King and his People, all them that be not of good fame, wherever they be found; to the intent that the People be not troubled nor endamaged, nor the peace diminished, nor merchants and others, passing by the highways of the realm, be disturbed nor put in the peril, which may happen by such offenders. Under the general words of this expression, that be not of good fame, it is holden that a man may be bound to his good behaviour for causes of scandal, contra bonos mores, as well as contra pacem; as, for haunting bawdy-houses with women of bad fame; or for keeping such women in his own house; or for words tending to scandalize the Government, or in abuse of the Officers of Justice, especially in the execution of their office. Thus also a Justice may bind over all night-walkers; eaves-droppers; such as keep suspicious company, or are reported to be pilferers or robbers; such as sleep in the day and wake in the night; common drunkards; whoremasters; the putative fathers of bastards; cheats; idle vagabonds; and other persons whose misbehaviour may reasonably bring them within the general words of the statute, as persons not of good fame; an expression, it must be owned, of so great a latitude, as leaves much to be determined by the discretion of the Magistrate himself. But, if he commits a man for want of Sureties, he must express the cause thereof with convenient certainty; and take care that such cause be a good one. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 61: 4 Comm. 256.

III. 1. A Recognizance may be discharged, either by the demise of the King, to whom the recognizance is made; or by the death of the principal party bound thereby, if not before forfeited; or by order of the Court to which such recognizance is certified by the Justices, (as the Quarter-Sessions, Assizes, or King's Bench,) if they see sufficient cause: Or, in case he at whose request it was granted, if granted upon a private account, will release it, or does not make his appearance to pray that it may be continued. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

2. Such recognizance for keeping the peace, when given, may be forfeited by any actual violence, or even an assault, or menace, to the person of him who demanded it, if it be a special recognizance; or, if the recognizance be general, by any unlawful action whatsoever, that either is or tends to a breach of the peace; or, more particularly, by any one of the many species of offences against the public peace; or by any private violence committed against any of his Majesty's Subjects. But a bare trespass, upon the lands or goods of another, which is a ground for a civil action, unless accompanied with a wilful breach of the peace, is no forfeiture of the recognizance. Neither are mere reproachful words, as calling a man knave or liar, any breach of the peace, so as to forfeit one's recognizance, (being looked upon to be merely the effect of unmeaning heat and passion,) unless they amount to a challenge to fight. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: 4 Comm. 255, 6.

By the stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1, before-mentioned, it is enacted, "That if the party who is called at a Sessions of the Peace, upon a recognizance for keeping the peace, makes default, his default shall be then and there recorded, and the same recognizance, with the record of the default, be sent and certified into the Chancery, or before the King in his Bench, or into the King's Exchequer."

He who is bound to keep the peace, and to appear at the Sessions, must appear there, and record his appearance, otherwise his recognizance is forfeited. And although the party who craved the Surety of the Peace, comes not to pray that it may be continued, the Justices may in their discretion order it to be continued till another Sessions. Bro. Peace, pl. 17: Lamb. 106.

But if an excuse, which is judged by the Court to be a reasonable one, is given for the non-appearance of a party, it seems that the Court is not bound peremptorily to record his default, but may discharge the recognizance, or respite it till the next Sessions. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. A recognizance for keeping the peace may be forfeited by any actual violence to the person of another, whether it be done by the party bound, or others by his procurement. Lamb. 115, 127: Bro. Peace, pl. 2: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. In support of a rule to stay proceedings in a scire facias, upon a recognizance for keeping the peace, it was said, that the assault, which had been made, was not upon him at whose request the Surety of the Peace was granted, but upon another person. It was held that this makes no difference; and the rule was discharged. MS. Rep. Rex. v. Stanley and his bail, Trin. 27 Geo. 2. But a recognizance for keeping the peace is not forfeited, where an officer, having a warrant against one who will not suffer himself to be arrested, beats or wounds him in the attempt to take him. Lamb. 128: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

So it is not forfeited, if a parent in a reasonable manner chastises his child; a master his servant, being actually in his service at the time; a schoolmaster his scholar; a gaoler his prisoner: a husband his wife. 1 Sid. 176, 177: Lamb. 127, 128: Hetl. 149, 150: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: F. N. B. 80.

And, without enumerating all the actual assaults, which a man may make upon the person of another, and not forfeit his recognizance for keeping the peace, it may be laid down as a principle, that such a recognizance is not forfeited by any assault which could have been justified in an action, or upon an indictment, for the assault. 4 New Abr. 694.

It has been held, that a recognizance for the peace may be forfeited by any treason against the person of the King, or by an unlawful assembly in terrorem populi. Lamb. 115; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. Words which tend directly to a breach of the peace, as challenging a man to fight, or threatening to beat one who is present, amount to a forfeiture of such recognizance. Lamb. 115: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: Cro. Eliz. 86. A recognizance is likewise forfeited by threatening to beat a person who is absent, if the party, who has so threatened, does afterward lie in wait to beat him. Lamb. 115.

A man shall not forfeit a recognizance for keeping the peace, who does a hurt to another in playing at cudgels, or such like sport, by consent; for these sports, which tend to promote activity and courage, are lawful. Dalt. 284: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. But he who wounds another in fighting with naked swords, forfeits his recognizance; because no consent, nor even the command of the King, can make so dangerous a diversion lawful. Cro. Car. 229: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. If a soldier hurts another soldier, by discharging his gun in exercising without sufficient caution, it is no forfeiture of a recognizance for keeping the peace: For although he would be liable in an action for the damage occasioned by his negligence, this, it not being a wilful breach of the peace, is not within the purport of the recognizance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: Hob. 134: 2 Rol. Abr. 548.

A Court of Quarter Sessions cannot in any case proceed against the parties, for a forfeiture of a recognizance for keeping the peace; but the recognizance must be sent into some of the King's Courts in Westminster-Hall. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60. All proceedings upon a forfeited recognizance must be by scire facias, and not by indictment; because, where a scire facias is brought, the parties have an opportunity of pleading any matter in their discharge. 1 Roll. Abr. 900, Perrow's case: Cro. Jac. 598: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

The demise of the King is a discharge of a recognizance for keeping the peace: For the condition being servare pacem nostram, his successor cannot take advantage of a breach thereof. Bro. Peace, pl. 15: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60.

After such a recognizance is forfeited, the King may pardon the forfeiture: But he cannot release the condition before before it is broken; because the party, at whose complaint it was taken, has an interest therein. Bro. Recogn. pl 22: Bro. Chart de Pardon [illegible].

If no time for the continuance of a recognizance for keeping the peace is therein mentioned, it is perhaps in the power of the Court, in which it was taken, or to whom it has been certified, to discharge it at their discretion. 4 New Abr. [illegible].

The usual practice of a Court of Quarter Sessions is to continue a recognizance for keeping the peace from Sessions to Sessions, until the Court thinks proper to discharge it. It is the constant course of the Court of King's Bench, to take a recognizance for twelve months, and, if no indictment is within that time preferred against the party bound to keep the peace, it may, at the expiration thereof, be discharged. 12 Mod. [illegible]; Str. 835. This seems also to be the practice of the Court of Chancery; for, upon a motion to discharge a writ of supplicavit, it was refused: And by my Lord Macclesfield, Chancellor—This application is too early; let the party stay till the year is out, and behave himself quietly all that time. 2 P. Wms. 202, Clavering's case: See title Supplicavit; and further on this subject, Sav. 53: 1 Lev. 235: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 60: Bro. Peace, pl. 17. Lamb. 111: 11 Mod. 109: Cro. J. 282: Dalt. 207.

3 A recognizance for the Good Behaviour may be forfeited by all the same means as one for the Security of the Peace may be; and also by some others; as by going armed with unusual attendance, to the terror of the people, by speaking words tending to sedition; or by committing any of those acts of misbehaviour which the recognizance was intended to prevent. But not by barely giving fresh cause of suspicion of that which perhaps may never actually happen; for though it is just to compel suspected persons to give Security to the Public against misbehaviour that is apprehended, yet it would be hard, upon such suspicion, without the proof of any actual crime, to punish them by a forfeiture of their recognizance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 61: 4 Comm. 257.

SURGEON, Chirurgus, from the Fr. Chirurgien; Signifying him that dealeth in the mechanical part of physic, and the outward cures performed with the hand; originally compounded of the two Greek words Χείρ manus, Ἔργον opus, and for this cause Surgeons are not allowed to administer any inward medicines. By the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 42. the Barbers and Surgeons of London were incorporated and made one Company; and it was directed that there should be chosen yearly four Masters for the said Company, of which two were to be expert in Surgery, and the other two in Barbery, who should have power to punish and correct all defaults; and the Company, and their successors, were to have the oversight and correction, as well of freemen as foreigners, for such offences as they should commit against the good order of barbery and surgery: They were exempted from bearing armour, serving on juries, and all matters of watch [illegible] to pay scot and lot, and other charges, as formerly; and the said Company had free liberty to take four persons condemned for felony, for anatomical [illegible]. No barber in London, or within one mile thereof, was to practise Surgery, letting of blood, or any other thing relating thereto, except drawing of teeth; nor was any person who practised Surgery within those limits, to exercise the craft of a Barber: Though any man, not being a barber or Surgeon, might retain in his house, as a servant, a barber or Surgeon, who might exercise his art in his master's house, or elsewhere, &c. All persons practising Surgery in London, were to have an open sign in the street where they dwell, that people might know where to resort to them when wanted: And every person offending in any of the articles contained in this statute, were to forfeit 5 l. a month, one moiety to the King, and the other to him who would sue for the same, &c. By the stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 15, the Surgeons of London, and the Barbers of London, are made two separate and distinct Corporations, reserving the privileges each were entitled to under stat 32 H. 8. to each Company separately.—By the latter act, Examiners are appointed to admit Surgeons, &c.

SUR LUI JUR, i. e. Upon his oath. Leg. W. 1 c 16.

SURMISE, Something offered to a Court, to move it to grant a prohibition, Audita Querela, or other writ grantable thereon. See title Suggestion.

SURPLUSAGE, Fr. Surplus, Lat. Superfluagium, Corollarium,] A superfluity or addition more than needful, which sometimes is the cause that a writ abates, but, in pleading, many times it is absolutely void, and the residue of the plea shall stand good. Broke. Plow. 63. See titles Amendment, Pleading.

If a Jury find the substance of the issue before them to be tried, other superfluous matter is but Surplusage. 6 Rep. 46. And where a verdict or judgment is complete, if there be any other matter repugnant or uncertain, &c. it shall be rejected as Surplusage 3 Nelf. 262.

SURPLUSAGE OF ACCOUNTS, Signifies a greater disbursement than the charge of the accountant amounts unto. In another sense, Surplusage is the remainder or overplus of money left. Litt. Dict.

SURPLUSAGE OF INTESTATES' EFFECTS. See title Executor V. 8.

SURREBUTTER, The replication or answer of the plaintiff to the defendant's Rebutter. See this Dict. titles Pleading; Rebutter.

SURREJOINDER, A second defence (as the replication is the first) of the plaintiff's Declaration in a cause, and is an answer to the Rejoinder of the defendant. West. Symb. par. 2. As a Rejoinder is the defendant's answer to the replication of the plaintiff, so a Surrejoinder is the plaintiff's answer to the defendant's Rejoinder. Wood's Inst. 586. Where a plaintiff in his Surrejoinder is to conclude to the country, and not with an averment, see Raym. 94. After Rejoinder and Surrejoinder, and Rebutter, &c. there may be a demurrer. See Pleading.

SURRENDER, Sursum-Redditio.] A deed or instrument testifying that the particular tenant for life or years, of lands and tenements, doth yield up his estate to him that hath the immediate estate in remainder or reversion, that he may have the present possession thereof; and whereby the estate for life or years may merge or drown by the mutual agreement of the parties. Co. Litt. 337.

A Surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for as that operates by the greater estate's descending upon the less, a Surrender is the falling of a less estate into a greater. It is made by these words, Hath surrendered, granted, and yielded up. 2 Comm. c. 20. p. 326.

Of Surrenders there are three kinds: A Surrender, properly taken, at Common Law; a Surrender of copyhold or customary estates; and a Surrender, improperly taken, as of a deed, a patent, rent newly created, &c.

The Surrender at Common Law is the usual Surrender, and is of two sorts; viz. A Surrender in Deed, or by express words in writing, where the words of the lessee to the lessor prove a sufficient assent to give him his estate back again; and a Surrender in Law, being that which is wrought by operation of Law, and not actual; as if a lessee for life or years take a new lease of the same land, during the term, this will be a Surrender in Law of the first lease. 1 Inst. 338: 5 Rep. 11: Perk. 601. And, in some cases, a Surrender in Law is of greater force than a Surrender in Deed; for if a man makes a lease for years, to begin at a day to come, this future interest cannot be surrendered by deed, because there is no reversion wherein it may drown; but if the lessee, before the day, take a new lease of the same land, it is a good Surrender in Law of the former lease: And this Surrender in Law, by taking a new lease, holds good, though the second lease is for a less term than the first; and, it is said, though the second lease is a voidable lease, &c. 5 Rep. 11: 6 Rep. 69: 10 Rep. 67: 1 Inst. 218: Cro. Eliz. 873.

If lessee for life do accept of a lease for years, this is a Surrender in Law of his lease for life; if it should be otherwise, the lease for years would be made to no purpose, and both the leases cannot stand together in one person. 2 Lill. Abr. 544. Lessee for twenty-one years takes a lease of the same lands for forty years, to commence after the death of A. B., it is not any present Surrender of the first term; but if A. B. dies within the first term, it is. 4 Leon. 83. A lessee for years took a second lease, to commence at Michaelmas ensuing: Adjudged this was an immediate Surrender in Law of the first; and that the lessor might enter and take the profits, from the time of the acceptance of the second lease, until Michaelmas following. Cro. Eliz. 605. If the lessor make, and lessee accept, a new lease, and it is upon condition; this shall be a Surrender in Law: And if an assignee of tenant for years take a new lease, &c. the first lease will be by Law surrendered. 1 Inst. 218, 338. If a woman lessee for years marries, and afterwards she takes a new lease for life without her husband, this is a Surrender and extinguishment of the term; but if the husband disagree, then it is revived: Though if the new lease had been made to the husband and wife, then, by acceptance thereof, the first lease had been gone. Hutt. 7. A lessor takes the lessee to wife, then the term is not drowned or surrendered; but he is possessed of the term in her right, during the coverture. Wood's Inst. 285.

A Surrender may be of any thing grantable, either absolute or conditional; and may be made to an use, being a conveyance tied and charged with the limitation of an use: But it may not be of an estate in fee; nor of rights and titles only to other estates for life or years; or for part of such an estate; nor may one termor regularly surrender to another termor; nor can a tenant at will surrender any more than he can grant. Perk. 615: Noy's Max. 73: Cro. Eliz. 688: 1 Leon. 303. Where things will not pass by Surrender, the deed may enure to other purposes, and take effect by way of grant, having sufficient words. Perk. 588, 624.

To the making of a good Surrender in Deed of Lands, the following things are requisite: The Surrenderor is to be a person able to grant and make a Surrender, and the Surrenderee a person able to receive and take it; the Surrenderor must have an estate in possession of the thing surrendered, and not a future right; and the Surrender is to be made to him that hath the next estate in remainder or reversion, without any estate coming between; the Surrenderee must have a higher or greater estate in his own right, and not in the right of his wife, &c. in the thing surrendered, than the Surrenderor hath, so that the estate of the Surrenderor may be drowned therein; (so that lessee for life cannot surrender to him in remainder for years;) there is to be a privity of estate between the Surrenderor and Surrenderee; and the Surrenderee must be sole seised of his estate in remainder or reversion, and not in joint-tenancy; and the Surrenderee agree to the Surrender, &c. 1 Inst. 338: Perk. 584, 588: 2 Roll. Abr. 494: Noy's Max. 73.

A man who hath a fee-simple estate cannot surrender it, because it cannot be drowned in another estate. 12 H. 4. 21. And if a lease be made for life or years to A., the remainder for life to B., remainder in fee-tail to C., and the first tenant surrenders to C.; this will not take effect as a Surrender, by reason of the intervening estate. Dyer 112. The lessee for life or years may surrender to him that is next in remainder in fee-simple or fee-tail. And if lessee for life surrenders his estate to one in remainder, that is tenant for his own life, it is a good Surrender; for a man's estate for his own life, in judgment of Law, is greater than that for another's. And where an estate is surrendered for life, there needs no livery and seisin, as in a grant. 1 Inst. 338: Dyer 251, 280.

Yet, in some cases, an estate, &c. may have continuance, though it be surrendered; as where lessee for life makes a lease for years, and after doth surrender, the term for years doth continue; and so of a rent-charge granted by such lessee, &c. Bro. 47: 1 Inst. 338. If the lessee for years, rendering rent, surrenders his estate to the lessor, hereby the rent is extinct: But if the rent were granted away before the Surrender, it would be otherwise. 8 Rep. 145: Bro. Surrend. 42. Tenant for life is disseised, or for years ousted; and before entry, or possession gained, he surrenders to him in reversion; this Surrender is void: And yet if lessee for years, after his term is begun, before he enters, and when nobody doth keep from him the profits, surrenders, it will be good. Perk. § 600.

If there be lessee for years, the remainder for life, remainder in fee; the lessee for years may surrender to the lessee during life, and so may he to him in the remainder in fee. Perk. § 605.

In case of tenant for life, the remainder for life, reversion in fee; it was a question formerly, whether the remainder-man for life, by and with the consent of the tenant for life, could surrender to him in reversion without deed, only by coming on the land and saying, that he did surrender to him in reversion: The Court were divided; but two Judges held, that if tenant for life, and he in remainder for life, surrendered to the reversioner, it should pass as several Surrenders, viz. first of him in remainder to the tenant for life, and then by the tenant for life to him in reversion. Poph. 137.

If tenant for life grant his estate to him in reversion, this is a Surrender; and it must be pleaded according to the operation it hath in Law, or it will not be good. 4 Mod. 151. Though if lessees for life or years grant their estates to him in remainder or reversion, and a stranger, it shall enure as a Surrender of the one half to him in reversion, and as a grant of the other moiety to the stranger. 1 Inst. 335.

In a Surrender there is no occasion for Livery of Seisin; for there is a privity of estate between the Surrenderor and Surrenderee: The particular estate of the one, and the remainder of the other, are one and the same estate. (See titles Remainder; Reversion.) And livery having been once made at the creation of it, there is no necessity for having it afterwards. 1 Inst. 50. And for the same reason it is that no livery is required on a release, or confirmation in fee, to tenant for years or at will, though a freehold thereby passes; since the reversion of the Relessor or Confirmor, and the particular estate of the Relessee or Confirmee, are one and the same estate: And where there is already a possession derived from such a privity of estate, any further delivery of possession would be vain and nugatory. 2 Comm. 326. See this Dict. titles Release; Livery of Seisin.

By stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3, no estates of freehold, or of terms for years, shall be granted or surrendered, but by deed in writing, signed by the parties, or unless by operation in Law, &c. And by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 6, leases may be renewed without Surrender of under-leases. By stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 31, infants, lunaticks, and femes-covert, may surrender leases in order to renew them, under the direction of a Court of Equity. See further, 20 Vin Abr. 119—146; and this Dictionary, title Leases.

A Surrender of a Prebendary's lease, upon condition that if the then Prebendary did not, within a week after, grant a new lease for three lives, the Surrender shall be void: Held to be a good Surrender within the statute. 2 Strange 1201.

SURRENDER OF A BANKRUPT; See tit. Bankrupt.

SURRENDER OF COPYHOLDS, Is the yielding up of the estate by the tenant into the hands of the Lord, for such purposes as in the Surrender are expressed. This method of conveyance is so essential to the nature of a Copyhold Estate, that it cannot properly be transferred by any other assurance. But Courts of Equity will, in some particular cases, supply the want of a Surrender. See 2 Comm. c. 22; and this Dictionary, title Copyhold.

SURRENDER OF LETTERS PATENT, AND OFFICES. A Surrender may be made of Letters Patent to the King, to the end he may grant the estate to whom he pleases, &c.; and a second Patent for years to the same person, for the same thing, is a Surrender in Law of the first Patent. 10 Rep. 66. Letters Patent for years were delivered into Chancery to be cancelled, and new Letters Patent made for years; but the first were not cancelled: It was held that the second were good, because they were a Surrender in Law of the first, and the not cancelling was the fault of the Chancery, which ought to have done it. 10 Rep. 66, 67: 2 Lil. Abr. 545. If an Officer for life accepts of another grant of the same Office, it is in Law a Surrender of the first grant; but if such an Officer takes another grant of the same Office to himself and another, it may be otherwise. 1 Ventr. 297: 3 Cro. 198. See Dyer 167, 198: Godb. 415; and this Dict. titles Grant of the King; Office.

SURROGATE, Surrogatus.] Is one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another; as the Bishop or Chancellor's Surrogate, &c.

SURSISE, Supersisa.] A word especially used in the Castle of Dover, for penalties and forfeitures laid upon those that pay not the duties or rent of Castle-ward, at their days limited. It probably comes from the Fr. Sursis, i. e. forborn or neglected. Brit. 52. And Bracton hath it so in a general signification. Bract. lib. 5.

SURVEY, To measure, lay out, or particularly describe a manor, or estate in lands; and to ascertain not only the bounds and royalties thereof, but the tenure of the respective tenants, the rent and value of the same, &c. On the falling of an estate to a new Lord, consisting of manors, where there are tenants by lease, and copyholders, a Court of Survey is generally held; and at certain other times, to apprise the Lord of the present terms and interests of the tenants, and as a direction on making further grants, as well as in order to improvements, &c. In this Court, a Survey, or Particular in the nature of a Rent-roll, is made out, specifying the tenants, and terms of their tenure, &c. See Comp. Court-Keep.

SURVEYOR, from Fr. Sur, i. e. Super, and Voir, Cernere.] One that has the overseeing or care of some person's lands or works. A Court of Surveyors was erected by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39, for the benefit of the Crown.

SURVEYOR OF THE KING'S EXCHANGE, An ancient officer belonging to the Mint and Coinage, mentioned in the stat. 9 H. 5. c. 4.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL OF THE KING'S MANORS AND LANDS, Is mentioned in Cromp. Jurisd. 106.

SURVEYORS OF THE HIGHWAYS; See title Highways.

SURVEYOR OF THE NAVY, An officer appointed over all stores; and to survey hulls and masts of ships, &c. Chamberl.

SURVEYOR OF THE KING'S ORDNANCE. This officer surveys the Ordnance and provisions of war, allows bills of debt, and keeps the checks on labourers' works, &c.

SURVEYORS OF THE WARDS AND LIVERIES. This office was abolished, with the Court of Wards and Liveries, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

SURVIVOR, from Fr. Survivre, Lat. Supervivo.] The longer liver of two joint-tenants, or of any two persons joined in the right of a thing. He that remaineth alive, after others be dead, &c. Broke 33. See title Joint-tenant.

SUSANA TERRA, Land worn out with ploughing. Thorn.

SUSPENSE, Suspensio.] A temporal stop, or hanging up, as it were, of a man's right, for a time; and, in legal understanding, is taken to be where a rent, or other profit out of lands, by reason of the unity of possession of the rent, &c. and the land out of which it issues, is not in esse for a certain time, et tunc dormiunt, but may be revived or awaked: And it differs from extinguishment, which is when it dies or is gone for ever. Co. Litt. 213. A Suspension of rent is, when either the rent rent or land is so conveyed, not absolutely and finally, but for a time, after which the rent will be revived again. Vaugh. 109. A rent may be suspended by unity for a time; and if a lessor does any thing which amounts to an entry on the land, though he presently depart, yet the possession is in him sufficient to suspend the rent, until the lessee do some act which amounts to a re-entry. Vaugh. 39: 1 Leon. 110. As rent is not issuing out of a common, the lessor's inclosing the common cannot suspend his rent. Cro. Jac. 679. If part of a condition is suspended, the whole condition, as well for payment of the rent, as doing a collateral act, is suspended. 4 Rep. 52. And a thing or action personal once suspended, is for ever suspended, &c. Cro. Car. 373. See title Extinguishment.

SUSPENSION, Is also used for a censure, whereby ecclesiastical persons are forbidden to exercise their office, or take the profits of their benefices; or where they are prohibited for a certain time, in both of them, in the whole or in part: Hence is suspensio ab officio, or suspensio à beneficio, and ab officio & beneficio. Wood's Inst. 510. There is likewise a Suspension which relates to the Laity, i. e. suspensio ab ingressu ecclesiæ, or from the hearing of divine service, &c. In which case it is used, as in the Canon Law, pro minore excommunicatione. Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. See title Excommunication.

Suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act; See titles Habeas Corpus; Government.

Suspension from Offices; See titles Mandamus; Office.

SUS. PER COLL. On the trial of criminals, the usage (at the Assises) is for the Judge to sign the calendar, or list of all the prisoners' names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the Sheriff. As for a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, "Hanged by the neck;" formerly, in the days of Latin and abbreviation, Sus. per coll. for Suspendatur per collum. 4 Comm. c. 32. See title Execution of Criminals.

SUSPICION, A person may be taken up on Suspicion, where a felony is done, &c. but those who are imprisoned for a light Suspicion of larceny, or robbery, are bailable by stat. Westm. 1. c. 15: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 49. And the party being a private person, that takes up one on Suspicion of felony, must do it of his own Suspicion, not upon that of another; and he must have reasonable cause of it, &c. Hale's Hist. P. C. 78. See titles Arrest; Vagrant; Bail; Commitment, &c.

SUSPIRAL, from Lat. Suspirare, i. e. ducere Suspiria.] Is used for a spring of water, passing under ground towards a conduit or cistern. See stat. 35 H. 8. c. 10.

SUTHDURE, Sax.] The south door of a church; it was the place where canonical purgation was performed; that is, if the fact charged upon a person could not be proved by sufficient evidence, the party accused came to the south door of the church, and there, in the presence of the people, made oath, that he was innocent: And plaints, &c. were heard and determined at the Suthdure; for which reason large porches were anciently built at the south doors of churches. Gervas. Dorob. de Reparation. Ecclesiæ Cantuar'.

SWAN, Cygnus.] A noble bird of game; and a person may prescribe to have game of Swans within his manor, as well as a warren or park. 7 Rep. 17, 18. A Swan is a bird royal; and all white Swans not marked, which have gained their natural liberty, and are swimming in an open and common river, may be seized to the use of the King, by his prerogative: But a Subject may have a property in white Swans not marked; as any man may have such Swans in his private waters, and the property of them belongs to him, and not to the King; and if they escape out of his private waters, into an open and common river, he may retake them; though it is otherwise if they have gained their natural liberty, and swim in open rivers, without such pursuit. Game Law, par. 2. p. 152. Stealing Swans marked and pinioned, or unmarked, if kept in a mote, pond, or private river, and reduced to tameness, is said to be felony. H. P. C. 68. See title Larceny I. 1. And he that steals the eggs of Swans out of their nests, shall be imprisoned a year and a day, and be fined at the King's pleasure, stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17. No person may have a Swan-mark, except he have lands of the yearly value of five marks, and unless it be by grant of the King, or his officers lawfully authorised, or by prescription. Stat. 22 E. 4. c. 6.

No fowl can be a stray, but a Swan. 4 Inst. 280.

SWANIMOTE, or SWAINMOTE; See titles Sweinmote; Forest.

SWARF-MONEY, Is mentioned among customs and services: And this Swarf-money is one penny halfpenny, paid before the rising of the sun; the party must go three times about the cross, and say the Swarf-money, and then take witness and lay it in the hole; and he is to look well that his witness do not deceive him; for if it be not so paid, he shall pay a great forfeiture, viz. xxx s. and a white bull. This account was found in an old MS. containing the rents due to the Catesbys in Ladbroke, and other places in Warwickshire. It seems to be a corruption from Warth-money, and that again from Gard-money; money paid in lieu of the service of Castle guard.

SWATH, Sax. swatha.] A Swathe; or, as in Kent, a Sweath, and in some parts a Sworth; a strait row of cut grass or corn, as it lies after the scythe at the first mowing of it. Paroch. Antiq. 399.

SWEARING, Imprecatio.] Is an offence against God and religion, and a sin, of all others, the most extravagant and unaccountable, as having no benefit or advantage attending it. Several good laws and statutes have been made for punishing this crime: By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 20, it was enacted, that if any person shall profanely swear or curse in the presence of a Justice of Peace, or the same shall be proved before a Justice, he shall forfeit 1*s.* for every offence, to the use of the poor, to be levied by distress; and for want of a distress, the offender to be set in the stocks, &c. By the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21, which repeals all former statutes, if any person shall profanely curse or swear, and be convicted by the oath of any one witness before any Justice of Peace, &c. he shall forfeit as follows, viz. Every day-labourer, common soldier, common sailor, and common seaman, 1*s.* (Sailors are also punishable for this offence by a Court-Martial.) Every other person under the degree of a gentleman, 2*s.* Every person of or above the degree of a gentleman, 5*s.* a second offence double, and every other offence treble. If the offence be committed in the hearing of a Magistrate, he may convict without further proof.* If the offence be committed in the hearing of a constable, if the offender be unknown to him, he shall secure him, and carry him before a Justice of Peace; but if the offender be known to the constable, he shall make information against him before a Justice of Peace.

On information, a Justice is to order the offender to appear, and if on conviction he do not pay or give security for the penalty, he shall be sent to the house of correction for ten days; or, being a common soldier or sailor, be set in the stocks. On default of duty, Justices to forfeit 5*l.* and constables 40*s.* All convictions are to be written on parchment, and returned to the next Sessions. The penalties to go to the poor of the parish, and the offender to pay all charges of conviction, or be committed to the house of correction for six days extraordinary. All prosecutions to be within eight days. This act to be read in all churches four times a-year, under the penalty of 5*l.* The Justice's clerk may take for the information, summons, and conviction, 1*s.* and no more. Each oath or curse being a distinct or complete offence, a person may incur any number of penalties in one day. 4 Comm. 60, n. Though the conviction cannot be removed by certiorari, yet an information will lie against a Magistrate corruptly convicting under it, without hearing the defendant's witnesses. Burn. J. title Swearing.—Conviction for swearing 100 oaths, viz. "by G—," and 100 curses, viz. "G— d—— you," is good, without repeating them 100 times in the conviction. 2 Ld. Raym. 1376: Stra. 608.

SWEARING THE PEACE; See tit. Surety of the Peace.

SWEEPAGE, The crop of hay got in a meadow, called also the Swepe in some parts of England. Co. Litt. fol. 4.

SWEETS, or Sweet Wines; Made in Great Britain for sale, are liable to a duty of excise, &c. See Excise.

SWEINMOTE, Court of the Swains or Countrymen. One of the Forest Courts; which is to be holden before the Verderors as Judges, by the Steward of the Sweinmote, thrice in every year, the swains and freeholders within the forest composing the Jury. The principal jurisdiction of this Court is, first, to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest; and secondly, to receive and try presentments, certified from the Court of Attachments, against offenders in vert and venison. Stat. 34 Ed. 1. st. 5. c. 1. And this Court may not only inquire, but convict also; which conviction shall be certified to the Court of Justice-seat, under the seals of the Jury; for this Court cannot proceed to judgment. 4 Inst. 289. See title Forest.

SWINE, Shall not go unringed in woods, stat. 35 H. 8. c. 17. § 17. See titles Hogs; London; Police.

SWOLING OF LAND, Solinga vel Swolinga Terræ; Sax. Sulung, from Sul, aratrum, as to this day, in the west country, a plough is called a Sul.] So much land as one plough can till in a year. A hide of land; though some writers say it is an uncertain quantity.

SWORN BROTHERS, Fratres Jurati.] Persons who, by mutual oath, covenanted to share each other's fortune: Formerly, in any notable expedition, to invade and conquer an enemy's country, it was the custom for the more eminent soldiers to engage themselves, by reciprocal oaths, to share the reward of their service: So, in the expedition of William Duke of Normandy into England, Robert de Oily, and Roger de Ivery, were Sworn Brothers and copartners in the estate, which the Conqueror allotted them. Paroch. Antiq. 57. This practice gave occasion to our proverb of Sworn Brothers, or Brethren in Iniquity; because of their dividing plunder and spoil. See Ward on the Law of Nations.

SYLVA CÆDUA, Wood under twenty years growth: coppice-wood. Stat. 45 E. 3. c. 3. It is otherwise called in Law-french subbois. 2 Inst. fol. 642. See titles Tithes;

SYMBOLUM, A Symbol, or sign in the Sacrament; the Creed of the Apostles is often called by this name by our historians.

SYNDICUS, An advocate or patron; a burgess or recorder of a town, &c. Matt. Paris, anno 1245.

SYNGRAPH, Syngraphus.] A deed, bond, or writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties. See Chirograph.

SYNOD, synodus.] A meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons, concerning religion; being the same thing in Greek, as Convocation in Latin: Of Synods there are four kinds: 1st, A general or universal Synod or Council, where Bishops of all nations meet. 2dly, A national Synod, of the Clergy of one nation only. 3dly, A provincial Synod, where ecclesiastical persons of a province only assemble. 4thly, A diocesan Synod, of those of one diocese, &c. Our Saxon Kings usually called a Synod or mixed Council, consisting of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a-year; which is said to have been the same with our Parliament. See titles King V. 3, ad fin: Convocation.

SYNODICAL, synodale.] A tribute or payment in money, paid to the Bishop or Archdeacon, by the inferior Clergy, at Easter visitation; it is called synodale or synodicum, quia in synodo frequentius dabatur. Right. Clerg. 59. They are likewise termed Synodies, in the stat. 34 H. 8. c. 16. And sometimes Synodale is used for the Synod itself; and Synodals provincial, the canons or constitutions of a provincial Synod. Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

SYNODALES TESTES, Synods-men; thence corrupted to Sidesmen.] Were the Urban and Rural Deans, whose office at first was to inform and attest the disorders of the Clergy and People, in the Episcopal Synod; and for which a solemn oath was given them to make their presentments. But when they sunk in this authority, the synodical witnesses were a sort of impanelled Grand Jury, composed of a priest and two or three laymen of every parish, for the informing of or presenting offenders: and at length two principal persons for each diocese were annually chosen; till, by degrees, this office of inquest and information was devolved upon the Churchwardens. (See that title.) Paroch. Antiq. 649.

T.

EVERY Person convict of any felony, save murder, and admitted to the benefit of his clergy, shall be marked with a T. upon the brawn of his thumb. Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 13. See title CLERGY, Benefit of, I.

TABACUM; See Tobacco.

TABARD, TABARDER; The bachelor scholars on the foundation of Queen's College, Oxford, are called Tabitars or Tabarders; and these scholars were named Tabiters, from a gown wore by them, called a Tabert, Tabarr, or Tabard: For Verstegan tells us, that Tabert anciently signified a short gown that reached not farther than the middle of the leg; and it remains for the name of such in Germany and other countries, which, with the Teutonic and Saxon Taber, signify all a kind of garment, &c.

TABARDUM, A garment like a gown; and used for an herald's coat, but generally taken for the gown of Ecclesiastics. Matt. Paris 164.

TABELLION, Tabellio.] A notary public. Matt. Paris, anno 1236.

TABLE-RENTS, redditus ad mensam.] Rents paid to Bishops, &c. reserved and appropriated to their Table or house-keeping. See Bord-land.

TABLING OF FINES; See title Fine of Lands I. 1.

TABULA; Vide Ebdomadarius.

TACFREE, Is used, in old charters, as an exemption from payments, &c.—Cum housbold & haybold & tac-free de omnibus propriis porcis suis infra omnes metas de C. that is, they paid nothing for their hogs running within that limit. Blount.

TACTARE, For confirmare. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 61.

TAIL; FEE-TAIL.

FEODUM TALLIATUM; from the Fr. tailler to cut; either because the heirs general are by this means cut off; or because this estate is a part cut out of the whole. See title Tenures III. 6.

An Estate in Fee-tail, is a limited Fee, as opposed to a Fee-simple: It is that inheritance whereof a man is seised to him and the heirs of his body, begotten or to be begotten; limited at the will of the donor. He that giveth lands in Tail, is called the Donor; and he to whom the gift is made, the Donee. Litt. § 18. Estates in Fee-tail are the (comparatively modern) offspring of the conditional Fees at Common Law. Before the statute de donis, if lands were given to a man and the heirs of his body, it was interpreted to be a Fee-simple presently by the gift, upon condition that he had issue; and if he had issue, the condition was supposed to be performed for three purposes, viz. to alien and disinherit the issue; and by the alienation to bar the donor or his heirs of all possibility of the reversion; to forfeit the estate for treason or felony; and to charge it with rent, &c. But, by the statute de donis, the will and intention of the donor is to be observed; as that the tenant in Tail shall not alien after issue had, or before, or forfeit or charge the lands longer than for his own life, &c. and the estate shall remain to the issue of the donee, or to the donor or his heirs, where there is no issue; so that whereas the donee had a Fee-simple before, now he has but an Estate-tail, and the donor a reversion in Fee expectant upon that Estate-tail. Co. Litt. 19. See post. III.

In this place, without further entering into the origin of these estates, (for which see title Tenures, above referred to,) we shall consider,

I. What Things may or may not be entailed, under the Statute De donis: Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. st. 1.) c. 1.

II. The several Species of Estates Tail: And further, how they are respectively created.

III. The Incidents to an Estate-Tail: And the Effect of the various Statutes relating thereto.

I. TENEMENTS is the only word used in the statute: and this Coke expounds to comprehend all corporeal hereditaments whatsoever; and also all incorporeal hereditaments which savour of the realty, that is, which issue out of corporeal ones, or which concern, or are annexed to, or may be exercised within the same; as rents, estovers, commons, and the like. 1 Inst. 19, 20. Also offices and dignities, which concern lands, or have relation to fixed and certain places, may be entailed. 7 Rep. 33. But mere personal chattels, which savour not at all of the realty, cannot be directly entailed. Neither can an office, which merely relates to such personal chattels; nor an annuity, which charges only the person, and not the lands, of the grantor. But in these last, if granted to a man and the heirs of his body, the grantee hath still a Fee conditional at Common Law, as before the statute; and by his alienation (after issue born) may bar the heir or reversioner. 1 Inst. 19, 20. An estate to a man and his heirs for another's life cannot be directly entailed: For this is strictly no estate of inheritance, and therefore not within the statute de donis. 2 Vern. 225. Neither can a copyhold estate be entailed by virtue of the statute; for that would tend to encroach upon and restrain the will of the Lord: But, by the special custom of the manor, a copyhold may be limited to the heirs of the body; for here the custom ascertains and interprets the Lord's will. 3 Rep. 8.

If a term for years, or any personal chattel, (except an Annuity, see that title, and title Rents,) be granted or devised by such words as would convey an Estate-tail in real property, the grantee or devisee has the entire and absolute interest, without having issue; and as soon as such interest is vested in any one, all subsequent limitations, of consequence, become null and void. 1 Bro. C. R. 274: 1 Inst. 20: Fearne. See post.

Two things seem essential to an entail, within the statute de donis. One requisite is, that the subject be land, or or some other thing of a real nature. The other requisite is, that the estate in it be an inheritance. Therefore neither estates pur autre vie in lands, though limited to the grantee and his heirs during the life of cestui qui vie, nor terms for years, are entailable any more than personal chattels; because, as the latter, not being either interests in things real, or of inheritance, want both requisites; so the two former, though interests in things real, yet, not being also of inheritance, are deficient in one requisite.

However, estates pur autre vie, terms for years and personal chattels, may be so settled as to answer the purposes of an entail, and be rendered unalienable for almost as long a time, as if they were entailable in the strict sense of the word. Thus estates pur autre vie may be devised or limited in strict settlement, by way of remainder, like estates of inheritance; and such as have interests in the nature of Estates-tail may bar their issue, and all remainders over, by alienation of the estate pur autre vie, as those who are, strictly speaking, tenants in Tail may do by fine and recovery; but then the having of issue is not an essential preliminary to the power of alienation, in the case of an estate pur autre vie, limited to one and the heirs of his body, as it is in the case of a conditional fee, from which the mode of barring by alienation was evidently borrowed.

The manner of settling terms for years and personal chattels is different from the above; for in them no Remainders can be limited; but they may be entailed by Executory Devise, or by deed of trust, as effectually as estates of inheritance; if it is not attempted to render them unalienable beyond the duration of lives in being, and twenty-one years after, and perhaps, in the case of a posthumous child, a few months more: A limitation of time, not arbitrarily prescribed by our Courts of Justice, but wisely and reasonably adopted, in analogy to the case of freeholds of inheritance, which cannot be so limited by way of remainder, as to postpone a complete bar of the entail by fine or recovery for a longer space. See titles Executory Devise; Remainder; Limitation.

It is also proper to observe, that in the case of terms of years and personal chattels, the very vesting of an interest, which in realty would be an Estate-tail, bars the issue and all the subsequent limitations as effectually as fine and recovery, in the case of estates entailable within the statute de donis, or a simple alienation in the case of conditional fees and estates pur autre vie; and further, that if the executory limitations of personalty are on contingencies too remote, the whole property is in the first taker.

Upon the whole, by a series of decisions, within the two last centuries, and after many struggles, in respect to personalty, it is at length settled, that every species of property is, in substance, equally capable of being settled in the way of entails, and though the modes vary according to the nature of the subject, yet they tend to the same point, and the duration of the entail is circumscribed almost as nearly within the same limits as the difference of property will allow.

As to the entail of estates pur autre vie, see 2 Vern. 184, [illegible]: 3 P. Wms. 262: 1 Atk. 524: 2 Atk. 259, 376: 3 Atk. [illegible] and 2 Vef. 681.—As to the entail of terms for [illegible] and personal chattels, see Manning's case, 8 Co. 94: Lampett's case, 10 Co. 46, b: Child v. Baily, *W. II. Estates-tail are either general or special.

Tail-general is where lands and tenements are given to one, and the heirs of his body begotten: which is called Tail-general, because, how often soever such donee in Tail be married, his issue in general by all and every such marriage is, in successive order, capable of inheriting the Estate-tail, per formam doni. Litt. §§ 14, 15.

Tenant in Tail-special is where the gift is restrained to certain heirs of the donee's body, and does not go to all of them in general. And this may happen several ways. One is, where lands and tenements are given to a man, and the heirs of his body, on Mary his now wife to be begotten: Here no issue can inherit, but such special issue as is engendered between them two; not such as the husband may have by another wife: and therefore it is called Special Tail. And here we may observe, that the words of inheritance (to him and his heirs) give him an estate in Fee; but they being heirs to be by him begotten, this makes it a Fee-tail; and the person being also limited, on whom such heirs shall be begotton, (viz. Mary his present wife,) this makes it a Fee-tail-special. See Litt. §§ 16, 27, 28, 29.

Estates, in general and special Tail, are farther diversified by the distinction of sexes in such entails; for both of them may either be in Tail-male or Tail-female. As if lands be given to a man, and his heirs male of his body begotten, this is an estate in Tail-male-general; but if to a man and the heirs female of his body on his present wife begotten, this is an estate in Tail-female-special. And, in case of an entail-male, the heirs female shall never inherit, nor any derived from them; nor è converso, the heirs male, in case of a gift in Tail-female. Litt. §§ 21, 22. Thus, if the donee in Tail-male hath a daughter, who dies leaving a son, such grandson in this case cannot inherit the Estate-tail; for he cannot deduce his descent wholly by heirs male. Litt. § 24. And as the heir-male must convey his descent wholly by males, so must the heir-female wholly by females. And therefore if a man hath two Estates-tail, the one in Tail-male, and the other in Tail-female; and he hath issue a daughter, which daughter hath issue a son; this grandson can succeed to neither of the estates: For he cannot convey his descent wholly either in the male or female line. 1 Inst. 25.

There are other Estates-tail within the equity of the statute; as if lands are given to a man and his heirs, males or females, of his body begotten; the issue male or female shall only inherit according to the limitation. By virtue of the statute, here the daughter may be heir by descent, though there be a son. But in the case of a purchase, Lord Coke says, there cannot be an heir-female where there is a son who is right heir at law. 1 Inst. 24, 164. But this doctrine is now disputed, if not over-ruled. See title Heir II. ad fin. And where there is no heir to take according to the gift, as when issue fails, the land shall revert to the donor, or descend to him that is to have it after the Estate-tail is spent. 1 Inst. 25.

As the word Heirs is necessary to create a fee, so in farther limitation of the strictness of the feodal donation, the the word Body, or some other words of procreation, are necessary to make it a Fee-tail, and ascertain to what heirs in particular the fee is limited. If, therefore, either the words of inheritance or words of procreation be omitted, albeit the others are inserted in the grant, this will not make an Estate-tail. As, if the grant be to a man and his issue of his body, to a man and his seed, to a man and his children, or offspring; all these are only estates for life, there wanting the words of inheritance, his heirs. 1 Inst. 20. So, on the other hand, a gift to a man, and his heirs male, or female, is an estate in Fee-simple, and not in Fee-tail; for there are no words to ascertain the body out of which they shall issue. Litt. § 31: 1 Inst. 27. Indeed, in last wills and testaments, wherein greater indulgence is allowed, an Estate-tail may be created by a devise to a man and his seed, or to a man and his heirs male; or by any words which shew an intention to restrain the inheritance to the descendants of the devisee. 1 Inst. 9, 27. See title Will.

Further, as to the effect of particular words in creating Estates-tail.

If lands are given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, both of them have an estate in special Tail; by reason of the word Heirs, for the inheritance is not limited to one more than the other: Where lands and tenements are given to a man and his wife, and to the heirs of the body of the man, the husband hath an estate in general Tail, and the wife an estate for life; as the word Heirs relates generally to the body of the husband: And if the estate is made to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband begotten; there the wife hath an estate in special Tail, and the husband for term of life only; because the word Heirs hath relation to the body of the wife, to be begotten by that particular husband: If an estate be limited to a man's heirs which he shall beget on his wife, it creates a special Tail in the husband; but the wife will be entitled to nothing, &c. Litt. § 26, 28: Co. Litt. 22, 26.

Lands given to a man and woman unmarried, and to the heirs of their bodies, will be an estate in special Tail; for they may marry. 1 Inst. 25: 10 Rep. 50. And though lands are given to a married man and another man's wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, it may be a good Estate-tail, for the possibility of their intermarrying. 15 Hen. 7.

A general Tail, and a special Tail, may not be created at one and the same time; if they are, the general, which is greater, will frustrate the special. 1 Inst. [illegible].

It is the word Body, or other words amounting to it, make the entail: And a gift to the heirs male, or heirs female, without any thing further, is a fee-simple estate, because it is not limited of what body: And hence a Corporation cannot be seised in Tail. 1 Inst. 13, 20, 27.

In a devise or last will, an Estate-tail may be created without the word Body; also begotten shall be supplied and necessarily intended. Noy's Max. 101: 1 Inst. 26. If one gives lands to a man and his issue, or children of his body, without the words, "his heirs," to convey the inheritance, he has but an estate for life: Though such words may be good enough to convey the inheritance in a will; as Estates-tail by devise are always more favoured in Law, than Estates-tail created by deeds. 1 Inst. 20.

The word Heirs is necessary to create an Estate-tail and inheritance by deed; and where an use was limited to A. B. and to his heirs male, lawfully to be begotten; these last words imply that it must be heirs male of his body, because no other heir male can inherit by virtue of his grant, but such who are lawfully begotten by the grantor. 7 Rep. 41. If a man makes a feoffment to the use of himself for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, this is an Estate-tail executed in him; and so it is if he covenanted to stand seised in the same manner. 1 Mod. 159.

By a marriage settlement and fine levied, &c. to the use of the husband and wife, for their joint lives; remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband to be begotten, remainder (the wife surviving the husband) to her for life, remainder to the right heirs of the husband: This was held to be an Estate-tail, executed in the wife. Raym. 127: 3 Salk. 338. Land is conveyed to the use of a man and his wife for their lives, and after to their next issue male in Tail, then to the use of the husband and wife, and of the heirs of their bodies begotten, they having no male issue; by this conveyance, husband and wife are tenants in special Tail executed, and when they have issue male, they will be tenants for life, remainder to their son in Tail, the remainder to them in special Tail. 1 Inst. 28.

Where a person having an estate in fee, conveys it by lease and release to the use of himself for life, with remainder to trustees for their lives, and remainder to the heirs of his body; he hath an Estate-tail in him; but he is only tenant for life in possession: It would be otherwise if there had been no intermediate estate in the trustees for their lives. 2 Ld. Raym. 855.—A man seised of land in fee, makes a gift of it in Tail, or lease for life, remainder to the right heirs male of the body of the donor; this remainder, it is said, will be a fee-simple, and not an Estate-tail. Dyer 156. See title Remainder. If the gift or grant of the land be to J. S. and his heirs, to hold to him and the heirs of his body, &c. here he will have an estate in Tail, and a fee-simple upon it. Lit. ch. 2: 1 Inst. 21. Lands are given to two brothers, &c. and to the heirs of their bodies begotten; during their lives they shall have joint estates, so that the survivor will have all for his life; and, after their deaths, their heirs have estates in general Tail, by moieties in common one with another. 1 Inst. 25: 1 Rep. 140.

When a remainder is limited to two, and the heirs male of their bodies, they have not joint but several Estates-tail: And between baron and feme, it is said, several moieties may be of an Estate-tail, as well as of a fee-simple. Cro. Eliz. 220: Moor 228: 2 Lil. Abr. 551. A feoffment was made to the use of the feoffor for life, remainder to W. R. his son and his heirs; and for want of issue of him, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor; adjudged, W. R. hath only an estate in Tail; for though the first words of the sentence, viz. to his son and his heirs, make a fee-simple, the subsequent words in the same sentence, i. e. and for want of issue of him, make an Estate-tail, by qualifying and abridging the same. 5 Mod. 266: 3 Salk. 337. See Hetl. 57: Dyer 334: and this Dict. title Remainder.

If a person gives land to A. for life, and after his death without issue, then to another person; though here is an express express estate for life given to A. the subsequent words make an Estate-tail. But where lands are devised to A. during life, the remainder to trustees, remainder to his first son, &c. and if A. dies without issue, then, &c.; the limitation upon the devisee's death, it is said, will not give an estate in Tail to A. but it shall be here intended, that if he dies without having a son. 1 P. Wms. 605. A father, having two sons, devised his lands to his youngest son, and if he died without heirs, then to his eldest son and his heirs; the youngest son had an Estate-tail, because the devise to him, and if he died without heirs, is the same as if the testator had devised it in these words, viz. If he die without heirs of his body; for otherwise the remainder limited to the eldest son had been void, as the youngest son cannot die without heirs, so long as the eldest is living. 1 Rol. Abr. 836. See titles Remainder; Executory Devise.

In ejectment the case was, the father, having three sons, devised his lands to his second son, and his heirs for ever; and for want of such heirs, then to the right heirs of the father; then the father died, and his second son entered, and died without issue, living the eldest son: It was resolved, that the second son had but an Estate-tail, and that the devise over by these words, "and for want of such heirs," is void in point of limitation, for the testator's intent was that the lands should descend from himself, and not from his second son; and the words "want of such heirs" could import no other than want of issue, &c. so that the eldest son takes by descent in this case, and not by the will. 1 Salk. 233. See title Executory Devise.

A person devised land to his wife for life, remainder to his son, and his heirs for ever; and if he died without heirs, the same to remain to his two daughters: In this case it was held in Equity, that the rule is, where a remainder over is to one, who may be the devisee's heir at Law, such limitation will be good, and the first construed an Estate-tail; for the generality of the word Heirs shall be restrained to heirs of the body, since the testator could not but know that the devisee would not die without an heir, while the remainder-man, or any of his issue, continued: But where the second limitation is to a stranger, it is merely void, and the first is a fee-simple. Talbot's Chan. Cas. 2. See title Remainder.

There is also another species of entailed estates, now indeed grown out of use, yet still capable of subsisting in Law; which are estates in libero maritagio, or Frank-marriage. These are defined to be, where tenements are given by one man to another, together with a wife, who is the daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frankmarriage. Litt. § 17. Now by such gift, though nothing but the word Frankmarriage is expressed, the donees shall have the tenements to them, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten; that is, they are tenants in special Tail. For this one word, Frankmarriage, does ex vi termini not only create an inheritance, like the word Frankalmoign, but likewise limits that inheritance; supplying not only words of descent, but of procreation also. Such donees in frankmarriage are liable to no service but fealty; for a rent reserved thereon is void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be past between the issues of the donor and donee. Litt. §§ 19, 20. See title Frank-marriage.

III. The Incidents to a Tenancy in Tail, under the stat. Westm. 2, are chiefly these. 1. That a tenant in Tail may commit waste on the Estate-tail, by felling timber, pulling down houses, or the like, without being impeached or called to account for the same. 2. That the wife of the tenant in Tail shall have her dower, or thirds, of the Estate-tail. 3. That the husband of a female tenant in Tail may be tenant by the curtesy of the Estate-tail. 4. That an Estate-tail may be barred, or destroyed by a Fine, by a Common Recovery, or by lineal warranty descending with assets to the heir. 1 Inst. 224: 10 Rep. 38.

The establishment of this Family Law (as the statute de donis is properly styled by Pigott) has occasioned, from time to time, infinite difficulties and disputes. Children grew disobedient when they knew they could not be set aside: Farmers were ousted of their leases made by tenants in Tail; for, if such leases had been valid, then, under colour of long leases, the issue might have been virtually disinherited: Creditors were defrauded of their debts; for, if tenant in Tail could have charged his estate with their payment, he might also have defeated his issue, by mortgaging it for as much as it was worth: Innumerable latent entails were produced to deprive purchasers of the lands they had fairly bought; of suits in consequence of which our ancient books are full: And treasons were encouraged; as Estates-tail were not liable to forfeiture, longer than for the tenant's life. So that they were justly branded, as the source of new contentions, and mischiefs unknown to the Common Law; and almost universally considered as the common grievance of the realm. Co. Litt. 19: Moor 156: 10 Rep. 38. But as the Nobility were always fond of this statute, because it preserved their family estates from forfeiture, there was little hope of procuring a repeal by the Legislature; and therefore, by the connivance of an active and politic Prince, a method was devised to evade it. 2 Comm. c. 7.

About two hundred years intervened between the making of the statute de donis, and the application of common recoveries to this intent, in the twelfth year of Edward IV.; which were then openly declared by the Judges to be a sufficient bar of an Estate-tail. 1 Rep. 131: 6 Rep. 40. For though the Courts had, so long before as the reign of Edward III., very frequently hinted their opinion that a bar might be effected upon these principles, yet it never was carried into execution; till Edward IV., observing (in the disputes between the Houses of York and Lancaster) how little effect attainders for treason had on families, whose estates were protected by the sanctuary of entails, gave his countenance to this proceeding, and suffered Taltarum's case to be brought before the Court; wherein, in consequence of the principles then laid down, it was in effect determined, that a Common Recovery suffered by tenant in Tail should be an effectual destruction thereof. Year-Book, 12 Edw. 4. 14, 19: Fitz. Abr. tit. Faux Recov.: 20 Bro. Abr.; Ibid. 30; tit. Recov. in Value, 19; tit. Taile, 36. See further, this Dictionary, titles Recovery; Fine of Lands.

This expedient having greatly abridged Estates-tail, with regard to their duration, others were soon invented to strip them of other privileges. The next that was attacked was their freedom from forfeitures for treason. For, notwithstanding the large advances made by Recoveries, Recoveries, in the compass of about threescore years, towards unfettering these inheritances, and thereby subjecting the lands to forfeiture, the rapacious Prince then reigning, finding them frequently re-settled in a similar manner to suit the convenience of families, had address enough to procure a statute, (stat. 26 H. 8. c. 13,) whereby all estates of inheritance (under which general words Estates-tail were covertly included) are declared to be forfeited to the King upon any conviction of High Treason. 2 Comm c. 7.

The next attack which they suffered in order of time, was by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, whereby certain leases made by Tenants in Tail, which do not tend to the prejudice of the issue, were allowed to be good in Law, and to bind the issue in Tail. See title Lease II. But they received a more violent blow, in the same session of Parliament, by the construction put upon the statute of Fines, (4 H. 7. c. 24,) by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 36; which declares a fine duly levied by Tenant in Tail to be a complete bar to him and his heirs, and all other persons claiming under such entail. This was evidently agreeable to the intention of Henry VII. whose policy it was (before Common Recoveries had obtained their full strength and authority) to lay the road as open as possible to the alienation of landed property, in order to weaken the overgrown power of his Nobles. But as they, from the opposite reasons, were not easily brought to consent to such a provision, it was therefore couched, in his act, under covert and obscure expressions. And the Judges, though willing to construe that statute as favourably as possible for the defeating of entailed estates, yet hesitated at giving Fines so extensive a power by mere implication, when the statute De Donis had expresly declared, that they should not be a bar to Estates-tail. But the statute of Henry 8, when the doctrine of alienation was better received, and the will of the Prince more implicitly obeyed than before, avowed and established that intention. Yet, in order to preserve the property of the Crown from any danger of infringement, all Estates-tail created by the Crown, and of which the Crown has the reversion, are excepted out of this statute. And the same was done with regard to Common Recoveries, by stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 20, which enacts, that no feigned Recovery had against Tenants in Tail, where the estate was created by the Crown, and the remainder or reversion continues still in the Crown, shall be of any force and effect. Which is allowing, indirectly and collaterally, their full force and effect with respect to ordinary Estates-tail, where the royal prerogative is not concerned. 1 Inst. 372: 2 Comm. c. 7.

Lastly, by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. § 75, all Estates-tail are rendered liable to be charged for payment of debts due to the King by record or special contract; as since, by the Bankrupt Laws, they are also subjected to be sold for the debts contracted by a bankrupt. See stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19; and this Dict. title Bankrupt. And, by the construction put on the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, an appointment by Tenant in Tail of the lands entailed, to a charitable use, is good; without Fine or Recovery. See title Charitable Uses.

Estates-tail, being thus by degrees unfettered, are now reduced again to almost the same state, even before issue born, as conditional fees were in at Common Law, after the condition was performed, by the birth of issue. For, first, the Tenant in Tail is now enabled to alien his lands and tenements by Fine, by Recovery, or by certain other means; and thereby to defeat the interest as well of his own issue, though unborn, as also of the reversioner, except in the case of the Crown: Secondly, he is now liable to forfeit them for High Treason: And, lastly, he may charge them with reasonable leases, and also with such of his debts as are due to the Crown on specialties, or have been contracted with his Fellow-subjects in a course of extensive commerce. 2 Comm. c. 7.

An Estate-tail cannot merge by the accession of the fee-simple to it: But it has been adjudged, that two fees immediately expectant upon one another, (as where a man is Tenant in Tail, and remainder in fee to the Tenant in Tail,) cannot subsist in the same person; and the statute De Donis having made Estates-tail a kind of particular estates, they must, like all other such estates, be subject to merger and extinguishment, when united with the absolute fee. 8 Rep. 74: 1 Salk. 338. If there be Tenant in Tail, remainder in Tail, and Tenant in Tail enfeoffs the reversioner in fee, it is a discontinuance: And Tenants in Tail can make no greater estate than for their own lives, unless it be by lease, &c. according to the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28: 1 Rep. 140.

If Tenant in Tail bargain and sell lands to another and his heirs, or make a lease and release to the use of himself for life, with remainder over to another, &c. these estates may be avoided by entry of the issue in Tail. 7 Mod. 23, 28. Estates-tail are usually created upon settlements: Though an agreement to entail is no entail; for no agreement shall bind the issue in Tail, where there is a first entail, without a Fine. Ch. Rep. 236.

Tail after Possibility of Issue extinct, Is where lands and tenements are given to a man and his wife in Special Tail, and either of them dies without issue had between them, the survivor hath an estate in Tail after possibility of issue, &c. Also if they have issue, and the issue dies without issue, whereby there is none left who may inherit by force of the entail, the survivor of the donees hath an Estate-tail after possibility. Litt. § 32. The estate of this tenant must be created by the act of God, viz. by the death of either party without issue; none can have this estate but one of the donees, or a donee in Special Tail; for a donee in General Tail may by possibility have issue. Litt. § 32: 1 Inst. 28: 11 Rep. 80. And if one gives lands to a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies in Special Tail, and they live till each of them are 100 years old, and have no issue, yet doth the Law see no impossibility of having children, and they continue Tenants in Tail: But if the wife die without issue, there the Law seeth an apparent impossibility. 1 Inst. 28. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 7.

This estate is considered, by Blackstone, as an estate for life of the legal kind, contradistinguished from such as are conventional. See this Dict. title Life-Estates. Blackstone also shews the propriety of the long periphrasis which the Law makes use of, as absolutely necessary to give an adequate idea of the nature of this estate. 2 Comm. c. 8. p. 124.

This estate is, by the learned Commentator, said to be of an amphibious nature, partaking partly of an Estate-tail, and partly of an Estate for Life. The Tenant is in truth only Tenant for Life, but with many of the privileges of a Tenant in Tail; or he is Tenant in Tail, with many of the restrictions of a Tenant for Life; as to forfeit his estate if he aliens it in fee-simple; whereas such alienation by Tenant in Tail, though voidable by the issue, is no forfeiture of the estate to the reversioner, who is not concerned in interest till all possibility of issue be extinct. But, in general, the Law looks upon this estate as equivalent to an estate for life only; and, as such, will permit this tenant to exchange his estate with a tenant for life; which exchange can only be made of estates that are equal in their nature. See title Exchange of Lands. And although, like Tenant in Tail, he is not punishable for waste if he cut down trees, yet they are not his property, but will belong to the first person living at the time when they are cut, who has an estate of inheritance. See title Waste. 2 Comm. c. 8. & n. See also 1 Inst. 27, 28, and the notes there; and 2 P. Wms. 240.

TARE AND TRET. The first is an allowance in merchandise, made the buyer for the weight of the box, bag, or cask, wherein goods are packed; and the last is a consideration in the weight, for waste in emptying and re-selling the goods, by dust, dirt, breaking, &c. Book Rates.

TARGET, From Lat. Targus.] A shield, originally made of leather, wrought out of the back of an ox. Blount.

TARGIA, Tarida.] Was a ship of burden, since called a Tartan, and Tarita. Knighton, anno 1385.

TARIFF. Custom, duties, toll, or tribute, payable upon merchandise exported and imported, are so called. See title Customs on Merchandise.

TARTARON, A sort of fine cloth or silk. Stat. Antiq. 4 Hen. 8. c. 6.

TAS, Fr.] A Cock, heap, stack, or rick of hay or corn. Law Fr. Dict.

TASSALE, for Casula, A priest's garment covering him over.

TASSUM, A mow of corn or hay, from the Fr. Tasser, to pile up. Tasser, to mow, or heap up; ad tassum furcare, to pitch to the mow. Rot. Hill. 25 Edw. 3.

TATH. In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Lords of Manors claimed the privilege of having their tenants' flocks or sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground; which liberty was called by the name of Tath. Spelm.

TAVERN; See titles Inns; Drunkenness.

TAU, By Seldon in his notes upon Eadmerus, signifies a cross. Mon. Angl. iii. 121.

TAURI LIBERI LIBERTAS, In ancient charters, is used for a common bull; so called, because he is free and common to all the tenants within such a manor or liberty, &c.

TAWERS; See Tanners.

TAXES.

TAX, Taxa, from the Gr. Τάξις, i. e. Ordo, Tributum.] A tribute or imposition laid upon the Subject, which being certainly and orderly rated, was wont to be yearly paid into the King's Exchequer. It differs from what is commonly called a Subsidy, in this, That it is always certain as it is set down in the Exchequer-book, and levied in general of every town, and not particularly of every man, &c. See Rastall's Abridgment, titles Taxes; Tenths; Fifteenths; Subsidies, &c. and 4 Inst. 26, 33.

A Tax may now be defined to be a certain aid, subsidy, or supply, granted by the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled; constituting the King's Extraordinary Revenue, and paid yearly towards the expences of Government. 1 Comm. c. 8: See Highmore on Excise, Introd. § 2.

It is said, that in ancient times, Taxes were imposed by the King at his pleasure; but King Edw. I. bound himself and his successors, in the 25th year of his reign, that from that time forward no Tax should be laid upon the Subject, without the assent of the Lords and Commons in Parliament. Stat. 25 Ed. 1. c. 5, 6: See title Liberty. But although Taxes, which are for the defence of the Realm, cannot be imposed but by Act of Parliament; yet the Crown has a right to ask them upon any emergency, and therefore it is held they have a virtual existence always, though no actual one. Dict.

The Revenue, which must defray not only the expence of defending a Society, and of supporting the dignity of its Chief Magistrate, but also all the other necessary expences of Government, for which the Constitution of the State has not provided any particular Revenue, may be drawn either, first, from some fund which peculiarly belongs to the Sovereign or Commonwealth, and which is independent of the Revenue of the People; or, secondly, from the Revenue of the People. Smith's Wealth of Nations, iii. 241.

The resources, arising from public stock and public lands, being insufficient for these purposes, in any great and civilised State, it remains that this expence must, the greater part of it, be defrayed by Taxes, of one kind or another: The People contributing a part of their own private Revenue in order to make up a public Revenue. Ibid. 254.

The expence of Government to the individuals of a great nation, is like the expence of management to the joint-tenants of a great estate, who are all obliged to contribute in proportion to their respective interests. For it is certain, that there can be no State whatsoever, subject to the government of many, or of one, without Taxes: For, though we should suppose it content with the power it possesses, and without endeavouring to acquire more, it is impossible but that, from time to time, it must have outrages to revenge; discontents to repress: And the innumerable necessities, arising within itself, must indispensably incur regular expences, sometimes greater, sometimes less. See Highmore on Excise, Introd. § 1.

The nature of the King's ordinary Revenue, as also something respecting the origin and application of that which Blackstone terms his extraordinary Revenue, particularly as relates to the Civil List, has been laid before the Reader under title King, V. 4. Some further particulars, as to the latter, apply to the subject now under consideration.

The Taxes which are raised upon the Subject, are either annual or perpetual.—The usual annual Taxes are those on Land and Malt: The perpetual Taxes consist of the Customs, paid immediately by the merchant. The Excise duties, paid sometimes upon the consumption, and frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption—the duties on Salt—on the Postage of Letters—on Stamps—Houses and Windows—Licenses to Hackney Coaches and Chairs, in London and the parts adjacent—to Hawkers and Pedlars—duties on Offices and Pensions—on Servants—Horses—Coaches—Dogs, and a great variety of other articles: Many of these Taxes seem to be termed perpetual, as being granted for no limited time: But they are, from time to time, altered and enlarged; and some, formerly imposed, have been repealed.—Many of the late imposed Taxes are under the control of the Commissioners of Excise and Stamps; the Law relating to which branches of the Revenue, as well as that concerning the Customs, might well form separate Volumes; not very easy to be compiled, or well understood.

Some of these Taxes are termed Assessed Taxes: under which denomination the Land-Tax is generally included; that being raised by an assessment: But in strictness, Assessed Taxes are those which are under the management of the Commissioners for the affairs of Taxes; and these at present are the duties on Houses and Windows; Waggons, Carts, Coaches and other carriages; Servants, Horses, and Dogs.

The several amounts of all these Taxes, and the Acts of Parliament by which they are imposed, it would be next to useless to state in a work of this nature; since they are continually varying with almost every Session of Parliament: A fact exemplified very fully in the course of printing this Work, and by which the particulars stated, as to some of those Taxes, under former titles, are now become erroneous. The general principle of these Taxes may be seen, however, by the references to the several titles Customs; Excise, &c. &c. And some few further particulars, of a national or historical nature, shall also be stated under the present Head.

The Revenue, arising from these Taxes, and which has been rapidly increasing for a series of years, may be ſtated at preſent, in round numbers, at Twenty Millions ſterling; after all charges of collection and management paid. The average expence of collecting the whole Revenue, is computed by Sir J Sinclair, at 7½ per cent. and of that of the Exciſe, at 5½ per cent.; which is leſs than any other branch of the Revenue. Of this Revenue, the Land and Malt Tax produce from 2,500,000*l.* to 3,000,000*l.*—The whole Revenue is firſt depoſited in the Exchequer, and is thence iſſued out to the reſpective Officers for payment: The chief purpoſe to which it is applied, being the payment of the Intereſt of the National Debt; and the fund for decreaſing that Debt; beſides the Civil Liſt of the Crown; and other National charges, annually accounted for to Parliament, at what is commonly called the opening of the Budget: That is the ſtatement of the National Revenue and Expenditure, by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, at the ſame time, calls for a Supply, if neceſſary.

When the Houſe of Commons have voted a Supply to his Majeſty, and ſettled the quantum of that Supply, they uſually reſolve themſelves into a Committee of Ways and Means, to conſider the ways of raiſing, and the means for paying the intereſt, of the Supply ſo voted. And in this Committee every Member (though it is looked upon as the peculiar province of the Chancellor of the Exchequer) may propoſe ſuch ſcheme of Taxation as he thinks will be leaſt detrimental to the Public. The reſolutions of this Committee, when approved by a Vote of the Houſe, are in general eſteemed to be (as it were) final and concluſive. For though the Supply cannot be actually raiſed upon the Subject, till directed by an Act of the whole Parliament; yet no monied man will ſcruple to advance to the Government, any quantity of ready caſh, on the credit of a bare Vote of the Houſe of Commons, though no Law be yet paſſed to eſtabliſh it. 1 Comm. c. 8. p. 307, 8.

The reſpective produces of the Taxes before noticed, were originally ſeparate and diſtinct funds; being ſecurities for the ſums advanced on each ſeveral Tax, and for them only. But at laſt it became neceſſary, in order to avoid confuſion, as they multiplied yearly, to reduce the number of theſe ſeparate funds, by uniting and blending them together; ſuperadding the faith of Parliament for the general ſecurity of the whole. They were therefore reduced to three capital funds:—The Aggregate Fund, The General Fund, ſo called from ſuch union and addition; and The South Sea Fund, being the produce of the Taxes appropriated to pay the Intereſt of ſuch part of the National Debt as was advanced by that Company and its Annuitants. All theſe are now united together in The Conſolidated Fund, eſtabliſhed by ſtat. 27 Geo 3. c. 13. § 47, &c. The ſeparate Funds, thus united, are become mutual ſecurities for each other, and the whole produce of them, thus aggregated and conſolidated, is liable to pay ſuch intereſt or annuities as were formerly charged upon each different fund: the faith of the Legiſlature being moreover engaged to ſupply any caſual deficiency; and though ſome of the Taxes may have, now and then, proved leſs productive than was expected, the ſum total has generally been more than ſufficient to anſwer the charges upon them: and the ſurplus, in conſequence, formed the Sinking Fund, originally deſtined to ſink and lower the National Debt: and now enlarged and ſecured, by the proviſions of ſtat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 31, and other ſtatutes. See this Dictionary, title National Debt.

The Conſolidated Fund, above mentioned, ſtands mortgaged by Parliament, to raiſe an annual ſum for the maintenance of the King's Houſehold and Civil Liſt. For this purpoſe, in the late Reigns, the produce of certain branches of the Exciſe and Cuſtoms, the Poſt Office, the duties on Wine Licences, the Revenues of the remaining Crown Lands, the Profits ariſing from Courts of Juſtice, (which articles include all the hereditary Revenues of the Crown,) and alſo a clear Annuity of 120,000*l.* were ſettled on the King for life, for the ſupport of his Houſehold and the honour and dignity of his Crown. And as the amount of theſe ſeveral branches was uncertain, (though in the laſt Reign they ſometimes raiſed almoſt one million,) if they did not ariſe annually to 800,000*l.* the Parliament engaged to make up the deficiency. But King George III., having, ſoon after his acceſſion, ſpontaneouſly ſignified his conſent, that his own hereditary Revenue might be ſo diſpoſed of as might beſt conduce to the utility and ſatisfaction of the Public, and graciouſly accepted of the limited ſum of 800,000*l.* per ann. for the ſupport of his Civil Liſt, the ſaid hereditary and other Revenues were carried into, and made a part of the Aggregate Fund, and afterwards of the Conſolitated Fund, which is charged with the payment of the whole Annuity to the Crown.

This ſum being found inſufficient, application was, from time to time, made to Parliament to diſcharge debts contracted on the Civil Liſt: And, at length, the annual amount was increaſed to 900,000*l.* by ſtat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 21. See further, this Dict. title King V. 4.

To ſtate ſomething further, in addition to what has been ſaid under title Land-tax, and other titles in this Work, on the ſubject of ſome of theſe Taxes, conſidered individually:

The LAND-TAX, in its modern ſhape, has ſuperſeded all the former methods of rating either property, or perſons in reſpect of their property; whether by tenths, or fifteenths, ſubſidies on land, hydages, ſcutages, or talliages: A ſhort explanation of which, however, (extracted from 1 Comm c. 8,) will greatly aſſiſt the Student in underſtanding our ancient Laws and Hiſtory.

Tenths, and Fifteenths were temporary aids iſſuing out of perſonal property, and granted to the King by Parliament. 2 Inſt. 77: 4 Inſt. 34. They were formerly the real tenth or fifteenth part of all the moveables belonging to the Subject; when ſuch moveables, or perſonal eſtates, were a very different and a much leſs conſiderable thing than what they uſually are at this day. Tenths are ſaid to have been firſt granted under Henry II., who took advantage of the faſhionable zeal for Croiſades to introduce this new taxation, in order to defray the expence of an expedition to Paleſtine; which he really, or ſeemingly, had projected againſt Saladine, Emperor of the Saracens; whence it was originally denominated the Saladine Tenth. Hoved. A. D. 1188: Carte, i. 719: Hume, i. 329. But afterwards Fifteenths were more uſually granted than Tenths. Originally the amount of theſe Taxes was uncertain, being levied by aſſeſſments newly made at every freſh grant of the Commons; a commiſſion for which is preſerved by Matthew Paris. (A. D. 1232.) But it was at length reduced to a certainty, in the eighth year year of Edward III.; when, by virtue of the King's commission, new taxations were made of every township, borough, and city in the kingdom, and recorded in the Exchequer; which rate was, at the time, the fifteenth part of the value of every township; the whole amounting to about 29,000*l.* and therefore it still kept up the name of a Fifteenth, when, by the alteration of the value of money, and the increase of personal property, things came to be in a very different situation. So that, when, of later years, the Commons granted the King a Fifteenth, every parish in England immediately knew their proportion of it; that is, the same identical sum that was assessed by the same aid in the eighth of Edward III.; and then raised it by a rate among themselves, and returned it into the royal Exchequer.

The other ancient levies were in the nature of a modern Land-tax: For we may trace up the original of that charge as high as to the introduction of our military tenures; when every Tenant of a Knight's fee was bound, if called upon, to attend the King in his army for forty days in every year. But this personal attendance growing troublesome in many respects, the tenants found means of compounding for it, by first sending others in their stead, and, in process of time, by making a pecuniary satisfaction to the Crown in lieu of it. This pecuniary satisfaction at last came to be levied by assessments, at so much for every Knight's fee, under the name of Scutages; which appear to have been levied for the first time in the fifth year of Henry II., on account of his expedition to Toulouse; and were then, it seems, mere arbitrary compositions, as the King and the Subject could agree. But this precedent being afterwards abused into a means of oppression, (in levying scutages on the landholders by the royal authority only, whenever our Kings went to war, in order to hire mercenary troops and pay their contingent expences,) it became thereupon a matter of national complaint; and King John was obliged to promise in his Magna Carta, that no scutage should be imposed, without the consent of the Common Council of the Realm. This clause was indeed omitted in the Charters of Henry III., where we only find it stipulated, that scutages should be taken as they were used to be in the time of King Henry II. (c. 37.) Yet afterwards, by a variety of statutes under Edward I., and his grandson, it was provided, that the King shall not take any aids or tasks, any talliage or Tax, but by the common assent of the great men and Commons in Parliament. See title Liberty.

Of the same nature with scutages upon Knights-fees were the assessments of Hydage upon all other lands, and of Talliage upon cities and burghs. Madox. Hist. Exch. 480.—But they all gradually fell into disuse upon the introduction of Subsidies, about the time of King Richard II. and King Henry IV. These were a Tax, not immediately imposed upon property, but upon persons in respect of their reputed estates, after the nominal rate of 4*s.* in the pound for lands, and 2*s.* 8*d.* for goods; and for those of aliens in a double proportion. But this assessment was also made according to an ancient valuation; wherein the computation was so very moderate, and the rental of the kingdom was supposed to be so exceeding low, that one Subsidy of this sort did not, according to Coke, amount to more than 70,000*l.*: 4 Inst. 33: Whereas a modern Land-tax, at the same rate, produces two millions. It was anciently the rule never to grant more than one Subsidy and two Fifteenths at a time: But this rule was broken through for the first time on a very pressing occasion, the Spanish Invasion in 1588; when the Parliament gave Queen Elizabeth two Subsidies and four Fifteenths. Afterwards, as money sunk in value, more Subsidies were given; and we have an instance in the first Parliament of 1640, of the King's desiring twelve Subsidies of the Commons, to be levied in three years.

The grant of Scutages, Talliages, or Subsidies by the Commons did not extend to spiritual preferments; those being usually taxed at the same time by the Clergy themselves in Convocation; which grants of the Clergy were confirmed in Parliament, otherwise they were illegal, and not binding. A Subsidy granted by the Clergy was after the rate of 4*s.* in the pound according to the valuation of their livings in the King's books; and amounted, as Coke states, to about 20,000*l.* 4 Inst. 33. While this custom continued, Convocations were wont to sit as frequently as Parliaments; but the last Subsidies, thus given by the Clergy, were those confirmed by stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 10; since which another method of Taxation has generally prevailed, which takes in the Clergy as well as the Laity: In recompence for which the beneficed Clergy have from that period been allowed to vote at the election of Knights of the Shire; and thenceforward also the practice of giving ecclesiastical subsidies hath fallen into total disuse. Dalt. of Sheriffs, 418: Gilb. Hist. Exch. c. 4.

The Lay Subsidy was usually raised by Commissioners appointed by the Crown, or the great officers of State; and therefore, in the beginning of the civil wars between Charles I. and his Parliament, the latter having no other sufficient revenue to support themselves and their measures, introduced the practice of laying weekly and monthly assessments of a specific sum upon the several counties of the kingdom; to be levied by a pound rate on lands and personal estates; which were occasionally continued during the whole Usurpation, sometimes at the rate of 120,000*l.* a month, sometimes at inferior rates. After the Restoration, the ancient method of granting Subsidies, instead of such monthly assessments, was, as it seems once, and once only, renewed; viz. in 1663, when four Subsidies were granted by the Temporalty, and four by the Clergy; which was, in fact, the last time of raising supplies in that manner. For the monthly assessments being now established by custom, being raised by Commissioners named by Parliament, and producing a more certain revenue; from that time forwards we hear no more of Subsidies, but occasional assessments were granted as the national emergencies required. These periodical assessments, the Subsidies which preceded them, and the more ancient Scutage, Hydage, and Talliage, were to all intents and purposes a Land tax: and the assessments were sometimes expresly called so. Though a popular opinion has prevailed, that the Land-tax was first introduced in the reign of King William III. See title Land tax.

The learned Commentator is of opinion, that the last time of raising Supplies by way of Subsidy was in 1670; and he seems to have been misled by the title of stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 3, viz. "An act to grant A Subsidy to his Majesty for supply of his extraordinary occasions."

But

But although among a great variety of other Taxes, 1*s.* in the pound is to be raised upon land, yet the mode of collecting it is totally different from the former subsidy assessment; it is to be levied by exactly the same plan and arrangement as were afterwards adopted in stat. 4 W. & M. c. 1. All the material clauses in stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 3, are copied verbatim into stat. 4 W. & M. c. 1. The act of Charles II, is not printed in the common edition of the Statutes at large; but is given at length in Keble's Edition. See 1 Comm. c. 8, in n.

The Malt-tax is a sum of 750,000*l.* raised every year by Parliament ever since 1697, by a duty on every bushel of malt, and a proportional sum on certain liquors, such as Cyder and Perry, which might otherwise prevent the consumption of malt. This is under the management of Commissioners of Excise; and is indeed itself no other than an annual excise.

As to the Customs and Excise, see those titles in this Dictionary.

The duty on Salt consists in an excise, imposed, per bushel, by several statutes. This is not generally called an Excise, because under the management of different Commissioners. But the Commissioners of the Salt duties have, by stat. 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 21, the same powers, and must observe the same regulations, as those of other excises. See further, title Salt.

As to the duty on the carriage of Letters, see this Dictionary, title Post-Office.

As to the Stamp duties, see this Dict. title Stamps.

As to the duty on Houses and Windows.

As early as the Conquest, mention is made in Domesday-Book of fumage or fuage, vulgarly called smoke farthings; which were paid by custom to the King for every chimney in the house. And we read that Edward the Black Prince, (soon after his successes in France,) in imitation of the English custom, imposed a tax of a florin upon every hearth in his French dominions. But the first parliamentary establishment of it in England was by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c 10; whereby an hereditary revenue of 2*s.* for every hearth, in all houses paying to Church and Poor, was granted to the King for ever. And, by subsequent statutes for the more regular assessment of this Tax, the constable and two other substantial inhabitants of the parish, to be appointed yearly, (or the surveyor, appointed by the Crown, together with such constable or other public officer,) were, once in every year, empowered to view the inside of every house in the parish. But, upon the Revolution, by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 10, hearth-money was declared to be "not only a great oppression to the poorer sort, but a badge of slavery upon the whole people; exposing every man's house to be entered into, and searched at pleasure, by persons unknown to him; and therefore, to erect a lasting monument of their Majesties' goodness in every house in the kingdom, the duty of hearth-money was taken away and abolished." This monument of goodness remains among us to this day; but the prospect of it was somewhat darkened, (says Blackstone,) when, in six years afterwards, by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 18, a Tax was laid upon all houses (except cottages) of 2*s.* now advanced to 3*s. per annum*; and a Tax also upon all windows, if they exceeded nine, in such house. Which rates have been, from time to time, varied, being now extended to all Windows exceeding six; and power is given to surveyors, appointed by the Crown, to inspect the outside of houses, and also to pass through any house two days in the year, into any court or yard, to inspect the windows there. A duty from 6*d.* to 1*s.* in the pound, is also imposed on every dwelling house inhabited, together with the offices and gardens therewith occupied (farm houses and cottages excepted): which duty, as well as the former, is under the direction of the Commissioners of the Land-tax. See 1 Comm. c. 8.

The Duty imposed on Male Servants, retained or employed in the several capacities specifically mentioned in the statute for that purpose, extends to almost every sort of male domestic, except such as are actually employed only in husbandry or manufacture. This is under the management of the Commissioners of Land-tax and Window-tax.

The Revenue arising from the duty imposed on licences to Hackney Coaches and Chairs in London and parts adjacent, is governed by Commissioners of its own, and is, in truth, a benefit to the Subject: For the particulars, see this Dictionary, title Coaches.

The Duty on Offices and Pensions consists of an annual payment of 1*s.* in the pound, (over and above all other duties,) out of all salaries, fees, and perquisites of Offices, and out of all pensions and gratuities payable by the Crown, exceeding 100*l. per annum.* This highly popular Taxation was imposed by stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 22, and is under the direction of the Commissioners of Land tax.

For the further particulars relative to the above Taxes, as also to the many others from time to time imposed, it will be necessary, for every person interested, to refer to the statutes, by which they are regulated: And it may be a good caution not to trust too implicitly to Abridgments or tables; which, though frequently highly useful, are yet inevitably liable to mistakes.

It is considered as a rule of construction of Revenue acts, in ambiguous cases, to lean in favour of revenue: This rule will be found to be agreeable to good policy and the public interests; particularly when it is considered that disputes as to the meaning and effect of Revenue laws most generally arise in consequence of attempts, often wholly unjustifiable, to evade them. Beyond this, which may be regarded as established Law, no one can ever be said to have an undue advantage in the Courts of Justice. See 1 Comm. c. 8, in n.

TAXATIO BLADORUM, A Tax or imposition laid upon corn. Cowell.

Taxatio Norwicensis, The valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of the Pope's granting to the King the tenth of all spirituals for three years. Which Taxation was made by Walter Bishop of Norwich, delegated by the Pope to this office in 38 Hen. III., and obtained till the 19 of Edw. I. when a new Taxation, advancing the value, was made by the Bishops of Winchester and Lincoln. Cowell.

TAXERS, Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge to see the true gauge of all weights and measures; though the name took rise from taxing or rating the rents of houses, which was anciently the duty of their offices.

TAYLORS, Contracts entered into with journeymen Taylors, for advancing their wages, are declared void; and Taylors, in London, giving greater wages than allowed, shall forfeit 5*l.* and journeymen accepting the same, same, or refusing to work for the settled stated wages, the hours appointed, may be sent to the House of Correction for two months, &c. Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 13.

By stat. 8 Geo. 3. c. 17. Certain new regulations are established as to Master-Taylors and their journeymen. Their hours and price for working are limited within London and five miles thereof. The Justices are empowered to call witnesses before them on suspicion that the regulation is broken through, and, on conviction, to commit the offenders. Also the Quarter Sessions, in London, are enabled to make new regulations, if requisite, as to wages and hours of work. Masters, within the limits, employing men out of the limits, to evade the act, are to forfeit 500*l.* a moiety to the King, the other to the informer. See also title Buttons.

TEA, A pleasant sort of liquor, now much used in England, and introduced from China and the East Indies, being made of the product of a shrub growing in those parts: It seems to have been first noticed in the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 15. It now forms a considerable article of commerce under the direction of the East India Company. By the Consolidation Act, stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, it is liable to a duty of 5 per cent. on importation.—Dealers in Tea must take out an annual licence.—And various statutes have been passed to guard against frauds in smuggling this article; to regulate its importation and exportation; and to prevent frauds in mixing it with prejudicial drugs, &c. &c.

TEAM; THEAME, From the Sax. Tyman, propagare, to Teem or bring forth.] A royalty or privilege granted by the King's charter to the Lord of a Manor, for the having, restraining and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, and chattels, &c. Glanvil, lib. 5. c. 2.

TECHNICAL WORDS, in Indictments; See title Indictments III. See also titles Deed; Conveyance, &c.

TEDING-PENNY; Tething-penny, Tithing penny; A small duty or payment to the Sheriff from each Tithing, towards the charge of keeping courts, &c. from which some of the Religious were exempted by charter from the King. Chart. Hen. 1.

TEENAGE, From Sax. Tynan, to inclose or shut.] Is used in many parts of England for wood for fences and inclosures.

TEINLAND, Tainland, or Thainland; See Thane-Land.

TELLER, A considerable officer in the Exchequer, of which officers there are four; whose office is to receive all money due to the King, and to give the Clerk of the Pells a bill to charge him therewith: They also pay to all persons any money payable by the King, and make weekly and yearly books of their receipts and payments, which they deliver to the Lord Treasurer. See titles Exchequer; ACCOUNTS, Public.

TELLIGRAPHIÆ, From Sax. Tellan, dicere, Gr. γράφω, Scribo; quasi a telling any thing by writing.] Written evidences of things past. Blount.

TELLWORC, That work or labour which the tenant was bound to do for his Lord, for a certain number of days; from the Saxon word Tellan, numerare, & worc, opus. Thorn. Ann 1364.

TEMENTALE or TENEMENTALE, A tax of two shillings upon every plough-land. Hov. Hist. f. 419. A Decennary. Leg. Ed. Conf.

TEMPLARS, or KNIGHTS OF THE TEMPLE, Templarii.] A religious order of Knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, and so called because they dwelt in part of the buildings belonging to the Temple at Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulchre of our Lord. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and in their armour led them through the Holy-Land, to view the sacred monuments of Christianity, without fear of infidels; for at first their profession was to defend travellers from highwaymen and robbers. This order continuing and increasing for near two hundred years, was far spread in Christendom, and particularly here in England. But at length, some of them at Jerusalem falling away (as some authors report) to the Saracens from Christianity, or rather because they grew too potent and rich, the whole order was suppressed by Clement V., anno 1307, by the Council of Vienna 1312; and their substance given partly to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other Religious. Cassan de Gloria Mundi, par. 9. Consid. 4. These flourished here in England from the time of Henry II., till they were suppressed. They had in every nation a particular governor, whom Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 10, calls Magistrum Militiæ Templi. The Master of the Temple here was summoned to Parliament, 49 H. 3. m. 11. in Schedula. And the chief Minister of the Temple Church in London, is still called Master of the Temple. Of these Knights read Mr. Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire, fol. 706. In ancient records they were also called Fratres Militiæ Templi Solomonis. Mon. Angl. ii. 554, b. About nine years after their institution, they were ordered by a Council held at Triers, to wear a white garment; and afterwards, in the pontificate of Pope Eugenius, they wore a red cross on their garments. The Temples, which we now call the Inns of Court, was the place where they dwelt, and in the Middle Temple the King's treasure was kept. Cowell. Templars' land shall be forfeit for erecting their crosses, *stat. TEMPLE. Dugdale and Stow both tell us that the Temple in London is a place of privilege from arrests, by the grant of the King; but this hath been denied by the Court of B. R. Dugd. 317, 320: 3 Salk. Rep. 45. See title Arrest.

TEMPORALTIES OF BISHOPS, The lay-revenues, lands, tenements, and lay-fees belonging to the see of Bishops or Archbishops, as they are Barons and Lords of Parliament; (including their Baronies.) All things which a Bishop hath by livery from the King, as manors, lands, tithes, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 881: 1 Comm. c. 8. It was a custom formerly, that when Bishops received from the King their Temporalties, they did by a solemn form, in writing, renounce all right to the same by virtue of any provision from the Pope, and acknowledged the receipt of them only from the King; which custom continued from the reign of Edw. I. to the time of the Reformation: And this practice began by occasion of a Bull of Pope Gregory VIII., wherein he conferred the See of Worcester on a certain Bishop, and committed to him administrationem spiritualium & temporalium episcopatûs prædict'. Anno 31 Edw. 1.

The

The custody of these Temporalties is stated, by Blackstone, as part of the King's ordinary revenue: (See title King, V. 4.) This, upon the vacancy of the Bishopric, is immediately the right of the King, as a consequence of his prerogative in church matters; whereby he is considered as the founder of all Archbishoprics and Bishoprics, to whom during the vacancy they revert. And for the same reason, before the dissolution of Abbeys, the King had the custody of the Temporalties of all such Abbeys and Priories as were of Royal foundation, (but not of those founded by Subjects,) on the death of the Abbot or Prior. 2 Inst. 15. Another reason may also be given, why the policy of the Law hath vested this custody in the King; because as the successor is not known, the lands and possession of the See would be liable to spoil and devastation, if no one had a property therein. Therefore the Law has given the King, not the Temporalties themselves, but the custody of the Temporalties, till such time as a successor is appointed; with power of taking to himself all the intermediate profits, without any account of the successor; and with the right of presenting, (which the Crown very frequently exercises,) to such benefices and other preferments as fall within the time of vacation. Stat. 17 E. 2. st. 1. c. 14: F. N. B. 32. This revenue is of so high a nature, that it could not be granted out to a Subject, before, or even after, it accrued: But by stat. 14 Edw. 3. st. 4. cc. 4, 5. the King may, after the vacancy, lease the Temporalties to the Dean and Chapter; saving to himself all advowsons, escheats, and the like. Our ancient Kings, and particularly William Rufus, were not only remarkable for keeping the Bishoprics a long time vacant, for the sake of enjoying the Temporalties, but also committed horrible waste on the woods and other parts of the estate; and to crown all, would never, when the See was filled up, restore to the Bishop his Temporalties again, unless he purchased them at an exorbitant price. To remedy which, King Henry I. granted a charter at the beginning of his reign, promising neither to sell, nor let to farm, nor take any thing from, the domains of the Church, till the successor was installed. And it was made one of the articles of the Great Charter, that no waste should be committed in the Temporalties of Bishoprics, neither should the custody of them be sold. Stat. 9 H. 3. c. 5. The same is ordained by the stat. Westm. 1; 3 E. 1. c. 21; and the stat. 14 Edw. 3. st. 4. c. 4, (which permits, as we have seen, a lease to the Dean and Chapter,) is still more explicit in prohibiting the other exactions. It was also a frequent abuse, that the King would, for trifling or no causes, seize the Temporalties of Bishops, even during their lives, into his own hands: But this is guarded against by stat. 1 Edw. 3. st. 2. c. 2.

This revenue of the King, which was formerly very considerable, is now by a customary indulgence almost reduced to nothing: For, at present, as soon as the new Bishop is consecrated and confirmed, he usually receives the restitution of his Temporalties quite entire, and untouched, from the King; and at the same time does homage to his Sovereign; and then, and not sooner, he has a fee simple in his Bishopric, and may maintain an action for the profits. 1 Inst. 67, 341. TENANCIES, Houses or places for habitation, held of another. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 4.

TENANT, Tenens, from the Lat. tenere, to hold.] One that holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, years, or at will. The word in Law is used with divers additions; thus, Tenant in dower, is she that possesses land by virtue of her dower.—Tenant by statute-merchant, he that holds land by virtue of a statute forfeited to him.—Tenant in frank-marriage, he that holds lands or tenements by virtue of a gift thereof made to him upon marriage between him and his wife.—Tenant by the curtesy, he that holds for his life, by reason of a child begotten by him of his wife, being an inheritrix, and born alive.—Tenant by elegit, that holds by virtue of the writ called an Elegit.—Tenant in mortgage, that holds by means of a mortgage.—Tenant by the verge in ancient demesne, who is admitted by the rod in the Court of Ancient Demesne.—Tenant by copy of court-roll, who is admitted tenant of any lands, &c. within a manor, which, time out of mind, had been demisable according to the custom of the manor.—Tenant by charter, that holdeth by feoffment in writing, or other deed.—There were also Tenants by Knights-service, Tenant in burgage, Tenant in socage, Tenant in frank-fee, Tenant in villeinage: So there is Tenant in fee-simple; Tenant in fee-tail; Tenant at the will of the Lord, according to the custom of the manor; Tenant at will by the Common Law; Tenant upon sufferance; Tenant of estate of inheritance; Tenant in chief, that holdeth of the King in right of his crown; Tenant of the King's, he that holds of the person of the King, or has some honour; very Tenant, that holds immediately of his Lord, Kitch. fol. 99.; Tenant peravail.

So there are also Joint-tenants, that have equal right in lands and tenements by virtue of one title; Tenants in common, that have equal right, but hold by divers titles; particular Tenant, as Tenant for years, for life, &c. that holds only for his term; sole Tenant, he that hath no other joined with him; several Tenant, as opposite to Joint-tenant, or Tenant in common.

So there is Tenant to the præcipe, in case of Fines and Recoveries; Tenant in demesne, which is he that holdeth the demesnes of a manor for a rent, without service; Tenant on service, he that holdeth by service; Tenants by execution, that hold lands by virtue of an execution upon any statute, recognizance, &c. with divers others. Cowell. See this Dict. under the several titles relative to the estates of such Tenants; and this Dict. title Tenure.

TENANTS IN COMMON, Are such as hold by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession; because none knoweth his own severalty, and therefore they all occupy promiscuously. Litt. § 292. This tenancy therefore happens, where there is a unity of possession merely, but perhaps an entire disunion of interest, interest, of title, and of time. For, if there be two Tenants in Common of lands, one may hold his part in fee simple, the other in tail, or for life; so that there is no necessary unity of interest: One may hold by descent, the other by purchase; or the one by purchase from A., the other by purchase from B.; so that there is no unity of title: One's estate may have been vested fifty years, the other's but yesterday; so there is no unity of time. The only unity there is, is that of possession; and for this Littleton gives the true reason, because no man can certainly tell which part is his own: otherwise, even this would be soon destroyed. 2 Comm. c. 12.

Tenancy in Common may be created, either by the destruction of two estates, in joint-tenancy and co-parcenary, or by special limitation in a deed. By the destruction of the two estates, mentioned, is intended such destruction as does not sever the unity of possession, but only the unity of title or interest: As, if one of two joint-tenants in fee alienes his estate for the life of the alienee, the alienee and the other joint-tenant are Tenants in Common; for they now have several titles, the other joint-tenant by the original grant, the alienee by the new alienation; and they also have several interests, the former joint-tenant in fee-simple, the alienee for his own life only. Litt. § 293.—So, if one joint-tenant gives his part to A. in tail, and the other gives his to B. in tail, the donees are Tenants in Common, as holding by different titles and conveyances. Litt. § 292.—If one of two parceners alienes, the alienee and the remaining parcener are Tenants in Common; because they hold by different titles, the parcener by descent, the alienee by purchase. Litt. § 309.—So likewise, if there be a grant to two men, or two women, and the heirs of their bodies, here the grantees shall be joint-tenants of the life-estate, but they shall have several inheritances; because they cannot possibly have one heir of their two bodies, as might have been the case had the limitation been to a man and a woman, and the heirs of their bodies begotten: And in this and the like cases, their issues shall be Tenants in Common; because they must claim by different titles, one as heir of A., and the other as heir of B.; and those too not titles by purchase, but descent. See Litt. § 283. In short, whenever an estate in joint-tenancy or coparcenary is dissolved, so that there be no partition made, but the unity of possession continues, it is turned into a Tenancy in Common. 2 Comm. c. 12.

A Tenancy in Common may also be created by express limitation in a deed: But here care must be taken not to insert words which imply a joint estate; and then if lands be given to two or more, and it be not joint-tenancy, it must be a Tenancy in Common. Land given to two, to be holden the one moiety to one, and the other moiety to the other, is an Estate in Common; and, if one grants to another half his land, the grantor and grantee are also Tenants in Common: Because, joint-tenants do not take by distinct halves or moieties; and by such grants the division and severalty of the estate is so plainly expressed, that it is impossible they should take a joint interest in the whole of the tenements. But a devise to two persons to hold jointly and severally, has been held to be a joint-tenancy; because that is necessarily implied in the word "jointly;" the word "severally" perhaps only implying the power of partition: And an estate given to A. and B., equally to be divided between them, though in deeds it hath been said to be a joint-tenancy, (for it implies no more than the Law has annexed to that estate, viz. divisibility,) yet in wills it is certainly a Tenancy in Common; because the devisor may be presumed to have meant what is most beneficial to both the devisees, though his meaning is imperfectly expressed. See 1 Eq. Ab. 291: 1 P. Wms. 17: 3 Rep. 39; 1 Vent. 32. And this nicety in the wording of grants makes it the most usual as well as the safest way, (in them as well as in Wills,) when a Tenancy in Common is meant to be created, to add express words of exclusion as well as description, and limit the estate to A. and B., to hold as Tenants in Common, and not as Joint-tenants.

It is noticed under title Joint-tenants, that their tenure, though formerly favoured in Law, is now considered as odious. In consequence of this, in Wills, the expressions, equally to be divided, share and share alike, respectively between and amongst, have been held to create a Tenancy in Common. 2 Atk. 121: 2 Bro. C. R. 15: 1 P. Wms. 14. And there seems but little doubt that the same construction would now be put even upon the word severally: But these words certainly are only evidence of intention, and will not create a Tenancy in Common, where the contrary, from the other parts of the will, appears to be the manifest intention of the testator. 3 Bro. C. R. 215.

The words, equally to be divided, make a Tenancy in Common in surrenders of copyholds, and also in deeds which derive their operation from the statute of Uses. 1 P. Wms. 14: 1 Wils. 341: 2 Ves. 257. And though it has formerly been suggested (see 1 Ves. 165: 2 Ves. 257,) that these words are not sufficient to create a Tenancy in Common, in Common Law conveyances, yet there seems but little doubt that, in such a case, nothing but invincible authority would now induce the Courts to adopt that opinion, and to decide in favour of a Joint-tenancy. 2 Comm. c. 12. p. 194, n. See title Joint-tenants.

As to the incidents attending a Tenancy in Common: Tenants in Common (like Joint-tenants) are compellable by statute to make partition of their lands; which they were not at Common Law. See title Joint-tenants III. They properly take by distinct moieties, and have no entierty of interest; and therefore there is no survivorship between Tenants in Common. Their other incidents are such as merely arise from the unity of possession; and are therefore the same as appertain to Joint-tenants merely upon that account: Such as being liable to reciprocal actions of waste, and of account, by the stats. Westm. 2. c. 22: 4 Ann. c. 16.—For by the Common Law, no Tenant in Common was liable to account with his companion for embezzling the profits of the estate; though, if one actually turns the other out of possession, an action of ejectment will lie against him. 1 Inst. 199, 200. See 2 Comm. c. 12.

Adverse possession, or the uninterrupted receipt of the rents and profits, is now held to be evidence of an actual ouster. And where one Tenant in Common has been in undisturbed possession for 20 years, in an ejectment brought against him by the Co-tenant, the Jury will be directed to presume an actual ouster, and consequently to find a verdict for the defendant. Cowp. 217.

As for other incidents of Joint-tenants, which arise from the privity of title, or the union and entierty of interest, interest, (such as joining or being joined in actions, unless in the case where some entire or indivisible thing is to be recovered,) these are not applicable to Tenants in Common, whose interests are distinct, and whose titles are not joint but several. Litt. § 311: 1 Inst. 197: 2 Comm. c. 12.

Estates in Common can only be dissolved two ways: 1. By uniting all the titles and interests in one Tenant, by purchase or otherwise; which brings the whole to one severalty: 2. By making partition between the several Tenants in Common, which gives them all respective severalties. For indeed Tenancies in Common differ in nothing from sole estates, but merely in the blending and unity of possession. As to Tenancy in Common of things personal, see title Joint-tenancy in Things personal.

TENDE, To tender, or offer: it is mentioned in our old books; as, to tend a traverse, an averment, &c. Britton, c. 76: Staundf. Prærog. 16.

TENDER, Fr. Tendre.] The offering of money or any other thing in satisfaction; or circumspectly to endeavour the performance of a thing: as a Tender of rent is, to offer it at the time and place when and where it ought to be paid: Also it is an act done to save the penalty of a bond before action brought, &c. Terms de Ley 557. See titles Pleading, particularly I. 4; Money into Court. As to Tender of rent, see title Rents.

There are several statutes which authorise a Tender of amends, where otherwise it would not have been allowable. As stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 20, in cases of distress for rent.—Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. § 10, in cases of distress for poor's rates.—Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, in actions against Justices of the Peace.—Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 30, in actions against Excise Officers: And stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 47. § 35, in actions against Custom-House Officers.

Tender of money on a bond is to be made to the person of the obligee at the day appointed, to save the penalty and forfeiture of the bond, and it ought to be done before witnesses; though, if the obligor be sued afterwards, he must still pay it: But if the obligor be to do any collateral thing, or which is not part of the obligation, as to deliver a horse, &c. and the obligor offer to do his part, and the obligee refuseth it, the condition is performed, and the obligation discharged for ever. 1 Inst. 207, 208.

By stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. § 12, the plea of solvit post diem is granted to an action on bond; but a Tender and refusal of principle and interest at a subsequent day cannot be pleaded, as not being within the equity of the statute: For such construction would be prejudicial; as it would empower the obligor, at any time, to compel the obligee to take his money without notice. Bull. Ni. Pri. 171: Sellon's Pract., Tender.

If A., B., and C., have a joint demand, and C. has a separate demand, on D.; and D. offers A. to pay him both the debts, which A. refuses, without objecting to the form of the Tender, on account of his being only entitled to the joint demand, D. may plead this Tender in bar of an action for the joint demand; and should state it as a Tender to A., B., and C. 1 Term Rep. 684.

On award, that the defendant should pay money on such a day, and at such a place; the defendant pleaded that he tendered the money at the day and place; and because he did not set forth that he continued there ready to pay it at the last instant of the day till after sun-setting, &c. it was held ill. 2 Cro. 243.

Every Tender at the Common Law, or which is given by statute, must be made before the writ sued out.

If a Tender be in fact made before the bringing of the action, though, by the teste of the writ, it may appear to have been afterwards, (as if Tender in vacation and teste of preceding term,) the exact time when the writ was in fact sued out may be shewn in pleading, or sometimes given in evidence contrary to the teste: But if a bill be filed on the same day the Tender is made, though subsequent thereto, it seems that the defendant can no way avail himself by pleading the prior Tender; as there is no fraction of a day in Law. See Sellon's Pract., Tender; and this Dictionary, titles Pleading; Latitat; Process.

A right to damages, on account of the non-payment of a debt, or non-performance of a duty, may, after being taken away by a Tender and refusal, be revived again by a demand subsequent to the Tender and refusal; a new cause of action arises from the non-payment or non-performance thereof upon such demand: And therefore the plaintiff may reply such subsequent demand and refusal by the defendant, which, if proved, the plaintiff must have a verdict. Brownl. 7: Impey, K. B.

In case of a plea of Tender as to part, and non-assumpsit as to the residue, and the issue on the Tender being found for the defendant, the balance proved is under 40*s.*, yet the defendant, though within the jurisdiction of the County Court of Middlesex, is not entitled to costs, under stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33. § 19. Nor in case of a set-off having the same effect. Doug. 448: See Impey, K. B.

Wherever the debt or duty arises at the time of the contract, and is not discharged by a Tender and refusal, it is not enough for the party who pleads the Tender, to plead a Tender and refusal, and uncore prist, (that he is still ready,) but he must also plead tout temps prist (that he was always ready). Salk. 622: 12 Mod. 152: Carth. 413. In what cases Tender and refusal shall discharge the debt, see 1 Wils. 117.

Every requisite which is in a particular case necessary to the validity of a Tender, must, in pleading such Tender, be shewed to have been complied with; else the plea is not good. Salk. 624. A defendant cannot be permitted to plead non assumpsit as to the whole, and a Tender as to part; because, if the general issue be found for the defendant, it will appear on record that no debt is due, though something is admitted by the defendant. 4 Term Rep. 194. But a Tender to the whole declaration is good; and it is usual to plead, as to all, except the sum tendered, non assumpsit; and as to that sum, a Tender. And a defendant may plead, not guilty, and a Tender of amends, in trespass. 2 Black Rep. 1089: Sellon's Pract. A Tender is pleadable on a quantum meruit. 1 Stra. 576: Salk. 622. And a Tender may be pleaded after a Judge's order to plead issuably. 1 Burr. 59.

To an avowry for rent, the plaintiff in replevin may plead a Tender and refusal, without bringing money into Court; because, if the distress were not rightfully taken, the defendant must answer the plaintiff his damages. Salk. 584. But if the distress were rightfully taken, the plaintiff cannot plead Tender of rent and costs in bar of an avowry for rent in any case, unless the distress was made of corn, grass, &c. growing on the premises, and then such plea is given by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 9. The money cannot be taken out by the defendant, though he has a verdict. Stra. 1027.

On a Tender being pleaded, and the money paid into Court, the plaintiff replied a subsequent demand and refusal, whereupon issue being joined and tried, a verdict was found for the defendant. Whereupon he moved to have the money paid into Court returned, in part of his costs; but the Court was of opinion it could not be done. Hardw. 206.

Though a Tender is made, and the plaintiff refuses the money, yet the Tender cannot be pleaded in bar of the action, either in debt or assumpsit, but in bar of the damages only; for the debtor shall nevertheless pay his debt. Ld. Raym. 254.

There is a difference in pleading a Tender in action of debt, and in action on the case: In an action of debt, the defendant ought to conclude his plea by praying judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have or maintain his action to recover any damages against him; for, in this action, the debt is the principal, and the damages are only accessary. But, in assumpsit, the damages are the principal; and therefore, in pleading a Tender, the defendant ought to conclude his plea with a prayer of judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have or maintain his action, to recover any more or greater damages than the sum tendered, or any damages by reason of the non-payment thereof. 2 Salk. 622: 1 Lord Raym. 254: 3 Salk. 344, 5.

The plaintiff may either admit the Tender or not: if the latter, he should not take the money out of Court; for, by taking it, he admits the same to be right, and judgment is given for the defendant to go quit as to that plea: But if he admits it, and goes for further damages, on the ground that the Tender was not sufficient to cover his demand, he may take the money out of Court, enter an acquittal as to the Tender, or confess the same in his replication, and proceed on the general Issue for the residue. Ld. Raym. 1774.—If he admits the Tender and enters an acquittal, without going for further damages, he must pay the defendant his costs. Barnes 337. See Sellon's Practice, Tender.

Tender may be of money in bags, without shewing or telling it, if it can be proved there was the sum to be tendered; it being the duty of him that is to receive the money, to put out and tell it. 5 Rep. 115. Though where the person held the money on his arm in a bag, at the time of offering, this was adjudged no good Tender, for it might be counters or base money. Noy 74. A Tender in Bank-notes is sufficient, unless the creditor expresly refuses to receive notes, and insists upon cash. 3 Term Rep. 554. See 1 Burr. 459: 2 Eq. Ab. 319. If a Tender is made of more than is due, it is good; and the party to whom tendered ought to take out what belongs to him. 5 Rep. 114. Tender of the money is requisite on contracts for goods sold, &c. to entitle to action of trover. See title Trover. And a Tender of Stock sold for so much money, if it be well made, though not accepted, will entitle the party to the sum agreed to be paid. 3 Salk. 343: Stra 777, 832. See title Bond.

TENEMENT, Tenementum.] Signifies properly a house, or home-stall; but, more largely, it comprehends not only houses, but all corporeal inheritances which are holden of another, and all inheritances issuing out of or exercisable with the same. Co. Litt. 6, 19, 154. A Tenement may be said to be any house, land, rent, or other such like thing, that is any way held or possessed; but being a word of a large and ambiguous meaning, and not so certain as messuage, therefore it is not fit to be used to express any thing which requires a particular description. 2 Lill. Abr. 566.

Tenement, in its original, proper, and legal sense, signifies any thing which may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature; whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial and ideal kind. Thus liberum Tenementum, Frank-tenement or Freehold, is applicable not only to lands and other solid objects, but also to offices, rents, commons, and the like. 1 Inst. 6. And as lands and houses are Tenements, so is an advowson a Tenement; and a franchise, an office, a right of common, a peerage, or other property of the like unsubstantial kind, are all of them, legally speaking, Tenements. 1 Inst. 19, 20.

TENEMENTARY LAND, Was the outland of manors granted out to tenants by the Saxon Thanes, under arbitrary rents and services. Spelm.

TENEMENTIS LEGATIS, An ancient writ, lying to the city of London or any other Corporation, (where the old custom was, that men might devise by will lands and Tenements as well as goods and chattels,) for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same. Reg. Orig. 244.

TENENDUM, That clause in a deed wherein the tenure of the land is created and limited. The office of a Tenendum in a deed is, to limit and appoint the tenure of the land which is held, and how, and of whom it is to be held. Before the statute called Quia emptores terrarum, 18 Ed. 1. st. 1, the Tenendum was usually of the feoffor and his heirs, and not of the chief Lord of the fee, whereby Lords lost their escheats, forfeitures, &c. But since the said statute, the Tenendum, where the fee-simple passes, must be of the chief Lord of the fee, by the customs and services whereby the feoffor held; yet this statute does not extend to a gift in tail, for the donee shall hold of the donor. Co. Litt. 6, a: 2 Inst. 66, 67, 500, 501, 502, 505. See titles Tenures; Tail.

The Tenendum seems now to be incorporated with the Habendum, for we say, To have and to hold, in which clause the estate is limited, &c. See title Deed II. 4.

TENENTIBUS IN ASSISA NON ONERANDIS, A writ for him to whom a disseisor hath alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he be not molested in assise for the damages, if the disseisor had wherewith to satisfy them. Reg. Orig. 214.

TENMENTALE; See Tamentale.

TENOR, Lat.] Of writs, records, &c. is the substance or purport of them; or a transcript or copy. Tenor of a libel hath been held to be a transcript, which it cannot be if it differs from the libel; and juxta tenorem imports it, but not ad effectum, &c. for that may import an identity in sense, but not in words. 2 Salk. 417. In action of debt brought upon a judgment in an inferior Court, if the defendant pleads nul tiel record, the Tenor of the record only shall be certified; and by Holt, Chief Justice, it may be the same on certiorari's. 3 Salk. 296.

 A return

A return of the Tenor of an indictment from London, on a certiorari to remove the indictment, is good by the city charter; but in other cases it is usual to certify the record itself. 2 Hawk. P.C. c. 27. §§ 26, 76.

TENORE INDICTAMENTI MITTENDO, Is a writ whereby the record of an Indictment, and the process thereupon, is called out of another Court into the King's Bench. Reg. Orig. 69. See Certiorari.

TENORE PRÆSENTIUM, The Tenor of These Presents, is the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof; as, to do such a thing according to the Tenor, is to do the same according to the true intent of the deed or writing.

TENURE,

TENURA, from the Latin Teneo.] The manner whereby lands or tenements are holden; or the Service that the Tenant owes to his Lord. There can be no Tenure without some Service, because the Service makes the Tenure. 1 Inst. 1, 93. A Tenure may be of houses, and land or tenements; but not of a rent, common, &c.

Under the word Tenure is included every Holding of an Inheritance; but the signification of this word, which is a very extensive one, is usually restrained by coupling other words with it; this is sometimes done by words which denote the duration of the tenant's estate; as, if a man holds to himself and his heirs, it is called Tenure in fee-simple. At other times, the Tenure is coupled with words pointing out the instrument by which an inheritance is held; thus, if the holding is by copy of court-roll, it is called Tenure by copy of court-roll. At other times, this word is coupled with words that shew the principal service by which an inheritance is held; as, where a man held by Knight-Service, it was called Tenure by Knight-Service. 5 New Abr.

TENURES.

Almost all the real property of the kingdom is, by the policy of our Laws, supposed to be granted by, dependent upon, and holden of, some superior Lord; by and in consideration of certain Services to be rendered to the Lord by the Tenant or possessor of this property. The thing holden is therefore styled a Tenement; the possessors thereof, Tenants; and the manner of their possession, a Tenure. Thus, all the land in the kingdom is supposed to be holden, mediately or immediately, of the King, who is styled the Lord paramount, or above all.—Those that held immediately under him in right of his crown and dignity, were called his Tenants in capite, or in chief; which was the most honourable species of Tenure, but at the same time subjected the tenants to greater and more burthensome services than inferior Tenures did; a distinction which runs through all the different sorts of Tenure. 2 Comm. c. 5.

The above maxim, and the whole of the doctrine of Tenures, being founded on the Feudal System, some knowledge of that is absolutely necessary, in order to comprehend the nature of Tenures, as they relate either to the ancient or present state of the English Law.—These subjects are admirably and clearly treated in Chapters IV, V, and VI of the 2d book of the Commentaries. The following abridgment from Sir Martin Wright's Introduction to the Law of Tenures, (frequently referred to by the learned Commentator,) with some extracts from the Commentaries, are submitted to the Reader: Having been arranged in the following order, by the Editor of this Work, very early in the progress of his labours, it is now inserted, (not without some hesitation,) principally because references are made to and from this Title in very many Titles throughout the Dictionary. An acquaintance with this part of our Law is so intimately connected with all that concerns real property, that even an imperfect attempt at thus presenting it, in one arranged and connected view, must be attended with advantage to the Student; and will, in a small degree at least, obviate the inconvenience arising from the disjointed nature of the information conveyed, under the several Heads, scattered through the Dictionary in alphabetical order.

I. 1. FEUD, according to Somner, is a German compound, consisting of feh, feo, or feoh, (a salary, stipend, or wages,) and hade, head, or hode (quality, kind, or nature).—Feudum, [Fief, or] Fee, or land holden in fee, is, therefore, (considered in its primary acceptation,) what was holden in fee hode, by contraction, feod or feud; i. e. in a stipendiary, conditional, mercenary way and nature; with the acknowledgment of a Superior, and a condition of returning him some service for it; upon the withdrawing whereof, the land was revertible unto the Lord. Somn. on Gav. 106, 111.—Allodial lands were such as the Proprietor had the absolute property in; the term being derived from the Northern, odhal, right; so called from odh, proprietas, and all, totum; the syllables being transposed. See 2 Comm. 44, & n. Others derive this word from an and lot, allotment; the mode of dividing what was not granted as stipendiary property. Robertf. Cha. V.

Feuds, or Feuda, says Selden, are the same which, in our Laws, we call Tenancies, or Lands held; Feuda, also, are possessions so given and held, that the possessor is bound to do service to him from whom they were given. Seld. Tit. Hon. 273.

This service was originally purely military; and the possessor or Feudatary's homage or fealty was, (as it seems,) in the infancy of feuds, a kind of military engagement, rather implied than expressed; to be faithful to his benefactor, and also assistant unto him. Spelman therefore calls a feud, prædium militare; and Somner says that every inheritance is improperly and corruptly called a fief or fee, that is not holden militiæ gratiâ, the ground of all fees. Spelm. Feuds 6: Id. Gloss. in n: Somn. Gav. 49.

2. Feuds were originally a military policy of the Northern conquering nations, devised as the most likely means to secure their new acquisitions; and were large districts, or parcels of land, given or allotted by the conquering General to the superior Officers of his army; and by them dealt out, in less parcels, to the inferior Officers and most deserving Soldiers. Thus a proper military subordination was, naturally and rationally enough, inferred and established; and an army of Feudataries were as so many Stipendaries, always on foot, ready to muster and engage in the defence of their country. So that the feudal returns of fealty, or mutual fidelity and aid, seem originally to have been political, or rather natural, consequences, drawn from the apparent necessity these warlike people were under of maintaining their ground, with the same spirit, and by the same means, they had got it. Wright's Law of Tenures 7—10.

As the Princes of Europe were every day more and more alarmed by the progress of the Northern standard, many of them (and by degrees all) went into this or a like policy, as the strongest intrenchment; and, in imitation of it, they, reserving the dominium or property of the lands they gave, parcelled out some of their own possessions or territories under an express fealty; engaging their Beneficiaries or Feudataries to make them the like returns of fidelity and aid, as followed from the nature and design of an original feud. From hence, probably, the feudal obligations began to be considered as renders, or services of render, calculated for the benefit of the Proprietary; who was, in respect of the dominium remaining in him, thenceforth called Dominus; and military aid or service (as now called) was understood to be the real or fictitious terms or conditions of all propriety or possession in Europe. Wright 10—13.

3. Feuds were originally precarious, and held at the will of the Lord; they next became certain for one year; and were, some time after, given for life. But though feuds were not at first hereditary, yet the vassals or feudal tenants were called nativi, as if born such; and it was unusual, and even thought hard, to reject the heir of the former Feudatary, provided he was able to do the services of the feud, and the Lord had no just objection against him. But though the Lord did not remove the heir from the feud, yet it is not likely that he succeeded absolutely as of course, but that he paid a fine, or made some acknowledgment in the nature of relief for the renewal of the feud; and though that reason ceased, yet the fine was continued afterwards, became hereditary, and is well known at this day (though by several names) in most countries. Wright 13—15: See post. II. 5.

Feuds were afterwards extended, beyond the life of the first vassal or feudal tenant, to his sons, or some or one of them whom the Lord should name. In process of time, grandchildren succeeded to sons, and brothers also succeeded to brothers, if the Feud was antiquum aut paternum; but not if it was novum, i. e. newly purchased or acquired; not having descended from the father to the brother first dying. At length, not only descendants in the direct line succeeded in infinitum, but collaterals also, without regard to their degree, provided they were descended from, and were of the blood, of the first Feudatary. Wright 15—18, and the authorities there cited.—See the next division.

Spelman says, that these several conditions of feuds had their several denominations; while precarious, they were called munera; when for life, beneficia; and were first called feuda, when they began to be granted in perpetuity, and not before. Spelman on Feuds 4, 6, 9. Somner says, Feudum was a word not known until about A. D. 1000. Somner on Gav. 102.

4. Feuds being thus originally in the hands of military persons, who were under frequent incapacities to cultivate their own lands, they found it necessary to commit part of them to persons who, having no feudal possessions of their own, were glad to possess them on any terms. To such persons small portions were let, reserving such returns of service, corn, cattle, or money, as might enable the proprietors to attend to the feudal duties uninterruptedly. By this means the feudal policy was considerably extended; as all persons accepting a feud were, under an express or implied fealty, obliged to answer the stipulated renders, and to promote the peace and welfare of the feudal society. From hence therefore therefore arose the distinctions made by the feudists, of Feuds proper and improper, and the many subdivisions of these terms. Wright 19—26.

Proper Feuds are such, and such only, as are purely military; and, at this time, hereditary; and such as in all respects preserve the nature of an original feud, as before explained. It was the military nature of these feuds that first rendered women and monks incapable of receiving or succeeding to feuds of this sort; and that restrained the alienation, devising, or incumbering of the feud by the Feudatary, without the consent of the Lord; and of the seigniory by the Lord, without the consent of the Tenant; the obligations of the superior and inferior being mutual and reciprocal. The feudal course of succession, in all proper feuds, belonged to the sons only, (exclusive of daughters,) and to them equally; until, by a constitution of the Emperor Frederic, honorary feuds became indivisible; and, as such, they (and, in imitation of them, military feuds in most countries) began to descend to the eldest son only. Wright 27—32.

5. All feuds, sold or bartered for any immediate or contracted equivalent; or that are granted free of all service; or in consideration of one or more certain services, whether military or not; or upon a cens, or rent, in lieu of service; and all such feuds as are, by express words in their creation or constitution, alienable, or allowed to descend indifferently to males or females; are improper feuds. Wright 32. Of which sort most feuds are at this day.

They are distinguished from proper feuds, by such qualities only as are varied from or superadded to the feud by express provision of the parties: They must appear to be so from the words of the investiture; which solemnity is as necessary to this as to a proper feud: And the custom of the country where the feud lies must be accurately observed.

6. Few of the feudal obligations are, as such, of force with us. First mentioning Fealty, those of Eviction and Aid may deserve some notice; as our Laws of Warranty and Aid may be supposed to depend on them.

Fealty, the essential feudal bond, is so necessary to the very notion of a feud, that it is a downright contradiction to suppose the most improper feud to subsist without it. Craig de Jure Feud. 45—7, 223: 1 Inst. 129, a: Seld. Tit. Hon. 273. See title Fealty.

7. The feudal obligation upon Eviction, ut vel feudum aliud, ejusdem bonitatis, restituat Dominus vel estimationem praestet, if considered as a penalty upon the Lord for refusing or neglecting, when required, to protect or defend the Feudatary's title to the fee, might be always reasonable; otherwise, it rather seems to have prevailed upon the reason of contracted and improper feuds, than by the nature of a pure original feud. And though none of the ancient feudists make any strict distinction, yet they must be understood to speak of the times in which they wrote; in which such improper feuds chiefly prevailed; nay, when almost all feuds were alienable and saleable as matters of merchandise. Wright 39, 40.

8. Aid, as understood to import an obligation upon the feudal Tenant to contribute to the private necessities or occasions of the Lord, was not of direct feudal obligation; the original feudal aid seeming to have been purely military, binding the Feudatary merely to concur with, and to assist his Superior or Lord, in defence of the feud, or feudal society. On this ground it can hardly be made out, that the several different Aids which have been exacted, are to be inferred from the reason of feuds; but they rather seem to depend upon the usage or custom of the several countries where they are established. Wright 40, 42. See post. II. 6.

II. 1. It is difficult to determine precisely the time when Feuds or Tenures were first brought into England: Some have thought that they were planted here long before the Conquest; others, that they were introduced by William I. soon after. The authorities on both sides this question are numerous. See 1 Inst. 76, b: Pref. by Bp. Gibson to Spelman on Feuds: Seld. Tit. Hon. 510: Bacon Hist. Eng. Gov. 161: Temple's Introd. 171: Hale Hist. Com. Law 107, 223: Craig de Jure Feud. 29: Somn. on Gav. 100: Camden: Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. § 7; and a vast variety of authorities, quoted and compared together, in Wright's Tenures, p. 46, & seq.

One observation may be of service in deciding this question; that William I. about the 20th year of his reign, just when the general Survey of England, called Domesday Book, is supposed to have been finished, and not till then, summoned all the great men and landholders in the kingdom to London and Salisbury, to do their homage and to swear their fealty to him. Hence we may reasonably suppose, 1st, That this general homage and fealty was done at this time in consequence of something new; or else, that engagements so important to the maintenance and security of a new establishment, would have been required long before. 2dly, That as this general homage and fealty was done about the time that Domesday-Book was finished, and not before, it may be supposed that that survey was taken upon or soon after our ancestors' consent to Tenures, in order to discover the quantity of every man's fee, and to fix his homage. Wright 52—56.

On the whole, therefore, it seems, that it may safely be assumed, that Tenures first became a principal branch of the national policy in the time of William I.; for, even in the Saxon times, particular proprietors of large tracts of land, which they could not cultivate and manure themselves, might let some part of them to their neighbours, under various acknowledgments or returns of service, not altogether unlike some of the feudal returns: Especially as our Saxon ancestors may be supposed to have had some notion of such returns, they being a colony or branch of the ancient Goths, who first brought the feudal policy into Europe. Wright 57, n.

2. The establishment of Tenures in England may be called an extraordinary alteration of the national policy; not only because it was such in many of its consequences, but likewise because it originally and immediately defeated all supposition or possibility of propriety in any other person than the King; insomuch that it became a fundamental necessary maxim, principle, or fiction of our English Law of Tenures, (alluded to in the introduction to this Title,) that the King is universal Lord of his whole territories; and that no man doth, or can possess possess any part thereof, or lands therein, but as either mediately or immediately derived from him. Wright 58. See also 1 Inst. 65, a.

According to this position, of which the truth is undeniable, all the lands in England, except those in the King's hands, are feudal. This universality of Tenures, if not quite peculiar to England, certainly does not prevail in several countries on the Continent of Europe, where the feudal system has been established; and it seems there are some few portions of allodial land in the Northern part of our own island. As to Scotland, Ld. Stair expresses himself rather ambiguously on the subject; for he says, that there remains little of allodial land in Scotland; but in a few lines after, observes, that the glebes of the Clergy, which seem to come nearest to allodials, are more properly mortified, or, as we should call them, Mortmain Fees. Stair, Inst. See 1 Inst. 65, a. in n.

As William I. however, notwithstanding the monkish relations, and the misapprehensions of some modern writers, did not claim or possess himself of the lands of England, as the spoils of conquest; so neither did he tyrannically and arbitrarily subject them to a feudal dependence; but as the feudal law was at that time the prevailing law in Europe, William, who had always governed by this policy, might probably recommend it to our ancestors, as the most obvious and ready way to put them upon a foot with their neighbours; and to secure the nation against any future attempts from them. We find accordingly, among the laws of William I. a law enacting the feudal law itself; not indeed eo nomine, but in effect; as it requires from all persons the same engagement to, and introduces the same dependence upon, the KING, as Supreme Lord of all the lands in England, as were supposed to be due to a supreme Lord by the feudal law. The Law meant, is the 52d law of William I. (See Wright 65); the terms of which are absolutely feudal, and are apt and proper to establish that policy with all its consequences: for it requires, "that all owners of land should expresly engage and swear that they would become Vassals or Tenants, and as such be faithful to William as their Lord; and that they would, in consequence thereof, every where faithfully maintain and defend his, their Lord's, territories and title, as well as person, and give him all possible aid and assistance against his enemies foreign and domestic." See also the 55th, 58th, 68th, and 69th laws of this King; and Sir M. Wright's ingenious observations upon the whole, in his book, p. 69, & seq.

3. Although it is certain that WARDSHIP could be no part of the law of feuds before they became hereditary, yet then, as they often descended on infants who were incapable of performing or engaging for the services of the feud, Wardships of the Land, i. e. the custody of the feud itself, was retained by the Lord; that out of the profits he might provide a fit person to supply the infant heir's defect of services until he came of age to perform them. Wright 89.

With respect to the custody or Wardship of the Body, there is no clear feudal reason to be given for it; and therefore we may suppose that our Norman ancestors might think it reasonable, rather in regard to the infant heir, than to the Lord himself, that the Lord who had the custody of the feud, should likewise have the care and maintenance of the infant Feudatary; who would thus be most likely to be qualified for the services of the feud. Fortesc. de Ll. Ang. c. 44: Smith de Rep Ang. 264: Cowel, Inst. lib 1. tit. 17. § 2: 1 Inst. 75, b: Bacon. Hist. Eng. Gov. 148: See 2 Comm. c. 5. p 67; c. 6. p. 87; and this Dictionary, title Guardian.

4. As for MARRIAGE, the Lords of our English fees might possibly take the hint from Normandy: though, in the sense of our law, in which it meant the interest of the Guardian in bestowing a Ward in marriage, and was understood to be a beneficial perquisite of Tenure, no express notices of it can be found earlier than the statute of Merton, c. 6, 7, (20 H. 3.) By the charter of Henry I., a daughter of any of the King's tenants was not, even in the life-time of her father, to be married without the King's privity; because otherwise she might marry a public enemy. But the King was to take nothing for his consent; nor could he restrain the father from marrying her to any that was not such enemy: but this charter says nothing of the marriage of males, nor does it give the least colour or countenance to any private profit from the marriage of females. Our English Lords, however, by an extraordinary construction of Magna Charta, took upon them, not only the absolute marriage of female wards, but of males too, which at length became one of the great feudal grievances. See Ll. H. 1. c. 1: Spelman on Feuds 29: Glanv. lib. 7. c. 12. p. 55, a: Bract. lib. 2. c. 37. § 6. p. 188, a: 2 Comm. c. 5. p. 70; c. 6. p. 88.

5. RELIEF; [Relevamen, relevatio, relevium; intimating, that the inheritance, which, by the death of the former tenant, became jacens, or caducum, was thus relevatus, lifted or raised up again. See Bracton, lib. 2. c. 36: Britton, c. 69: Spelm. Relevamen:] was not a service, but a fruit of feudal tenure. 2 Roll. Abr. 514. D. 3: 3 Rep. 66: 1 Inst. 83, a. These were not arbitrarily introduced by William I., but brought into England with feuds according to the custom of the feudal law, and other nations: And although Lord Coke (2 Inst. 7, 8; but see 1 Inst. 176, a,) supposes Reliefs to have been certain at the Common Law, yet they were probably with us originally uncertain as by the feudal law; and were, no doubt, on this account, another of the great grievances of Tenure; to remedy which, several laws were made, fixing them at certain sums for all lands held by Knight-service, till the expiration of that Tenure, under the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See Ll. W. 1. c. 22: Ll. H. 1. c. 14: Magna Charta, c. 2: ante I. 3, and Wright's Tenures.

The Relief of Socage lands, was fixed by the 40th law of William I. at one year's rent, and remains the same to this day; although it is not taken notice of in any of the charters of Hen. I., John, or Hen. III. Glanv. lib. 9. c. 4: Fleta, lib. 3. c. 17. § 11: Litt. §§ 126, 7: 2 Inst. 232: and see 1 Inst. 93, a. in n.; and title Relief in this Dictionary, and 2 Comm. c. 5. p. 65; c. 6. p. 87.

6. AIDS, (see ante I. 8,) called by Spelman, (Treatise Feuds 59,) Tribute, and by our old authors Auxilia, were mere benevolences, rendered by a tenant to his Superior or Lord, in times of difficulty and distress. Bracton, lib. 2. c. 16. § 8: Fleta, lib. 3. c. 14. § 9. These were not of direct feudal obligation; but first obtained out of a regard to the person and occasions of the Lord. The kind and quantum therefore of every aid was originally as various and uncertain as the occasion of the Lord and the the abilities of the Tenant. But as Aids grew frequent, they became, in many countries, established renders of duty: Thus, in Normandy, the three most usual and frequent Aids; 1st, To make the Lord's eldest son a Knight; 2dly, To marry his eldest daughter; and, 3dly, To ransom his person; became fixed and established. Besides these, there was one of an inferior nature, respecting only inferior Lords, viz. An Aid to enable the Lord to pay his relief; therefore called aid de relief. To all these our ancestors were liable, and thus far went into the Norman notions on this subject, nay they even went farther; for in the time of King John, inferior Lords took Aids to pay their debts, and in the time of King Hen. II. it was doubted whether Lords might not require Aids towards their military expeditions; but at length these inferior Aids, together with the aid de relief, and other illegal Aids imposed by the King himself, were effectually abolished by a charter of King John, revived and restored by stat. 25 E. 1. c. 5, 6: and the two first of the usual aids before-mentioned were fixed, (by stat. Westm. 1. c. 36, extended by stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 11, to aids required by the King,) as follows, viz. The Aid of a Knight's fee at 20*s.* and of socage lands of 20*l. per annum*, at 20*s.* and so pro rata. These statutes do not regulate the 3d Aid for ransom of the Lord's person; this was less frequent, and by no means capable of certainty; it being of the highest consequence, with regard especially to the Supreme Lord, that he should at any rate be ransomed as often as he was taken prisoner of war. Wright 105—115. See 2 Comm. c. 5. p. 63, &c.; c. 6. p. 86.

7. When a fee determines for want of heirs or propter delictum tenentis, the land falling back to the Lord is called an ESCHEAT [Escaeta]; and is as such reckoned by our English Lawyers among the fruits or perquisites (though it might properly be considered as the absolute determination) of Tenure. Spelman on Feuds 37.

Spelman (ubi supra) divides Escheats into regal and feudal; (in which he is followed by Coke, 3 Inst. 111;) agreeable enough to the import of the word escheat (from the French eschevir, to happen). But, strictly speaking, such lands as are not held immediately of the King, and yet happen to him upon the commission of any treason, are not Escheats, but Forfeitures; which were given to the King by the Common Law, and do not depend upon the law of feuds or Tenures, but upon Saxon Laws, made long before their introduction, and which prevail even now. Lambard. Ll. Alf. c. 4: Ll. Canuti. c. 54. See title Forfeiture.

Though this forfeiture to the King may seem severe on the mesne Lord, in defeating his seigniory, yet it seems a punishment inflicted on him, for his want of caution in the choice of his tenant.—The Law having inflicted a similar penalty on the Lord, where the tenant is guilty of felony only; the King, in this latter case, having the land a year and day, to the prejudice of the immediate Lord, to whom the estate in that case escheats. See Mag. Charta. c. 22, 31: 1 Inst. 18. b. in n: 2 Inst. 36, 7: 3 Inst. 111: St. de Prærog. Regis. 17 E. 2. c. 16: Staundford, P. C. l. 3. c. 30: And for further matter, 2 Comm. c. 5, 6; and this Dictionary, title Escheat.

If lands be held of the King, as of an honour come to him by a common escheat, as the tenant's dying without heir, or committing felony, these lands are part of the honour; otherwise, if forfeited for treason, for then they come to the King by reason of his person and crown; and if he grants them over, &c. the patentee shall hold of the King in chief. 2 Inst. 64.

It was found by special verdict, That the Prior of Merton was seised of a house in Southwark, held of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as of his borough of Southwark; and (an. 30 of his reign) surrendered it to Hen. VIII., who granted it and other lands to J. S. and his heirs, to hold of him in libero burgagio, by fealty, for all services and demands, and not in capite; and afterwards Queen Mary granted the manor and borough of Southwark to the Mayor and Commonalty of London; and the tenant of the messuage died without issue; and the question was, whether Queen Eliz. or the patentees of the borough should have the escheat? and adjudged for the Queen; for the first patentee of the messuage held it of the Queen in socage in capite, as of a seigniory in gross; and the words in libero burgagio are merely void; for the land out of the borough cannot be held in libero burgagio; and there shall not be several Tenures, for one Tenure was reserved by the King for all; therefore of necessity it shall be a Tenure in socage of the King. Cro. Eliz. 120.

8. ESCUAGE is reckoned by Lord Hale, among the perquisites of Tenure; and, whether so or not, seems one of its most obscure and unintelligible branches.

Escuage, considered as a Service, or species of Tenure, was not, as Littleton intimates, (§§ 95, 96,) a direct personal service of attendance upon the King in his wars; nor was it due upon all military occasions, as Knight-Service was: But it was a pecuniary aid, or contribution, reserved by particular Lords instead, or in lieu, of personal service; the better to enable them to bear the extraordinary expence of their own attendance and warfare, when the King made war on Scotland or Wales, or upon any foreign country, if the Tenure was so expressed. Bract. l. 2. c. 16: Litt. §§ 95, 97, 100, 103, 155, 158: Mad. Hist. Exc. 452: Seld. Notes ad Hengham 113.

As the Lord's service abroad was thus uncertain, the quantum of this aid was seldom ascertained by reservation; but was usually proportioned to the fine received by the King from his tenants in capite, failing to attend in such expeditions. Fleta, lib. 3. fol. 198.

This aid and fine were both of them called Escuage à scuto quod assumitur ad servitium militare (Bract. ubi suprà); in respect of the scutum which ought to be borne both by Lord and tenant in such wars.

In this view Escuage was a specific service, (of a different kind from Knight-Service,) in respect whereof only, the tenant, on account of its subserviency to the military policy of the nation, was esteemed as a Knight, or rather as a military tenant. Wright 126, 7.

Escuage, however, it must be allowed, was anciently, as it is at this day, more generally understood to denote a mulct or fine for a military tenant's defect of service; as the feudal severities began to abate. Mad. Hist. Exc. 438, 454, 7, 8, 462: 2 Rol. Abr. 509. § 1: Litt. § 102:

Our Kings anciently taking advantage of, or perhaps complying with, this humour of their tenants, which made their actual services precarious, did sometimes, on occasion of war, without summons, assess a moderate sum upon each Knight's fee, as a Scutage or Escuage, by which they might be enabled to provide Stipendiaries. But as Escuage of this sort was a previous commutation for service really imposed at the King's will, and not incurred as a fine, it was not long submitted to: In the time of King John, it was not only insisted upon as an undoubted right of the King's tenants, but the Barons urged, and the King, by his charter, declared, that no Escuage should be imposed or assessed nisi per commune concilium Regni. See Litt. § 97: 1 Inst. 72, a: Mag. Charta, cap. 37.

Escuage thus becoming the only penalty for defect of service, many Lords, by agreement between them and their tenants, fixed it at a certain sum, to be paid as often as Escuage should be granted, without regard to the rate assessed by Parliament. Thus ascertained, it was called Escuage certain; and because it did in effect discharge the tenant from all military service, the persons who held by such Escuage were looked upon as socage tenants, and no longer esteemed as tenants by Knight-service. Litt. §§ 98, 120: 1 Inst. 87, a.

As to Escuage, see also the notes on 1 Inst. 73, 74.—And now Escuage is expressly taken away by the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. (See post, III. 3.); and had fallen into disuse long before; for there is no instance of Parliament assessing it since the reign of Edward II. See further 2 Comm. c. 5. p. 74. &c.

III. 1. It is so absolute a maxim, principle, or fiction of the Law of Tenures, that all lands are holden either mediately or immediately of the King, that even the King himself cannot give lands in so absolute and unconditional a manner, as to set them free from Tenure.—And therefore, if the King should grant lands without reserving any particular service or Tenure, or if he should in express words declare, that his patentee should have lands absque aliquo inde reddendo; yet the Law or established policy of the kingdom would create a Tenure; and the patentee should anciently (before the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.) have held of him in capite by Knight-service. 1 Inst. 1, 65: 2 Inst. 501: Sullivan Lect. 126: 6 Rep. 6: 9 Rep. 123: Bro. Tenures, [illegible]. And now, in such case, or if the King release the services to his tenant, it will not extinguish the Tenure; but the tenant shall, notwithstanding, hold by fealty, which, as was before observed, (I. 6.) is an incident inseparable to every Tenure, and therefore cannot be released. 9 Rep. 123: Law of Tenures, 196: 2 Comm. c. 6. &c.

Lands, thus holden, are called TENURES; which were principally divided, according to their services, into Tenures by Knight Service and in Socage.

According to Blackstone, there seem to have subsisted among our ancestors four principal species of lay Tenures, to which all others may be reduced: the grand criteria of which were the natures of the several services or renders, that were due to the Lords from their tenants. The Services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base services; in respect of their quantity and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. Free Services were such as were not unbecoming the character of a soldier, or a freeman to perform; as, to serve under his Lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. Base Services were such as were fit only for peasants, or persons of a servile rank; as, to plough the Lord's lands, to make his hedges, to carry out his dung, or other mean employments. The certain Services, whether free or base, were such as were stinted in quantity, and could not be exceeded on any pretence; as, to pay a stated annual rent, or to plough such a field for three days. The uncertain depended upon unknown contingencies; as, to do military service in person, or pay an assessment in lieu of it, when called upon; or to wind a horn whenever the Scots invaded the realm; which are free services: Or to do whatever the Lord should command; which is a base or villein service. 2 Comm. c. 5.

From the various combinations of these services have arisen the four kinds of Lay Tenure which subsisted in England till the middle of the last century; and three of which subsist to this day. Of these, Bracton (who wrote under Henry the Third) seems to give the clearest and most compendious account, of any author, ancient or modern; of which the following is the outline or abstract: "Tenements are of two kinds, frank-tenement, and villenage. And, of frank-tenements, some are held freely in consideration of homage and Knight-service; others in free-socage with the service of fealty only." And again, "Of villenages some are pure, and others are privileged. He that holds in pure villenage shall do whatsoever is commanded him, and always be bound to an uncertain service. The other kind of villenage is called villein socage; and these villein-socmen do villein services, but such as are certain and determined." See Bract. l. 4. tr. 1. c. 28. Of which the sense seems to be as follows: First, where the service was free, but uncertain, as military service with homage, that Tenure was called the Tenure in Chivalry, per servitium militare, or by Knight-service. Secondly, where the service was not only free, but also certain, as by fealty only, by rent and fealty, &c. that Tenure was called liberum socagium, or free socage. These were the only free holdings or tenements; the others were villenous or servile: As, thirdly, where the service was base in its nature, and uncertain as to time and quantity, the Tenure was purum villenagium, absolute or pure villenage. Lastly, where the service was base in its nature, but reduced to a certainty, this was still villenage, but distinguished from the other by the name of privileged villenage, villenagium privilegiatum; or it might be still called Socage, (from the certainty of its services,) but degraded by their baseness into the inferior title of villanum socagium, villein-socage.

2. Tenures by Knight Service differed very little from proper feuds; but being now abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, and turned into free and common socage, inquiry shall be made at some length into that existing Tenure. See ante I. 1: II. 1, 2: And 2 Comm. c. 5. &c.

3. Tenures in Socage, are holdings by any certain conventional services that are not military; the word Socage, according to Somner, being derived of the Saxon word Soc, (a liberty, privilege, or immunity,) and agium, a legal termination, signifying service or duty. Somner Gav. 134, 143, 141: Litt. § 117: 1 Inst. 86, a: Britt. c. 66. § 418: Fleta, lib. 1. c. 8.

It seems, however, more probable and consistent to derive Socage from soca a plough; the ancient services conferred on this Tenure being to plough the Lord's lands; but which is now changed into many other kinds of service. In this sense the Tenure in socage is denominated, (like the Tenure by Knight-service) simply from the name or nature nature of the service at first reserved. Wright 141, 4: 1 Inst. 86, (b): Craig de jure Feud. 63: 2 Comm. c. 6, and the notes there.

By the degenerating of Knight-service, or personal military duty, into escuages, or pecuniary assessments, all the advantages (either promised or real) of the feodal constitution were destroyed, and nothing but the hardships remained. These may be collected from the foregoing detail, and are very justly and feelingly stated in 2 Comm. c. 5. p. 75, 76.

Palliatives were from time to time applied by successive Acts of Parliament, which assuaged some temporary grievances. Till at length the humanity of King James I. consented, in consideration of a proper equivalent, to abolish them all, though the plan proceeded not to effect; in like manner as he had formed a scheme, and began to put it in execution, for removing the feodal grievance of heritable jurisdictions in Scotland; which has since been pursued and effected by the statute 20 Geo. 2. cc. 43, 50. King James's plan for exchanging our military Tenures seems to have been nearly the same as that which has been since pursued; only with this difference, that, by way of compensation for the loss which the Crown and other Lords would sustain, an annual fee-farm rent was to have been settled and inseparably annexed to the Crown, and assured to the inferior Lords, payable out of every Knight's fee within their respective seignories;—an expedient, seemingly much better than the hereditary excise, which was afterwards made the principal equivalent for these concessions. For at length the military Tenures, with all their heavy appendages (having, during the Usurpation, been discontinued) were destroyed at one blow by the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, which enacts, "That the Court of Wards and Liveries, and all wardships, liveries, primer-seisins, and ouster-le-mains, values and forfeitures of marriage, by reason of any Tenure of the King or others, be totally taken away. And that all fines for alienations, Tenures by homage, Knight's-service, and escuage, and also aids for marrying the daughter or knighting the son, and all Tenures of the King in capite, be likewise taken away. And that all sorts of Tenures, held of the King or others, be turned into Free and Common Socage; save only Tenures in Frankalmoigne, Copyholds, and the honorary services of Grand Serjeanty." A statute, which was a greater acquisition to the civil property of this kingdom than even Magna Charta itself: Since that only pruned the luxuriances that had grown out of the military Tenures, and thereby preserved them in vigour; but the statute of King Charles extirpated the whole, and demolished both root and branches. 2 Comm. c. 5. ad fin.

The above expression, in the title and body of the Act, as to Tenures in Capite, and which was also repeated by the Speaker of the House of Commons, in his address to the King on presenting the Bill, is an inaccuracy of a very extraordinary nature.—Tenure in Capite signifies nothing more than that the King is the immediate Lord of the land-owner; and this might always have been either by a Military or Socage Tenure. See 2 Comm. [illegible] Mod. Rep. [illegible] Ley 238 [illegible] and this [illegible]

The several changes made in the Tenure of Socage by the stat. 12 Car. 2. [illegible] are the following [illegible]

First, It takes away the Aids pur file marier and pur faire fitz chevalier, which were incident to all Socage Tenures. 2. It relieves Socage in capite from the burden of the King's primer-seisin, and of fines of alienation to the King, to both of which Socage in capite was equally liable, with Tenure by Knight-service in capite, though not so to Wardship. 3. It extends the father's power of appointing guardians to children of both sexes; and thus supplied the means of still further preventing guardianship in Socage. See this Dictionary, title Guardian. In all other respects, the Tenure in Socage seems to be under the same circumstances, and attended with the same consequences, as it was before the Restoration.

Having thus reformed and improved this favourite Tenure, the statute, in the next place, provides for the extension of it throughout the kingdom. This it effectually secures, by converting into Socage all Tenures by Knight-service, as mentioned above; and by taking from the Crown the power of creating any other Tenure than Socage in future. 1 Inst. 95. (b) in n: And see Id. 85. (a) in n.

It appears that there is nothing, however, in the above statute which in the least varies the Tenure in Frankalmoigne; it being expressly saved in the statute, § 7. See this Dict. titles Charitable Uses; Frankalmoigne; Mortmain.—Neither does it appear in any way to affect the Tenure by Burgage. See title Burgage Tenure.—And it leaves the Tenure by villenage as it was before; one of the provisoes declaring, that it shall not be construed to alter or change any Tenure by Copy of Court-roll, or any services incident thereto. § 7.

4. Thus therefore, All our English Fees, or Holdings, fall at present under the notion of SOCAGE-TENURES; which, though they vary in point of service, succession, [illegible] feuds, yet retain the nature of feuds, as they are holden of a superior by fealty, and usually by some other certain service or acknowledgment; and [illegible] relief and escheat. Wright 144, 5. [illegible] Socage, stat. 37 Hen. 8. c. 20 [illegible] 2 Comm. c. 6.

[illegible] according to their duration, into [illegible] for life, for years, and at will: In [illegible] be sufficient to class them under [illegible] life only.

Estates in [illegible] Fee-simple or Fees-tail.

5. A FEE-SIMPLE [illegible] it be according to Littleton (§ 1.) Hereditas pura, [illegible] so called, because it imports an estate purely [illegible] free from all tenure; but in opposition to fee-conditional at Common Law, and fee-tail since the Statute De donis. It imports a simple inheritance, clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to any particular heirs, and descendible to [illegible] male or female, lineal or collateral. In the [illegible] language of our Law, [illegible] fee-simple [illegible] lands or tenements, to hold to him and his heirs for ever. Litt. § 1: 1 Inst. 1: Bracton, lib. 2. [illegible]

[illegible] conferring these fees or estates in [illegible] contrary to the original purity [illegible] the ancient form of [illegible] feoffment, whether [illegible] fee, retains even at this day the form of a gift. It is perfected and notified by the

the same solemnity of livery and seisin on investiture, as a pure feudal donation, and is still directed and governed by the same rules. 1 Inst. 9, a; 42, a: Fleta, lib. 3. c. 15. §§ 4, 5: Bracton, lib. 2. c. 17. § 1. See titles Conveyance; Deed; Feoffment; Grant, &c.

Tenures being thus derived from the feudal law, and partaking of their origin, Fees, or estates in fee, could not, at Common Law, be aliened without the licence of the Lord: (see ante I. 4.) This introduced Sub-infeudations by the tenant to hold of himself; which were so far restrained by Magna Charta, c. 32, as to compel the tenant of an inferior Lord to keep in his own hands so much of the fee as would be sufficient to answer his services to the Lord. The first statute that materially varied from this law of feuds, was the statute of Quia emptores, 18 E. 1. c. 1, which enabled such tenants to sell all or part of their lands, to hold of their Lords, by the same services as the feoffor had held. The King's tenants were, however, under several disabilities of alienation, but which were all finally removed by stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 15; and fines for alienation were paid to the King by his tenants, till abolished by the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, already so often alluded to. See 1 Comm. c. 5. p. 71; c. 6. p. 89.

As a tenant could not alien, so neither could he subject the tenancy or fee to his debts, until the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. st. 1.) c. 18, subjected a moiety of lands to execution; leaving the other to enable the tenant to do the services of the Tenure. But several other statutes, as 13 E. 1. st. 3, de Mercatoribus; 27 E. 3. c. 9; 23 H. 8. c. 6, were afterwards made, by which lands were subjected, in a special manner, to the particular liens created by those statutes. Vide 2 Inst. 394; and this Dictionary, title Execution.

As tenants could not, by the feudal or Common Law, alien their tenancies without the licence or consent of the Lord; so neither could the Lord himself alien his seigniory without the consent of his tenant. Hence sprung the doctrine of Attornment, now quite abolished by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 9. See title Attornment.

For the feudal restraints on devise, see title Wills.

The rules which at present operate on the law of descents to the eldest son, and the general preference of males to females, as well as those which exclude the immediate ascending line of relations, are all deducible from these feudal foundations of the Law; and are very ably explained by Sir Martin Wright in his Treatise, pp. 173—185. See this Dictionary, title Descent; and further, as to Estates in Fee-simple, this Dictionary, title Fee and Fee-simple.

6. A FEE-TAIL, (feudum talliatum,) as distinguished from a fee-simple, is a fee limited and restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others. It is so denominated from the French, tailler, to cut, or cut off, on account of the particular restriction by which the heir-general was often, and collateral or remote heirs were always, cut off. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 3: Bract. lib. 2. c. 5. § 3. Brit. c. 34: Litt. §§ 13, 18: 1 Inst. 18, b; Spelm. Gloss. ad. v. Feodum; and this Dictionary, title Tail.

A Fee thus limited was at Common Law known by the name of a fee conditional; so called from the condition, express or implied in the gift or constitution of the fee, that in case the donee died without such particular heirs, the land or fee should revert to the donor. But our ancestors were, after heir or issue had, suffered at Common Law, to alien such fee, and to defeat the donor as well as the heir; on a supposition that the condition was, for this purpose, satisfied or performed by the donee's having issue. See 1 Inst. 19, a: Plowd. Comm. 242, 5, b; 247, a.

This practice being manifestly contrary to the intent of the gift, was restrained by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. st. 1.) c. 1; commonly called the Statute De donis conditionalibus (or, shortly, the Statute De donis;) which required that the will and intent of the donor should be observed, and the fee so given should go to the issue, and for want of issue revert to the donor. So that, though Littleton says (§ 13.) that a Fee-tail is by force of this statute, yet it is not to be understood as creating any new fee, but only severing and distinguishing the limitation from the condition, and restoring the effect of each; i. e. the Limitation to the issue, and the Reversion to the donor: yet as by means of this statute the limitation was raised above the condition, the fee might thenceforth be denominated from the limitation, which thus became the substance, as it had before been the immediate end, of the gift. But this was at length eluded by the legal fictions of Fines and Recoveries. See this Dictionary under that title, and also title Forfeiture; and for further matter on this head of Estates-tail, and the policy of making them alienable, title Tail and Fee-tail. Wright 186, 9.

7. ESTATES FOR LIFE are either conventional or legal; of the former sort are such estates as are, in their creation, expressly given or conferred for life of the tenant only. These are of a feudal nature, held by fealty, and liable to conventional services. Of the other sort are, 1. Tenancies in tail after possibility of issue extinct; 2. Tenancies in dower, and by the Curtesy. See the several titles, and title Life-Estate, in this Dictionary.

The first of these is distinguished by the particular description merely to suggest the legal disadvantages cast on such estate-tail, when turned to a hopeless inheritance. It arises where lands and tenements are given to a man and his wife in special tail, and either of them dies without issue had between them. The survivor is tenant in tail after possibility, &c. See Litt. § 32: 1 Inst. 28; 11 Rep. 80; and this Dictionary, title Tail after Possibility, &c.

8. DOWER, called by Craig, Triens and Tertia, and known to the feudists by several other names, was probably brought into England by the Normans, as a branch of their doctrine of fiefs or tenures; for we find no footsteps of dower in lands until the time of the Normans: But, on the contrary, provision is made by one of the laws of the Saxon King, Edmund, for the support of the wife surviving her husband, out of his goods only. Wright 191, 2. See this Dictionary, title Dower.

9. TENANCIES BY THE CURTESY, or per legem terræ, though so called as if they were peculiar to England, were known not only in Scotland, but in Ireland, and in Normandy also; and the like custom is to be found amongst the ancient Almain laws; and yet it does not seem to have been feudal, nor does its original any where satisfactorily appear. Some English writers (Mirror, Selden, Corbett) ascribe it to Henry I.; but Nat. Bacon calls it a Law of Counter-tenure to that of Dowers, and yet supposes it as ancient as from the time of the Saxons; and that it was therefore rather restored than introduced by Henry I. Eng. Gov. 109, 147. But as there are no notices of this curtesy among the laws of the Saxons, or among those we have of Hen. I. we may, perhaps, with safety rely on Craig's conjecture, that it is derived from the Civil Law. Craig de Jure Feud. 312: Wright 192, 5.

10. FORFEITURES of estates in fee, though they were very many by the feudal and Common Law, [vide Spelm. in v. Felonia, & Ll. H. 1. c. 43: Glanv. l. 9. c. 4: Bract. l. 2. c. 35. §§ 11, 12,] are reduced, as the Law now stands, to forfeitures by Attainders of treason; and by Cesser.

Of the former enough has been said at present. Ante II. 7; and this Dictionary, titles Escheat; Forfeiture; Treason. The latter, which depended on true feudal principles, and introduced many feudal hardships, was at length regulated by the statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 4; and stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 21. These statutes provided, that in case a tenant should cease to pay his rent for two years, and there should not, during that time, be sufficient distress on the land, the Lord might have a Cessavit; and by means thereof, if the tenant did not render his arrears before judgment, the Lord should upon such cesser recover the land or fee itself, and bar the tenant for ever. See 2 Inst. 295, 400, 460: Booth's Real. Act. 133, 4: F. N. B. 208, 9: Wright 196—202; and this Dictionary, titles Cessavit; Rent.

Estates for life are also forfeitable by waste, and by all such acts as tend to defeat the reversion. 1 Inst. 251, 2. See title Life-Estates.

THERE are yet two kinds of Estates which, though they fall under the head of Socage, are denominated and usually treated as particular species of Tenure, viz. Burgage and Gavelkind.

11. BURGAGE-TENURE, so called to denote the particular service or Tenure of houses in ancient cities or boroughs, is certainly a species of Socage-tenure. The tenements being holden by a certain annual rent in money, or by some service relating to trade; and not by military or other service that had no such relation. The qualities of this Tenure vary according to the particular customs of every borough, and that without prejudice to the feudal nature of it. See Wright 204, 5: Mad. firma Burgi: Litt. §§ 162, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7: Co. Litt. 109: Somn. on Gav. 142, 8: Taylor on Gav. 171: 1 Inst. 109. a: Spelm.: Craig. de Jure Feud. 88: Jenk. Cent. 127: 2 Comm. c. 6. p. 82; and this Dictionary, title Burgage.

12. The properties of GAVELKIND TENURE are so many, and the qualities of it so different from those of any other Tenure, that it seems to have been doubted whether it be a Tenure of feudal nature or not. The Gavelkind tenant retains strong marks of propriety; as power to alien even at the age of 15: Somn. Gav. 8, 9: Freedom from forfeiture for felony; and many other privileges unknown to persons holding their lands by any other kind of Tenure.

It is however certain that the Tenure is strictly feudal, and, like the more usual Tenures by Knight-service and Socage, is denominated from the kind or nature of the prevailing service, which was, as the name imports, tributary or censual, the word Gavelkind being (according to Somner on Gav. [illegible] and [illegible]) a compound of the Saxon words gavel, gafol, or gable, a tribute, and [illegible] kind, sort, or quality; thus directly importing that such lands are censual or rented: Although they are also subject to other kinds of service, this Tenure in fact being, like Burgage, a kind of Socage Tenure, and liable to the same feudal burdens and forfeitures. See Wright 206—212.

As for the famous partible quality of most of the lands in Kent, [not all, see Hale Hist. C. L. 225: Stat. 31 H. 8. c. 3: but see 1 Mod. 98: 2 Sid. 153: Cro. Car. 465: Lutw. 236, 754: By which it appears that all lands in Kent shall be presumed, without pleading, to be gavelkind; unless they can be proved to be disgavelled;] it was not a particular or proper effect of Gavelkind Tenure. But it was rather the ancient course of descent retained and continued in that county. Somn. on Gav. 89, 90. And however particular this course of descent (whereby the lands of the father are equally divided among all the sons; and of a brother dying without issue, among all his brethren; Litt. § 210: Co. Litt. 140,) may now appear to us, yet if we consider Gavelkind as a species of Socage Tenure, and that all Tenures by Socage, or of that nature, were anciently in point of succession divisible; and that they might, without prejudice to their feudal nature, descend equally or otherwise, as best suited the genius and usage of every county; it will appear much more extraordinary that all other counties should depart from this, the more ancient and natural course of descent, than that this particular county should retain it. Wright 213. See further, 2 Comm. c. 6; and this Dict. title Gavelkind.

13. Under this Head, Tenure, something ought to be said of Copyholds; though they are not reducible to any of the preceding divisions of the subject.

COPYHOLDS are the remains of Villenage; which, considered as a Tenure, was not entirely Saxon, Norman, or Feudal, but a Tenure of a mixed nature, advanced by the Normans upon the Saxon bondage, and which gradually superseded it. See F. N. B. 12, C: 1 Inst. 58. a: Bacon's Use of the Law 42, 3: Litt. tit. Villenage: Old Ten.: Somn. Gav. 85, 6.

The Normans, according to Sir William Temple, "finding among us a sort of people who were in a condition of downright servitude, used and employed in the most servile works, and belonging (they, their children, and effects) to the Lord of the soil, like the rest of the stock or cattle upon it," enfranchised all such as fell to their share; by admitting them to fealty in respect of the little livings they had hitherto been allowed to possess, merely as the scanty supports of their base condition; and which they were still suffered to retain upon the like service as they had in their former servitude been used and employed in. But this possession, as now clothed with fealty, and by that means advanced into a kind of Tenure, differed very much from the ancient servile possession, and was from henceforth called Villenage. See Temp. Introd. 59: Mirror, l. 2. c. 28: Bract. lib. [illegible]: Litt. §§ 206, 7: Leg. W. 1. cc. 29, 33: in which last the word Vilain seems first applied to such tenant. See also this Dictionary, title Villein; and Spelm. Gloss. in v. Servus.

Our Saxon ancestors having submitted to the feudal law, which to them was A Law of Liberty, perhaps imitated the Normans in this particular: But neither did our Saxon or Norman ancestors mean to increase or strengthen the possession of their villeins, but to leave that that altogether as dependent and precarious as before; save only that, as by their admission to fealty, their possession was put, in some measure, upon a feudal footing, the Lords could not deal with them so wantonly as before: (vide ante I. 4:) And at length the uninterrupted benevolence and good nature of the successive Lords of many manors, having, time out of mind, permitted them, or them and their children, to enjoy their possessions in a course of succession, or for life only, became customary and binding on their successors, and advanced such possession into the legal interest or estate we now call Copyhold; which yet remains subject to the same servile conditions and forfeitures as before, they being all of them so many branches of that continuance or custom which made it what it is. Somn. Gav. 58: Spelm. Gloss. v Feudum: Bro. title Villenage.

From this view of the origin and nature of Copyholds we may possibly collect the ground of the great variety of customs that influence and govern those estates in different manors; it appearing that they are only customary estates, after the ancient will of the first Lords, as preserved and evidenced by the Rolls, or kept on foot by the constant and uninterrupted usages of the several manors wherein they lie. Litt. § 73, 75, 77. Wright 220.

As to Copyholds, see further, 2 Comm. c 6 III: and this Dictionary, titles Ancient Demesne; Copyholds; Manors; Villeins, &c.

FROM the above compendious view of the principal and fundamental points of the doctrine of Tenures, both ancient and modern, may be observed the mutual connection and dependence that all of them have upon each other. And upon the whole it appears, that whatever changes and alterations these Tenures, in progress of time, underwent, from the Saxon æra to 12 Cha. II. all Lay-Tenures are now in effect reduced to two species: Free Tenure in Common Socage, and Base Tenure by Copy of Court Roll. There is one other species of Tenure reserved by the statute of Charles II. which is of a spiritual nature, and called the Tenure in Frankalmoigne. See this Dictionary under that title.

TERM, Terminus.] Signifies commonly the limitation of time or estate; as a lease for term of life, or years, &c. Bract. lib. 2. Term is also a space of time, wherein the Superior Courts at Westminster sit. See Terms.

TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT; See Ad Terminum; Ejectment.

TERMOR, Tenens ex Termino.] He that holds lands or tenements for term of years or life. Litt. § 100. A Termor for years cannot plead in assise like tenant of the freehold; but the special matter, viz. his lease for years, the reversion in the plaintiff, and that he is in possession, &c. Dyer 246; Jenk. Cent. 142. See title Lease I. 1.

TERMS, Those spaces of time, wherein the Courts of Justice are open, for all that complain of wrongs or injuries, and seek their rights by course of law or action, in order to their redress; and during which, the Courts in Westminster-Hall sit and give judgments, &c. But the High Court of Parliament, the Chancery, and inferior Courts, do not observe the Terms; only the Courts of King's Bench, the Common Pleas, and Exchequer, the highest Courts at Common Law. Of these Terms there are four in every year, viz. Hilary Term, which begins the 23d of January, and ends the 12th of February (unless on Sundays, and then the day after); Easter Term, that begins the Wednesday fortnight after Easter Day, and ends the Monday next after Ascension Day; Trinity Term, which begins the Friday after Trinity Sunday, and ends the Wednesday fortnight after; and Michaelmas Term, that begins the 6th of November, and ends the 28th of November (unless on Sundays, and then the day after).

These Terms are supposed by Selden to have been instituted by William the Conqueror: But Spelman hath clearly and learnedly shewn, that they were gradually formed from the canonical constitutions of the Church; being indeed no other than those leisure seasons of the year, which were not occupied by the great festivals or fasts, or which were not liable to the general avocations of rural business. Throughout all Christendom, in very early times, the whole year was one continual Term for hearing and deciding causes. For the Christian Magistrates, to distinguish themselves from the Heathens, who were extremely superstitious in the observation of their dies fasti et nefasti, went into a contrary extreme, and administered justice upon all days alike. Till at length the Church interposed and exempted certain holy seasons from being profaned by the tumult of forensic litigations. As, particularly, the time of Advent and Christmas, which gave rise to the winter vacation; the time of Lent and Easter, which created that in the spring; the time of Pentecost, which produced the third; and the Long Vacation, between Midsummer and Michaelmas, which was allowed for the hay time and harvest. All Sundays also, and some particular festivals, as the days of the Purification, Ascension, and some others, were included in the same prohibition: which was established by a canon of the church, A. D. 517, and was fortified by an imperial constitution of the younger Theodosius, comprized in the Theodosian code. Spelm. of the Terms

Afterwards, when our own legal Constitution came to be settled, the commencement and duration of our Law Terms were appointed with an eye to those canonical prohibitions; and it was ordered by the laws of King Edward the Confessor, (c. 3, de temporibus et diebus pacis,) that from the Advent to the octave of the Epiphany, from Septuagesima to the octave of Easter, from the Ascension to the octave of Pentecost, and from three in the afternoon of all Saturdays till Monday morning, the peace of God and of Holy Church shall be kept throughout all the kingdom. And so extravagant was afterwards the regard that was paid to these holy times, that though the Author of the Mirror mentions only one vacation of any considerable length, containing the months of August and September; yet Britton is express, that in the reign of King Edward I. no secular plea could be held, nor any man sworn on the Evangelists, in the times of Advent, Lent, Pentecost, harvest and vintage, the days of the great Litanies, and all solemn festivals. But he adds, that the Bishops did nevertheless grant dispensations, (of which many are preserved in Rymer's Fœdera,) that Assises and Juries might be taken in some of these holy seasons. And soon afterwards a general dispensation was established by stat. Westm. 1. 3 Edw. I. c. 51; which declares, that, "by the assent of all the prelates, Assises of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, and darrein presentment shall be taken in Advent, Septuagesima, and Lent; and that at the special request of

of the King to the Bishops." The portions of time, that were not included within these prohibited seasons, fell naturally into a fourfold division, and, from some festival day that immediately preceded their commencement, were denominated the Terms of St. Hilary, of Easter, of the Holy Trinity, and of St. Michael; which Terms have been since regulated and abbreviated by several acts of Parliament; particularly Trinity Term by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 21, and Michaelmas Term by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 6, and again by stat. 24 Geo 2. c. 48.

There are in each of these Terms stated days called Days in Bank; (dies in banco;) that is, days of appearance in the Court of Common Bench. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and have reference to some festival of the Church. On some one of these day in Bank, all original writs must be made returnable; and therefore they are generally called the Returns of that Term: whereof every Term has more or less, said by the Mirror to have been originally fixed by King Alfred, but certainly settled as early as the statute of 51 Hen. 3. st. 2 Now Easter Term hath five returns; and all the other Terms four. But though many of the return days are fixed upon Sundays, yet the Court never sits to receive these returns till the Monday after; and therefore no proceedings can be held, or judgment can be given, or supposed to be given, on the Sunday. See Salk. 627: 6 Mod. 250: 1 Jon. 156, Swan v. Broome: Bro. P. C.

The first return in every Term is, properly speaking, the first day in that Term; as, for instance, the octave of St. Hilary, or the eighth day inclusive after the feast of that Saint: which falling on the thirteenth of January, the octave therefore or first day of Hilary Term is the twentieth of January. And thereon (one Judge of) the Court sits to take essoigns, or excuses, for such as do not appear according to the summons of the writ: wherefore this is usually called the Essoign Day of the Term. But on every return day in the Term, the person summoned has three days of grace, beyond the day named in the writ, in which to make his appearance; and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, (quarto die post,) it is sufficient. For our sturdy ancestors held it beneath the condition of a freeman to appear, or to do any other act, at the precise time appointed. Therefore, at the beginning of each Term, the Court does not usually sit for dispatch of business till the fourth or appearance day, as in Hilary Term on the 23d of January; and in Trinity Term, by statute 32 Hen. 8 c. 21, not till the fifth day, the fourth happening on the great popish festival of Corpus Christi; which days are therefore called and set down in the almanacs as the first days of the Term: And the Court also sits till the quarto die post or appearance day of the last return, which is therefore the end of each Term. See 1 Bulst. 35: 3 Comm. c. 18.

If the feast of Saint John the Baptist, or Midsummer Day, falls on the Morrow of Corpus Christi day, (as it did A. D. 1614, 1698, 1709, and 1791,) Trinity full Term then commences, and the Court sits on that day; though in other years it is no juridical day. Yet in [illegible], 1701, and 1724, when Midsummer Day fell upon what was regularly the last day of the Term, the Court did not then sit; but it was regarded like a Sunday, and the Term was prolonged to the twenty-fifth of June. Rot. C. B.; Bunb. 176.

The whole Term in construction of Law is accounted but as one day to many purposes; for a plea that is put in the last day of a Term, is a plea of the first day of the Term; and a judgment on the last day of Term is as effectual as on the first day. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. See 1 Wils. 37. And for this reason the Judges may alter and amend their judgments in the same Term, &c. See titles Judgment; Amendment. It has been held, that the Courts sit not but in Term, as to the giving of judgments: The Judges of B. R. and C. B. before Trinity Term 1651, did not sit longer in Court than till one o'clock upon the last day of Term; because they would not encourage attornies to neglect their clients' business till the last day of Term, as too commonly they do, to the toil of the Court, and too much hurry in dispatch. Mich. 22 Car. 2: Lill. 91.

Terms have been adjourned, and returns of writs and processes confirmed. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 4.

The issuable Terms are Hilary and Trinity Terms only; they are so called, because in them the issues are joined and records made up of causes, to be tried at the Lent and Summer Assises, which immediately follow 2 Lil. Abr. 568. See title Assises, &c

By stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 48, special days and returns may be appointed by the Judges in such cases as have been usual. The days of Assise in darrein presentment, and in a plea of quare impedit appointed by the statute of Marlebridge; and the days to be given in attaint by stat. 5 E. 3, and also in stat. 23 H. 8, not being contrary to this act, shall be in force. Day for swearing the Lord Mayor of London is appointed for November 9th, unless it be Sunday, and then the next day. The Morrow of St. Martin yearly, appointed for nominating Sheriffs in the Exchequer.

The Terms in Scotland are Martinmas, Candlemas, Whitsuntide, and Lammas; at which times the Court of Exchequer, &c. there is to be kept. Stat. 6 Ann c. 6. The Terms of our Universities for Students, are different in time from the Terms of the Courts of Law.

Terms of the Law. Artificial or technical words and Terms of art, particularly used in and adapted to the profession of the Law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 87.

Terms for Payment of Rent, Or Rent Terms; the four quarterly feasts upon which rent is usually paid. Cartular. St. Edmund. 238. See titles Rent; Lease.

Terms for Years, To secure payment of mortgages, and Terms to attend the inheritance. See titles Mortgage; Trust; Use.

TERRA, In all the Surveys in Domesday Register, is taken for arable land; and always so distinguished from the Pratum, &c. Kennet's Gloss.

Terra affirmata, Land let to farm.

Terra Boscalis, Woody lands; according to an inquisition, an. 8 Car. 1.

Terra Culta, Land that is tilled or manured; as Terra Inculta is the contrary. Mon. Ang. i. 500.

Terra Frusca, Weak or barren ground. Inq. 22 R. 2.

Terra Dominica vel Indominicata, The demesne land of a Manor. Cowell.

Terra Excultabilis, Land which may be ploughed. Mon. Ang. i. 426.

Terra extendenda, A writ directed to the escheator, &c. willing him to inquire and find out the true true yearly value of any land, &c. by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the Chancery, &c. Reg. of Writs 293.

TERRA FRUSCA, Fresh land, or such as hath not been lately ploughed; likewise written Terra frisca. Mon. Ang. ii. 327.

TERRA HYDATA, Land subject to the payment of Hydage; as the contrary was terra non hydata, Selden.

TERRA LUCRABILIS, Land that may be gained from the sea, or inclosed out of a waste, to a particular use. Mon. Ang. 1. par. fol. 406.

TERRA NORMANNORUM, Such land in England as in the beginning of Henry III. had been lately held by some noble Norman, who, by adhering to the French King, or Dauphin, had forfeited his estate; which, by this means, became an escheat to the Crown, and restored, or otherwise disposed of at the King's pleasure. Paroch. Antiq. pag. 197.

TERRA NOVA, Land newly afferted and converted from wood ground to arable; terra noviter concessa. Spelman.

TERRA PUTURA, Land in forests held by the tenure of furnishing man's meat, horse meat, &c. to the keepers therein. See Putura.

TERRA SABULOSA, Gravelly or sandy ground. Inq. 10 Ed. 3. n. 3.

TERRA VESTITA, Is used in old charters for land sown with corn. Cowell.

TERRA WAINABILIS, Tillable land. Cowell.

TERRA WARENNATA, Land that has the liberty of free warren. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 1.

TERRÆ BOSCALES, Woody lands. Inq. 2. par. 8 Car. 1. num. 71.

TERRÆ TESTAMENTALES. Lands that were held free from feodal services, in allodio; or in socage, descendible to all the sons, and therefore called Gavelkind, being devisable by will, were thereupon called Terræ Testamentales, as the Thane who possessed them was said to be testamento dignus. See Spelman of Feuds, c. 5.

TERRAGE, Terragium.] Seems to be an exemption à precariis, viz. Boons of ploughing, reaping, &c. and perhaps from all land taxes, or from money paid for digging and breaking the earth in fairs and markets. Cowell.

TERRAR, or Terrier; Terrarium, catalogus Terrarum.] A land-roll, or survey of lands, either of a single person, or of a town; containing the quantity of acres, tenants' names, and such like; and in the Exchequer, there is a Terrar of all the glebe lands in England, made about 11 E. 3. See stat. 18 Eliz. c. 17.

TERRARIUS, A land-holder, or one who possesses many farms of land. Leg. W. 1.

TERRARIUS CŒNOBIALIS, An officer in Religious Houses, whose office was to keep a terrier of all their estates, and to have the lands belonging to the houses exactly surveyed and registered; and one part of his office was to entertain the better sort of convent-tenants, when they came to pay their rents, &c. Hist. Dunelm.

TERRE-TENANT, TERTENANT, Terræ Tenens.] He who hath the actual possession of the land: For example, a Lord of a manor has a freeholder, who letteth out his freehold to another, to be possessed and occupied by him, such other is called the Tertenant, West. Symb. par. 2: Britton, c. 29. In the case of a recognizance, statute, or judgment, the heir is chargeable as Tertenant, and not as heir; because, by the recognizance or judgment, the heir is not bound, but the ancestor concessit that the money de terris, &c. levetur. 3 Rep. 12. Vide Cro. Eliz. 872: Cro. Jac. 506; and this Dictionary, titles Scire facias; Elegit; Execution.

TERRIS, Bonis et Catallis rehabendis post Purgationem; A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his Ordinary to be purged. Reg. Orig. 68.

TERRIS et Catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum, A judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor that is distrained above the quantity of the debt. Reg. Judic. 38.

TERRIS LIBERANDIS, A writ lying for a man convicted by attaint, to bring the record and process before the King, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste. Reg. Orig. 232. It is also a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed; or upon security taken that he shall perform them. Ibid 293, 313

TERTIAN, A measure of eighty-four gallons; so called, because it is a third part of a tun. See stats. 2 H. 6. c. 11: 1 R. 3 c. 13.

TEST. To bring one to the Test, is to bring him to a trial and examination, &c. For the Test-Act, see titles Non conformists; Papists

TESTA DE NEVIL, An ancient record in the custody of the King's Remembrancer in the Exchequer, compiled by John de Nevil; a Justice Itinerant in the 18 & 24 of King Henry III. containing an account of lands held in Grand Serjeanty, with fees and escheats to the King, &c.

TESTAMENT, Testamentum.] Is defined by Plowden to be testatio mentis; a witness of the mind: But Aulus Gellius, lib. 6. c. 12, denies it to be a compound word, and saith, it is verbum simplex, as Calceamentum, Plaudamentum, &c. And therefore it may be thus better defined, Testamentum est ultimæ voluntatis justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri vult; &c. See Wills.

Testament was anciently used (according to Spelman) pro scripto charta vel instrumento, quo prædiorum rerumve aliarum transactiones perficiuntur, sic dictum quod de ea re vel Testimonium ferret vel testium nomina contineret.—— Si quis contra hoc meæ authoritatis Testamentum aliquod machinari impedimentum præsumpsit. Charta Croylandiæ ab Æthelbaldo Rege. Anno Domini 716. Cowell.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES, A species of Causes belonging to the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction. They were originally cognizable in the King's Courts of Common Law, viz. the County Courts; and afterwards transferred to the jurisdiction of the Church by the favour of the Crown, as a natural consequence of granting to the Bishops the administration of intestates' effects. 3 Comm. c. 7: See title Courts Ecclesiastical.

As observed by Lindewode, the ablest Canonist of the fifteenth century, Testamentary Causes belong to the Ecclesiastical Courts, "de consuetudine Angliæ, & super consensu regio & suorum procerum in talibus ab antiquo concesso." Provincial. l. 3. t. 13. fo. 176.

Testamentary Guardian; See Guardian I. 4.

Testamentary Jurisdiction in Equity; See Chancery.

Testamento annexo, Administration cum. See title Executor II.

TESTATOR, Lat. He that makes a testament. See Swinburn of Wills and Testaments. See also a Dissertation of the Probate of Wills or Testaments by the learned Sir Henry Spelman among his Remains, pag. 127; and this Dictionary, title Wills.

TESTATUM-CAPIAS; See title Capias.

TESTE, (Witness;) That part of a writ wherein the date is contained; which begin with these words, Teste meipso, &c. if it be an original writ; or Teste the Lord Chief Justice, &c. if judicial. See Co. Litt. 134; and this Dictionary, titles Original; Writs.

TESTIMONIAL, A certificate under the hand of a Justice of the Peace, testifying the place and time, when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling and birth unto which he is to pass. 39 Eliz. c. 17. See title Vagrants. Formerly Testimonials were to be given by mayors and constables to servants quitting their services, &c. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. See title Servants.

Testimonials of Clergy, Are necessary to be made by persons present, that a Clergyman inducted to a benefice hath performed all things according to the act of uniformity; to evidence that the clerk hath complied with what the Law requires on his institution and induction, which in some cases he shall be put to do. Count. Pars. Comp. 24, 26. See titles Parson; Ordination.

TESTIMOIGNES, French, Witnesses; So Testimoignage, Testimony. Law Fr. Dict.

TESTON, or TESTOON, Commonly called Tester, a sort of money which among the French did bear the value of 18*d.* but being made of brass lightly gilt with silver, in the reign of King Henry VIII., it was reduced to 12*d.* and afterwards to 6*d. Lowndes's Ess. on Coins, p.* 22.

TEXTUS, A Text or subject of a discourse; It is mentioned by several ancient authors to signify the New Testament; which was written in golden letters, and carefully preserved in the churches.

Textus magni Altaris, We read of in Domesday and Cartular S. Edmund.

Textus Roffensis, An ancient manuscript containing the rights, customs, and tenures, &c. of the church of Rochester, drawn up by the Bishop of that See, anno 1114.

THAMES; See titles Rivers; London.

THANAGE OF THE KING, Thanagium Regis.] Signified a certain part of the King's land or property, whereof the ruler or governor was called Thane. Cowell.

THANE, From Sax. Thenian, ministrare.] Was the title of those who attended the English Saxon Kings in their Courts, and who held their lands immediately of those Kings; and therefore, in Domesday, they were promiscuously called thani et servientes Regis; though not long after the Conquest the word was disused; and, instead thereof, those men were called Barones Regis, who, as to their dignity, were inferior to Earls, and took place next after Bishops, Abbots, Barons, and Knights. There were also Thani minores, and those were likewise called Barons: These were Lords of Manors, who had a particular jurisdiction within their limits, and over their own tenants in their Courts, which to this day are called Courts-Baron. But the word signifies sometimes a nobleman, sometimes a freeman, sometimes a magistrate, but more properly an officer or minister of the King.—Edward King grete mine Bishops, and mine Earles, and all mine Thanes, on that Shiren, wher mine Preostes in Paulus minister habband land. Charta Edw. Conf. Pat. 18 H. 6. m. 9. per Inspex. Lambard, in his Exposition of Saxon words, verb. Thanus; and Skene, de verbor signif. say, That it is a name of dignity, equal with the son of an Earl.

This appellation was in use among us after the Norman Conquest, as appears by Domesday, and by a certain writ of William the First. Willielmus Rex salutat Hermannum episcopum, & Stewinum, & Britwi, & omnes Thanos meos in Dorsetrensi pago amicabiliter. MSS. de Abbatsbury.—Camden says, They were ennobled only by the office which they administred. Thanus Regis is taken for a Baron, in 1 Inst. fol. 5, 1. And in Domesday, tenens, qui est caput manerii. See Mills de Nobilitate, fol. 132. A Thane, at first, (in like manner as an Earl,) was not properly a title of dignity, but of service. But according to the degrees of service, some of greater estimation, some of less. So those that served the King in places of eminence, either in Court, or Commonwealth, were called Thani majores and Thani Regis. Those that served under them, as they did under the King, were called Thani minores, or the lesser Thanes. Cowell. See Spelman of Feuds, cap. 7.

Thane-Lands, Such Lands as were granted by charter of the Saxon Kings to their Thanes; which were held with all immunities, except the threefold necessity of expeditions, repairs of castles, and mending of bridges.—Thane signified also land under the government of a Thane. Skene. See titles Tenures; Reveland; Bockland.

THASCIA, A certain sum of money or tribute imposed by the Romans on the Britons, and their lands Leg. H. 1. c. 78.

THEATRES; See Play-houses.

THEFT, Furtum.] An unlawful felonious taking away of another man's moveable and personal goods, against the will of the owner. See titles Larceny; Robbery.

Theft-bote, From the Sax. Theof, i. e. Fur, & Bote, compensatio.] The receiving of a man's goods again from a Thief, after stolen; or other amends not to prosecute the felon, and to the intent the Thief may escape; which is an offence punishable with fine and imprisonment, &c. H. P. C. 130. See titles Compounding of Felony; Misprision.

THELONIUM; or Breve essendi quieti de Thelonio, A writ lying for the citizens of any city, or burgesses of any town, that have a charter or prescription to free them from toll, against the officers of any town or market, who would constrain them to pay toll of their merchandise, contrary to their said grant or prescription. F. N. B. fol. 226. See title Toll.

THELONMANNUS, The toll man, or officer who receives toll. Cartular Abbat. Glaston. MS. 46.

THELONIO rationabili habendo; pro Dominis habentibus Dominica Regis ad firmam, A writ for him that hath of the King's demesne in fee-farm to recover reasonable toll of the King's tenants there, if his demesne hath been accustomed to be tolled. Reg. Orig. 87.

THEMMAGIUM,

THEMMAGIUM, A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theam or team. Cowell.

THENICIUM, A hedge-row, or dike-row. Lindw.; Cowell.

THEODEN, In the degrees or distinctions of persons among the Saxons, the Earl or prime Lord was called Thane, and the King's Thane; and the Husbandman or inferior tenant was called Theodan, or under Thane. See Spelm.; and ante, title Thane.

THEOWES. The Slaves, Captives, or Bondmen among our Saxons were called Theowes and Esnes, who were not counted members of the Commonwealth, but parcels of their master's goods and substance. Spelman of Feuds, cap. 5.

THESAURUS, Was sometimes taken in old charters for thesaurarium, the Treasury; and hence the Domesday register preserved in the Treasury or Exchequer, when kept at Winchester, hath been often called Liber Thesauri. Chart. Q. Maud, wife of King Henry I.

THETHINGA, A word signifying a tithing: Tithingmannus, a tithingman. Sax.

THEW, or THEOWE; See Theowes.

THIEF-TAKER; See titles Felony; Rewards.

THINGUS, The same with Thanus; a Nobleman, Knight, or Freeman. Cromp. Jurisd. 197.

THIRDBOROW, Is used for a constable, by Lambard in his Duty of Constables, p. 6. And in the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 10. See Constable.

THIRDINGS, i. e. The Third Part of the corn growing on the ground, due to the Lord for a Heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat in Com. Hereford. Blount. Ten.

THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE, trium noctium hospes.] By the Laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any may lay a Third-Night in an inn, he was called a Third-Night-Awn-Hinde, for whom his host was answerable, if he committed an offence. The first night, Forman-Night, or Uncuth, (Sax. Unknown,) he was reckoned a stranger; the second night, Twa-Night, a guest; and the third night, an Agen-Hinde, or Awn-Hinde, a domestic. Bract. lib. 3.

THIRD-PENNY; See Denarius Tertius Comitatûs.

THISTLE-TAKE, It was a custom within the manor of Halton in the county palatine of Chester, that if, in driving beasts over the common, the driver permits them to graze or take but a Thistle, he shall pay a halfpenny a beast to the Lord of the fee. And at Fiskerton in Nottinghamshire, by ancient custom, if a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the Lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a hog was also called Thistle-take. Reg. Priorat. de Thurgarton. Cowell.

THOKES, Fish with broken bellies, stat. 22 E. 4. cap. 2; which by the said statute are not to be mixt or packed with tale-fish.

THORP, THREP, TROP, Either in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a street or village, as Aldestrop: From the Sax. Thorp, villa, vicus.

THRAVE OF CORN, Trava bladi, from the Sax. Threav, a bundle, or the British dresa, twenty-four.] In most parts of England, consists of twenty-four sheaves, or four shocks, six sheaves to every shock, stat. 2 H. 6. c. 2; yet in some counties they reckon but twelve sheaves to the Thrave. King Athelstan, anno 923, gave by his charter to St. John of Beverley's Church, four Thraves of Corn, from every plough-land in the East-Riding of Yorkshire. Cowell.

THREAD, Is liable to certain duties on importation. Regulations as to reeling Ounce or Nun's Thread. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 17.

THREATENING LETTERS. By stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, (amended by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 15,) Knowingly to send any Letter without a name, or with a fictitious name, demanding money, venison, or any other valuable thing, or threatening (without any demand) to kill or fire the house, out-houses, barns, or ricks of any person, is made felony without Benefit of Clergy. This offence was formerly High Treason, by the stat. 8 Hen. 5. c. 6. It has been determined that if the writer of a Threatening Letter delivers it himself, and does not send it by any other, he is not guilty of felony under this act. Leach 351.

By stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, If any person shall knowingly send or deliver any Letter or Letters, threatening to accuse any person of a crime punishable with death, transportation, pillory, or other infamous punishment, with a view to extort from him any money or other valuable chattels, he is punishable at the discretion of the Court, with fine, imprisonment, pillory, whipping, or transportation for seven years.

THREATS. Threats and menaces of bodily hurt, through fear of which a man's business is interrupted, are a species of injury to individuals. A menace alone, without a consequent inconvenience, makes not the injury; but to complete the wrong, there must be both of them together. The remedy for this is in pecuniary damages, to be recovered by action of trespass vi & armis, this being an inchoate, though not an absolute violence. 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 120. As to Threats or menaces where bodily harm is justly feared, See title Surety of the Peace, &c.

THRENGES. Quia vero non erant adhuc tempore Regis Willielmi milites in Anglia, sed Threnges, præcipit Rex ut de eis milites fierent ad defendendum terram, fecit autem Lanfrancus Threngos suos milites, &c. Somner's Gavelk. 123, 210. They were vassals, but not of the lowest degree, of those who held lands of the chief Lord; the name was imposed by the Conqueror; for when one Edward Sharnbourn of Norfolk, and others, were ejected out of their lands, they complained to the Conqueror, insisting, that they were always on his side, and never opposed him, which upon inquiry he found to be true, and therefore he commanded that they should be restored to their lands, and for ever after be called Drenches. Spelm. See titles Drenches; Sharnburn.

THRIMSA, Sax. Thrim. Three] An old piece of money of three shillings, according to Lambard, or the third part of a shilling, being a German coin passing for 4*d*. Seld. Tit. Hon. 604.

THRITHING, Thrithingum.] A division, consisting of three or four hundreds. Stat. Merton, 2 Inst. 99. See Trithing.

THUDE-WEALD, Sax.] A woodward, or person that looks after the woods.

THUMELUM, A thumb. Leg. Inæ, cap. 55. apud Brompton.

THWERTNICK, A Saxon word, which in some old Writers is taken for the custom of giving entertainments to the Sheriff, &c. for three nights. Rot. 11 & 12 Rich. 2.

TIDESMEN, Are certain Officers of the Custom-house, appointed to watch or attend upon ships, till the customs are paid; and they are so called, because they go aboard the ships at their arrival in the mouth of the Thames, and come up with the tide. See title Customs.

TIERCE, Fr. Tiers, i. e. a third.] A measure of wine, oil, &c. containing the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 14.

TIGH, Sax. Teag.] A close or inclosure, mentioned in ancient charters; which word is still used in Kent in the same sense. Chart. Eccl. Cant.

TIHLA, Sax.] An accusation: Ll. Canuti.

TILES; See Bricks and Tiles.

TILLAGE, Agricultura] Is of great account in Law, as being very profitable to the Commonwealth; and therefore arable land hath the preference before meadows, pastures, and all other ground whatsoever: And so careful is our Law to preserve it, that a bond or condition to restrain Tillage, or sowing of lands, &c. is void. 11 Rep. 53. There are divers ancient statutes for encouragement of Tillage and Husbandry, now become in a great measure, if not altogether, obsolete.

TILTING; See title Homicide II. 1.

TIMBER, Wood fitted for building, or other such like use; in a legal sense it extends to oak, ash, and elm, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 649. See post. Lessees of land may not take Timber-trees felled by the wind; for thereby their special property ceases. 1 Keb. 691.

The importation, &c. of Timber is regulated by divers Statutes.

Against cutting up, barking, or destroying of Timber; stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 48. See title Woods.

Oak Timber, (except for building,) to be felled in April, May, and June; stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. s. 20.

By stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 36, Any one who shall, in the night-time, lop, top, cut down, break, throw down, bark, burn, or otherwise spoil or destroy, or carry away, any oak, beech, ash, elm, fir, chesnut, or asp, Timber-tree, or other tree or trees, standing for Timber, or likely to become Timber, without the consent of the owner; or shall, in the night-time, pluck up, dig up, break, spoil or destroy, or carry away, any root, shrub, or plant, roots, shrubs, or plants, of the value of five shillings, and which shall be growing, standing, or being in the garden-ground, nursery-ground, or other inclosed ground, of any person or persons whomsoever; shall be deemed and construed to be guilty of felony, and the offenders may be transported. Those who are assisting, and purchasers, knowing the things to be stolen, shall be liable to the same punishment, as if they had stolen the same.

By stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 48, Every person convicted of damaging, destroying, or carrying away any Timber-tree or trees, or trees likely to become Timber, without consent of the owner, &c. shall forfeit for the first offence not exceeding 20*l.* with the charges attending; and on non-payment, are to be committed for not more than twelve, nor less than six months; for the second offence, a sum not exceeding 30*l.* and, on non-payment, are to be committed for not more than eighteen, nor less than twelve months; and for the third offence are to be transported for seven years.

All oak, beech, chesnut, walnut, ash, elm, cedar, fir, asp, lime, sycamore, and birch trees, shall be deemed and taken to be Timber-trees within the meaning of the Act. Persons convicted of plucking up, spoiling, or taking away, any root, shrub, or plant, out of private cultivated ground, shall forfeit for the first offence any sum not exceeding 40*s.* with the charges; for the second offence, a sum not exceeding 5*l.* with the charges; and for the third offence, are to be transported for seven years. Persons hindering, or attempting to prevent seizing offenders, forfeit 10*l.* to the person convicting them; and, if not paid down, to be committed to hard labour, not exceeding six months. See title MISCHIEF, Malicious.

TIMBER FOR THE NAVY. An act for the increase and preservation of Timber, within the forest of Dean, stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 3.—Two thousand acres of land in the New Forest to be inclosed, for preserving Timber for the Navy Royal, stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 36.

TIMBERLODE, A service by which tenants were to carry Timber felled from the woods to the Lord's house. Thorn's Chron.

TIME and Place, Are to be set forth with certainty in a declaration; but Time may be only a circumstance when a thing was done, and not to be made part of the issue, &c. 5 Mod. 286. It has been held, that an impossible Time is no Time; and where a day or Time is appointed for the payment of money, and there is no such, the money may be due presently. Hob. 189: 5 Rep. 22.

If no certain Time is implied by Law for the doing of any thing, and there is no Time agreed upon by the parties, then the Law doth allow a convenient Time to the party for the doing thereof, i. e. as much as shall be adjudged reasonable, without prejudice to the doer of it. 2 Lill. Abr. 572. In some cases one hath Time during his life for the performance of a thing agreed, if he be not hastened to do it by request of the party for whom it is to be done; but if in such case he be hastened by request, he is obliged to do it in convenient Time, after such request made. Hil. 22 Car. 1. B. R.

Time, taken generally, hath also its Time: What is done in Time of peace, the Law doth more countenance than in Time of war; in case of bar of an entry, or claim by fine, and of descents, &c. 1 Inst. 249: 10 Rep. 82; 4 Shep. Abr. 6.

Regularly, there cannot be any fraction in a day. See 20 Vin. Abr. and the several apposite titles in this Dictionary.

TINEL LE ROY. Fr.] The King's hall wherein his servants used to dine and sup. Stat. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 3.

TINEMAN, or TIENMAN, A petty officer in the forest, who had the nocturnal care of vert and venison, and other servile employments. Constitut. Forestæ Canuti Regis, cap. 4.

TINET, Tinettum.] Brushwood and thorns, to make and repair hedges: In Herefordshire to tine a gap in a hedge is to fill it up with thorns, that cattle may not pass through it. Chart. 21 Hen. 6.

TINEWALD, The ancient parliament or annual convention of the people of the Isle of Man, of which this account is given:—The Governor and Officers of that Island do usually call the twenty-four Keys, being the chief commons thereof, especially once every year, viz. upon Midsummer-day, at St. John's Chapel, to the Court kept there, called the Tinewald Court; where, upon a hill near the said chapel, all the inhabitants of the Island stand ſtand round about, and in the plain adjoining, and hear the laws and ordinances agreed upon in the Chapel of St. John, which are publiſhed and declared unto them; and at this ſolemnity the Lord of the Iſland ſits in a chair of ſtate with a royal canopy over his head, and a ſword held before him, attended by the ſeveral degrees of the people, who ſit on each ſide of him, *&c. TINKERMEN, Thoſe fiſhermen who deſtroyed the young fry on the river Thames, by nets and unlawful engines, till ſuppreſſed by the Mayor and Citizens of London. Of which, ſee Stow's Survey of London, p. 18.

TINPENY, A tribute ſo called, uſually paid for the liberty of digging in Tin-mines. But ſome Writers ſay it is a cuſtomary payment to the tithingman from the ſeveral friburghs, contracted from Teding-penny, which ſee.

TIPSTAFFS, Officers appointed by the Marſhal of the King's Bench, to attend upon the Judges with a kind of rod or ſtaff tipt with ſilver, who take into their cuſtody all priſoners, either committed, or turned over by the Judges at their chambers, &c. See title Baſton; and ſtat. 1 R. 2.

TITHES,

DECIMÆ; from the Sax. Teotha; i.e. tenth.] In ſome of our Law-books are briefly defined to be an eccleſiaſtical inheritance, or property in the Church, collateral to the eſtate of the lands thereof: But in others they are more fully defined to be a certain part of the fruit, or lawful increaſe of the earth, beaſts and men's labour, which in moſt places, and of moſt things, is the tenth part, which, by the Law, hath been given to the Miniſters of the Goſpel, in recompence of their attending their office. 11 Rep. 13: Dyer 84.

Tithes are claſſed by Blackſtone, as a ſpecies of incorporeal hereditaments; and defined to be a tenth part of the increaſe, yearly ariſing and renewing from the profits of lands, the ſtock upon lands, and the perſonal induſtry of the inhabitants: The firſt ſpecies being uſually called predial; as of corn, graſs, hops, and wood: The ſecond mixed; as of wool, milk, pigs, &c. conſiſting of natural products, but nurtured and preſerved in part by the care of Man; and of theſe two ſorts the Tenth muſt be paid in groſs: The third, perſonal; as of manual occupations, trades, fiſheries, and the like, and of theſe only the tenth part of the clear gains and profits is due. 2 Comm. c. 3.

Tithes, with regard to value, are divided into great and ſmall. Great Tithes are chiefly corn, hay, and wood: Small Tithes are the predial Tithes of other kinds, together with mixed and perſonal Tithes. Burn's Juſtice, title Tithes.

Great Tithes generally belong to the Rector; and ſmall Tithes to the Vicar. Cro. Car. 20.

Some things may be great or ſmall Tithes, in regard of the place; as hops in gardens are ſmall Tithes, and in fields may be great Tithes; and it is ſaid the quantity will turn a ſmall Tithe into a great one, if the pariſh is generally ſown with it. 1 Roll. Abr. 643: 1 Cro. 578: Wood's Inſt. 162.

Great Tithes are commonly called Parſonage Tithes—Small Tithes, Vicarage Tithes; as being, in general, payable the one to the Parſon, the other to the Vicar.

I. BISHOP Barlow, Selden, Father Paul, and others, have obſerved, that neither Tithes nor eccleſiaſtical benefices, (which are correlative in their nature,) were ever heard of for many ages in the Chriſtian Church, or pretended to be due to the Chriſtian Prieſthood; and, as that Biſhop affirms, no mention is made of Tithes in the grand codex of Canons, ending in the year 451, which, next to the Bible, is the moſt authentic book in the world; and that it thereby appears, during all that time, both Churches and Churchmen were maintained by free gifts and oblations only. Barlow's Remains, p. 169: Selden of Tithes 82: See Watſon's Complete Incumbent, p. 3, 4, &c.

Selden contends, that Tithes were not introduced here into England, till towards the end of the eighth century, i.e about the year 786; when pariſhes and eccleſiaſtical benefices came to be ſettled; for, it is ſaid, Tithes and eccleſiaſtical benefices being correlative, the one could not exiſt without the other; for whenever any eccleſiaſtical perſon had any portion of Tithes granted to him out of certain lands, this naturally conſtituted the benefice; the granting of the Tithes of ſuch a manor or pariſh being, in fact, a grant of the benefice; as a grant of the benefice did imply a grant of the Tithes: And thus the relation between patrons and incumbents was analogous to that of Lord and Tenant by the feudal Law. Selden of Tithes 86, &c.

About the Year 794, Offa, King of Mercia, (the moſt potent of all the Saxon Kings of his time in this Iſland,) made a law, whereby he gave unto the Church the Tithes of all his kingdom; which the Hiſtorians tell us was done to expiate for the death of Ethelbert, King of the Eaſt Angles, whom in the year preceding he had cauſed baſely to be murdered. But that Tithes were before paid in England by way of offerings, according to the ancient uſage and decrees of the Church, appears from the canons of Egbert, Archbiſhop of York, about the year 750; and from an epiſtle of Boniface, Archbiſhop of Mentz, which he wrote to Cuthbert, Archbiſhop of Canterbury about the ſame time; and from the ſeventeenth canon of the general Council held for the whole kingdom at Chalcuth, in the year 787.—But this law of Offa was that which firſt gave the Church a civil right in them in this land, by way of property and inheritance, and enabled the Clergy to gather and recover them as their legal dues, by the coercion of the civil power. Yet this eſtabliſhment of Offa reached no further than the kingdoms of Mercia, (over which Offa reigned,) and Northumberland, until Ethelwulph, about ſixty years after, enlarged it for the whole Realm of England. Prideaux on Tithes 166, 167. See poſt.

It is said, Tithes, Oblations, &c. were originally the voluntary gifts of Christians, and that there was not any canon before that of the fourth Council of Lateran, anno Dom. 1215, that even supposed Tithes to be due of common right. 2 Wils. 182. But this seems very contrary to other opinions.

Blackstone says, he will not put the title of the Clergy to Tithes upon any divine right; though such a right certainly commenced, and as certainly ceased, with the Jewish Theocracy. Yet an honourable and competent maintenance for the Ministers of the Gospel is, undoubtedly, jure divino; whatever the particular mode of that maintenance may be. For, besides the positive precepts of the New Testament, natural reason will tell us, that an order of men, who are separated from the world, and excluded from other lucrative professions, for the sake of the rest of mankind, have a right to be furnished with the necessaries, conveniencies, and moderate enjoyments of life, at their expence for whose benefit they forego the usual means of providing them. Accordingly all Municipal Laws have provided a liberal and decent maintenance for their national Priests or Clergy; ours, in particular, have established this of Tithes, probably in imitation of the Jewish Law; and perhaps, considering the degenerate state of the world in general, it may be more beneficial to the English Clergy to found their title on the Law of the land, than upon any divine right whatsoever, unacknowledged and unsupported by temporal sanctions. 2 Comm. c. 3.

It has been well observed, that the Clergy have precisely the same right to Tithes, as the heir at law has to his ancestor's estate, or the farmer to the possession in consequence of his lease; and the proprietor has no more reason to complain that his land is not Tithe free, than that his neighbour's field is not his own. Christian's note on 2 Comm. 25.

We cannot (continues the Commentator) precisely ascertain the time when Tithes were first introduced into this country. Possibly they were contemporary with the planting of Christianity among the Saxons, by Augustin the monk, about the end of the sixth century. But the first mention of them in any written English Law appears to be in a constitutional decree, made in a Synod held A. D. 786, wherein the payment of Tithes in general is strongly enjoined. Selden, c. 8. § 2. This canon, or decree, which at first bound not the Laity, was effectually confirmed by two kingdoms of the Heptarchy, in their parliamentary conventions of estates, respectively consisting of the Kings of Mercia and Northumberland, the Bishops, Dukes, Senators, and People; which was a few years later than the time that Charlemagne established the payment of them in France, (A. D. 778,) and made that famous division of them into four parts; one to maintain the edifice of the Church, the second to support the Poor, the third the Bishop, and the fourth the Parochial Clergy. Seld. c. 6. § 7: Spirit of Laws, b. 31. c. 12.

The next authentic mention of them is in the Fœdus [illegible] laws agreed upon between King Guthrun the Dane, and Alfred and his son Edward the Elder, successive Kings of England, about the year 900. This was a kind of treaty between those Monarchs, which may be found at large in the Anglo-Saxon Laws: Wherein it was necessary, as Guthrun was a Pagan, to provide for the subsistence of the Christian Clergy under his dominion; and, accordingly, we find the payment of Tithes not only enjoined, but a penalty added upon non-observance. Which Law is seconded by the Laws of Athelstan, about the year 930. And this is as much as can certainly be traced out, with regard to their legal original. See Wilkins, p. 51: 2 Comm. c. 3.

Upon the first introduction of Tithes, though every man was obliged to pay Tithes in general, yet he might give them to what priests he pleased; which were called arbitrary consecrations of Tithes: Or he might pay them into the hands of the Bishop, who distributed among his diocesan Clergy the revenues of the Church, which were then in common. 2 Inst. 646: Hob. 296: Seld. c. 9. § 4. But, when dioceses were divided into parishes, the Tithes of each parish were allotted to its own particular Minister; first by common consent, or the appointments of Lords of Manors, and afterwards by the written Law of the land. Ll. Edgar, cc. 1 & 2: Canut. c. 11.

However, arbitrary consecrations of Tithes took place again afterwards, and became in general use till the time of King John. Selden, c. 11. This was probably owing to the intrigues of the regular Clergy, or monks of the Benedictine and other rules, under Archbishop Dunstan and his successors; who endeavoured to wean the people from paying their dues to the secular or parochial Clergy, (a much more valuable set of men than themselves,) and were then in hopes to have drawn, by sanctimonious pretences to extraordinary purity of life, all ecclesiastical profits to the coffers of their own societies. And this will naturally enough account for the number and riches of the Monasteries and Religious Houses which were founded in those days, and which were frequently endowed with Tithes. For a layman, who was obliged to pay his Tithes somewhere, might think it good policy to erect an abbey, and there pay them to his own monks; or grant them to some abbey already erected; since, for this dotation, which really cost the patron little or nothing, he might, according to the superstition of the times, have masses for ever sung for his soul. But, in process of years, the income of the poor laborious parish priests being scandalously reduced by these arbitrary consecrations of Tithes, it was remedied by Pope Innocent III. about the year 1200, in a decretal epistle sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and dated from the palace of Lateran; which has occasioned Sir Henry Hobart and others to mistake it for a decree of the Council of Lateran, held A. D. 1179, which only prohibited what was called the infeodation of Tithes, or their being granted to mere laymen, whereas this letter of Pope Innocent to the Archbishop enjoined the payment of Tithes to the Parsons of the respective parishes where every man inhabited, agreeable to what was afterwards directed by the same Pope in other countries. This epistle, says Coke, bound not the Lay Subjects of this Realm; but, being reasonable and just, (and, he might have added, being correspondent to the ancient Law,) it was allowed of, and so became Lex terræ. 2 Inst. 641. This put an effectual stop to all the arbitrary consecrations of Tithes; except some footsteps which still continue in those portions of Tithes, which the Parson of one parish hath, though rarely, a right to claim in another; for it is now universally held, that Tithes are due, of common right, to the Parson of the parish,

pariſh, unleſs there be a ſpecial exemption. Regiſt. 46: Hob. 296. This Parſon of the pariſh, we have formerly ſeen, may be either the actual incumbent, or elſe the appropriator of the benefice; appropriations being a method of endowing Monaſteries, which ſeems to have been deviſed by the regular Clergy, by way of ſubſtitution to arbitrary conſecrations of Tithes. In extraparochial places, the King, by his royal prerogative, has a right to all the Tithes. 2 Rep. 2, 44: 2 Inſt. 64. See 2 Comm. c. 3.

II. In general, Tithes are to be paid for every thing that yields an annual increaſe, as corn, hay, fruit, cattle, poultry, and the like: but not for any thing that is of the ſubſtance of the earth, or is not of annual increaſe; as ſtone, lime, chalk, and the like: nor for creatures that are of a wild nature, as deer, hawks, &c., whoſe increaſe, ſo as to profit the owner, is not annual, but caſual: though for deer and rabbits Tithes may be payable by ſpecial cuſtom. 2 Comm. c. 3. &c.

Tithes are due either de jure, or by cuſtom. All Tithes which are due de jure, ariſe from ſuch fruits of the earth as renew annually; or from the profit that accrues from the labour of a man. Hence it follows, that ſuch Tithes can never be part of, but muſt always be collateral to, the land from which they ariſe. 11 Rep. 13, 14.

Nay, Tithes due de jure are ſo collateral to every kind of land, that if a leaſe is made of the glebe belonging to a rectory, with all the profits and advantages thereof; and there is beſides a covenant, that the rent to be paid ſhall be in full ſatisfaction of every kind of exaction, and demand, belonging to the rectory; yet, as the glebe is not expreſsly diſcharged of Tithes, the leſſee ſhall be liable to the payment thereof. 11 Rep. 13, 14: 1 Roll. Abr. 655. pl. 1: Cro. Eliz. 162, 261: Cro. Car. 362.

No Tithe is due de jure of the produce of a mine or of a quarry, becauſe this is not a fruit of the earth renewing annually; but is the ſubſtance of the earth, and has perhaps been ſo for a great number of years. F.N.B. 53: Br. Dim. pl. 18: 2 Inſt. 651: 1 Roll. Abr. 637: Cro. Eliz. 277.

No Tithe is due de jure of any thing (generally) which is part of the ſoil, and does not renew annually; but it may be due by cuſtom. Vide 2 Vern. 46: 1 Roll. Abr. 637. pl. 5: 2 Mod. 77: 1 Mod. 35: 1 Roll. Abr. 642, S. pl 7, 8.

No Tithes are due de jure of houſes; for Tithes are only due de jure of ſuch things as renew from year to year. 11 Rep. 16, Graunt's caſe. But houſes in London are, by decree, which was confirmed by an Act of Parliament, made liable to the payment of Tithes. 2 Inſt. 659. See ſtats. 37 H. 8. c. 12; 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 15. Before this decree, houſes in London were by cuſtom liable to pay Tithes; the quantum to be paid being thereby only ſettled, as to ſuch houſes for which there was no cuſtomary payment. 2 Inſt. 659: Hard. 116: Gilb. Eq. Rep. 193, 194. See poſt V. There is likewiſe in moſt ancient cities and boroughs, a cuſtom to pay Tithes for houſes; without which there would be no maintenance in many pariſhes for the Clergy. 11 Rep 16: Bunb. 102.

It was held by three Barons of the Exchequer, Price, Montague, and Page, contrary to the opinion of Bury, Chief Baron, that two Tithes may be due of the ſame thing, one de jure, the other by cuſtom. Bunb. 43.

In § 7, of ſtat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13, common day-labourers are exempted from the payment of perſonal Tithes. No perſonal Tithes are due from ſervants in huſbandry; for by their labour the Tithes of many other things are increaſed. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 1. It was ſettled, by a decree of the Houſe of Lords, upon an appeal from a decree of the Court of Exchequer, that only perſonal Tithes are due from the occupier of a corn-mill. 1 Eq. Abr. 366: 2 P. Wms. 463: Bro. P. C.

The ſtat. 9 Ed. 2. ſt. 1. c. 5, (as to occupiers of mills, paying Tithes,) provides, that new erected mills ſhall be liable to the payment of Tithes. But, as nothing therein is ſaid concerning ancient mills, there can be no doubt, that ſuch ancient mills, as before the making of this ſtatute were liable to pay Tithes, continued afterwards to be liable. 12 Mod. 243: 3 Bulſt. 212.

No perſonal Tithe is due of the profit which a man receives without perſonal labour, or of the profit which one man receives from the labour of another. 1 Roll. Abr. 656. pl. 1. pl. 2: 2 Inſt. 621, 6, 9. If a man lets a ſhip to a fiſherman, no perſonal Tithe is due of the money received for the uſe of ſuch ſhip; becauſe this is a profit without perſonal labour. 1 Roll. Abr. 656, n. pl. 2. Vide 1 Roll. Abr. 656, n. pl. 3: 2 Bulſt. 141.

Perſonal Tithes are only payable by a ſpecial cuſtom; and perhaps are now paid no-where in England; except for fiſh caught in the ſea, and for corn-mills. 3 Burn's Eccl. Law 473.

III. Such Tithes as ariſe immediately from the fruits of the earth, as from corn, hay, hemp, hops; and all kinds of fruits, ſeeds, and herbs, are called Predial Tithes. 2 Inſt. 649. They are ſo called becauſe they ariſe immediately from the fruits of the farm, (prædium,) or earth. 2 Inſt. 647. By the Eccleſiaſtical Law, many things are liable to the payment of predial Tithes, which by the Common Law, or in the Courts of Equity, are not held to be ſo. 2 Inſt. 621: 4 Mod. 344. This may cauſe, and has cauſed, ſome confuſion. In the former caſe, the laſt reſort is to the Delegates; in the latter, to the Houſe of Lords. Shaw's Law of Tithes 139. The canons muſt, in all caſes, give way to the cuſtom of the place. Id. 112.

The deſign, under this Head, is to ſhew what things are liable by the Common Law to pay predial Tithes.

In doing this, it will appear, that ſome things, which are in the general exempted therefrom, become, by cuſtom, liable to the payment of predial Tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 637, E. pl. 2: 642, S. pl 7. pl. 8.

It will alſo appear, that divers things, which are in the general liable thereto, are, under particular circumſtances, exempted from the payment of ſuch Tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 11: Cro. Eliz. 475: Freem. 335: 12 Mod 235.

But wherever any fraud is uſed, to bring a thing under thoſe circumſtances, by reaſon of which it would, if it had come fairly under them, have been exempted from the payment of predial Tithes, it is by ſuch fraud rendered liable thereto. Cro. Eliz. 475: Freem. 335.

The predial great Tithes now appear to be corn, grain, hay, clover-graſs (when made into hay), wood, underwood, and beans and peaſe (when ſown in fields). The predial ſmall Tithes are flax, hemp, madder, hops, garden roots, and herbs, as potatoes, turnips, parſley, cabbage, ſaffron; and the fruits of all kinds of trees, as apples, pears, acorns, &c. All kinds of feeds, as turnip-feed, parfley-feed, rape-feed, carraway-feed, ani-feed, clover-feed, and beans and peafe if fown in a garden. Shaw's Law of Tithes.

As it would be tedious to enumerate all the things which are liable to predial Tithes, only thofe fhall be mentioned concerning the Tithes of which fome queftion has arifen; but, from fuch as will be mentioned, it may be eafily collected of what other things predial Tithes are due.

AGISTMENT. Agifting, in the ftrict fenfe of the word, means the depafturing of a beaft the property of a ftranger. But this word is conftantly ufed, in the Books, for depafturing the beaft of an occupier of land, as well as that of a ftranger. 5 New Abr. 53. The Tithe of Agiftment is the tenth part of the value of the keeping or depafturing fuch cattle as are liable to pay it. Agiftment is derived from the French geyfer, gifter (jacere); becaufe the beafts are levant and couchant during the time they are on the land. Agiftment Tithe feems rather a mixed than ftrictly a predial Tithe.

An occupier of land is not liable to pay Tithe for the pafture of horfes, or other beafts, which are ufed in hufbandry in the parifh in which they are depaftured. Becaufe the Tithe of corn is by their labour increafed. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl 2. pl. 3; pl. 6. pl 7: Cro. Eliz. 446: Ld. Raym. 130. But, if horfes or other beafts are ufed in hufbandry out of the parifh in which they are depaftured, an Agiftment Tithe is due for them. 7 Mod. 114: Ld. Raym. 130.

It feems to be the better opinion, that no Tithe is due for the pafture of a faddle-horfe, which an occupier of land keeps for himfelf or fervants to ride upon. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl. 4: Cro. Jac. 430: Bulft. 171; Bunb. 3. No Tithe is due for the pafture of milk cattle, which are milked in the parifh in which they are depaftured; becaufe Tithe is paid of the milk of fuch cattle. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 2: Ld. Raym. 130: Cro. Eliz 446.

Milch cattle, which are referved for calving, fhall pay no Tithe for their pafture whilft they are dry. But, if they are afterwards fold, or milked in another parifh, an Agiftment Tithe is due for the time they were dry. Hetl. 100: Ld. Raym. 130. No Tithe is due from an occupier of land, for the pafture of young cattle, reared to be ufed in hufbandry, or for the pail. Cro. Eliz. 476. But if fuch young beafts are fold, before they come to fuch perfection as to be fit for hufbandry, or before they give milk, an Agiftment Tithe muft be paid for them. Hetl. 86.

An occupier of land is liable to an Agiftment Tithe, for all fuch cattle as he keeps for fale. Cro Eliz. 445, 476: Jenk. 28. pl. 6: Cro. Car. 237: Show. P. C. 192. Vide Cro. Jac. 430: 1 Roll. Abr. 647. pl 14.

But if any cattle, which have neither been ufed in hufbandry, nor for the pail, are, after being kept fome time, killed, to be fpent in the family of the occupier of the land on which they were depaftured, no Tithe is due for their pafture. Jenk. 281. pl. 6: Cro. Eliz. 446, 476: Cro. Car. 237.—It is in general true, that an Agiftment Tithe is due, for depafturing any fort of cattle the property of a ftranger. Cro. Eliz. 276: Cro. Jac. 276: Bunb. 11: Freem 329. No Tithe is due for the cattle, either of a ftranger or an occupier, which are depaftured in grounds that have in the fame year paid Tithe of hay. Bunb. 10, 79: Poph. 142: 2 Roll. Rep. 191.

No Agiftment Tithe is due for fuch beafts, either of a ftranger or an occupier, as are depaftured on the headlands of ploughed fields; provided that thefe are not wider than is fufficient to turn the plough and horfes upon. 1 Rol. Abr. 646. pl. 19. No Tithe is due for fuch cattle as are depaftured upon land that has the fame year paid Tithes of corn. Bro. Difm. 18: 1 Mod. 216. If land, which has paid Tithe of corn in one year, is left unfown the next year, no Agiftment is due for fuch land; becaufe, by this lying frefh, the Tithe of the next crop of corn is increafed. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl. 9. But if land, which has paid Tithe of corn, is fuffered to lie fallow longer than by the courfe of hufbandry is ufual, an Agiftment Tithe is due for the beafts depaftured upon fuch land. Shep. Abr. 1008.

As the queftion, whether an Agiftment Tithe is due for fheep, does not feem to be quite fettled, it will not be amifs to refer to the principal cafes in which this has been agitated, which are, 1 Roll. Rep 63. pl. 7: 1 Roll. Abr. 641, 642. pl. 8: Poph. 197: Cro. Car. 207: 1 Roll. Abr. 647. pl. 13: Bunb. 90: Gilb. Rep. in Equity 231: Bunb. 313.

This depends on the queftion, whether there is a new increafe; as if, after fhearing, the fheep are fed on turnips, which, if fevered, would be tithable. See Show. P. C. 192: Bunb. 314.

There is a peculiar difficulty attending this Tithe, that it cannot be taken in kind; cuftom is therefore the principal rule to go by in payment of it; and the old decifions on the fubject vary fo much, that it would be difficult to obtain any general inference from them.—Burn fays, in all cafes, the Tithe of Agiftment of barren and unprofitable cattle is to be paid according to the value of the keeping of each per week; and the value of the keeping of a fheep, beaft, or horfe, upon any particular lands, is eafily afcertained from the ufual prices given for their depafture per week in the neighbourhood, where profitable cattle are kept at the fame time upon the lands, together with them, or not. 3 Burn Ec. L. 448.

The parfon, vicar, or other proprietor of the Tithes, is entitled to Agiftment Tithe de jure; becaufe the grafs which is eat is of common right tithable. Ld. Raym. 137: 2 Salk. 655: 2 Inft. 651.

CORN.—It is laid down in fome books, that no Tithe is due of the rakings of Corn involuntarily fcattered. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 11: Cro. Eliz. 278: Freem. 335: Moor 278. But if more of any fort of corn is fraudulently fcattered, than, if proper care had been taken, would have been fcattered, Tithe is due of the rakings of fuch Corn. Cro. Eliz. 475: Freem 335. And it has been faid by Holt, Ch. J. that Tithe is due of the rakings of all corn, except fuch as is bound up in fheaves. 12 Mod. 235. No Tithes are due of the ftubbles left in Corn-fields, after mowing or reaping the Corn. 2 Inft. 261: 1 Roll. Abr. 640, pl. 14. See poft. VI.

HAY.—Tithe of Hay is to be paid, although beafts of the plough or pail, or fheep, are to be foddered with fuch Hay. Cro. Jac. 474. Webb. v. Warner: 1 Roll. Abr. 650. pl. 12; 12 Mod. 497. But no Tithe is due of Hay grown upon the headlands of ploughed grounds, provided that fuch headlands are not wider than is fufficient to turn the plough and horfes upon. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 19. See poft. VI. It is laid down in one old cafe, that that if a man cuts down grafs, and, while it is in the fwathes, carries it away and gives it to his plough cattle, not having fufficient fuftenance for them otherwife, no Tithe is due thereof. 1 Roll. Abr. 645, Crawley v. Wells, Mich. 9 Car. 1. In one cafe, the Court of Exchequer feemed to be of opinion, that no Tithe is due of vetches or clover, cut green, and given to cattle in hufbandry. Bunb. 279. But in another cafe, it was afterwards held, that the right to Tithe of Hay accrues upon mowing the grafs, and that the fubfequent application of this, while it is in grafs, or when it is made into Hay, fhall not, although beafts of the plough or pail are fed with it, take away this right. 12 Mod. 498. And the doctrine of this laft cafe coincides with that of an old cafe, in which it was held, that tares cut green, and given to beafts of the plough, may, by fpecial cuftom, be exempted from the payment of Tithes; from whence it follows that fuch tares are not exempted de jure. 12 Mod. 498. See poft. VI.

It is laid down in fome books, that no Tithe is due of aftermowth Hay; becaufe Tithe can only be due once in the fame year from the fame land. F. N. B. 53: Bro. Difm. pl. 16: 2 Inft. 262: 11 Rep. 16: Cro. Jac. 42: Lord Raym. 243. But it is held in other books, that Tithe is due of aftermowth Hay. 1 Roll. Abr. 64. pl. 11: Cro Eliz. 660: Cro. Jac. 116: Cro. Car. 403: 12 Mod. 498: Bunb. 10. And the principle upon which the doctrine, that no Tithe is due of aftermowth Hay, is founded, is denied in fome modern cafes.

In fome of thefe it is laid down, that Tithes fhall be paid of divers crops grown upon the fame land in the fame year. Bunb. 19, 314. In others it is held, wherever there is, in the fame year, a new increafe from the fame thing, Tithe is due. Bunb. 9: Gilb. Rep. in Eq. 231.

WOOD.—Tithe of Wood is not due of common right, becaufe Wood does not renew annually: But it was, in very ancient times, paid in many places by cuftom. 2 Inft. 642: 12 Mod. 111. Salk 656: Comb. 404: Bunb. 61.

A conftitution was made, in the feventeenth year of the reign of Edward the Third, by John Stratford, Archbifhop of Canterbury, that Tithes fhall be paid, within this province, of filva cædua. 2 Inft. 642: Palm. 37, 38.

Several petitions having been prefented to the King, complaining of the Clergy for taking Tithe of Grofs-wood and Underwood, by virtue of this conftitution; at length, a ftatute was made in thefe words: "At the complaint of the great men and commoners, fhewing by their petition, that when they fell their Grofs-wood, of the age of 20 or 40 years, and of a greater age, to merchants, to their own profit, and to the aid of the King in his wars, the Parfons and Vicars of Holy Church do implead and trouble the faid merchants, in Court Chriftian, for the Tithe of the faid Wood, under the denomination of filva cædua, by the reafon of which they cannot fell their Wood for the real value, to the great damage of themfelves and the Realm; it is ordained and eftablifhed, that a prohibition in this cafe fhall be granted, and upon the fame an attachment, as it hath hitherto been." Stat. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3.

From the petitions and anfwers, from this ftatute, and from books of the beft authority, it appears plainly, that no Tithe of Grofs-wood was due de jure at the Common Law; and that the demand thereof as fuch, by virtue of the conftitution made by the Archbifhop, was an encroachment. 2 Inft. 642: Stat. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3: Plowd. 470: Bro. Parech. pl 1: Cro. Jac. 100.

After the making of this ftatute, prohibitions were conftantly granted to fuits inftituted in Spiritual Courts for Tithes of Grofs-wood. But two queftions often arofe; what is Grofs-wood? and of what age Grofs-wood muft be before it is exempted from the payment of Tithe? 2 Inft. 643, 644, 645.

For the putting an end to thefe, it hath been long fettled, that by Grofs-wood is not meant fmall Wood, nor large Wood, but fuch Wood as is generally, or by the cuftom of a particular part of the country, ufed as timber; and that all fuch Wood, if of the age of 20 years, is exempt from the payment of Tithe. 2 Inft. 642, 643: Cro. Eliz. 1: 12 Mod. 524: Bunb. 127. Oaks, afhes, and elms, being univerfally ufed as timber, it has been always held, that fuch trees, if of the age of 20 years, are Grofs-wood. 2 Inft. 642. It hath been held, upon great deliberation, (notwithftanding what is laid down to the contrary in Plowd. 470,) that a hornbeam tree, if of the age of 20 years, is Grofs-wood, becaufe this is ufed in building and repairing. It has for the fame reafon been held, that an afpen-tree, of the age of 20 years, is Grofs-wood. 2 Inft. 643.

A difficulty often occurs in fixing the exact age of timber; to avoid this, in many places where Wood is plentiful, it is the cuftom to eftimate the fame by meafuring round the middle part of the tree; and if it is 24 inches in circumference, it is deemed 20 years growth; but if under that meafure, it is accounted Underwood. Shaw's Law of Tithes.

Tithes are not in the general due of beech, birch, hazel, willow, fallow, alder, maple, or white-thorn trees, or of any fruit-trees, of whatfoever age they are; becaufe thefe are not timber. Plowd 470: Cro. El. 477: 1 Cro. Jac. 190: 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 5. pl. 6: Brownl 94. But, if the Wood of any of thefe trees is ufed in a particular part of the country, where timber is fcarce, in building and repairing, no Tithe is due of fuch Wood, if of the age of 20 years, in that part of the country. Hob. 289: Brownl. 94. It is laid down in feveral old books, that if a timber-tree, after it is of the age of 20 years, decays fo as to be unfit to be ufed in building, no Tithe is due of the Wood of this tree, becaufe it was once privileged. 11 Rep. 48: Cro. Eliz. 477: Cro. Jac 100: 1 Rol. Abr. 640. pl. 2.

If the Wood of a coppice has been ufually felled for firing, fuch Wood fhall pay Tithe, although it ftand till it be 40 years of age. Sid 300: 1 Lev. 189.

If, when the Wood of coppice is felled, fome trees growing therein, which are of the age of 20 years, and have never been lopped, are lopped, and thefe loppings are promifcuoufly bound up in faggots with the coppice-wood, Tithe muft be paid of the whole; becaufe it would be very difficult to feparate the tithable Wood from that which is not fo, and the owner ought to fuffer for his folly in mixing them. Walton v. Tryon, 5 Bac. Abr.

If the Wood of a timber-tree is fold for firing, it was determined in one cafe, that although the tree was of the age of 20 years, it was liable to pay Tithe. Bunb. 99, Greenaway v. The Earl of Kent. The Reporter of this cafe mentions four others, in which the fame had been held; held, and says, that it was, in one of them, laid down, that the Wood of timber-trees is only exempted from the payment of Tithe, on the account of its being used in building.

The contrary doctrine, however, of the old books, was confirmed by a subsequent case in the Court of Chancery. A bill being brought for Tithe of the loppings of timber-trees, which had been sold fo[illegible] it was insisted that this Wood, which would [illegible] have been exempted from the payment of Tithes, was liable thereto, because it was sold to be used for firing; and the cases just now cited were relied upon. But the bill was dismissed; and by Hardwicke, Chancellor,— In the case in 1 Leon. 189, and Seld. 300, the Wood in question was coppice-wood, which had been usually felled for firing: and such Wood, of whatever age it is, is always tithable. The case of Greenaway and the Earl of Kent is quite a singular one, and is not Law; for in the case of Bebye and Huxley, Hil. 11 Geo. 1, it was agreed, that no Tithe is due of the Wood of a timber-tree, which has been once privileged from the payment of Tithe, although such Wood is sold to be used for firing. Walton v. Tryon, Mich. 25 Geo 2. 5 Bac. Abr. See farther, Bro. Dism pl 14: 11 Rep 4. Cro. El 4: Godb. 175; Roll. Abr 640. pl. 3. Held also in the said case of Walton v. Tryon, that wherever a tree has been lopped before it was of the age of 20 years, all future loppings, although ever so old, are liable to pay Tithe. If a tree, which was once privileged from paying Tithe, is felled, the germins that spring from the root of such tree are also privileged. 11 Rep. 48, Lyford's case. But, in the case already cited, it was said by Hardwicke, Chancellor, that all germins which spring from the roots of trees that hath been felled, are tithable. Walton v. Tryon.

IV. Such Tithes as arise from beasts or fowls which are fed with the fruits of the earth, are called mixed Tithes. 2 Inst 649: 1 Roll. Abr 635. Many things are, by the Ecclesiastical Law, liable to pay such Tithes, which by the Common Law are not. 2 Inst. 621. 4 Mod 344.

The design under this Head is to shew, of what mixed Tithes are due by the Common Law.

The same general observations as to custom, frauds, and exemption, apply here, as to the former kind of prædial Tithes.

The Tithes of colts, calves, lambs, kids, pigs, milk, cheese, agistment or pasturage, eggs, chickens, &c. are mixed Tithes. Snaw's Law of Tithes.

Tithes are in general due of the young of all beasts, except such as are feræ naturæ. But none are due of young hounds, apes, or the like, because such beasts are kept only for pleasure. Bro. Dism. pl 20 No Tithe is due of the young deer, for these are feræ naturæ. 2 Inst. 651. And, for the same reason, none is due, but by custom, of young conies. 1 Roll. Abr 635, C. pl. 3: Cro. Car. 339: 1 Ventr. 5.

The young of all birds and fowls, except such as are feræ naturæ, are in the general liable to pay Tithes; unless the eggs of such birds or fowls have before paid Tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl 6: 2 P. Wms. 463. But no Tithes are due either of the eggs or young of any birds or fowls which are kept only for pleasure. Bro. Dism. pl. 20. No Tithes are due of the eggs or young of partridges or pheasants, because these are feræ naturæ. Moor 599: 2 P. Wms. 463. If a man keeps pheasants, in an inclosed wood, whose wings are clipped, and from their eggs hatches and brings up young ones, no Tithe is due of these young pheasants, although none was paid for their eggs; because the old ones are not reclaimed, and would go out of the inclosure if their wings were not clipped. 1 Roll. Abr. 636. pl. 5.

It was heretofore held, that neither the eggs nor young of turkies are tithable, turkies being feræ naturæ. Moor 599. But it is now held that, as turkies are now as tame as hens or other poultry, Tithe is due of their eggs or young. 2 P. Wms. 463. No Tithe is due of such young pigeons as are spent in the house of the person who breeds them. 1 Roll. Abr. 644, Z pl. 4 pl. 6: 1 Ventr. 5: 12 Mod 77: 12 Mod. 47. But if any young pigeons are sold, Tithe is due to them. 1 Roll. Abr. 644, Z. pl. 5. pl. 6.

If a man pays Tithe of young lambs, at Marks-tide, and at Midsummer Assises shears the other nine parts of the lambs, Tithe is due of the wool, for although there are but two months between the time of paying Tithe-lambs which were not shorn, and the shearing of the residue, there is in this case a new increase. 1 Roll. Abr. 642, R. pl 7: Bunb 90. If a man shears his sheep about their necks at Michaelmas time, to preserve their fleeces from the brambles, no Tithe is due of this wool; for it appears that this, which is done before their wool is much grown, can never be for the sake of the wool, 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 16. If a man, after their wool is well grown, shear his sheep about their necks to preserve them from vermin, no Tithe is due of the wool. 1 Rol. Abr. 645, pl. 14.

If a man, a little before shearing time, cuts dirty locks of wool from his sheep to preserve them from vermin, no Tithe is due of such wool. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 17.

But, in any of these cases, if more wool than ought to have been cut off, is fraudulently cut off, Tithe must be paid of the wool 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl 15; 646. pl 17. Tithe is due of the wool of such sheep as are killed to be spent in the house. 1 Roll. Abr. 646 pl 18: Cent. Litt. Rep. 31.

Fish taken in a pond, or in any inclosed river, are liable to pay Tithe 1 Roll. Abr. 636 pl 4 pl. 6. pl 7. But no Tithe is due, except by custom, of fish taken in the sea, or in any open river, although they are taken by a person who has a several fishery, because such fish ar feræ naturæ Noy 108. 1 Roll Abr. 636. pl 4 pl. 6. pl 7: *Cro. But where the Tithe of their honey and wax has been paid, no Tithe is due of the bees. Cro Car. 404. V. The Subtraction or withholding of Tithes from the Parson or Vicar, whether the former be a Clergyman or a Lay Appropriator, is among the pecuniary causes cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Court.—But herein a distinction must be taken; for the Ecclesiastical Courts have no jurisdiction to try the right of Tithes, unless unless between spiritual persons; but in ordinary cases, between spiritual men and lay-men, are only to compel the payment of them, when the right is not disputed. 2 Inst. 364, 489, 490. By the statute, or rather writ, of Circumspecte agatis, it is declared, that the Court Christian shall not be prohibited from holding plea, "si rector petat versus parochianos oblationes et decimas debitas et consuetas." So that if any dispute arises whether such Tithes be due and accustomed, this cannot be determined in the Ecclesiastical Court, but before the King's Courts of the Common Law; as such question affects the temporal inheritance, and the determination must bind the real property. But where the right does not come into question, but only the fact, whether or no the Tithes allowed to be due are really subtracted or withdrawn, this is a transient personal injury, for which the remedy may properly be had in the Spiritual Court; viz. the recovery of the Tithes, or their equivalent. By stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13, it is enacted, that if any person shall carry off his predial Tithes, (viz. of corn, hay, or the like,) before the tenth part is duly set forth, or agreement is made with the proprietor, or shall willingly withdraw his Tithes of the same, or shall stop or hinder the proprietor of the Tithes, or his deputy, from viewing or carrying them away; such offender shall pay double the value of the Tithes, with costs, to be recovered before the Ecclesiastical Judge, according to the King's Ecclesiastical Laws. By a former clause of the same statute, the treble value of the Tithes, so subtracted or withheld, may be sued for in the Temporal Courts; which is equivalent to the double value to be sued for in the Ecclesiastical: For one may sue for and recover in the Ecclesiastical Courts, the Tithes themselves, or a recompence for them, by the ancient Law; to which the suit for the double value is superadded by the statute: But as no suit lay in the Temporal Courts for the subtraction of Tithes themselves, therefore the statute gave a treble forfeiture, if sued for there; in order to make the course of justice uniform, by giving the same reparation in one Court as in the other. 2 Inst. 250.

By stats. 27 H. 8. c. 20; 32 H. 8. c. 7; upon complaint by the Ecclesiastical Judge, of any contempt or misbehaviour by a defendant in any suit for Tithes, any Privy Counsellor, or any two Justices of the Peace, (or, in case of disobedience to a definitive sentence, any two Justices of the Peace,) may commit the party to prison, without bail or mainprise, till he enters into a recognizance, with sufficient sureties, to give due obedience to the process and sentence of the Court.

However, it now seldom happens that Tithes are sued for at all in the Spiritual Court; for if the defendant pleads any custom, modus, composition, or other matter whereby the right of tithing is called in question, this takes it out of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Judges; for the Law will not suffer the existence of such a right to be decided by the sentence of any single, much less an Ecclesiastical, Judge; without the verdict of a Jury. 3 Comm. c. 7.

The following statutes have also operated to abridge the power of the Ecclesiastical Court in this respect.

By stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 6. § 1, it is, for the more easy recovery of Small Tithes, where the same do not amount to above the yearly value of 40 s. from any one person, enacted, "that if any person shall fail in payment for 20 days after demand, the Parson may make complaint in writing to two Justices of the Peace, (neither being patron, nor interested,) who, after summoning the party, are to hear and determine the complaint, give a reasonable allowance for the Tithes, and costs not exceeding 10 s.

"If the person complained against insists on any prescription, composition, modus decimandi, or other title, delivers the same in writing to the Justices, and gives to the party complaining sufficient security to pay costs at Law, if the title is not allowed, the Justices are not to give judgment. The Justices have power to give costs, not exceeding 10 s., to the party prosecuted, if they find the complaint false and vexatious. The act not to extend to Tithes within the city of London, or in any other place where the same are settled by any act of Parliament. An appeal is given to the Sessions, and no proceedings or judgment, had by virtue of this act, to be removed or superseded, by any writ of certiorari, or other writ whatsoever, unless the title of such Tithes shall be in question."

By stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. § 4, where any Quaker shall refuse to pay, or compound for, his Great or Small Tithes, it shall be lawful for the two next Justices of the Peace of the same county, other than such Justice of the Peace as is patron of the church or chapel to which the Tithes belong, or any ways interested, upon complaint, to convene before them such Quaker, and to examine upon oath the truth of the complaint, and to ascertain what is due from such Quaker, and by order under their hands and seals to direct the payment thereof, so as the sum ordered do not exceed 10*l.*; and, upon refusal of the Quaker to pay, to levy the money. Any person aggrieved, may appeal to the next General Quarter Sessions.

No proceedings, or judgment, had by virtue of this act, shall be removed or superseded by any writ of certiorari, or other writ out of his Majesty's Courts at Westminster, or any other Court whatsoever, unless the title to such Tithes shall be in question.

The material point as to granting a certiorari is, whether the title to the Tithes is really in question or not. The general denial of a right to Tithes, by a Quaker, is not such a controverting the title, as shall enable him to have a certiorari. 1 Burr. 485.

By stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 6. § 2, the like remedy is given for the recovery of all Tithes and all other ecclesiastical dues from Quakers, as by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34, is given for Tithes to the value of 10*l.*

And such Justices of the Peace, upon complaint of any parson, vicar, curate, farmer or proprietor of such Tithes, or other person who ought to have, receive, or collect, any such Tithes or dues, may proceed in a similar manner as directed by the former act, touching Quakers.

The Tithes of Houses in London, which are regulated by stat. 37 H. 8. c. 12, may be recovered in the Court of Exchequer. Bennett v. Treppass, Bro. P. C.—Under stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 15, the Tithes of all the Parishes in London, injured by the great fire in 1666, are settled, to be levied by an equal rate; and, on non-payment, the Lord Mayor is to grant a warrant of distress for the same; or, on his refusal, the Lord Chancellor, or two Barons of the Exchequer, may grant such warrant; warrant; and all Courts, Ecclesiastical and Temporal, are ousted of their jurisdiction in this case, by this statute.—These Tithes are a real charge on the houses, payable though they are empty, and leviable on the goods of the succeeding occupier; and appeal lies from the Lord Mayor to the Lord Chancellor. 3 Atk. 639.

VI. Acorns, as they yearly increase, are liable to the payment of Tithes; but this is where they are gathered and sold, and reduced to a certain profit; not when they drop, and the hogs eat them. 2 Inst. 643: Hetl. 27. After-math, or After pasture, pays no Tithes, except by custom; being the remains of what was before tithed. 2 Inst. 652: 2 Danv. Abr. 589; title Dismes.

Agistment of Cattle upon pasture land, which hath paid no other Tithes that year, pays Tithe for the Cattle. And if a man breeds or buys barren unprofitable Cattle, and sells them, he shall pay for the Agistment; but if he depastures his land with his own Saddle Horses, he shall pay no Tithes. If ground is eat up with unprofitable Cattle of a man's own, or others, a tenth part of the yearly value of the rent of the land, i. e. the sum of 2*s. per* pound, is payable by the owner of the land, or his tenant; though the twentieth part is usually accepted. 1 Roll. Abr. 646: Hard. 184. See ante III.—Alder Trees pay Tithes, notwithstanding they are above 20 years growth, not being timber.—Ash is timber, and therefore, if these trees are above twenty years' growth, they are Tithe free.—Asp or Aspin Trees are exempted, if beyond that growth, in places where they are used for timber. 2 Cro. 199: 2 Inst. 643.

Bark of Trees is not tithable, if the Trees whereon produced were timber. 11 Rep. 49.—Barren Land, which is so of its own nature, pays no Tithe; where land is barren, and not manurable without some extraordinary charge, in respect of such charge, and for the advancement of husbandry, such Land being converted to tillage, shall, for the first seven years after the improvement, be discharged from Tithes; by stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. But the barren Land, during the seven years of improvement, shall pay such Small Tithes as have been accustomably paid before; and afterwards to pay the full Tithe according to the improvement. And if Land is over-run with bushes, or become unprofitable by bad husbandry, it cannot properly be called barren Land; for if it be grubbed, or ploughed and sowed, it immediately pays Tithes. 2 Inst. 656: Cro. Eliz. 475.—Beech Trees, where timber is scarce, and these trees are used for building, if above 20 years' growth to be timber, are privileged from Tithes, by stat. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3; though this tree is not naturally timber, for it is necessity makes it so. 2 Danv. Ab. 589. Bees are tithable for their Honey and Wax, by the tenth measure and tenth pound. It has been a question, whether the tenth Swarm can be demanded for Tithes of Bees, because Bees are feræ naturæ; but when the Bees are gathered into the hives, they are then under custody, and may pay Tithe by the Hive or Swarm; but the Tithe is generally paid in the tenth part of the Honey or Wax. 1 Roll. Abr. 651: 3 Cro. 404, 559.—Birch Wood is tithable, though of above 20 years' growth. 2 Inst. 643.—Bricks pay not Tithes, for they are made of parcel of the freehold, and are of the substance of the earth, not an annual increase, 1 Cro. 1.—Broom shall pay Tithe; but it may be discharged by custom, if burnt in the owner's house, or kept for husbandry. 2 Danv. Abr. 597.

Calves are tithable, and the tenth Calf is due to the Parson, when weaned; and he is not obliged to take it before; but if in one year a person hath not the number of ten Calves, the Parson is not entitled to Tithes in kind for that year, without a special custom for it; though he may take it in the next year, throwing both years together; and it is a good custom to pay one Calf in seven, where there hath been no more in one year; and where a man sells a Calf to pay the tenth of the value, or for the Parson to have the right shoulder, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 648: Raym. 277.

Cattle sold pay Tithe; but not Cattle kept for the plough or pail, which shall pay no Tithe for their pasture, by reason the Parson hath the benefit of the labour of Plough-Cattle in tilling the ground, by the Tithe of Corn, and Tithe Milk for those kept for the pail; yet if such Cattle bought are sold before used; or if, being past their labour, the Cows are barren, and afterwards fatted in order to sell, Tithes shall be paid for them; though if the owner kill and spend the Cattle in his own house, no Tithe is due for them, being for his provision, to support him in his labour about other affairs for which the Parson hath Tithes. Cattle feeding on large commons, where the bounds of the parish are not certainly known, shall pay Tithes to the Parson of the parish where the owner lives; and if fed in several parishes, and they continue above a month in each parish, Tithes shall be paid to the two Parsons proportionably. 1 Roll. Abr. 635, 646, 647: Hardr. 35: Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. § 3.—Chalk and Chalk-Pits are not tithable; nor is Clay or Coal, as they are part of the freehold, and not annual, to pay Tithes. 2 Inst. 651.—Cheese pays Tithe by custom, where Tithe is not paid for the Milk; but if the Milk pays a Tithe, the Cheese pays none; and it may be a good custom to pay the tenth Cheese made in such a month, for all Tithe Milk in that year. 1 Roll. Abr. 651. See Milk.—Chickens are not tithable, if Tithe is paid for the Eggs. 1 Roll. Abr. 642.—Colts pay Tithes in the same manner as Calves. Ibid.—Conies are tithable only by custom, for those that are sold, not for such as are spent in the house. 2 Danv. Abr. 583.—Corn pays a predial Tithe; it is tithed by the tenth cock, heap, or sheaf; which, if the owner do not set out, he may be sued in an action upon the stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. And if the Parishioner will not sow his land usually sown, the Parson may bring his action against him. When Tithe Corn is set forth, the Law gives the Parson a reasonable time to carry it away, and if he suffer the same to lie too long on the land, to the prejudice of the owner thereof, he may be liable to an action; but the Parson may not set out the Tithes himself, or take them away without leave. 1 Roll. Abr. 644: 1 Sid. 283: 2 Vent. 48: Ley 70.

Deer are not tithable, for they are feræ naturæ; though in parks, &c. they pay Tithes by custom. 2 Inst. 651.—Doves kept in a dove-house, if they are not spent in the owner's house, are tithable. 1 Vent. 5.

Eggs pay Tithes when Tithes are not paid for the young. 1 Roll. Abr. 642.—Elm trees, being timber, are discharged from the payment of Tithes, but not if under twenty years' growth. 2 Inst. 643.

Fallow Ground is not tithable for the pasture in that year in which it lies fallow, unless it remain beyond the course of husbandry; because it improves and renders the land more fertile by lying fresh. 1 Roll. Abr. 642.—Fenns being drained and made manurable, or converted into pasture, are subject to the payment of Tithes. 1 Roll. Rep. 354.—Fish taken in the sea, or common rivers, are tithable only by custom, and the Tithe is to be paid in money, and not the tenth fish; but fish in ponds and rivers inclosed, ought to be set forth as a Tithe in kind. 2 Danv. Abr. 583, 584.—Flax, every acre of flax or hemp sown shall pay yearly 5*s.* for Tithe, and no more. Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 16. A former act (3 & 4 W. & M. c. 3.) fixed the modus at 4*s.*—Forest Lands shall pay no Tithes while in the hands of the King, though such lands in the hands of a Subject shall pay Tithes; and if a forest shall be disafforested, and within a parish, it shall pay Tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 655: 3 Cro. 94.—Fowls, as hens, geese, ducks, are to pay Tithes, either in eggs or the young, according to custom, but not in both; So of Turkies it is now resolved, that Tithes are due of their eggs or young. 2 P. Wms. 463.—Fruit, apples, pears, plumbs, cherries, &c. pay Tithes in kind when gathered, and ought to be set out according to the statute. 2 Inst. 621.—Fruit Trees cut down and sold, are not tithable, if they have paid Tithe fruit that year before cut. Ibid. 652.—Furzes, if sold, pay Tithe, not if used for fuel in the house, or to make pens for sheep, &c. Wood's Inst. 166.

Gardens are tithable as lands, and therefore Tithes in kind are due for all herbs, plants, and seeds sowed in them; but money is generally paid by custom or agreement.—Grass mown is tithable by payment of the tenth cock, or according to custom; but for grass cut in swaths for the sustenance of plough cattle only, not made into hay, no Tithe is to be paid. Grass or corn, &c. when sold standing, the buyer shall pay the Tithes; and if sold after cut and severed, the seller must pay it. The parson is not obliged to take Tithe of grass the day it is cut, but may let it lie long enough to make it into hay, 1 Strange 245: 1 Roll. Abr. 644, 645. See post. Hay.

Hazle, Holly, and Maple Trees, &c. are regularly tithable, although of twenty years' growth. 2 Danv. Abr. 589.—Hay pays a predial Tithe; the tenth cock is to be set out and paid, after made into hay, by the custom of most places; and by custom generally, but not of common right, the parishioners shall make the grass cocks into hay for the parson's Tithe; but if they are not obliged to make the Tithe into hay, they may leave it in cocks, and the parson must make it, for which purpose he may come on the ground, &c. A prescription to measure out and pay the tenth acre, or part of grass standing, in lieu of all Tithe hay, may be good: And if meadow ground is so rich, that there are two crops of hay in one year, the parson, by special custom, may have Tithe of both. 1 Roll. Abr. 643, 647, 950.—Headlands are not tithable, if only large enough for turning the plough; but if larger, Tithe may be, and generally is, payable. 2 Inst. 653.—Hemp; see Flax.—Herbage of ground is tithable for barren cattle kept for sale, which yield no profit to the parson. Wood's Inst. 167.—Honey pays a Tithe, see Bees.—Hops are tithable, and the tenth part may be set out after they are picked. There are several ways of tithing Hops, viz. by the hills, pole, or pound; in some places they set forth the tenth pole for Tithes; but Lord Chief Justice Rolle tells us, they ought not to be tithed before dried. 1 Roll. Abr. 644. It is now settled, on appeal to the House of Lords, that Hops ought to be picked and gathered from the lines before they are tithable: And then measured in baskets, before being dried, and every tenth basket set out for the Tithes. Walton v. Tyers, Bro. P. C.—Horses kept to sell, and afterwards sold, Tithes shall be paid for their pasture; though not where horses are kept for work and labour. Hut. 77.—Houses for dwelling are not properly tithable: A modus may be paid for houses in lieu of Tithes of the land upon which they are built; and a great many cities and boroughs have a custom to pay a modus for their houses: as it may be reasonably supposed that it was usual to pay so much for the land, before the houses were erected on it. 11 Rep. 16: 2 Inst. 659. See title London (Tithes); and ante V.

Kids pay a Tithe as calves, the tenth is due to the parson. Wood 167.

Lambs are tithable in like manner as calves; but if they are yeaned in one parish, and do not tarry there thirty days, no Tithe is due to the parson of that place: If there be a custom that the parishioners, having six lambs or under, shall pay so much for every lamb; and if he have above that number then to pay the seventh, it is good. 3 Cro. 403.—Lead may pay Tithe by custom, as it does in some counties; but it doth not without it. 2 Inst. 651.—By custom only, Lime and Lime-kilns are tithable. 1 Rol Abr. 642.

Madder is now tithable in kind: It was liable, for 28 years only, to a modus of 5*s.* but the statutes for that purpose are now expired. Stats. 31 Geo. 2. c. 12: 5 Geo. 3. c. 18.—Mast of oak and beech pays Tithes as under Acorns.—Milk is tithable when no Tithes are paid for cheese, all the year round, except custom over-rules; and it is payable by every tenth meal, not tenth quart or part of every meal; and it was formerly held, that it was to be brought to the house of the parson, &c. in which particular this Tithe differs from all others, which must be fetched by the receiver. But this is only where there is a special custom; and it seems now decided that the Tithe of milk is by setting out every tenth morning and evening's meal, in clean vessels, belonging to the owner of the milk, and leaving the same therein till the vessels are again wanted by the owner: And if not fetched away by the parson, prior to that time, the owner is at liberty to throw it on the ground; and in the intermediate time, the owner is not answerable for any accident that may happen to it. Dr. Bosworth v. Limbrick, Bro. P. C. In some places they pay Tithe cheese for milk, and in others some small rate, according to custom. Cro. Eliz. 609: 2 Danv. Abr. 596.—Mills, as there are several sorts of them, the Tithes are different; the Tithes of corn-mills driven by wind or water, have been paid in kind, every tenth toll-dish of corn to the parson of the parish wherein the mills are standing: But ancient corn-mills are Tithe-free, being suggested that they are very ancient, and never paid Tithes, &c. And it is questioned whether Tithe is due for any corn-mills, unless by custom, because the corn hath before paid Tithe; and it seems rather a personal Tithe where due: The Tithes of fulling-mills, paper-mills, powder-mills, &c. are personal, charged in respect to the labour of men, by custom only; and these are regarded more as engines of several trades than as mills. 1 Roll. Abr. 656: 2 Inst. 621. It is now settled that Tithes of all mills are personal Tithes; and only a tenth part of the clear profits, deducting all charges and expences, is payable as Tithe, Newte v. Chamberlain, Bro. P.C.; and see 2 P. Wms. 463.—MINES pay no Tithes but by custom, being of the substance of the earth, and not annually increasing. 2 Inst. 651.

NURSERIES OF TREES shall pay Tithes, if the owner dig them up and makes profit of them by selling. 2 Danv. Abr. 585: 1 Co. 526: 2 Jon. 416: Godb. 431: Hardr. 380.

OAK TREES are privileged as timber from the payment of Tithes by the statute of Silva Cædua, 45 Edw. 3. c. 3; if of or above twenty years' growth; and if Oaks are under that age, it is the same when they are apt for timber. Moor 541. See ante III.—OFFERINGS, &c. are in the nature of personal Tithes. 2 Inst. 659, 661. See titles Offerings; Oblations.—ORCHARDS pay Tithes both for the fruit they produce, and the grass or grain, if any be sown or cut therein. 2 Inst. 652.

PARKS are tithable by custom, for the deer and the herbage; and when disparked and converted into tillage they shall pay Tithes in kind: The Tithes of Parks may be in part certain, and part casual; and 2*s.* a-year, and a shoulder of every third deer, hath been paid as Tithe for a Park. 1 Roll. Rep. 176: Hob. 37, 40.—PARTRIDGES and PHEASANTS, &c. as they are feræ naturæ, yield no Tithes of eggs or young. 1 Roll. Abr. 636.—PEASE, if gathered for sale, or to feed hogs, pay Tithes; but not green Pease spent in the house. 1 Roll. Abr. 647. Eating Pease, sown in fields, and sold green for sale, are a small Tithe. Sims v. Bennett and another. Bro. P. C.—PIGEONS ought to pay Tithes when sold, and this holds good if they lodge in holes about an house, as well as in a dove-house; and by custom, if spent in the house, they may be tithable, though not of common right. 2 Danv. Abr. 583, 597.—PIGS are tithable, as calves. Ibid.—POLLARD TREES, such as are usually lopped, and distinguished from timber-trees, pay Tithes. Plowd. 470.

QUARRIES of stone, &c. are not subject to pay Tithes; because they are part of the inheritance, and Tithes ought to be collateral to the land, and distinct from it. 1 Roll. 644.

RABBITS; See Conies.—RAKINGS OF CORN are not tithable, for they are left for the poor, and are properly the scatterings of the corn whereof the Tithes have been paid, left after the cocks set out are taken away. Cro. Eliz. 660. See ante III. (Corn).

SAFFRON pays a predial and small Tithe. 1 Cro. 467.—SALT is not tithable, but by custom only. 1 Bunb. 10.—SHEEP, a Tithe is paid for, of lambs and wool, and therefore they pay no Tithe for their feeding. But see ante III. Agistment. If Sheep are in the parish all the year, they are to pay Tithe wool to the Parson; but if removed from one parish to another, (without fraud,) the Parson of each parish to have Tithe pro rata, where they remain thirty days in a parish; and if they are fed in one parish, and brought into another to be shorn, the same tithing is to be observed. 1 Roll. Abr. 642, 647: 3 Cro. 237. It seems now that the rule is, that Tithe of the wool shall be paid where the Sheep are shorn; and Agistment Tithe in other parishes where they have been depastured. Shaw's Law of Tithes.—STUBBLE pays no Tithe under aftermath. 2 Inst. 652.

TARES, vetches, &c. are tithable; but if they are cut down green, and given to the cattle of the plough, where there is not a sufficient pasture in the parish, no Tithe shall be paid for them. 1 Cro. 139.—TILES are no yearly increase, and not tithable. 2 Inst. 651.—TIMBER TREES, such as oaks, ashes, and elms, and in some places beech, &c. above the age of twenty years, were discharged of Tithes by the Common Law, before the statute 45 Ed. 3. c. 3; and the reason of it is, because such trees are employed to build houses, and houses when built are not only fixed to, but part of the freehold; loppings of Timber trees above twenty years' growth, pay no Tithes, for the branch is privileged as well as the body of the tree; and the roots of such trees are exempted as parcel of the inheritance. Trees cut for plough-bote, cart-bote, &c. shall not pay Tithes, although they are no Timber; but all trees not fit for Timber, and not put to those uses, pay Tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 650: Cro. Eliz. 477, 499. See ante III.—TURFS used for fuel are part of the soil, and Tithe-free. 2 Inst. 651.—TURNIPS, are reckoned among small predial Tithes; and the Tithes of them shall be paid as often as they are sown, though twice or more on the same land and in the same year. So if eaten off the land by barren cattle. Bunb. 10. See III. Agistment.

UNDERWOOD is tithable, though the Tithe is not of annual payment; and is set out while standing, by the tenth acre, pole, or perch; or when cut down, by tenth faggot or billet, as custom directs; and if he that fells the wood doth not set out the Tithe, he is liable to the treble damages by stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. But if the Underwood is used for firing in a house of husbandry, or to burn brick to repair the house, or for hedging and fencing the lands in the same parish, it may be discharged from Tithe. 2 Inst. 642, 643, 652: Hob. 250: 2 Danv. Abr. 597.

WARRENS where tithable, see Conies.—WASTE GROUND, whereon cattle feed, is liable to the payment of Tithes. 2 Danv. Abr.—WOAD growing in the nature of an herb is a predial and small Tithe. Hutt. 77: Cro. Car. 28:—WOOD is generally esteemed to be a great Tithe. If Wood grounds have likewise timber-trees grown on them, and consist for the most part of such trees, the timber-trees shall privilege the other Wood; but if the Wood is the greatest part, then it must pay Tithes for the whole. 13 Rep. 13. If Wood be cut to make hop-poles, where the Parson hath Tithe hops, no Tithe shall be paid for it. Hughes's Abr. 689. See ante III.—WOOL is a mixed small Tithe, paid when clipped; one fleece in ten, or in some places one in seven, is given to the Parson. If there is under ten pounds of Wool at the shearing, a reasonable consideration shall be paid, because the Tithes are due of common right; and if less than ten fleeces, they shall be divided into ten parts, or an allowance be otherwise made. All sheep killed, and sheep which die, pay Tithe Wool; and neck Wool cut off for the benefit of the Wool, but not if it is to preferve the sheep from vermin, &c. Also the Wool of lambs shorn at Midsummer, though Tithe was paid for the lambs at Mark-tide, is tithable. 1 Roll. Abr. 646, 647: 2 Inst. 652. See Sheep, and ante IV.

VII. Lands, and their occupiers, may be exempted or discharged from the payment of Tithes, either in part or totally, first, by a real composition; or, secondly, by custom or prescription.

First; A real composition is when an agreement is made between the owner of the lands, and the Parson or vicar, with the consent of the Ordinary and the Patron, that such lands shall for the future be discharged from payment of Tithes, by reason of some land or other real recompence given to the Parson, in lieu and satisfaction thereof. 4 Inst. 490: Regist. 38: 13 Rep. 40. This was permitted by Law, because it was supposed that the Clergy would be no losers by such composition; since the consent of the Ordinary, whose duty it is to take care of the church in general, and of the Patron, whose interest it is protect that particular church, were both made necessary to render the composition effectual: and hence have arisen all such compositions as exist at this day by force of the Common Law. But, experience shewing that even this caution was ineffectual, and the possessions of the Church being, by this and other means, every day diminished, the disabling statute, 13 Eliz. c. 10, was made; which prevents, among other spiritual persons, all parsons and vicars from making any conveyances of the estates of their churches, other than for three lives or twenty-one years. So that now, by virtue of this statute, no real composition made since the 13 Eliz. is good for any longer term than three lives, or twenty-one years, though made by consent of the Patron and Ordinary; nor is it binding on the succeeding Incumbent, though confirmed by a decree in Chancery. 2 Woodd. 107. This has indeed effectually demolished this kind of traffic; such compositions being now rarely heard of, unless by authority of Parliament. 2 Comm. c. 3.

With regard to compositions entered into between the Tithe-owner and any parishioner, for the latter to retain the Tithe of his own estate, it has been decided, that they are analogous to leases from year to year between landlord and tenant; and if they are paid without or beyond an agreement for a specific time, they cannot be put an end to without six months' notice before the time of payment, and the parishioner may avail himself of the defect of notice, at the same time that he controverts the right of the Incumbent to receive Tithe in kind: an objection not permitted to a tenant, who denies the right of the landlord. See title Rent. 2 Bro. C. R. 161.

Secondly, A discharge by custom or prescription, is where, time out of mind, such persons or such lands have been, either partially or totally, discharged from the payment of Tithes. And this immemorial usage is binding upon all parties; as it is in its nature an evidence of universal consent and acquiescence, and with reason supposes a real composition to have been formerly made. This custom or prescription is either de modo decimandi, or de non decimando.

A Modus decimandi, commonly called by the simple name of a Modus only, is where there is by custom a particular manner of tithing allowed, different from the general law of taking Tithes in kind, which are the actual tenth part of the annual increase. This is sometimes a pecuniary compensation, as two-pence an acre for the Tithe of land: sometimes it is a compensation in work and labour, as that the parson shall have only the twelfth cock of hay, and not the tenth, in consideration of the owner's making it for him; sometimes, in lieu of a large quantity of crude or imperfect Tithe, the parson shall have a less quantity, when arrived to greater maturity, as a couple of fowls in lieu of Tithe eggs; and the like. Any means, in short, whereby the general law of tithing is altered, and a new method of taking them is introduced, is called a modus decimandi, or special manner of tithing.

To make a good and sufficient Modus, the following rules must be observed. 1. It must be certain and invariable, for payment of different sums will prove it to be no modus, that is, no original real composition; because that must have been one and the same, from its first original to the present time. 1 Keb. 602. 2. The thing given, in lieu of Tithes, must be beneficial to the parson, and not for the emolument of third persons only: thus a modus, to repair the church in lieu of Tithes, is not good, because that is an advantage to the parish only; but to repair the chancel is a good modus, for that is an advantage to the parson. 1 Roll. Abr. 649. 3. It must be something different from the thing compounded for; one load of hay, in lieu of all Tithe hay, is no good modus: for no parson would bonâ fide make a composition to receive less than his due in the same species of Tithe: and therefore the Law will not suppose it possible for such composition to have existed. 1 Lev. 179. 4. One cannot be discharged from payment of one species of Tithe, by paying a modus for another. Thus a modus of 1*d.* for every milch cow will discharge the Tithe of milch kine, but not of barren cattle: for Tithe is, of common right, due for both; and therefore a modus for one, shall never be a discharge for the other. Cro. Eliz. 446: Salk. 657. 5. The recompence must be in its nature as durable as the Tithes discharged by it; that is, an inheritance certain: and therefore a modus that every inhabitant of a house shall pay 4*d.* a-year, in lieu of the owner's Tithes, is no good modus; for possibly the house may not be inhabited, and then the recompence will be lost. 2 P. Wms. 462. 6 The modus must not be too large, which is called a rank modus; as if the real value of the Tithes be 60*l.* per ann. and a modus is suggested of 40*l.* this modus will not be established; though one of 40*s.* might have been valid. 11 Mod. 60. Indeed, properly speaking, the doctrine of rankness in a modus, is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, and not a rule of Law. Pyke v. Dowling. Hil 19 Geo. 3. C B. For, in these cases of prescriptive or customary modus's, it is supposed that an original real composition was anciently made; which being lost by length of time, the immemorial usage is admitted as evidence that it once did exist, and that from thence such usage was derived. Now time of memory hath been long ago ascertained by the Law to commence from the beginning of the reign of Richard the First; and any custom may be destroyed by evidence of its non-existence in any part of the long period from that time to the present; wherefore, as this real composition is supposed to have been an an equitable contract, or the full value of the Tithes, at the time of making it, if the modus set up is so rank and large, as that it beyond dispute exceeds the value of the Tithes in the time of Richard the First, this modus is (in point of evidence) felo de se, and destroys itself. For, as it would be destroyed by any direct evidence to prove its non-existence at any time since that æra, so also it is destroyed by carrying in itself this internal evidence of a much later original.

To constitute a good Modus, it seems necessary that it should be such as would have been a certain, fair, and reasonable equivalent or composition for the Tithes in kind, before the year 1189; and therefore no modus for hops, turkies, or other things introduced into England, since that time, can be good. Bunb. 307. The question of rankness, or rather modus or no modus, is a question of fact which Courts of Equity will send to a Jury; unless the grossness of the modus is so obvious as to preclude the necessity of it. 2 Bro. C. R. 163: 1 Black. Rep. 420.

A Prescription de non decimando is a claim to be entirely discharged of Tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. Thus the King by his prerogative is discharged from all Tithes. Cro. Eliz. 511. So a Vicar shall pay no Tithes to the Rector, nor the Rector to the Vicar, for ecclesia decimas non solvit ecclesiæ. Cro. Eliz. 479, 511: Sav. 3: Moor 910. But these personal privileges (not arising from or being annexed to the land) are personally confined to both the King and the Clergy; for their tenant or lessee shall pay Tithes, though in their own occupation their lands are not generally tithable. And, generally speaking, it is an established rule, that in lay hands, modus de non decimando non valet. But it seems that the King's tenant at will shall not pay Tithes. 1 Woodd. 100.

Spiritual persons or corporations, as monasteries, abbots, bishops, and the like, were always capable of having their lands totally discharged of Tithes, by various ways; Hob. 309: Cro Jac. 308; As, 1. By real composition; 2. By the Pope's bull of exemption; 3. By unity of possession; as when the rectory of a parish, and lands in the same parish, both belonged to a religious house, those lands were discharged of Tithes by this unity of possession; 4. By prescription; having never been liable to Tithes, by being always in spiritual hands; 5. By virtue of their order; as the Knights Templars, Cistercians, and others, whose lands were privileged by the Pope with a discharge of Tithes. 2 Rep. 44: Seld. Tith. c. 13. § 2. Though, upon the dissolution of the greater abbeys by Henry VIII., most of these exemptions from Tithes would have fallen with them, and the lands become tithable again; had they not been supported and upheld by the stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 13; which enacts, that all persons who should come to the possession of the lands of any abbey then dissolved, should hold them free and discharged of Tithes, in as large and ample a manner as the abbeys themselves formerly held them. This provision is peculiar to this statute, and therefore all the lands belonging to the lesser monasteries, dissolved by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 28, are now liable to pay Tithe. And from this original have sprung all the lands, which, being in lay hands, do at present claim to be Tithe-free; for if a man can shew his lands to have been such abbey lands, and also immemorially discharged of Tithes by any of the means before-mentioned, this is now a good prescription de non decimando. But he must shew both these requisites; for abbey lands, without a special ground of discharge, are not discharged of course; neither will any prescription de non decimando avail in total discharge of Tithes, unless it relates to such abbey lands. 2 Comm. c. 3.

For more learning on this subject, see 5 Bac. Abr.: Vin. Abr. title Disines; and Shaw's Law of Tithes.

TITHING, Tithinga, from the Sax. Teothunge, Decuria.] Was, in its first appointment, the number or company of ten men with their families, held together in a society, all being bound for the peaceable behaviour of each other: And of these companies there was one chief person who was called Teothung-man, at this day Tithing-man; but the old discipline of Tithings is long since left off. In the Saxon times, for the better conservation of the peace, and more easy administration of justice, every hundred was divided into ten districts or Tithings; and, within every Tithing, the Tithing-men were to examine and determine all lesser causes between villagers and neighbours; but to refer greater matters to the then superior Courts, which had a jurisdiction over the whole Hundred. Paroch. Antiq. 633. The subdivision of Hundreds into Tithings, seems to be most peculiarly the invention of King Alfred. See 1 Comm. Introd.

TITHING-MEN, Are now a kind of petty Constables, elected by parishes, and sworn in their offices in the Court-leet, and sometimes by Justices of Peace, &c. There is frequently a Tithing-man in the same town with a Constable, who is as it were a deputy to execute the office in the Constable's absence; but there are some things which a Constable has power to do, that Tithing-men and Headboroughs cannot intermeddle with. Dalt. 3. When there is no Constable of a parish, the office and authority of a Tithing-man seems to be the same under another name. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. See title Constable.

TITHING-PENNY; See Teding-penny.

TITLE, Titulus.] Is when a man hath lawful cause of entry into lands whereof another is seised; and it signifies also the means whereby a man comes to lands or tenements, as by feoffment, fine, last will and testament, &c. The word Title includeth a right, but is the more general word: Every right is a Title, though every Title is not such a right for which an action lies; so that titulus est, justa causa possidendi quod nostrum est, and is the means of holding the lands. Co. Litt. 345. Blackstone defines it to be "The means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property." 2 Comm. c. 13.

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete Title to Lands and Tenements: As, 1st, The lowest and most imperfect degree of Title consists in the mere naked Possession, or actual Occupation of the Estate, without any apparent right, or any shadow or pretence of right, to hold and continue such possession; which naked possession, by length of time, and negligence of him who hath the right, may by degrees ripen into a perfect and indefeasible Title; and, at all events, without actual possession, no Title can be completely good. 2d, The next step to a good and perfect Title is a Right of Possession; which is either actual or apparent; and which may reside in one man, while the actual possession possession is in another. This actual possession may be recovered by him who has the right of possession, if sued for within a competent time; otherwise he will have nothing left in him, but, 3dly, The mere Right of Property, without even Possession, or the Right of Possession.

Thus, if a disseisor turns me out of Possession of my lands, he thereby gains a mere naked Possession, and I still retain the Right of Possession and the Right of Property. If the disseisor dies, and the lands descend to his son, the son gains an apparent right of Possession, but I still retain the actual right, both of Possession and Property. If I acquiesce for 30 years, without bringing any action to recover the Possession of the lands, the son gains the actual Right of Possession, and I retain nothing but the mere right of Property; and even this right of Property will fail, or at least be without a remedy, unless I pursue it within the space of 60 years. So also if the father be Tenant in Tail, and aliens the Estate-Tail to a stranger in Fee, the alienee thereby gains the Right of Possession, and the son hath only the mere Right, or Right of Property. And hence it will follow, that one man may have the Possession, another the Right of Possession, and a third the Right of Property. For if Tenant in Tail enfeoffs A. in Fee-simple, and dies; and B. disseises A.; now B. will have the Possession, A. the Right of Possession, and the Issue in Tail the Right of Property. A. may recover the Possession against B., and afterwards the Issue in Tail may evict A., and unite in himself the Possession, the Right of Possession, and also the Right of Property; in which union consists a complete Title to lands, tenements, and hereditaments; for it is an ancient maxim of the Law, that no Title is completely good, unless the Right of Possession be joined with the Right of Property; which Right is then denominated a double Right, jus duplicatum, or droit droit. Mirr. l. 2. c. 27: 1 Inst. 266: Bract. l. 5. tr. 3. c. 5. And when, to this double Right, the actual Possession is also united; when there is, according to the expression of Fleta, (l. 3. c. 15. § 5.) juris et seisinæ conjunctio, then, and then only, is the Title completely legal. See 2 Comm. c. 13.

Title is generally applied to signify the Right to Land and Real Effects; as Property is to signify that to mere Personal Estate. See title Property; and further, this Dictionary, titles Estate; Limitation of Actions; Disseisin; Release, &c.

Title to Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, is said to accrue either by Descent or Purchase. Purchase, in this sense, includes every mode of acquiring Lands, except by Descent. See this Dict. title Purchase.

As to Title by Descent, see this Dict. under that Title.

Title by Purchase may be either by Escheat; Occupancy; Prescription; Forfeiture; or Alienation; which latter may be either by Deed, Matter of Record, special Custom, or Devise.

Property in, or Title to, Things Personal, may arise either by Occupancy; Prerogative; and Forfeiture; by Custom; by Succession; Marriage; Judgment; Gift; Grant; Contract: Bankruptcy; Will; or Administration. See the several Titles in this Dictionary; as also Title Executor, and other apposite Titles; and 2 Comm. per tot.

A man may plead in trespass, &c. without particularly setting forth his Title, where his justification is collateral to the Title of the land; so if damages are to be recovered, and the Title of the land is not in question; and in actions on real contracts, where the plaintiff shews enough to entitle him to the action, &c. 2 Mod. 70: 1 Roll. Rep. 13: Cro. Car. 571: 3 Nels. Abr. 325. But in trespass for cutting corn on lands, the party must set forth the Title which he hath to the corn, or on demurrer it will be judged ill; for the shewing that he is possessed thereof, is not sufficient without a Title, because the property shall be intended to be in the owner of the soil. 2 Sand. 401: 3 Salk. 361. See title Trespass.

When a person will recover any thing from another, he must generally make out and prove a better Title than the other hath, or it will not be enough to destroy his Title, &c. Hob. 103. It is not allowed for the party to forsake his own Title, and fly upon the other's; for he must recover by his own strength, not the other's weakness. Ibid. 104. If by the record it appears that the plaintiff in the cause hath no Title, he shall not have judgment. Lutw. 1631. The Law will not permit Titles and things in entry, &c. to be granted over; and the buying or selling any pretended rights, or Titles, to lands, is prohibited by statute as Maintenance. See that title, and further, 20 Vin. Abr. 278—288.

TITLES OF CLERGYMEN, Signify some certain place where they may exercise their functions. A Title, in this sense, is the church to which a priest was ordained there constantly to reside: And there are many reasons why a church is called Titulus; one is because in former days the name of the Saint to whom the church is dedicated was engraved on the porch, as a sign that the Saint had a title to that church; from whence the church itself was afterwards denominated titulus. Concil. London, Anno 1025. Anciently a Title of Clergy was no more than entering their names in the Bishop's roll, and then they had not only authority to assist in the ministerial function, but had a right to the share of the common stock or treasury of the church; but since, a Title is an assurance of being preferred to some ecclesiastical benefice, &c. See this Dictionary, titles Curate; Parson.

TITLE OF ENTRY, Is when one seised of land in fee, makes a feoffment thereof on condition, and the condition is broken; after which the feoffor hath Title to enter into the land, and may do so at his pleasure, and by his Entry the freehold shall be said to be in him presently. And it is called Title of Entry, because he cannot have a Writ of Right against his feoffee upon condition, for his right was out of him by the feoffment, which cannot be reduced into Entry; and the Entry must be for the breach of the condition. Cowell. TOBACCO, Is not to be planted in England, on pain of forfeiting 40*s*. for every rod of ground thus planted; but this shall not extend to hinder the planting of Tobacco in physic gardens. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 34. Justices tices of Peace have power to issue warrants to constables, to search after and examine whether any Tobacco be sown or planted, and to destroy the same; which they are to do under penalties, &c. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 26, continued by stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 11. The importation and exportation of Tobacco is liable to the regulations of the Navigation Acts. See that title. A duty is payable thereon on importation, under the management of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise; and the manufacture is subject to the control of the Commissioners and Officers of Excise; every manufacturer taking out a licence; the licence being charged according to the quantity manufactured, from 20,000 lb. weight to 150,000, at from 2*l.* to 20*l.* Dealers also take out licences. Various provisions, by many statutes, are made to enforce the above, and other regulations, to avoid adulteration in the manufacture, by mixing walnut-tree leaves, or other leaves, with Tobacco. Under stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 46, this incurred a penalty of 5*s.* per lb.; but under stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 68. § 84, the goods are forfeited, and a penalty of 200*l.* is also imposed. By stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 35, so much of former acts as prohibits the growth of Tobacco in Ireland is repealed, but Tobacco raised there is to be exported thence to England only.

TOD OF WOOL, Twenty-eight pounds, or two stone; mentioned in stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 32.

TOFT, Toftum.] A messuage; or rather a place or piece of ground where an house formerly stood, but is decayed or casually burnt, and not re-edified. It is a word much used in fines, wherein we often read toftum and croftum, &c. West. Symb. par. 2.

TOLL, or To Toll, from Lat. tollere.] To bar, defeat, or take away; as to toll the entry, i. e. to deny or take away the right of entry. Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9. See title Entry.

TOLL, Tolnetum, vel Theolonium.] A Saxon word, signifying properly a payment in towns, markets, and fairs, for goods and cattle bought and sold. It is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon sale of things tollable within the same. 2 Inst. 220.

The word is used for a liberty as well to take, as to be free from Toll; of which freedom from Toll the City of Coventry boasts an ancient charter granted by Leofrick Earl of the Mercians, in the time of King Edward the Confessor, who, at the importunity of Godiva, his virtuous lady, granted this freedom to that City.

By the ancient law of this land, the buyers of corn or cattle in fairs or markets ought to pay Toll to the Lord of the market, in testimony of the contract there lawfully made; for Toll was first invented that contracts in markets should be openly made before witnesses; and privy contracts were held unlawful.

But the King shall pay no Toll for any of his goods; and a man may be discharged from the payment of Toll by the King's grant.

Also tenants in ancient demesne are discharged of Toll throughout the kingdom, for things which arise out of their lands, or bought for manurance thereof, &c. not for merchandizes. Horn's Mirr. lib. 1: 2 Inst. 221: 2 Roll. Abr. 198.

Toll doth not of common right belong to a fair; though it hath been held, that some Toll is due of common right, as appears from the immunities of several persons not to pay Toll; which proves that, if it was not for those privileges, they ought to pay Toll of common right; therefore where the King grants a market, Toll is due, although it is not expressed in the grant what Toll is to be paid; and this from the necessity of it, because the property of things sold in a market is not altered without paying Toll. Palm. 76: 2 Lutw. 1377. But it is said, that Toll is not incident of common right to a Fair. If the King grants to a man a Fair or Market, and grants no Toll, the patentee shall have no Toll; for Toll being a matter of private right for the benefit of the Lord, is not incident to a Fair or Market, as a Court of Piepowder is, which is for the benefit of the Public and advancement of justice, &c. Such a Fair or Market is free from Toll; and, after the grant made, the King cannot grant a Toll to such free Fair or Market, without some proportionable benefit to the Subject. And if the Toll granted with the Fair or Market be outrageous, the grant of the Toll is void; and the same is a free Market, &c. 2 Inst. 220: Cro. Eliz. 559. And see 1 Wils. 109; and this Dict. titles Fairs; Markets.

When the King grants a Fair, he may likewise grant that Toll shall be paid, though it be a charge upon the Subjects, but then it must be of a very small sum. Toll is to be reasonable, for the King cannot grant a burdensome Toll; and one may have Toll by prescription for some reasonable cause, but such a prescription to charge the Subject with a duty of Toll, must import a benefit or recompence for it, or some reason must be shewn why it is claimed. Cro. Eliz. 559; 3 Lev. 424: 2 Mod. 143: 4 Mod. 323. The Toll in Fairs is generally taken upon the sale of Cattle, as Horses, &c.; but, in the Markets, for Grain only; and the Lord may seize until satisfaction is made him. It is always to be paid by the Buyer, unless there be a custom to the contrary; and nothing is tollable before the sale, except it be by custom time out of mind; which custom none can challenge that claim the Fair or Market by grant since the reign of King Richard II.; so that it is better to have a Market or Fair by prescription, than grant. 2 Inst. 220, 221.

At this day there is not any one certain Toll to be taken in Markets; but if that which is taken be unreasonable, it is punishable by the stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 31. And what shall be deemed reasonable, is to be determined by the Judges of the Law, when it comes judicially before them. Toll may be said to be unreasonable and outrageous, when a reasonable Toll is due, and excessive Toll is taken; or when no Toll is due, and Toll is unjustly usurped, &c. 2 Inst. 222. If excessive Toll be taken in a Market Town by the Lord's consent, the Franchise shall be seized; and if by other Officers, they shall pay double damages, and suffer imprisonment, &c. Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 31.

Owners of Markets and Fairs are to appoint Toll-takers, where Toll is to be taken, under penalties. Stat.

Stat. 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 7. And he that hath the Toll, or profit of the Market where no Toll is, ought to provide a lawful measure of brass; and chain it in the public Market-place, or shall forfeit 5 l. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 8.

The remedy for taking Toll where none is due, or for taking excessive Toll, is by action of trespass, or an action on the case; and, in some cases, by indictment. See title Extortion. Where the party is exempt from Toll, he may have his remedy on the ancient writ De essendo quietum de Theolonio.

It was finally determined in the House of Peers, after a long contest, that this writ De essendo quietum, &c. is not merely prohibitory, but remedial; on which the parties may plead to issue on a question of right. And where it is directed to a Corporation, the Corporation cannot be attached for contempt, in their corporate capacity, for not returning it; but an Attachment, in the nature of a Cone, is the proper remedy to compel them to appear. The great question, as to the exemption of the Citizens of London from Toll, was also determined, viz. that Freemen of the city of London have a right to be exempt from the payment of all Tolls and Port-duties throughout England, (except the prizes of Wines,) in whatever place they reside; and though they have obtained their freedom by purchase. 1 H. Blac. Rep. C. B. 206. This judgment of the Court of Common Pleas was reversed by the Court of K. B. (see 4 Term Rep. 130;) but affirmed in Parliament, May 2, 1796. London (Corporation) v. King's Lynn (Corp.)

PORT-TOLL. A prescription to have Port-Toll for all Toll coming into a man's Port, may be good. 2 Lev. 96: 2 Lut. 1519. The liberty of bringing goods into a Port for safety, implying a consideration in itself. 3 Lev. 37. Prescription of Toll for goods landed in a manor, or to have Port-Toll for all goods coming into Port, is a good prescription; but not to have Toll of goods brought into a river, &c. 2 Lev. 96, 97. Toll may be appurtenant to a manor. 2 Mod. 144.

TOLL-TRAVERS, or TRAVERSE, Is where one claimeth to have Toll for every beast driven across his ground; for which a man may prescribe, and distrain for it in via Regia. Cro. Eliz. 710. They who claim these Tolls by grant, ought to aver the certainty of the sum mentioned in the grant, &c. Palm. 76. Toll-travers being to pass a nearer way, he that has it is to repair the way, because he receives money for it. 2 Lil. Abr. 585.

TOLL-TRAVERSE, Is properly when a man pays certain Toll for passing over the soil of another man in a way not a high street. 22 Ass. 58. And for this Toll a man may prescribe; 2 Rol. Abr. 522: Cro. Eliz. 710: Moor 574.

THOROUGH-TOLL, Is when a town prescribes to have Toll for such a number of Beasts, or for every Beast that goeth through their town; or over a Bridge or Ferry maintained at their cost; which is reasonable, though it be for passing through the King's highway, where every man may lawfully go, as it is for the ease of travellers that go that way. Terms de Ley 561, 562. Persons may have this Toll by prescription or grant; but it must be for a reasonable cause, which must be shewn, viz. that they are to repair or maintain a causeway, or a bridge, or such like. Cro. Eliz. 711. The King granted to a man, to take such Toll of persons that passed over certain bridges with their Cattle, as was [illegible]here and elsewhere in England, &c.; and [illegible] void for incertainty. Bridg. 88. [illegible] words Toll-thorough and Toll-traverse are used promiscuously. A man cannot prescribe to have Thorough-Toll of men passing through a vill in the high-street, because it is against the Common Law and common right, for the high street is common to all, without alledging of a special consideration, as the repairing the way. And the King cannot have such Toll for passing in the high street, as in the case aforesaid, for the cause aforesaid. 2 Roll. Abr. 522: 22 Ass. 58.

A man cannot prescribe to have Thorough Toll of men for passing through a vill in a place which is not the high street; for it is more than the Law allows to go there. 2 Roll. Abr. 523: 22 Ass. 58.

TURN-TOLL, A Tollpaid for beasts that are driven to market to be sold, and do return unsold. 6 Rep. 46. There is also in Toll and out Toll, mentioned in ancient Charters.

TOLLAGE, Is the same with Tallage; signifying generally any manner of custom or imposition.

TOLL-BOOTH, The place where goods are weighed, &c.

TOLL-CORN, Corn taken for Toll ground at a mill; and an indictment lies against a miller for taking too great Toll. 5 Mod. 13: Ld. Raym. 159. See title Extortion.

TOLL-HOP, A small Dish or Measure, by which Toll is taken in a market, &c.

TOLSESTER, Tolcestrum.] An old excise, or duty paid by the Tenants of some manors to the Lord, for liberty to brew and sell ale. Cartular. Rading. 221: Chart. 51 Hen. 3.

TOLSEY, from the Sax. Tol, i. e. Tributum, and Sec Sedes.] The place where merchants meet, in a city or town of trade.

TOLT, Lat. Tollit, quia tollit causam.] A writ whereby a cause depending in a Court-baron, is taken and removed into the County Court. Old Nat. Br. 4. And as this writ removes the cause to the County Court; so the writ Pone removeth a cause from thence into the Court of Common Pleas, &c.

TOLTA, Wrong, rapine, extortion, any thing exacted or imposed contrary to right and justice. Pat. 48 H. 3. in Brady Hist. Eng. Append. p. 235.

TOMBS, Defacing of, in churches. See Monument.

TOMIN, A weight of twelve grains used by goldsmiths and jewellers.

TON; See Tun.

TONGUE, CUTTING OUT OR DISABLING; See title Maihem.

TONNAGE; See Tunnage; Customs.

TORCARE, Boves striliare & torcare; To comb and cleanse his oxen. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 75.

TORRA, Sax. Tor.] A mount or hill; as Glastenbury Torre. Chart. Abbat. Glaston. MS. p. 114. So a variety of high hills, in Derbyshire, are called Tor; but generally some epithet is prefixed, as Mam-tor, &c.

TORT, from the Lat. Tortus.] A French word for injury or wrong; as, de son Tort demesne, in his own wrong. Cro Rep. fol. 20. White's case. Wrong or injury is properly called Tort, because it is wrested or crooked, and contrary to that which is right and straight. Co. Litt. fol. 158.

TORTFEASOR, Fr. Tortfaiseur.] A wrong[illegible] trespasser.

TORTITIUM, A torch. Fleta.

TORTURE. The Statute Law of England doth very seldom, and the Common Law doth never, inflict any punishment extending to life or limb, unless upon the highest necessity: And the Constitution is an utter stranger to any arbitrary power of killing or maiming the Subject without the express Warrant of Law. "Nullus liber homo, says the Great Charter, (c. 29,) aliquo modo destruatur, nisi per legale judicium parium suorum aut per legem terræ." Which words, "Aliquo modo destruatur," according to Sir Edward Coke, (2 Inst. 48,) include a prohibition not only of killing, and maiming, but also of torturing (to which our laws are strangers) and of every oppression by colour of an illegal authority.

The Peine forte et dure, formerly inflicted on prisoners standing mute, and which was the only species of punishment, in the nature of Torture, allowed by the Common Law, is now repealed by stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 20. See title Mute.

The rack, or question, to extort a confession from criminals, is a practice of a different nature; the peine forte et dure having been only used to compel a man to put himself upon his trial; that being a species of trial in itself. And the trial by rack is utterly unknown to the Law of England. See Rushw. Coll. i. 638: 4 Comm. c. 25.

No person to be subject to Torture in Scotland. Stat. 7 Ann. c. 21.

TOTIES QUOTIES, As often as a thing shall happen, &c. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 4.

TOTTED. A good debt to the King, is by the foreign apposer or officer in the Exchequer noted for such by writing the word Tot to it: And that which is paid shall be Totted.—Tot pecuniæ regi debitur. Stats. 42 Ed. 3. c. 9: 1 Ed. 6. c. 15.

TOURN; See Turn.

TOURNAMENTS; See Just.

TOUT TEMPS PRIST ET UNCORE EST, i. e. Always was, and is at present ready. See title Tender.

TOWAGE, Towagium, Fr. Tavage.] The towing or drawing a ship or barge along the water by another ship or boat fastened to her; or by men or horses, &c. on land: It is also money which is given by bargemen to the owner of ground next a river where they tow a barge or other vessel. Plac. Parl. 18 Ed. 1.

TOWN, Oppidum, Villa.] A walled place or borough: The old boroughs were first of all Towns; and upland Towns, which are not ruled and governed as boroughs, are but Towns, though inclosed with walls. Finch. 80. There ought to be in every Town a Constable, or Tithing-man; and it cannot be a Town unless it hath or had a church, with celebration of sacraments and burials, &c. But if a Town is decayed so that it hath no houses left, yet it is a Town in Law. 1 Inst. 115. Under the name of a Town, or Village, boroughs, and it is said, cities are contained; for every borough or city is a Town. See City. Where a murderer escapes untaken in a Town, in the day-time, the Town shall be amerced. Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1.—A Township is answerable for felons goods to the King, which may be seized by them. But by stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 3. if it can alledge any thing in discharge of itself, and by which another doth become chargeable, it shall be heard, and right administered.

TOWN-CLERK, Ought not to be a Popish recusant convict. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5.—How to deliver a schedule of fines, &c. to the Sheriff. And a duplicate into the Court of Exchequer. Discharging or concealing an indictment, &c. leviable to a forfeiture of treble the penalty incurred by the original offence. Stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 22. May be amerced by the Barons of the Exchequer; and which amercements are leviable according to the usual practice. Stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 12.

TRABARIÆ, Little boats, so called from their being made out of single beams, or pieces of timber cut hollow. Florence of Worcester, pag. 618.

TRABES in churches, were what we now call branches, made usually with brass, but formerly with iron. Cowell.

TRACTUS, A trace by which horses in their gears draw a cart, plough, or waggon. Paroch. Antiq. 549.

TRADE, In general signification, is traffic or merchandize: Also a private art, and way of living. Trading with enemies is generally prohibited by positive statutes in time of war. See title Treason.

It was formerly held that none of the King's subjects might trade to and with a nation of Infidels without the King's leave, because of the danger of relinquishing Christianity. And Sir Edward Coke said, That he had seen a licence from one of our Kings, reciting, That he, having a special trust and confidence that such a one, his subject, would not decline his faith and religion, licensed him to trade with Infidels, &c. 3 Nels. Abr 331.

As to private Trades, at Common Law, none was prohibited to exercise any particular Trade, wherein he had not any skill or knowledge; and if he used it unskilfully, the party grieved might have his remedy against him by action on the case, &c. By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, a man must serve seven years apprenticeship before he can set up any Trade; see title Apprentice. An indictment on the statute for exercising a Trade used at that time in Great Britain, quashed; it should have been England, there being then no such kingdom as Great Britain. 1 Strange 552: 2 Strange 788: 11 Rep. 53.

If a bond or promise restrains the exercise of a Trade, though it be to a particular place only, if there was no consideration for it, it is void; if there be a consideration, in such a case it may be good: But if the restraint be general throughout England, although there be a consideration, it will be void. 2 Lill. Abr. 179: Lord Raym. 1436: 2 Strange 739: see title Bond.

Frequent acts are passed to enable soldiers and sailors, having served his Majesty for certain terms, to exercise any Trades in Great Britain, though not regularly bred to them, or free of corporations or companies. See titles Navy; Soldiers.

TRADESMEN, Actions against. There is in Law, always, an implied contract with a common taylor, or other workman, that he performs his business in a workman-like manner; in which, if they fail, an action on the case lies to recover damages for such breach of their general undertaking. 11 Rep. 54: 1 Saund. 324. But if I employ a person to transact any of these concerns, whose common profession and business it is not, the Law implies no such general undertaking; but, in order to charge him with damages, a special agreement is required. 3 Comm. 165.

TRANSCRIPT, Is the copy of any original writing, or deed, &c. where it is written over again, or exemplified; stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 14.

TRANSCRIPTO PEDES FINIS LEVATI MITTENDO IN CANCELLARIAM, A writ for certifying the foot of a fine levied before Justices in eyre, &c. into the Chancery. Reg. Orig. 669.

TRANSCRIPTO RECOGNITIONIS FACTÆ CORAM JUSTICIARIIS ITINERANTIBUS, &c. An old writ to certify a recognizance taken by Justices in eyre. Reg. Orig. 152.

TRANSGRESSIONE, A Writ or Action of Trespass, according to Fitzherbert.

TRANSIRE, from Transeo.] Is used for a Warrant from the Custom-house to let pass. Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 11.

TRANSITORY, Is the opposite to local. Transitory Actions are those that may be laid in any county or place; such as personal Action of Trespass, &c. See title Action; Venue.

TRANSLATION, Translatio.] In the common sense of the word, signifies a Version out of one language into another; but, in a more confined acceptation, it denotes the removing from one place to another: So the removal of a Bishop to another diocese, &c. is called translating; and such a Bishop writes not, anno Consecrationis, but anno Translationis nostræ, &c. A Bishop translated, is not consecrated de novo; for a consecration is like an ordination, it is an indelible character, and holds good for ever. 3 Salk. 72. But the Bishop is to be a-new elected, &c. 1 Salk. 137. See title Bishop.

TRANSPORTATION, The banishing or sending away a Criminal into another country.

It is said, that Exile was first introduced as a punishment by the Legislature in the 39th year of Queen Elizabeth, when a statute (stat. 39 Eliz. c. 4.) enacted, that such rogues as were dangerous to the inferior people, should be banished the realm. Barr. Ant. Stat. 269. And that the first statute in which the word Transportation is used, is stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 3, which gives a power to the Judges, at their discretion, either to execute, or transport to America for life, the Moss-troopers of Cumberland and Northumberland. 2 Woodd. 498. This statute was made perpetual by stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 42. This is, perhaps, the only instance in which the Legislature has extended the term of Transportation beyond fourteen years. 1 Comm. c. 1. p. 137, n.

Transportation was first brought into general use as a punishment anno 1718, by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11; continued by stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, which statute allowed the Court a discretionary power to order felons, who were by Law entitled to their clergy, to be transported to the American Plantations. See this Dictionary, title CLERGY, Benefit of.

By these statutes the persons contracting for the Transportation of convicts to the colonies, or their assigns, had an interest in the service of each, for seven or fourteen years, according to the term of Transportation.

Returning from Transportation, or being at large in Great Britain before the expiration of the term for which an offender is ordered to be transported, or has agreed to transport himself, is felony without benefit of clergy, in all cases; as is also the assisting a felon to escape from such as are conveying him to the port of Transportation. See stats. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11: 6 Geo. 1. c. 23: 16 Geo. 2. c. 15: 8 Geo. 3. c. 15: 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 56.

To persons capitally convicted the King frequently offers a pardon upon condition of their being transported for life. Many have at first rejected this gracious offer: and there were one or two instances of persons so desperate as to persist in the refusal, and who, in consequence, suffered the execution of their sentence. This evil seems to be intended to be obviated by stat. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 56. § 1: 31 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 7, under the latter of which, continued by stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 60, all convicts sentenced to Transportation, may be [illegible] to hard labour from the time of their sentence, till they are transported; and that time is to be reckoned in part discharge of their Transportation.

The System of Transportation to the American Colonies continued for fifty-six years; during which period, and until the commencement of the American war in 1775, great numbers of felons were sent, chiefly to the province of Maryland. The rigid discipline which the colonial laws authorized the masters to exercise over the servants, joined to the prospects which agricultural pursuits, after some experience, held out to these convicts, tended to reform the chief part; who, after the expiration of their servitude, mingled in the society of the country, under circumstances highly beneficial to themselves, and even to the colony. Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis.

The Convicts having accumulated greatly in the year 1776, and the intercourse with America being then shut up, it became indispensably necessary to resort to some other expedient; and in the choice of difficulties the system of the Hulks was suggested, and first adpoted under the authority of a statute, 16 Geo. 3.

The Legislature, uncertain with regard to the success of this new species of punishment, and wishing to make other experiments, by an act of the same session empowered the Justices of every county in England, to prepare houses of correction for the reception of convicts under sentence of death, to wh[illegible] Majesty should extend his royal mercy, to be k[illegible] hard labour for a term not exceeding ten years. The same act, among many other excellent regulations, ordered the convicts to be kept separate, and not allowed to mix with any offenders convicted of crimes less than larceny; and that they should be fed with coarse, inferior food, water, and small beer, and clothed at the public expence; without permission to have any other food, drink, or clothing than that allowed by the act, under certain penalties.—As an encouragement to these delinquents, while such as refused to work were to receive corporal punishments, those who behaved well had not only the prospect held out of the period of their confinement being shortened, but they were also to receive decent clothes, and a sum of money not less than 40*s.* nor more than 5*l.* when discharged. Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 43.

This very salutary act was followed up three years afterwards by another statute; viz. stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 74: This had two very important objects in view:

The first was to erect in some convenient common or waste ground in Middlesex, Essex, Kent, or Surrey, two large Penitentiary Houses; one for 600 male, the other for 300 female convicts; with proper offices, gardens,

&c. The expence to be paid by Government; and his Majesty to appoint a Committee of three persons to regulate the establishment, under the control of the Justices of Peace, and Judges of Assize; with power to appoint officers with salaries, to be paid out of the profits of the work to be performed by the convicts.—In these Penitentiary Houses, persons convicted of transportable offences were to be confined to hard labour in the proportion of five years' labour to seven years' Transportation, and not exceeding seven years labour in lieu of fourteen years Transportation. The number of convicts to be sent from the circuits, or the Metropolis, being limited accordingly. These Convicts w[illegible] be employed in works of the most servile kind, and such as were least liable to be spoiled by ignorance, neglect, or obstinacy, viz. Treading in a wheel for moving machinery; drawing in a capstan for turning a mill; sawing stone; polishing marble; beating hemp; rasping logwood; making cordage; picking oakum; weaving sacks; making nets, &c. The food and drink of the offenders to be bread and coarse meat, with water or small beer, and their clothing to be uniform, with badges affixed. Other rules were also to be established under the direction of the Committee, who were to attend every fortnight, and to have power to reward the diligent with a part of their earnings; and when an offender was discharged, he was to have decent clothing, and from 20*s.* to 3*l.* in money.

The Second purpose of this act (and which is the only part of it that has ever been carried into effect) regards the continuation of the system of The Hulks.

It declares, that for the more effectual punishment of atrocious male offenders liable to be transported, the Court may order such convicts as are of proper age, and free from bodily infirmity, to be punished, by being kept on board ships or vessels, and employed in hard labour, in raising sand, soil, and gravel, and cleansing the river Thames, or any other river or port approved of by the Privy Council; or in any other works upon the banks or shores of the same, under the directi[o]n of superintendants approved of by the Justices, for a term not less than one year, no[illegible] than five; except any offender be liable to Trans[illegible]n for fourteen years, in which case his punishmen[illegible] be commuted for seven years on board the Hulks. The mode of feeding, clothing, and discipline, similar to that already explained, is established, and on discharge the convicts are to receive from 20*s.* to 3*l.* according to circumstances.

The concluding part of the act obliges the governors and superintendants of the two establishments, to make annual returns to the Court of King's Bench; and also authorises his Majesty to appoint Inspectors of the Penitentiary Houses, of the Hulks, and of all the other gaols and places of criminal confinement in London and Middlesex: these Inspectors personally to visit every such place of confinement at least once in three months, to examine into the particulars of each, and to make a return to the Court of King's Bench of the state of the buildings, the conduct of the officers, treatment of the prisoners, state of their earnings and expences; and to follow up this by a report to both Houses of Parliament at the beginning of each Session. It is believed, that the yearly report to the Court of King's Bench by the Superintendant of the Hulks, is the only part of the act that is in any degree punctually complied with.

It is much to be lamented, that neither of these statutes, so far as regarded Penitentiary Houses, which seemed to hold out so fair a prospect of employing convicts, in pursuits connected with productive labour, and ultimate reformation, without sending them out of the kingdom, have been carried effectively into execution; for in the year 1784, the system of Transportation was again revived; by an act which empowers the Court, before whom a felon shall be convicted, to order the prisoner to be transported beyond seas, either within his Majesty's dominions, or elsewhere: and his service to be assigned to the contractor, who shall undertake such Transportation. Stat. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 56.

The same act continues the system of the Hulks for a further length of time, by directing the removal of convicts under sentence of death, and reprieved by his Majesty, and also such as are under sentence of Transportation, (being free from infectious disorders,) to other places of confinement, either inland, or on board of any ship or vessel in the river Thames, or any other navigable river; and to continue them so confined, until transported according to law, or until the expiration of the term of the sentence should otherwise entitle them to their liberty.

The plan of Transportation, through the medium of the contractors, (although some felons were sent to Africa,) does not appear to have answered; from the great difficulty of finding any situation since the independence of America, where the services of convicts could be rendered productive or profitable, to merchants who would undertake to transport them. Hence arose the idea of making an establishment for these Outcasts of Society on the eastern coast of New South Wales, more generally known by the name of Botany Bay, from a bay on the coast so named by Captain Cook, and where the first convicts were landed; to which remote region it was at length determined to transport atrocious offenders. Accordingly, in the year 1787, an act passed authorising the establishment of a Court of Judicature for the trial of offenders who should be transported thither. Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c 2.

An act of the following year empowered his Majesty, under his sign manual, to authorise any person to make contracts for the Transportation of offenders; and to direct to whom security should be given for the due performance of the contract. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 24.

By a subsequent act, the Governor of the Settlement may remit the punishment of offenders there; and on a certificate from him, their names shall be inserted in the next General Pardon. Stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 47.

Under these various legislative regulations, the two Systems of punishments, namely, the Hulks, and Transportation, are now regulated.

The System of the Hulks first commenced on the 12th July 1776, and from that time until December 12, 1795, 8000 convicts were ordered for punishment by hard labour on the river Thames, and at Langston and Portsmouth harbours. The expence of these establishments has been 1*s.* 3*d.* per day for the maintenance of each Convict; the bounties to discharged convicts, and the expence of chaplain and coroner, about 400*l.* per annum. The earnings of the convicts about three-fifths of the expence incurred by their maintenance. Treatise on Police.

The first embarkation to New South Wales commenced in 1787; and in the month of May in the following year, 1030 male and female convicts were landed on the new colony.

colony. In 21 months after, there were 77 deaths, and 87 births in the whole Settlement; which was divided, by placing a part of the Convicts on Norfolk Island, a small fertile spot, containing only about 14,000 acres of land, and situated about 1200 miles distant from Sydney Cove in New South Wales, where the seat of Government was fixed.

In this project considerably above 500,000*l.* has already been expended by Government. Many inconveniencies and hardships have been felt, and repeated supplies of all sorts have been sent thither from Great-Britain. With regard to subsistence, there is now a prospect of the Colony maintaining itself; but not much of its yet proving at all advantageous to this country.

A hope was probably entertained, that the great expence of the passage home, the fertility of the soil, and salubrity of the climate, would induce Convicts to remain there after the expiration of their sentence. Experience, however, has shown that these circumstances have not operated to prevent the return of many atrocious and adroit offenders; nor has the length and hardship of the voyage thither, nor other evils attending it, operated to decreale the number here liable to suffer the punishment of Transportation. Treatise on Police.

Transportation, Of goods and merchandise, is allowed or prohibited, in many cases by statute, for the advantage of trade. See title Navigation Acts.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, Transubstantiatio.] Is a converting into another substance: To transubstantiate, i. e. Quidpiam in aliam substantiam convertere. Litt. Dict. A declaration against the doctrine of Transubstantiation maintained by the Church of Rome, is required by the stat. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1. See title Papists.

TRAVELLERS; See title Inns and Innkeepers.

TRAVERSE, from Fr. Traverser.] Is used in Law for the denying of some matter of fact, alledged to be done, in a declaration or pleadings; upon which the other side comes and affirms that it was done; and this makes a single and good issue for the cause to proceed to trial. The formal words of a Traverse are in our French Sans ceo, in Latin Absque hoc, and in English without that, that such a thing was done or not, &c. Kitch. 217; West Symb. par. 2. See title Pleading I. 2.

A Plea will be ill, which neither traverseth, nor confesseth the plaintiff's title, &c. And every matter in fact, alledged by the plaintiff, may be traversed by the defendant, but not matter of law, or where it is part matter of law and part matter of fact; nor may a record be traversed which is not to be tried by a Jury. And if a matter be expresly pleaded in the affirmative, which is expresly answered in the negative, no Traverse is necessary, there being a sufficient issue joined: also where the defendant hath given a particular answer in his plea, to all the material matters contained in the declaration, he need not take a Traverse; for when the thing is answered, there needs no further denial. Cro. Eliz. 755: Yelv. 173, 193, 195: 2 Mod. 54. If a Traverse contain no more than the party hath pleaded before, it will not be good. It hath been said that a Traverse ought not to be taken but where the thing traversed is issuable: And where one will make a Traverse to a declaration, he ought to traverse that part of it, the doing whereof will make an end of the matter, when the point is determined by the Jury. 2 Roll. Rep. 37: 2 Lill. Abr. 587.

Any fact which appears to be material is traversable, though it be only on suggestion; as in prohibition, a suggestion of a refusal by the Spiritual Court, of a plea (which ought to be allowed) in a suit there for tithes, or other matter of their cognizance, is traversable; otherwise their jurisdiction might in any case be taken away by such suggestion. 2 Co. 45, a. So any surmise which takes away the jurisdiction of the Court is traversable. Cro Eliz. 511. But Traverse of a thing, not necessary to be alledged, is bad. Cro. Car. 328. So of matter of mere suppoial, or inducement. Com. Dig. title Pleading. (G. 13, 14.)

As one Traverse is enough to make a perfect issue, a Traverse cannot be regularly taken upon a Traverse, if it is well taken to the material point, and goes to the substance of the action; but where the first Traverse is not well taken, nor pertinent to the matter, there, to that which was sufficiently confessed and avoided before, the other party may well take a Traverse after such immaterial Traverse taken before: And if special matter alledged in a foreign county in the defendant's plea be false, the plaintiff may maintain his action, and traverse that special matter; and in such case a Traverse on a Traverse hath been adjudged good: but a Traverse after a Traverse may be allowed; as in trespass in such a county, defendant pleads a concord for trespass in every other county, and traverses the county; the plaintiff may join issue on the county, or traverse the concord. 2 Inst. 282, b: Mo 428: 1 Saund. 32: Poph. 101.

These rules are to be observed in Traverses: 1. The Traverse of a thing not immediately alledged, vitiates a good bar. 2. Nothing must be traversed but what is expresly alledged. 3. Surplusage in a plea doth not inforce a Traverse. 4. It must be always made to the substantial part of the title. 5. Where an act may indifferently be intended to be at one day or another, there the day is not traversable. 6. In action of trespass, generally the day is not material; though, if a matter be to be done upon a particular day, there it is material and traversable. 2 Roll. Rep. 37: 1 Roll. Rep. 235: Yelv. 122: 2 Lill. Abr. 313. If the parties have agreed on the day for a thing to be done, the Traverse of the day is material: but where they are not agreed on the day, it is otherwise; and though 'tis proved to be done on another day, 'tis sufficient. Palm. 280.

Where a Traverse goes to the matter of a plea, &c. all that went before is waved by the Traverse; and if the Traverse goes to the time only, it is not waved. 2 Salk. 642.—In action of trespass, a particular place and time were laid in the declaration, and in the plea there was a Traverse as to the place, but not as to time: On averment that it was eadem transgressio, the plea was held good. 3 Lev. 227: 2 Lutw. 1452. Where a plea in justification of a thing is not local, a Traverse of the place is wrong. 2 Mod. 270. Where a justification in trespass, relates to a particular place, different from the Venue laid in the declaration, 'tis proper to add a Traverse at the end of the plea. J. M.

The substance and body of a plea must be traversed. Hob. 232.—But a Traverse that a person died seised of land in fee modo & forma as the defendant had declared, was adjudged good. Hutt. 123.—A Lord and tenant differ in the ſervices, there the tenure and not the ſeiſin ſhall be traverſed; but if they agree in the ſervices, the ſeiſin and not the tenure is traverſable; and it is a general rule, that the tenant ſhall never traverſe the ſeiſin of the ſervices without admitting the tenure. March 116.—That which is not material nor traverſable, is not admitted when it is alledged, and not traverſed. 2 Salk. 361.—But the omitting a Traverſe where it is neceſſary, is matter of ſubſtance. 2 Mod. 60. And a Traverſe of a debt is ill when a promiſe is the ground of the action; which ought to be traverſed, and not the debt. Leon. 252.

A Traverſe ſhould have an inducement to make it relate to the foregoing matter. And 'tis no good plea for the plaintiff to reply, that a man is alive who is alledged to be dead, without traverſing that he is not dead. 3 Salk. 357. It is ſaid that where a Traverſe abſque hoc comprizes the whole matter generally, it may conclude & de hoc pon. ſe ſuper patriam; but when it traverſes a particular matter, the concluſion ought to be with an averment, &c. 1 Salk. 4. That it ought not to conclude to the country, for it is in the negative. See 2 Mod. [illegible]

Traverſe may be in an anſwer in Chancery, replication, &c. In an action upon a bail-bond the arreſt is not traverſable. 1 Strange 444.—Traverſe of a ſeiſin in fee is ill, where a leſs eſtate would be ſufficient. 2 Strange 818. Where the party confeſſes and avoids, he ought not to traverſe. But it may be paſſed over and iſſue taken upon the Traverſe. 2 Strange 837.

Default of Traverſe where the plaintiff has not fully confeſſed and avoided, is only form, and aided on a general demurrer: And by ſtat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, no exception ſhall be for an immaterial Traverſe, unleſs ſhown for cauſe of demurrer. But defect of a Traverſe where there are two affirmatives, is not aided on a general demurrer; for by default of an iſſue the right cannot appear to the Court. So if a Traverſe be neceſſary to make a good bar, the omiſſion will be fatal on a general demurrer. And if the replication does not traverſe the matter of the bar, which is not fully confeſſed and avoided, the defendant ſhall not be aided on a general demurrer. Com Dig. title Pleading (G. 22.) See titles Pleading; Treſpaſs. And particularly Com. Dig. title Pleader (G).

Traverse of an Inditement or Preſentment. The taking iſſue upon, and contradicting or denying ſome chief point of it; as in a Preſentment againſt a perſon for a highway overflowed with water; for default of ſcouring a ditch, &c. he may traverſe the matter, that there is no highway, or that the ditch is ſufficiently ſcoured; or otherwiſe traverſe the cauſe, viz. That he hath not the land, or he and they whoſe eſtate, &c. have not uſed to ſcour the ditch. Lamb. Eiren. 521; Book Entr. See title Trial.

Traverse of an Office, is the proving that an inquiſition made of lands or goods by the eſcheator, is defective and untruly made. See title Inqueſt of Office. No perſon ſhall traverſe an Office, unleſs he can make to himſelf a good right and title: and if one be admitted to traverſe an Office, this admiſſion of the party to the Traverſe, doth ſuppoſe the title to be in him, or elſe he had no cauſe of Traverſe. Vaugh. 641; 2 Lill. Abr. 590, 591. The Traverſe of an inquiſition for the King is to be conſidered as a debt, and the proſecutor may carry down the record. 2 Strange 1208.

TREASON.

From Fr. Trahir, to betray; Trahiſon, betraying, contracted into Treaſon. Lat. Proditio.] The crime of treachery and infidelity to our Lawful Sovereign.

3. The Trial, and Judgment.

I. Treason, in its very name, imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of faith. It therefore happens only between allies, saith the Mirror; for Treason is indeed a general appellation, made use of by the Law, to denote not only offences against the King and Government, but also that accumulation of guilt which arises, whenever a Superior reposes a confidence in a Subject or Inferior, between whom and himself there subsists a natural, civil, or even a spiritual relation; and the Inferior so abuses that confidence, so forgets the obligations of duty, subjection, and allegiance, as to destroy the life of any such Superior or Lord. This is looked upon as proceeding from the same principle of treachery in private life, as would have urged him who harbours it to have conspired in public against his liege Lord and Sovereign; and therefore for a wife to kill her lord or husband, a servant his lord or master, and an ecclesiastic his lord or Ordinary; these, being breaches of the lower allegiance, of private and domestic faith, are denominated Petit Treasons. See title Petty Treason.—But when disloyalty so rears its crest, as to attack even Majesty itself, it is called by way of eminent distinction High Treason, Alta Proditio; being equivalent to the crimen læsæ Majestatis of the Romans, as Glanville denominates it also in our English Law. 4 Comm. c 6.

The greatness of this offence of Treason and severity of the punishment thereof, is upon two reasons; because the safety, peace, and tranquillity of the kingdom, are highly concerned in the preservation of the person and government of the King; and therefore the Laws have given all possible security thereto, under the severest penalties: And as the Subjects have protection from the King and his Laws; so they are bound by their allegiance to be true and faithful to him. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 59.

As this is the highest civil crime, which (considered as a member of the Community) any man can possibly commit, it ought therefore to be the most precisely ascertained. For if the crime of High Treason be indeterminate, this alone (says Montesquieu) is sufficient to make any Government degenerate into arbitrary power. And yet, by the ancient Common Law, there was a great latitude left in the breast of the Judges, to determine what was Treason, or not so; whereby the creatures of tyrannical Princes had opportunity to create abundance of constructive Treasons; that is, to raise, by forced and arbitrary constructions, offences into the crime and punishment of Treason, which never were suspected to be such. Thus, in the reign of Edward I., appealing to the French Courts, in opposition to the King's, was in Parliament solemnly adjudged High Treason. 3 Inst. 7: 1 Hale 79; and this under the idea of Subverting the realm.—Another charge; the accroaching, or attempting to exercise royal power, (a very uncertain charge,) was, in the 21 Edw. III, held to be Treason in a Knight of Hertfordshire, who forcibly assaulted and detained one of the King's Subjects, till he paid him 90*l.*; a crime, it must be owned, well deserving of punishment; but which seems to be of a complexion very different from that of Treason. 1 Hal. P. C. 80. Killing the King's Father, or Brother, or even his Messenger, has also fallen under the same denomination. Britt. c. 22: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. § 1. But however, to prevent the inconveniencies which began to arise in England from this multitude of constructive Treasons, the stat. 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 2, was made; which defines what offences only for the future should be held to be Treason. See post. III.

Nothing can be construed to be Treason under this statute which is not literally specified therein; nor may the statute be construed by equity, because it is a declarative Law, and one declaration ought not to be the declaration of another; besides, it was made to secure the Subject in his life, liberty, and estate, which, by admitting constructions to be made of it, might destroy all. 1 Hawk. P. C. 34: 3 Salk. 358.

This statute, after reciting that divers opinions having been, what cases should amount to High Treason, enacts and declares, That if a person doth compass or imagine the death of the King, Queen, or their eldest son and heir; or if he do violate and deflower the King's wife or companion, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the King's eldest son; or if he levy war against the King in his realm, or adhere to his enemies, give them aid and comfort in the realm, or elsewhere, and thereof be probably (or proveably) attainted of open deed; and if a man counterfeit the King's Great or Privy Seal, or his money, or bring false money into the kingdom, like to the money of England, to make payment therewith in deceit of the King and his People; or if he kill the Chancellor, Treasurer, or any of the King's Justices in either Bench, Justices of Assise, &c. being in their places, doing their offices; these cases are to be adjudged Treason.

II. Every Subject of Great Britain, whether ecclesiastical or lay, man or woman, if of the age of discretion, and of sane memory, may be guilty of High Treason. 1 Hawk. P. C, c. 17. § 4. If a married Woman commit High Treason, in the company of her Husband, or by his command, she is punishable as if unmarried; for in a crime of such magnitude, the presumption of coercion by the Husband is no excuse. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 11: 1 Hal. P. C. 47. A Soldier cannot justify by the command of his superior Officer, for, as the command is traiterous, so is the obedience. Kely. 13. Neither can a man justify, by acting as Counsel. Kely. 23. Madmen were heretofore punished as Traitors, particularly by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 20: See title Idiots V.; but now they are not punishable, if the crime is committed during a total deprivation of reason. 1 Hal. P. C. 37. And this has been confirmed in modern cases; though the frequency of attempts against the person and family of King George III., by persons actually or pretendedly of that description, was extremely remarkable.

The Husband of a Queen regnant, as was King Philip, may commit High Treason. So may a Queen consort against the King her husband. Such were the cases of Queen Anne Boleyne and Catharine Howard: For the Queen is considered, in the eye of the Law, as a distinct person, for many purposes. 3 Inst. 8.

Queen

Aliens may commit Treason; for as there is a local protection on the King's part, so there is a local allegiance on theirs. 7 Rep. 6. There is no distinction whether the Alien's Sovereign is in amity or enmity with the Crown of England. If during his residence here, under the protection of the Crown, he does that which would constitute Treason in a natural-born Subject, he may be dealt with as a traitor. 1 Hal. P. C. 60. So also if he resides here, after a proclamation of war; unless he openly removes himself, by passing to his own Prince, or publicly renounces the King of England's protection, which is analogous to a diffidatio, or defiance; and then, under such circumstances, he is considered as an enemy. 1 Hal. P. C. 92. Thus the Marquis De Guiscard, a French Papist, residing here, during a war, under the protection of Queen Anne, was charged with holding a traiterous correspondence with France. And two Portuguese were indicted and attainted of High Treason, for joining in a conspiracy with Dr. Lopez to poison Queen Elizabeth. 7 Rep. 6: Dy. 144.

If an Alien, during a war with his native country, leaving his family and effects here, goes home, and adheres to the King's enemies, for the purposes of hostility, he is a Traitor; for he was settled here, and his family and effects are still under the King's protection. 1 Salk. 46: 1 Ld. Raym. 282: Fost. 185, 186. In declarations of war, it has been frequently used to except, and take under the protection of the Crown, such resident Aliens as demean themselves dutifully, and neither assist or correspond with the enemy. In that case, they are upon the footing of Aliens coming here by licence or safe conduct, and are considered as alien friends. Fost. 185.

If an Alien is charged with a breach of his natural allegiance, he may give alienage in evidence, for he is charged with a breach of that species of allegiance, which is not due from an Alien. 4 St. Tr. 699, 700.

Alien merchants are protected by the statute Staple, in case of a war, which provides, that they shall have convenient warning, by forty days proclamation, or eighty days in case of accident, to avoid the realm; during which time, they may be dealt with as traitors, for any treasonable acts; if after that time they reside and trade here, as before, they may be either treated as alien Enemies, by the Law of Nations, or as Traitors by the law of the land. 1 Hal. P. C. 93, 94. See Mag. Cart. c. 30: Stat. 27 E. 3. st. 2. cc. 2, 13, 17, 19, 20.

Subjects of the King in open war or rebellion, are not the King's Enemies, but Traitors; and if a Subject join with a foreign Enemy, and come into England with him, if he be taken prisoner, he shall not be ransomed or proceeded against as an Enemy, but as a Traitor to the King: on the other hand, an Enemy coming in open hostility into England, and taken, shall be either executed by Martial Law, or ransomed; for he cannot be indicted of Treason, because he never was within the ligeance of the King. 3 Inst. 11: 7 Rep. 6: 1 Hal. P. C. 100.

A Natural-born Subject cannot abjure his allegiance, and transfer it to a foreign Prince; neither can any foreign Prince, by naturalizing, or employing a Subject of Great Britain, dissolve the bond of allegiance between that Subject and the Crown. 1 Comm. 369. This was determined, in the case of Æneas Macdonald, who was born in Great Britain, but educated from his early infancy in France; and being appointed commissary of the French troops intended for Scotland, was taken prisoner, tried, and found guilty of High Treason. Fost. 60: 9 Sta. Tri. 585.

It is a question, whether the general exemption of Ambassadors from the cognizance of the Municipal Tribunal, extends to Treason? On the one hand, there is a positive breach of local allegiance; on the other, an infringement of the privilege of personal inviolability, universally allowed by the Law of Nations. Coke maintains, that if an Ambassador commits Treason, he loses the privilege and dignity of an Ambassador, as unworthy of so high a place, and may be punished here, as any other private Alien, and not remanded to his Sovereign, but of courtesy. 4 Inst. 153. Most writers agree that an Ambassador, conspiring the death of the King, or raising a Rebellion, may be punished with death. But it is doubted, whether he is obnoxious to punishment for bare conspiracies of this nature. 1 Roll. Rep. 185: 1 Hale 96, 97, 99.

The Bishop of Rosse, Ambassador from Mary Queen of Scots, to Elizabeth, was committed to the Tower, as a confederate with the Duke of Norfolk, for corresponding with the Spanish Ministry, to invade the kingdom; he pleaded his privilege, and afterwards, having made a full confession, no criminal process was commenced. 1 Hal. P. C. 97: 1 St. Tri. 105. But he was afterwards banished the country. The Spanish Ambassador for encouraging Treason, and the French Ambassador for conspiring the same Queen's death, were only reprimanded. Doctor Story was condemned and executed, but he was an Englishman by birth, and therefore could never shake off his natural allegiance. Dyer 298, 300: 3 St. Tri. 775.

From this view we may collect, that the right of proceeding against Ambassadors for Treason, in the ordinary course of justice, has been waved, from motives of policy and prudence: and that they have seldom been proceeded against further than by imprisonment, seizing their papers, and sending them home in custody. As was done in the case of Count Gyllenburg the Swedish Minister in George the Second's time. Fost. 187. See 1 Comm. 254: Ward's Law of Nations.

But, according to the Law of Nations, it seems that the Universal Inviolability of Ambassadors, is of more consequence than the punishment of any crime that may be committed by them; and the best professors of this law have held, that whatever crime Ambassadors may commit, whether against the positive Municipal Law of the land where they reside, or against the general Law of nature, though it may be right to treat them as Enemies, that is, if they were in open hostility, yet neither ought more violence to be shown than the necessity of self-defence exactly requires, nor can they ever be made subject to any sort of judicial process. In cases of delinquency an Ambassador is to be stripped of his functions, and sent back to his Master, with a request for his punishment; and if his Master refuse, he makes the act his own; and the Nations are then in a state of hostility. See Ward on the Law of Nations, where this subject is ably and fully treated. It must be understood, that the above applies only to Ambassadors received and acknowledged as such. See this Dict. title Ambassador.

III. 1. The

III. 1. The first Treason described by the stat. 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 2, is, "When a man doth compass or imagine the death of our Lord the King, of our Lady his Queen, or of their eldest Son and Heir."—Under this description it is held that a Queen Regnant (such as Queen Elizabeth or Queen Anne) is within the words of the act, being invested with royal power, and entitled to the allegiance of her Subjects. 1 Hal. P. C. 101:—But the Husband of such a Queen is not comprised within these words, and therefore no Treason can be committed against him. 3 Inst. 7: 1 Hal. P. C. 106.

Though the compassing the death of the Queen Consort be Treason, this must be intended during the marriage; for it doth not extend to a Queen Dowager. And the eldest Son and Heir of the King, that is living, is intended by the said act, though he was not the first Son; but if the Heir Apparent to the Crown be a collateral Heir, he is not within the statute; nor is a conspiracy against such collateral Heir, Treason by this act. 3 Inst. 8.

At Common Law, compassing the death of any of the King's children, and declaring it by overt act, was taken to be Treason; though by this statute it is restrained to the eldest Son and Heir. 1 Hal. P. C. 125.

The King, intended by the act, is the King in possession, without any respect to his title; for it is held, that a King de facto and not de jure, or in other words an Usurper that hath got possession of the Throne, is a King within the meaning of the statute; as there is a temporary allegiance due to him for his administration of the Government, and temporary protection of the Public; and therefore Treasons committed against Henry VI. were punished under Edward IV., though all the Line of Lancaster had been previously declared Usurpers by Act of Parliament. But the most rightful Heir of the Crown, or King de jure and not de facto, who hath never had plenary possession of the Throne, as was the case of the House of York during the three reigns of the Line of Lancaster, is not a King within this statute, against whom Treasons may be committed. 3 Inst. 7: 1 Hal. P. C. 104. And a very sensible writer on the Crown-Law carries the point of possession so far, that he holds, that a King out of possession is so far from having any right to our allegiance, by any other title which he may set up against the King in being, that we are bound by the duty of our allegiance to resist him. A doctrine which he grounds upon the stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 1, which is declaratory of the Common Law, and pronounces all Subjects excused from any penalty, or forfeiture, who do assist and obey a King de facto. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. §§ 14—18. But this seems, says Blackstone, to be confounding all notions of right and wrong; and the consequence would be, that when Cromwell had murdered the elder Charles, and usurped the Power (though not the Name) of King, the People were bound in duty to hinder the Son's restoration: And were a foreign King to invade this kingdom, and by any means to get possession of the Crown, (a term, by the way, of very loose and indistinct signification,) the Subject would be bound by his allegiance to fight for his natural Prince to-day, and by the same duty of allegiance to fight against him to-morrow. The true distinction seems to be, that the statute of Henry VII. does by no means command any opposition to a King de jure; but excuses the obedience paid to a King de facto. When, therefore, an Usurper is in possession, the Subject is excused and justified in obeying and giving him assistance: Otherwise, under an Usurpation, no man could be safe, if the lawful Prince had a right to hang him for obedience to the Powers in being, as the Usurper would certainly do for disobedience. Nay, farther, as the mass of People are imperfect judges of title, of which in all cases possession is prima facie evidence, the Law compels no man to yield obedience to that Prince, whose right is by want of possession rendered uncertain and disputable, till Providence shall think fit to interpose in his favour, and decide the ambiguous claim: And therefore, till he is entitled to such allegiance by possession, no Treason can be committed against him. Lastly, a King who has resigned his Crown, such resignation being admitted and ratified in Parliament, is, according to Hale, no longer the object of Treason. 1 Hal. P. C. 104. And the same reason holds, in case a King abdicates the Government; or, by actions subversive of the Constitution, virtually renounces the authority which he claims by that very Constitution: Since, when the fact of abdication is once established, and determined by the proper Judges, the consequence necessarily follows, that the Throne is thereby vacant, and he is no longer King. 4 Comm. c. 6.

Let us next see, what is compassing or imagining the death of the King, &c. These are synonymous terms; the word compass signifying the purpose or design of the mind or will, and not, as in common speech, the carrying such design into effect. 1 Hal. P. C. 107. And therefore, it has been held, that an accidental stroke, which may mortally wound the Sovereign, per infortunium, without any traiterous intent, is no Treason; as was the case of Sir Walter Tyrrel, who, by the command of King William Rufus, shooting at a hart, the arrow glanced against a tree, and killed the King upon the spot. 3 Inst. 6. But, as this compassing or imagination is an act of the mind, it cannot possibly fall under any judicial cognizance, unless it be demonstrated by some overt (i. e. open) act; and therefore it is necessary that there appear an open or overt act of a more full and explicit nature, to convict the Traitor upon. The statute expressly requires, that the accused "Be thereof, upon sufficient proof, attainted, of some open act, by men of his own condition." Thus, to provide weapons or ammunition for the purpose of killing the King, is held to be a palpable overt act of Treason in imagining his death. 3 Inst. 12. To conspire to imprison the King by force, and move towards it by assembling company, is an overt act of compassing the King's death; for all force, used to the person of the King, in its consequence may tend to his death, and is a strong presumption of something worse intended than the present force by such as have so far thrown off their bounden duty to their Sovereign; it being an old observation, that there is generally but a short interval between the prisons and the graves of Princes. 1 Hal. P. C. 109. There is no question, also, but that taking any measures to render such treasonable purposes effectual, as assembling and consulting on the means to kill the King, is a sufficient overt act of High Treason. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. § 31: 1 Hal. P. C. 119.

Mr. Justice Foster lays down generally, that the care the Law hath taken for the personal safety of the King, is is not confined to actions or attempts of the more flagitious kind, to assassination or poison, or other attempts immediately and directly aimed at his life: It is extended to every thing wilfully and deliberately done or attempted, whereby his life may be endangered. Fost. 195.

It hath been adjudged, that he who intended by force to prescribe laws to the King, and to restrain him of his power, doth intend to deprive him of his Crown and life; that if a man be ignorant of the intention of those who take up arms against the King, if he join in any action with them, he is guilty of Treason; and that the Law construeth every rebellion to be a plot against the King's life, and a deposing him, because a rebel would not suffer that King to reign and live, who will punish him for rebellion. Moor 620: 2 Salk. 63.

How far mere words, spoken by an individual, and not relative to any treasonable act or design then in agitation, shall amount to Treason, has been formerly matter of doubt. Two instances occurred in the reign of Edward IV. of persons executed for treasonable words: The one a citizen of London, who said he would make his Son Heir of the Crown, being the sign of the house in which he lived; the other a gentleman, whose favourite Buck the King killed in hunting, whereupon he wished it, horns and all, in the King's belly. These were esteemed hard cases; and the Chief Justice Markham rather chose to leave his place than assent to the latter judgment. 1 Hal. P. C. 115.

It was resolved in the trial of the Regicides, that though a man cannot be indicted of High Treason for words only, yet if he be indicted for compassing the King's death, these words may be laid as an overt act, to prove that he compassed the death of the King; and to support this opinion, the case of a person was cited who was indicted of Treason, anno 9 Car. I., for that he, being the King's Subject at Lisbon, used these words: "I will kill the King, (innuendo King Charles,) if I may come to him;" and afterwards he came into England for that purpose; and two merchants proving that he spoke the words, for that his traiterous intent, and the wicked imagination of his heart was declared by these words, it was held to be High Treason by the Common Law, and within the statute of the 25 Ed. 3. c. 2: Cro Car. 242: 1 Lev. 57.

But now it seems clearly to be agreed, that, by the Common Law, and the statute of Edward III., words spoken amount only to a High Misdemesnor, and no Treason: For they may be spoken in heat, without any intention; or be mistaken, perverted, or misremembered by the hearers; their meaning depends always on their connexion with other words, and things; they may signify differently even according to the tone of voice with which they are delivered; and sometimes silence itself is more expressive than any discourse. As therefore there can be nothing more equivocal and ambiguous than words, it would indeed be unreasonable to make them amount to High Treason. And accordingly, in 4 Car. I on a reference to all the Judges, concerning some very atrocious words spoken by one Pyne, they certified to the King, "That though the words were as wicked as might be, yet they were no Treason; for, unless it be by some particular statute, no words will be Treason." Cro. Car. 125. See 1 Hal. P. C. 111—120; 320—322: Fost. 196—207. From which authorities it may be concluded, that bare words are not overt acts of Treason, unless uttered in contemplation of some traiterous purpose actually on foot or intended; and in prosecution of it: As if they are attended or followed by a consultation, meeting, or any act, then they will be evidence, or a confession of the intent of such meeting, consultation, or act.

Ever since the Revolution, it has been the constant practice, where a person, by treasonable discourses, has manifested a design to murder or depose the King, to convict him upon such evidence. And Chief Justice Holt was of opinion, that express words were not necessary to convict a man of High Treason; but if, from the tenor of his discourse, the Jury were satisfied he was engaged in a design against the King's life, this was sufficient to convict the prisoner. 4 State Trials 172.

If the words be set down in writing, it argues more deliberate intention; and it has been held that writing is an overt act of Treason; for scribere est agere But even in this case the bare words are not the Treason, but the deliberate act of writing them. And such writing, though unpublished, has in some arbitrary reigns convicted its author of Treason; particularly in the cases of one Peacham, a Clergyman, for treasonable passages in a sermon never preached; and of Algernon Sydney, for some papers found in his closet; which, had they been plainly relative to any previous formed design of dethroning or murdering the King, might doubtless have been properly read in evidence as overt acts of that Treason, which was specially laid in the indictment Foster 198. But being merely speculative, without any intention (so far as appeared) of making any public use of them, the convicting the authors of Treason upon such an insufficient foundation has been universally disapproved. Peacham was therefore pardoned; and though Sydney indeed was executed, yet it was to the general discontent of the Nation; and his attainder was afterwards reversed by Parliament. There was then no manner of doubt, but that the publication of such a treasonable writing was a sufficient overt act of Treason at the Common Law; though, of late, even that has been questioned. 1 Hal. P. C. 118: 1 Hawk. P. C c. 17. § 32, 45.

2. The next species of Treason to be considered is, "If a man do levy war against our Lord the King in his realm." And this may be done by taking arms, not only to dethrone the King, but under pretence to reform Religion or the Laws, or to remove evil Counsellors, or other grievances, whether real or pretended. 1 Hawk. P. C c 17. § 25. So it was held, in the case of Lord G. Gordon, that an attempt, by intimidation and violence, to force the repeal of a Law, is a levying war against the King, and High Treason. Dougl. 570. For the Law does not, neither can it, permit any private man, or set of men, to interfere forcibly in matters of such high importance; especially as it has established a sufficient power, for these purposes, in the High Court of Parliament. Neither does the Constitution justify any private or particular resistance, for private or particular grievances; though, in cases of national oppression, the Nation has very justifiably risen as one man, to vindicate the original contract subsisting between the King and his People. To resist the King's forces, by defending defending a Castle against them, is a levying of war; and so is an insurrection, with an avowed design to pull down all inclosures, all brothels, and the like; the universality of the design making it a rebellion against the State, and usurpation of the powers of Government, and an insolent invasion of the King's authority. 1 Hal. P. C. 132. But a tumult, with a view to pull down a particular house, or lay open a particular inclosure, amounts at most to a Riot; this being no general defiance of public Government. So, if two Subjects quarrel and levy war against each other, it is only a great Riot and Contempt, and no Treason. Thus it happened between the Earls of Hereford and Gloucester, in 20 Edward I., who raised each a little army, and committed outrages upon each other's lands, burning houses, attended with the loss of many lives; yet this was held to be no High Treason, but only a great misdemesnor. 1 Hal. P. C. 136.

But in the case of a great riot in London by the Apprentices there, some whereof being imprisoned, the rest conspired to kill the Lord Mayor, and release their comrades; and, in order to it, to provide themselves with armour, by breaking open two houses near the Tower: They marched with a cloak on a pole, instead of an ensign, towards the Lord Mayor's house; and in the way, meeting with opposition from the Sheriffs, resisted them: This was held levying of war, and Treason. Sid. 358.

Those who make an insurrection in order to redress a public grievance, whether it be a real or pretended one, are said to levy war against the King, although they have no direct design against his person; as they are for doing that by private authority, which he by public justice ought to do, which manifestly tends to a rebellion. For example; where great numbers by force endeavour to remove certain persons from the King, or to lay violent hands on a Privy Counsellor, or revenge themselves against a Magistrate for executing his office, or to deliver men out of prison, expel foreigners, or to reform the Law of Religion, to pull down all bawdy-houses, to throw down all inclosures in general, &c. But where a number of men rise to remove a grievance to their private interest, as to pull down a particular inclosure, they are only Rioters; for there is a difference between a pretence that is public and general, and one that is private and particular. 3 Inst. 9: H. P. C. 14: Kel. 75: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. § 25.

It was resolved by all the Judges of England, in the reign of King Henry VIII., that an insurrection against the statute of Labourers, for raising their wages, was a levying of war against the King; because it was generally against the King's Law, and the offenders took upon them the reformation thereof. Read. Statutes, vol. 5. p. 150. Not only such as directly rebel and take up arms against the King, but also those who in a violent manner withstand his lawful authority, or attempt to reform his Government, do levy war against him; and therefore, to hold a Fort or Castle against the King's forces, or keep together armed men in great numbers against the King's express command, have been adjudged a levying of war, and Treason. But those who join themselves to rebels, &c. for fear of death, and return the first opportunity, are not guilty of this offence. 3 Inst. 10: Kel. 76.

A person in arms was sent for by some of the Council from the King, and to give in the names of those that were armed with him; but he refused, and continued in arms in his house; and it was held Treason. Also, where one went with a troop of Captains and others into London, to pray help of the City to save his life, and bring him to Court to the Queen, though there was no intent of hurt to her, was adjudged Treason; and in them who joined with him, though they knew nothing but only a difference between him and some Courtiers. So if any man shall attempt to strengthen himself so far, that the Prince cannot resist him. E. of Essex's Case, Moor 620.

A bare conspiracy to levy war does not amount to this species of Treason; but, if particularly pointed at the person of the King or his Government, it falls within the first, of compassing or imagining the King's death. 3 Inst. 9: Foster 211, 213.

By the Common Law, levying war against the King was Treason: But as, in cases of High Treason, there must be an overt act, therefore it is that a conspiracy, or compassing to levy war, is no overt act, unless a war is actually levied; though if a war is actually levied, then the conspirators are all Traitors, although they are not in arms. And a conspiracy to levy war will be evidence of an overt act to maintain an indictment for compassing the King's death; but if the indictment be for levying war only, proof must be made that a war was levied, to bring the offender under this clause of the statute. 3 Inst. 8, 9: H. P. C. 14. If two or more conspire to levy war, and one of them alone raises forces, this shall be adjudged Treason in all. Dyer 98.

3. "If a man be adherent to the King's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm, or elsewhere," he is also declared guilty of High Treason. This must likewise be proved by some overt act, as by giving them intelligence, by lending them provisions, by selling them arms, by treacherously surrendering a fortress, or the like. 3 Inst. 10. Sending intelligence to the enemy of the destinations and designs of this Kingdom, in order to assist them in their operations against us, or in defence of themselves, is High Treason, although such correspondence should be intercepted. 1 Burr. 650. So sending any intelligence to the enemy, in order to serve them in shaping their attack or defence, though its object be to dissuade them from an invasion, is High Treason. 6 Term Rep. 529.

Officers or Soldiers of this realm, holding correspondence with any rebel, or enemy to the King, or giving them any advice, information by letter, message, &c. are declared guilty of Treason by stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 20.

By Enemies are here understood the Subjects of foreign Powers with whom we are at open war. As to foreign Pirates or Robbers who may happen to invade our coasts, without any open hostilities between their nation and our own, and without any commission from any Prince or State at enmity with the Crown of Great Britain, the giving them any assistance is also clearly Treason; either in the light of adhering to the public enemies of the King and kingdom, or else in that of levying war against his Majesty. Foster 219. And, most indisputably, the same acts of adherence or aid which, when applied to foreign enemies, will constitute Treason under this branch of the statute, will, when afforded to our own Fellow-subjects in actual rebellion at home, amount to High Treason, under the description of levying war against the King. Fost. 216. But to relieve a rebel, fled out of the kingdom, is no Treason; for the statute is taken strictly, and a rebel is not an enemy; an enemy being always the subject of some foreign Prince, and one who owes no allegiance to the Crown of England 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. § 28. And if a person be under circumstances of actual force and constraint, through a well-grounded apprehension of injury to his life or person, this fear or compulsion will excuse his even joining with either rebels or enemies in the kingdom, provided he leaves them whenever he hath a safe opportunity. Foster 216. See ante I.

The delivery or surrender of the King's Castles or Forts, by the Captains thereof, to the King's enemy, within the realm or without, for reward, &c. is an adhering to the King's enemies. A Lieutenant of Ireland let several rebels out of Dublin Castle, and discharged some Irish hostages which had been given for securing the peace; and for this he was attainted of High Treason in adhering to the King's enemies. 33 H. 8. Adhering to the King's enemies out of the realm is Treason; but such adherence out of the realm must be alleged in some place in England. 3 Inst. 10: H. P. C. 14: Dyer 298, 310. If there be war between the King of England and France, those Englishmen that live in France before the war, and continue there after, are not merely upon that account adherents to the King's enemies, to be guilty of Treason, unless they actually assist in such war; or at least refuse to return into England upon a Privy Seal, or on Proclamation and notice thereof; and this refusal is but evidence of an adherence, and not so in itself. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 165. Adhering to the King's enemies is an adhering against him; and English Subjects joining with rebel Subjects of the King's Allies, and fighting with them under the command of an alien enemy Prince, are guilty of Treason in adhering to the King's enemies: So cruising in a ship with intent to destroy the King's ships, without doing any act of hostility, is an overt act of adhering, comforting, and aiding; for where an Englishman lists himself and marches, this is [illegible], without coming to battle or actual fighting. [illegible]

[illegible] 33 Geo. 3. c. 27, called the Traiterous Correspondence Act, it was enacted, that if any person residing in Great Britain should, during the war with France, either on his own account or on account of any other person whatsoever, buy, sell, procure, or send, or assist in so doing, for the use of the French armies, or of any persons resident within the dominions of France, any ordnance, stores, iron, lead, or copper, except cutlery ware, not being arms, and except buttons, buckles, japanned wares, toys and trinkets, [illegible] any bank notes, gold, or silver, or any provisions [illegible], or any clothing for the [illegible] or [illegible] any leather wrought or unwrought, without licence from the King or Privy Council, he shall be guilty of High Treason. And that every British Subject, who should purchase, or enter into any agreement for any land or real property in France, should also be guilty of High Treason.

4. The Legislature, in the reign of Edward III., was not only careful to specify and reduce to a certainty the vague notions of Treason that had formerly prevailed; but the statute goes on to state, that, "Because other like cases of Treason may happen in time to come, which cannot be thought of nor declared at present, it is accorded, that if any other case supposed to be Treason, which is not above specified, doth happen before any Judge: the Judge shall tarry, without going to judgment of the Treason, till the cause be shewed and declared before the King and his Parliament, whether it ought to be judged Treason, or other felony." Sir Matthew Hale is very high in his encomiums on the great wisdom and care of the Parliament, in thus keeping Judges within the proper bounds and limits of this act; by not suffering them to run out (upon their own opinions) into constructive Treasons, though in cases that seem to them to have a like parity of reason; but reserving them to the decision of Parliament. This is a great security to the Public, the Judges, and even this sacred act itself; and leaves a weighty memento to Judges to be careful and not overhasty in letting in Treasons by construction or interpretation, especially in new cases that have not been resolved and settled. 2. He observes, that as the authoritative decision of these casus omissi is reserved to the King and Parliament, the most regular way to do it is by a new declarative act; and therefore the opinion of any one or of both Houses, though of very respectable weight, is not that solemn declaration referred to by this act, as the only criterion for judging of future Treasons. 1 Hal. P. C. 259: 4 Comm. c. 6

Many subtleties having been made use of, in the defence of several persons indicted for High Treason in 1794, (see title Jury V. 1;) to evade the meaning, direct or constructive, of the above statute, 25 E. 3; and doubts being entertained, in consequence, how far the words of that act were applicable, with sufficient explicitness, to the modern treasonable attempts to overturn the Constitution, by means of tumultuous assemblies of the People; (see title Riot II.) The publication and dispersion of inflammatory works and speeches, against all the branches of the Legislature having increased to an enormous and very alarming degree, "with unremitted industry, and with a transcendent boldness:" The project of overawing Parliament, by means of Mobs and their leaders, having been repeatedly avowed: And, finally, his Majesty King George III. having been violently attacked, the windows of his coach broken, and his person put in imminent danger, as he was proceeding to open the Parliament on the 29th of October 1795; the Legislature thought the following act absolutely necessary to explain and enlarge the clauses of the statute 25 E. 3, relative to the Treasons enumerated in the three preceding divisions.

It is therefore enacted, by the stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 7, (the recital of which alludes to the transactions just mentioned,) "That if any person, during the life of his present Majesty, and until the end of the next Session of Parliament, after a demise of the Crown, shall, within the realm or without, compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend death or destruction, or any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, imprisonment or restraint of the person of the King, his Heirs and Successors: Or to deprive or depose him or them from the style, honour, or kingly name of the Imperial Crown of this this Realm, or of any other of his dominions: Or to levy war against his Majesty, his Heirs, and Successors within this Realm, in order, by force or constraint, to compel him or them to change his or their measures or Councils, or in order to put any force or constraint upon, or to intimidate or overawe, BOTH HOUSES, OR EITHER HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT: Or to move or stir any foreigner with force to invade this realm, or any other of his Majesty's dominions; and such compassings, &c. shall express, utter, or declare, by publishing any printing or writing, or by any overt act or deed," the offender shall be deemed a Traitor, and punished accordingly. The benefits of stats. 7 W. 3. c. 3; 7 Ann. c. 11, (see post. V. 2,) are reserved to the offenders; and the act does not extend to prevent any prosecutions at Common Law.

5. The killing of the King's Chancellor, Treasurer, Justices of either Bench, &c. declared to be Treason, relates to no other officers of State besides those expresly named; and to them only when they are in actual execution of their offices, representing the person of the King, and it doth not extend to any attempt to kill, or wounding them, &c. 3 Inst. 18, 38: H. P. C. 17. The places for the Justices to do their offices, are the Courts themselves, where they usually, or by adjournment, sit for dispatch of the business of their Courts. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 232. See titles Judges; Privy Council.

By stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, it is made High Treason to slay any of the Lords of Session in Scotland, or Lords of Justiciary, sitting in judgment; or to counterfeit the King's Seals appointed by the Act of Union. See post. 7.

6. It is also a species of Treason, under this statute 25 Ed. 3. "if a man do violate the King's Companion, or the King's eldest Daughter unmarried, or the Wife of the King's eldest Son and Heir." By the King's Companion is meant his Wife; and by violation is understood carnal knowledge, as well without force as with it; and this is High Treason in both parties, if both be consenting, as some of the Wives of Henry VIII. by fatal experience evinced. The plain intention of this Law is to guard the Blood Royal from any suspicion of bastardy, whereby the succession to the Crown might be rendered dubious; and therefore, when this reason ceases, the Law (generally speaking) ceases with it; for to violate a Queen or Princess Dowager is held to be no Treason. 3 Inst. 9. But it has been remarked, that the instances specified in the statute do not prove much consistency in the application of this Treason; for there is no protection given to the Wives of the younger Sons of the King, though their issue must inherit the Crown before the issue of the King's eldest Daughter; and her chastity is only inviolable before marriage, whilst her children would be clearly illegitimate. 4 Comm. c. 6, n.

The eldest Daughter of the King is such a Daughter as is eldest not married at the time of the violation, which will be Treason, although there was an elder Daughter than her, who died without issue; for now the elder alive has a right to the inheritance of the Crown, upon failure of issue male. Violating the Queen's person, &c. was High Treason at Common Law, by reason it destroyed the certainty of the King's issue, and consequently raised contention about the succession. H. P. C. 16.

As a Queen Dowager after the death of her husband, is not a Queen within the statute; for though she bears the title, and hath many prerogatives answering the dignity of her person, yet she is not the King's Wife or Companion: So a Queen divorced from the King a vinculo matrimonii, is no Queen within this act, although the King be living; which was the case of Queen Katharine, who, after twenty years' marriage with King Henry VIII., was divorced causâ affinitatis. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 124.

7. "If a man counterfeit the King's Great or Privy Seal," this is also High Treason. But if a man takes wax bearing the impression of the Great Seal off from one patent, and fixes it to another, this is held to be only an abuse of the Seal, and not a counterfeiting of it: as was the case of a certain Chaplain, who in such manner framed a dispensation for non-residence. But the knavish artifice of a Lawyer much exceeded this of the Divine. One of the Clerks in Chancery glewed together two pieces of parchment; on the uppermost of which he wrote a patent, to which he regularly obtained the Great Seal, the label going through both the skins. He then dissolved the cement; and taking off the written patent, on the blank skin wrote a fresh patent, of a different import from the former, and published it as true. This was held no counterfeiting of the Great Seal, but only a great misprision; and Coke mentions it with some indignation, that the party was living at that day. 3 Inst. 16: 4 Comm. c. 6.

Counterfeiting the King's Seal was Treason by the Common Law; and the stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 2, mentions only the Great Seal and Privy Seal; for the counterfeiting of the Sign Manual, or Privy Signet, is not Treason within that act, but by stat. 1 Mary, st. 2. c. 6, those who aid and consent to the counterfeiting of the King's Seal are equally guilty with the actors: But an intent or compassing to counterfeit the Great Seal, if it be not actually done, is not Treason; there must be an actual counterfeiting, and it is to be generally like the King's Great Seal. 3 Inst. 15: S. P. C. 3: H. P. C. 18. This branch of the statute does not extend to the affixing the Great Seal to a patent, without a warrant for so doing; nor to the rasing any thing out of a patent, and adding new matter therein; yet this, like the taking off the wax impressed by the Great Seal, from one patent, and fixing it to another, though it be not a counterfeiting, has been adjudged a misprision of the highest degree: And a person guilty of an act of this nature, with relation to a commission for levying money, &c., had judgment to be drawn and hanged. 2 H. 4: 3 Inst. 16: Kel 80. Till a new Great Seal is made, the old one of a late King, being used and employed as such, is the King's Seal within the statute; notwithstanding its variance in the inscription, portraiture, and other substantials: When an old Great Seal is broken, the counterfeiting of that Seal, and applying it to an instrument of that date wherein it stood, or to any patent, &c. without date, is Treason. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 177. The adding a Crown in a counterfeit Privy Signet, which was not in the true; and omitting some words of the inscription, and inserting others, done purposely to make a little difference, alters not the case, but it is High Treason; being published on a feigned patent to be true, &c. 1 Hal. P. C. 184.

8. The last species of Treason under this statute, according to our present division, is, "If a man counterfeit the King's money; and if a man bring false money into the realm counterfeit to the money of England, knowing the money to be false, to merchandize and make payment withal." As to the first branch, counterfeiting the King's money; this is Treason, whether the false money be uttered in payment or not. Also, if the King's own minters alter the standard or alloy established by Law, it is Treason. But gold and silver money only are held to be within the statute. With regard likewise to the second branch, importing foreign counterfeit money, in order to utter it here; it is held that uttering it, without importing it, is not within the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. § 55. See this Dictionary, title Coin.

If A. counterfeit money, and another vent the same for his own benefit, he is not guilty of Treason; for it is only a cheat and misdemesnor in him, punishable by fine and imprisonment: But if one counterfeits the King's money, though he never vents it, this is a counterfeiting, and Treason within the statute. And if any man doth counterfeit the lawful coin of this kingdom in a great measure, but with some variation in the impression, &c. yet it is counterfeiting of the King's money; and shall not evade the statute. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 214, 215.

False money brought into this kingdom, counterfeited like the money of England, must be knowingly brought over from some foreign nation, not from any place subject to the Crown of England; and must be uttered in payment. 3 Inst. 18. See title Coin.

IV. IN CONSEQUENCE of the power, not indeed originally granted by the statute of Edward III., but constitutionally inherent in every subsequent Parliament, (which cannot be abridged of any rights by the act of a precedent one,) the Legislature was extremely liberal in declaring new Treasons in the unfortunate reign of King Richard II.; as, particularly, the killing of an Ambassador was made so; which seems to be founded upon better reason than the multitude of other points, that were then strained up to this high offence: The most arbitrary and absurd of all which was by the stat. 21 Ric. 2. c. 3, which made the bare purpose and intent of killing or deposing the King, without any overt act to demonstrate it, High Treason. And yet so little effect have over-violent laws to prevent any crime, that within two years afterwards this very Prince was both deposed and murdered. And in the first year of his successor's reign, an act was passed, reciting "That no man knew how he ought to behave himself, to do, speak, or say, for doubt of such pains of Treason: And therefore it was accorded, that in no time to come any Treason be judged, otherwise than was ordained by the statute of King Edward the Third." This at once swept away the whole load of extravagant Treasons introduced in the time of Richard the Second. Stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 10.

But afterwards, between the reign of Henry IV. and Queen Mary, and particularly in the bloody reign of Henry VIII., the spirit of inventing new and strange Treasons was revived; among which we may reckon the offences of clipping money; breaking prison or rescue, when the prisoner is committed for Treason; burning houses to extort money; stealing cattle by Welch-men; counterfeiting foreign coin; wilful poisoning; execrations against the King: calling him opprobrious names by public writing; counterfeiting the Sign Manual or Signet; refusing to abjure the Pope; deflowering, or marrying without the Royal Licence, any of the King's Children, Sisters, Aunts, Nephews, or Nieces; bare solicitation of the chastity of the Queen or Princess, or advances made by themselves; marrying with the King, by a Woman not a Virgin, without previously discovering to him such her unchaste life; judging or believing (manifested by any overt act) the King to have been lawfully married to Anne of Cleve; derogating from the King's Royal Style and Title; impugning his Supremacy; and assembling riotously to the number of twelve, and not dispersing upon Proclamation: All which new-fangled Treasons were totally abrogated by the stat. 1 Mar. st. 1. c. 1, which once more reduced all Treasons to the standard of the statute 25 Edw. III. Since which time, though the Legislature has been more cautious in creating new offences of this kind, yet the number has been very considerably increased; these new Treasons may be comprised under three heads. 1. Such as relate to Papists. See that title.—2. Such as relate to falsifying the Coin or other Royal Signatures. See title Coin, and ante, Div. 7, 8.—3. Such as are created for the security of the Protestant succession to the Throne in the House of Hanover.—With respect to this latter, it may be necessary to state something in this place, in addition to what is said under title King I.

After the Act of Settlement (stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2,) was made, for transferring the Crown to the illustrious House of Hanover, it was enacted by stat. 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 3, that the pretended Prince of Wales, who was then thirteen years of age, and had assumed the title of King James III., should be attainted of High Treason; and it was made High Treason for any of the King's Subjects, by letters, messages, or otherwise, to hold correspondence with him, or any person employed by him, or to remit any money for his use, knowing the same to be for his service.—And by stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39, it was enacted, that if any of the Sons of the Pretender should land or attempt to land in this kingdom, or be found in Great Britain, or Ireland, or any of the dominions belonging to the same, he should be judged attainted of High Treason, and suffer the pains thereof. And to correspond with them, or to remit money for their use, was made High Treason in the same manner as it was to correspond with the father. By stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 17, if any person shall endeavour to deprive or hinder any person, being the next in succession to the Crown, according to the limitations of the Act of Settlement, from succeeding to the Crown, and shall maliciously and directly attempt the same by any overt act, such offence shall be High Treason.—And by stat. 6 Ann. c. 7, if any person shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by writing or printing, maintain and affirm, that any other person hath any right or title to the Crown of this realm, otherwise than according to the Act of Settlement; or that the Kings of this realm, with the authority of Parliament, are not able to make Laws and Statutes, to bind the Crown, and the Descent thereof; such person shall be guilty of High Treason. This offence (or indeed maintaining this doctrine in any wise, that the King and Parliament cannot limit the Crown) was once before made High Treason, by stat. 13 Eliz. c 1. during the life of that Princess. And after her decease it continued a high misdemesnor, punishable with forfeiture of goods and chattels, even in the most flourishing æra of indefeasible hereditary right and jure divino succession. But it was again raised into High Treason, by the statute of Anne before-mentioned, at the time of a projected invasion in favour of the then Pretender; and upon this statute one Matthews, a printer, was convicted and executed in 1719, for printing a treasonable pamphlet intitled Vox populi vox Dei. 4 Comm c. 6.

V. 1. Though the offence of Treason is not within the letter of the commission of Justices of the Peace, yet because it is against the peace of the King and of the Realm, any Justice may upon his own knowledge, or the complaint of others, cause any person to be apprehended, and commit him to prison. And the Justice may take the examination of the person apprehended, and the information of those who can give material evidence against him, and put the same in writing, and also bind over those, who can give any material evidence, to the Justices of Oyer and Terminer, or Gaol-delivery; and certify the proceedings to that Court where he binds over the informers. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 8. See title Justices of the Peace.

A Justice having no power to bail the offender, must commit him: and it may be advisable to send an account immediately to one of the Secretaries of State. The Court of King's Bench, having power to bail in all cases what soever, may admit a person to bail for Treason done upon the High Seas: or a person committed for High Treason generally, if four terms have elapsed, and no prosecution commenced. Holt 83: 1 Stra. 2. The commitment may be for High Treason generally; and it is not necessary to express the overt act in the warrant.

The regular and legal way of proceeding in cases of Treason, and misprision of Treason, is by indictment. An Information cannot be brought in capital cases, nor for misprision of Treason. Anciently an appeal of High Treason, by one Subject against another, was permitted in the Courts of Common Law, and in Parliament; and if committed beyond the Seas, in the Court of the High Constable and Marshal. See title Appeal.—And as to proceedings by Impeachment, see that title.

By the Common Law, no Grand Jurors can indict any offence whatsoever, which does not arise within the limits of the precincts for which they are returned; therefore they are enabled, by several statutes, to inquire of Treasons committed out of the county. See title Indictment II.

Offenders guilty of High Treason by being concerned in the rebellion in the first year of King Geo. I. were to be tried before such Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-delivery, and in such county as his Majesty by any Commission under the Great Seal should appoint, by lawful men of the same county, as if the fact had been there committed: This extended only to persons actually in arms. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 33.

The Venue, or place laid in the indictment where the offence was committed, must generally be laid in that county where the offence was actually committed, unless a statute gives a power to the contrary. If Treason is committed in several counties, the Venue may be laid in any one of them. 4 Sta. Tri. 640. If Treason is committed out of the realm, the Venue may be laid in any county within the realm, where the Treason is appointed to be inquired into. See title Indictment.

Wales is within the kingdom of England. But if any Treason respecting the Coin is committed in Wales, the Venue may be changed to the next adjoining county in England, where the King's Writs run. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. §. 41. See stat. 26 H. 8. c. 6. In Chedley's case, who was indicted for Petit Treason, it was doubted whether a certiorari lay to remove the indictment from the Grand Sessions at Anglesea into an adjoining county. Cro. Car. 331. But it seems a certiorari may issue for a special purpose, as to quash the indictment for insufficiency; or to plead a pardon; but not as to trial of the fact, but it must be sent down by mittimus. 1 Hale P C. 158.

By stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, if Treason is committed by any native of Scotland, upon the High Seas, or in any place out of the realm of Great Britain, it may be inquired of in any shire or county, that is assigned by the commission. Therefore the Venue may be laid in such county, as if the Treason was actually committed there.

This stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, also enacted, that the crimes of High Treason, and Misprision of Treason, shall be exactly the same in England and Scotland: and that no acts in Scotland (except slaying the Lords of Session, &c. see ante, Div. 5.) shall be construed High Treason in Scotland, which are not High Treason in England.—And all persons prosecuted in Scotland for High Treason, or Misprision of Treason, shall be tried by a Jury, and in the same manner as if they had been prosecuted for the same crime in England.

It has been resolved, that if Treason is committed in Ireland, it may be laid and tried in England, in pursuance of stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 2: 1 Sta. Tri. 189. In the case of Lord Macguire, the Venue was laid in Middlesex, though the war was levied against the King in Ireland. 1 St. Tr. 950. But see title Ireland.

The Indictment must be drawn with great form and accuracy: For there can be no conviction of Treason, where the crime is not formally laid, even though the facts charged amount to Treason. 2 Sta. Tri. 808, 809. The day laid in the indictment is circumstance and form only, and not material in point of proof. Therefore the Jury are not bound to find the defendant guilty on that particular day; but may find the Treason to be committed either before or after the time laid. 3 Inst. 230: Kely. 16.

There must be a specific charge of Treason. And since the traiterous intent is the Gist of the indictment, the Treason must be laid to have been committed traiterously; this word being indispensably requisite. If the charge is for compassing the King's death, the words of the stat. 25 Ed. 3. (or stat. 36 Geo. 3. as the case may be) must be strictly pursued. The indictment must charge, that the defendant did traiterously compass and imagine, &c. And then proceed to lay the several overt acts, as the means employed for executing his traiterous purposes. Levying war may be charged as a distinct species of Treason, according to the statute; or it may be laid as an overt act of compassing.

There must be an overt act laid. It is not necessary that the overt act be laid to have been committed traiterously, because that is not the offence; but if the Treason consists not in the intention, but in the act, as levying war, then it must be laid to have been done traiterously.

traiterously. Cranburn's Case, 2 Salk. 633. It has been doubted, whether an overt act is required for any other species, except that of compassing or imagining the King's death; but since the words of stat. 25 Edw. 3. "and thereof be provably attainted by overt act," relate to all the Treasons, an overt act is required for each. 5 Sta. Tri. 21: 2 Salk. 634.

Though a specific overt act must be alleged, yet it is not necessary that the whole detail of evidence intended to be given should be set forth; it is sufficient that the charge be reduced to a reasonable certainty, so that the defendant be apprised of its nature. Neither is it necessary to prove the overt act committed on the particular day laid. Foster 194: 9 Sta. Tri. 607.

As there must be an overt act laid, so that which is laid must be proved; for if another act than what was laid was sufficient, the prisoner would never be provided to make his defence. But if more than one are laid, the proof of any one will maintain the indictment. Also if one overt act is proved, others may be given in evidence to aggravate the crime, and render it more probable. 1 Hale P. C. 121, 122.

It has been said that since every overt act of compassing is transitory, it may be proved in a different county from where the Treason is laid. Kel. 15. But in Layer's case, Chief Justice Pratt laid it down as clear Law, that there must be an overt act proved in the county where the indictment is laid; and that then the defendant may be charged with any overt act of the same species of Treason, in any county whatsoever. 6 State Trials 319.

The compassing is considered as the Treason, and the overt act as the method of effecting it.—As to what shall be considered as an overt act, see generally ante III. 1.

In Indictments upon the clause of the statute for levying war, which Sir Matthew Hale calls an obscure clause, it is not necessary to lay the day with precision. 9 Sta. Tri. 550. But there must be an overt act shewn in the indictment, upon which the Court may judge upon the question of fact, whether war is levied or conspired. And this is usually done by setting forth, that the insurgents were arrayed in a warlike manner, were armed, or were conspiring to procure arms for the purpose of arming themselves. 2 Vent. 316, Harding's Case.

2. If the Defendant is in custody before the finding of the Indictment, the next step is the arraignment. But if he absconds or secretes himself, still an indictment may be preferred against him in his absence; and if it is found, process issues to bring him into Court.

The first process is a Capias. At Common Law, in cases of Treason, there was but one capias; and as this has not been altered by statute, upon a non est inventus returned, an exigent is awarded, in order to proceed to outlawry. 2 Hale P. C. 194.

But if the indictment is originally taken in the King's Bench, the stat. 6 Hen. 6. c. 1. specially provides, that before any exigent awarded, the Court shall issue a capias to the Sheriff of the county where the indictment is taken, and another to the Sheriff of that county where the defendant is named in the indictment, having six weeks time or more before the return; and after these writs returned, the exigent to issue as before. 2 Hale P. C. 195.

A capias and exigent may issue against a Lord of Parliament; although, in civil cases, they cannot. 2 Hale P. C. 199.

If the offender is out of the realm, the process is of the same effect as if he was resident in the realm. Com. Dig. tit. Indictment, p. 513.

The punishment for Outlawries, upon indictments for misdemesnors, is the same as for Outlawries in civil actions. But an Outlawry in Treason amounts to a conviction and attainder of the offence charged in the indictment, as much as if the offender was found guilty by his country. See title Outlawry.

By stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 11, a party within one year after the outlawry for Treason, may surrender himself to the Chief Justice of England, and traverse the indictment, and being found thereon not guilty, shall be acquitted.

By the word proveably (or probably) attainted, in the stat. 25 E. 3. a person ought to be convicted of the Treason on direct and manifest proofs, and not upon presumptions or inferences; and the word attainted necessarily implies, that the prisoner be proceeded against and attainted according to due course of Law; wherefore, if a man be killed in open war against the King, or be put to death arbitrarily, or by Martial Law, and be not attainted of Treason, according to the Common Law, he forfeits nothing; for which cause some persons, killed in open rebellion against the King, have been attainted by Act of Parliament. 3 Inst. 12.

The next proceeding is the arraignment, but previous to this, and the trial, the prisoner is entitled to many important privileges, conferred upon him by the stats. 7 Will. 3. c. 3; 7 Ann. c. 21; which are the standard for regulating trials, in cases of Treason and Misprision.

By the stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, which extends to all cases of High Treason, whereby corruption of blood may ensue, (except Treason in counterfeiting the King's Coin or Seals,) or Misprision of such Treason, it is enacted, First, That no person shall be tried for any such Treason, except an attempt to assassinate the King, unless the indictment be found within three years after the offence committed: Next, That the prisoner shall have a copy of the indictment, (which includes the caption,) but not the names of the witnesses, five days at least before the trial; that is, upon the true construction of the act, before his arraignment; for then is his time to take any exceptions thereto, by way of plea or demurrer. See Fost. 229, 230: Doug. 590. Thirdly, That he shall also have a copy of the panel or jurors two days before his trial: And, lastly, that he shall have the same compulsive process to bring in his witnesses for him, as was usual to compel their appearance against him. And, by stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, (which did not take place till after the decease of the late Pretender,) all persons, indicted for High Treason or Misprision thereof, shall have, not only a copy of the indictment, but a list of all the Witnesses to be produced, and of the Jurors impanelled, with their professions and places of abode, delivered to him ten days before the trial, and in the presence of two witnesses; the better to prepare him to make his challenges and defence. But this last act, so far as it affected indictments for the inferior species of High Treason, respecting the Coin and the Royal Seals, is repealed by stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 53; else it had been impossible to have tried those offences in the same circuit in which they are indicted: For ten clear days, between the finding and the trial of the indictment, will exceed the time usually allotted for any Session of Oyer and Terminer. Fost. 250.

It is the practice to deliver the copy of the indictment, and the list of witnesses and jurors, ten clear days, exclusive of the day of delivery and the day of trial: and of intervening Sundays previous to the trial. Fost. 2; 230.

We cannot help inserting in this place the opinion of the just and venerable Judge Foster, on the subject of the indulgence given to prisoners accused of High Treason, by the above statutes. No one will dare to suggest that that eminent writer on Crown Law, was, in the least degree, an advocate for oppression or arbitrary power.

The furnishing the prisoner with the names, professions, and places of abode of the witnesses and Jury, so long before the trial, may serve many bad purposes, which are too obvious to be mentioned; one good purpose, and but one, it may serve. It giveth the prisoner an opportunity of informing himself of the character of the witnesses and Jury. But this single advantage will weigh very little in the scale of justice or sound policy, against the many bad ends that may be answered by it. However, if it weigheth any thing in the scale of justice, the Crown is entitled to the same opportunity of sifting the character of the prisoner's witnesses. Fost. 250.

Equal justice is certainly due to the Crown and the Public. For, let it be remembered, that the Public is deeply interested in every prosecution of this kind, that is well founded. Or shall we presume that all the management, all the practising upon the hopes or fears of witnesses, lieth on one side? It is true, power is on the side of the Crown: May it, for the sake of the constitutional rights of the Subject, always remain where the wisdom of the Law hath placed it! But in a Government like ours, and in a most changeable climate, Power, if, in criminal prosecutions it is but suspected [illegible] at oppression, generally disarmeth itself. It [illegible] and giveth countenance to a spirit of opposition [illegible] falling in with the pride or weakness of some, the false patriotism of others, and the sympathy of all, not to mention private attachments and party connections, generally turns the scale to the favourable side; and frequently against the justice of the case. Fost. 251.

If there is any objection to the copy, as if it does not appear before whom the indictment was taken, or that it was taken at all, or in what place, this must be objected to before the plea. For the copy is given the prisoner to enable him to plead; therefore, by pleading, he admits that he has had a copy, sufficient for the purpose intended by the act. 4 Sta. Tri. 668.

The reason of giving the prisoner a copy of the panel is, that he may inquire into the characters and qualifications of the Jury, and make what challenges he thinks fit. But the copy may be delivered antecedent to the panel returned by the Sheriff. For if he has a copy of the panel arrayed by the Sheriff, which is afterwards returned into Court, and there is no variation from it, the end and intent of the act is entirely pursued. 4 Sta. Tri. 649, 663, 664: 2 Doug. 590.

By the same stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, the prisoner is allowed to make his defence by Counsel. And the Court is authorised to assign him Counsel, not more than two in number, who shall have free access to him at all seasonable hours. The Counsel are to assist him throughout the trial, to examine his witnesses, and to conduct his whole defence, as well in points of fact, as upon questions of law. And this indulgence is extended to cases of Impeachment in Parliament, by stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 30.

3. The Arraignment is the calling the prisoner to the bar of the Court, to answer to the matter charged in the indictment. Upon this, the indictment being read, it is demanded of the prisoner what he saith to the indictment; who either confesses, stands mute, pleads, or demurs.

A plea to the jurisdiction is where the indictment is taken before a Court, that has no cognizance of the offence. Fitzharris, in the Court of King's Bench, pleaded to the jurisdiction of the Court, that he was impeached of High Treason, by the Commons of England in Parliament, before the Lords, and that the impeachment was still in force. But the Court, after taking time to consider, held that the plea was insufficient, to bar the Court of its jurisdiction. 3 Sta. Tri. 259, 260: 4 Sta. Tri. 167.

Lord Macguire, an Irish Peer, pleaded his privilege of Peerage, but the Court resolved he might be tried here. 1 Sta. Tri. 950: 4 Sta. Tri. 414.

Lord Preston pleaded his Peerage, at the Old Bailey, as a bar to the jurisdiction; the Court told him he must produce his patent of Peerage. The plea was overruled, for Lord Preston had disclaimed his right of Peerage in the House of Lords.

Lord Delamere was indicted for High Treason, before the Lord High Steward, during a prorogation of Parliament, and pleaded to the jurisdiction of the Court, that, as the Parliament was not dissolved, he ought to be tried by the whole body of the Peers; the plea was overruled. 4 Sta. Tri. 212, 215.

The stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. § 9, provides, that the indictment shall not be quashed for mis-writing, mis-spelling, or false or improper Latin, unless the exception is taken before any evidence is given.

Pleas in Bar are general or special. The General Issue is Not Guilty. Upon which the defendant is not merely confined to evidence in negation of the charge, but may offer any matter in justification or excuse. In short, the general issue goes to say, that the prisoner, under the circumstances, has not been guilty of the crime imputed to him.

Special Pleas in Bar are such as preclude the Court from discussing the merits of the indictment; either on account of a former acquittal, or of some subsequent matter, operating in discharge of the defendant.

A Pardon may be pleaded in bar, either on the arraignment, or in arrest of judgment, or in bar of execution. By stat. 13 R. 2. st. 2. c. 1, no pardon of High Treason is good, unless the crime is expressly specified. See title Pardon.

Sir H. Vane justified that what he did was by authority of Parliament; that the King was out of possession of the kingdom; and that the Parliament was the only governing power. But this was over-ruled by the Court. Kelyng. 14. Neither can a man plead, by way of justification, that what he did was se defendendo. 2 Hale P. C. 258.

A man may plead specially the limitation of the stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. § 5. that no man shall be indicted, tried, or or prosecuted for certain Treasons, unless within three years after it is committed. See ante V. 2.

A Demurrer admits the facts stated in the indictment, but refers the law arising upon them to the determination of the Court. As if the prisoner insists that the fact as stated is no Treason.

After plea, the Jurors are sworn, unless challenged by the party.

A peremptory challenge of thirty five Jurors, is at this day allowable in cases of High Treason. For though the stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 23, enacted, that in cases of High Treason or Misprision of Treason, a peremptory challenge should not be allowed: Yet the stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, enacts, that all trials for any Treason shall be according to the order and course of the Common Law, which allowed this privilege. 3 Inst. 27; 2 Hale P. C. 269: and see stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 3. § 2.

But by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12, which seems to be still in force, for Treasons committed in the King's household, and tried before the Lord Steward, all challenge, except for malice, is taken away. See 2 Hal. P. C. 272.; and further this Dictionary, title Jury.

After the Jury are sworn, and the indictment opened, the next step is proceeding to evidence of the charge.

The stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. § 2, enacts, that no person shall be indicted, tried, or attainted for High Treason or Misprision, except upon the oaths of two lawful witnesses; either both of them to the same overt act, or one of them to one, and the other to another overt act of the same Treason: unless the prisoner willingly, without violence, in open Court, confesses the same: or stands mute; or refuses to plead; or, in cases of High Treason, peremptorily challenges more than thirty-five of the Jury.

At Common Law, one positive witness was sufficient. But several statutes previous to the act of William required two; but a collateral fact, not tending to the proof of the overt acts, may be proved by one. 5 St. Tr. 29.

If two distinct heads of Treason are alleged in one bill of indictment, one witness produced to prove one of the Treasons, and another witness to prove another of the Treasons, are not two witnesses to the same Treason, according to the intent of the act.

As to the confession, there have been doubts whether the statute requires a confession upon the arraignment of the party; or a confession taken out of Court by a person authorised to take such examination. Evidence of a confession proved upon the trial by two witnesses has been held sufficient to convict, without farther proof of the overt acts. Foster 241. This point is however not clearly settled. But such confession out of Court is evidence admissible, proper to be left to a Jury, and will go in corroboration of other evidence to the overt acts.

In an indictment for compassing the King's death, the being armed with a dagger, for the purpose of killing the King, was laid as an overt act; and being armed with a pistol for the same purpose, as another overt act; it was held, that proving one overt act by one witness, and the other by a different witness, was good proof by two witnesses within the meaning of the act.

An overt act not laid may be given in evidence, if it be a direct proof of any of the overt acts that are laid. Foster 9. And after the overt act has been proved in the proper county, evidence of overt acts, though done in foreign counties, is admissible; and such evidence was given upon most of the trials after the rebellions of 1715 and 1745. Fost. 10.

The same rules of evidence are observable in cases of Parliamentary Impeachments, as in the ordinary Courts of Judicature.

We have seen that the prisoner is entitled by the act 7 W. 3. c. 3, to have a similar process of the Court to compel witnesses to appear for him, to that which is usually granted to compel witnesses to appear against him; and by stat. 1 An. st. 2. c. 9. § 3, the witnesses on the behalf of prisoners, before they give evidence, are to take an oath to depose the whole truth, &c. as the witnesses for the Crown are obliged to do. And if convicted of wilful perjury in their evidence, they shall suffer the usual punishment.

The Jury must be unanimous, and give their verdict in open Court. No privy verdict can be given. 2 H P. C. 300.

Upon the trial of Peers, in the Court of the Lord High Steward, a major vote is sufficient either to acquit or condemn; provided that vote amount to twelve or more. Kelyng. 56, 57. Therefore it has been usual to summon not less than twenty-three Peers. See title Peers.

After the trial and conviction, unless the prisoner has any thing to offer in arrest of judgment, the judgment of the Court is awarded.

The Punishment of High Treason, in general, is very solemn and terrible. 1. That the offender be drawn to the gallows, and not be carried, or walk; though usually (by connivance, at length ripened by humanity into law) a sledge or hurdle is allowed, to preserve the offender from the extreme torment of being dragged on the ground or pavement. 2. That he be hanged by the neck, and then cut down alive. 3. That his entrails be taken out, and burned, while he is yet alive. 4. That his head be cut off. 5. That his body be divided into four parts. 6. That his head and quarters be at the King's disposal. 4 Comm. c. 6.

The King may, and often doth, discharge all the punishment, except beheading, especially where any of noble blood are attainted. For, beheading being part of the judgment, that may be executed, though all the rest be omitted by the King's command. But where beheading is no part of the judgment, as in murder or other felonies, it hath been said that the King cannot change the judgment, although at the request of the party, from one species of death to another. See title Execution of Criminals.

In the case of Coining, which is a Treason of a different complexion from the rest, the punishment is milder for male offenders; being only to be drawn, and hanged by the neck till dead. But in Treasons of every kind, the punishment of Women is the same, and different from that of men. For, as the decency due to the sex forbids the exposing and publicly mangling their bodies, their sentence is now to be drawn to the gallows, and there to be hanged. See stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 48; and title JUDGMENT, Criminal.

Upon a writ of error to reverse an attainder in Treason, because the party convicted was not asked what he had to say why judgment should not be given against him, the attainder was reversed; for he might have a pardon, or some matter to move in arrest of judgment. 2 Salk. 630; 3 Mod. 265. And the omission of any necessary part of the judgment for Treason, is error sufficient to reverse an attainder, as it is more severe and formidable in Treason than for any other crime. 2 Salk. 632.

The consequences of this judgment are, attainder, forfeiture of all lands and tenements; and corruption of blood. Corruption of blood annihilates the powers of inheritance, both as to the offender and as to others. But stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39. § 3, enacts, that after the death of the sons of the late Pretender, no attainder of Treason shall extend to the disinheriting any heir, nor to the prejudice of any other person, except the offender himself. See titles Attainder; Forfeiture.

PETIT TREASON, Is where one, out of malice, takes away the life of a Subject, to whom he owes special obedience. And it is called Petit Treason in respect to High Treason, which is against the King. 3 Inst. 20. See title Homicide III. 4. Aiders, Abettors, and Procurers are within the stat. 25 E. 2; but if the killing is upon a sudden falling out, or se defendendo, &c. it is not Petit Treason; for persons accused of Petit Treason shall be adjudged not guilty, or principal and accessary, according to the rules of Law in other cases. H. P. C. 24.

If a Servant kills his Mistress, or the Wife of his Master, she is Master within the letter of the statute, and it is Petit Treason. But this statute is so strictly construed, that no case, which cannot be brought within the meaning of the words of it, shall be punished by it; and therefore, if a Son kills his Father, he shall not be tried for Petit Treason, except he served his Father for wages, &c., in which case he shall be indicted by the name of a Servant; and yet the offence is more heinous by far in a Child than a Servant. 3 Inst. 20: H. P. C. 23: 11 Rep. 34. A Servant procured another to kill his Master, who killed him in the Servant's presence; this was Petit Treason in the Servant, and murder in the other. If the Servant had been absent, the crime would not have been Petit Treason, but Murder, to which he would have been accessary. 3 Inst. 20: Moor 91. A Maid Servant and a stranger conspired to rob the Mistress; and in the night the Servant opened the door and let the stranger into the house, who killed her Mistress, she lighting him to her bed, but neither saying nor doing any thing, only holding the candle; and this was held Murder in the stranger, and Petit Treason in the Servant. Dyer 128.

If a Wife and a stranger kill the Husband, it is Petit Treason in the Wife, and Murder in the stranger. And so it is of an ecclesiastic person killing his Prelate, &c. Dalt. 337. If a Wife and her Servant conspire to kill the Husband, and appoint time and place for it, but the Servant alone in the absence of the Wife killeth him; it shall be Petit Treason in both: And if the Wife procure a Servant to kill the Husband, both are guilty of Petit Treason; also, if a stranger procures a Wife or Servant to kill the Husband or Master, he may be indicted as accessary to Petit Treason. Dyer 128, 332: Crompt. 41.

Where the Wife, and another who was not her Servant, conspired the death of the Husband, the indictment was, that the Wife proditoriè, and the other person felonicè, gave him poison, &c. whereof he died; and the Wife being acquitted on the indictment, she brought an action against her Son-in-law for a malicious prosecution, and recovered damages; but afterwards he brought an appeal of Murder against her, upon which she was convicted in B. R., and carried down into the county where the fact was done, and there executed. Cro. Car. 331, 382: Mod. Ca. 217: 3 Nels. Abr. 372. On a Divorce from the Husband for Adultery, a woman is a Wife within the statute to be guilty of Petit Treason against her Husband; for they may cohabit again. But where a man marries a second Wife, the former being alive, she is not within this Law. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 381.

If a Clergyman be ordained by the Bishop of A., and he kills that Bishop, it is Petit Treason, for he hath professed canonical obedience to him. And where a Parson hath benefices in two dioceses, if he kill the Bishop of either, it is Petit Treason; but in case he kill a Bishop out of the diocese where he is beneficed, it is only Murder. A Parson kills the Metropolitan of his province, this will be Petit Treason, though he be not his immediate Superior. 1 Hal. P. C. 381.

TREASURE-TROVE, Thesaurus inventus; French, trouvé, found.] Money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, found hidden in the earth or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown. In such case, the Treasure belongs to the King, and is part of his ordinary revenue; but if he that hid it be known, or afterwards found out, the owner, and not the King, is entitled to it. 3 Inst. 132: Dalt. of Sheriffs, c. 16. Also, if it be found in the sea, or upon the earth, it doth not belong to the King, but to the finder, if no owner appears. Brit. c. 17: Finch. L. 177. So that it seems it is the hiding, and not the abandoning of it, that gives the King a property: Bracton defining it, in the words of the Civilians, to be vetus depositio pecuniæ; l. 3. c. 3. § 4. This difference clearly arises from the different intentions which the Law implies in the owner. A man that hides his Treasure in a secret place, evidently does not mean to relinquish his property; but reserves a right of claiming it again when he sees occasion: And if he dies, and the secret also dies with him, the Law gives it to the King in part of his royal revenue. But a man that scatters his Treasure into the sea, or upon the public surface of the earth, is construed to have absolutely abandoned his property, and returned it into the common stock, without any intention of reclaiming it; and therefore it belongs, as in a state of nature, to the first occupant or finder; unless the owner appear and assert his right, which then proves that the loss was by accident, and not with an intent to renounce his property. 1 Comm. c. 8.

Formerly, all Treasure-trove belonged to the finder. Bract. l. 3. c. 3: 3 Inst. 133: Kitch. 80. Afterwards it was judged expedient for the purposes of the State, and particularly for the Coinage, to allow part of what was so found to the King; which part was assigned to be all hidden Treasure; such as is casually lost and unclaimed, and also such as is designedly abandoned, still remaining the right of the fortunate finder. And that the Prince shall be entitled to this hidden Treasure is now grown to be, according to Grotius, "jus commune, et quasi gentium;" for it is not only observed, he adds, in England, but in Germany, France, Spain, and Denmark. The finding of deposited Treasure was much more frequent, and the Treasures themselves more considerable, fiderable, in the infancy of our Conftitution, than at prefent; and therefore the punifhment of fuch as concealed from the King the finding of fuch hidden Treafure was formerly no lefs than death, but now it is only fine and imprifonment Glanv. l. 1. c. 2: 3 Inft. 133.

Nothing is faid to be Treafure-trove but gold and filver. It is every Subject's part, as foon as he has found any Treafure in the earth, to make it known to the Coroners of the county, &c. Britton, cap. 17: S. P. C. 25. Coroners ought to inquire of Treafure-trove, being certified thereof by the King's Bailiffs, or others, and of who were the finders, &c. 4 Edw. 1. ft. 2.—And feizures of Treafure-trove may be inquired of in the Sheriff's torn. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 57.

TREASURER, Thefaurarius.] An Officer to whom the Treafure of another is committed to be kept, and truly difpofed of. The chief of thefe with us is the Lord Treafurer of England, who is a Lord by his office, and one of the greateft men of the kingdom. This great Officer holds his place durante bene placito, and is inftituted by the delivery of a white ftaff to him by the King; and in former times he received his office by delivery of the golden keys of the Treafury: He is alfo Treafurer of the Exchequer, by letters patent. By ftat. 31 Edw. 3. ftat. 1. c. 12, in writs of error the Lord Chancellor and Lord Treafurer fhall caufe the record and procefs of the Exchequer to be brought before them, who are Judges; but the writ is to be directed to the Treafurer and Barons, who have the keeping of the records. See title Error. Under the charge and government of the Lord Treafurer, is all the King's wealth contained in the Exchequer; he has the check of all the Officers employed in collecting the cuftoms and royal revenues; all the offices of the cuftoms in all ports of England are in his gift and difpofition; efcheators in every county are nominated by him; and he makes leafes of all the lands belonging to the Crown, &c.

But the high and important poft of Lord Treafurer has of late years, like fome other great offices, been efteemed too great a tafk for one perfon, and been generally executed by Commiffioners. See more belonging to this office, ftats. 20. Ed. 3. c. 6: 31 H. 6. c. 5: 4 Ed. 4. c. 1: 4 Inft. 104. If any one kill the Treafurer, being in his place, doing his office, it is High Treafon, by ftat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. See titles Treafon; Judges.

Befides the Lord Treafurer, there is a Treafurer of the King's Houfehold, who is of the Privy Council, and with the Comptroller, &c. has great power. TRESPASS,

TRESPASS,

TRANSGRESSIO.] Any transgression of the Law less than treason, felony, or misprision of either: But it is most constantly used for that wrong, or damage, which is done by one private man to another; or to the King in his forest, &c. In which signification it is of two sorts: Trespass general, otherwise called Trespass vi et armis; and Trespass special, or upon the case. Bro. Trespass: Bract. lib. 4.

Trespass, in its largest and most extensive sense, signifies any transgression or offence against the Law of Nature, of Society, or of the Country in which we live; whether it relates to a man's person or his property. Therefore beating another is a Trespass; for which an action of Trespass vi et armis in assault and battery will lie: Taking or detaining a man's goods are respectively Trespasses; for which an action of Trespass vi et armis, or on the case in trover and conversion, is given by the Law: So, also, non-performance of promises or undertakings is a Trespass, upon which an action of Trespass on the case in assumpsit is grounded: And, in general, any misfeasance, or act of one man whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified, is a transgression, or Trespass in its largest sense; for which an action will lie. 3 Comm. c. 12. See titles Action; Assault; Mayhem, &c.

Trespass supposes a wrong to be done with force; and Trespasses against the person of a man are of several kinds, viz. By menacing or threatening to hurt him; assaulting or setting upon one, to beat him; battery being the actual beating of another; maiming of a person so that he loses the use of his limbs; by imprisonment, or restraining him of his lawful liberty, &c. Trespasses against a man's property may be committed in divers cases; as against his wife, children, or servants, or his house and goods, &c. and against his land, by carrying away deeds and evidences concerning it, cutting the trees, or spoiling the grass therein, &c. F. N. B. 86, 87: Finch 198, 201: 2 Roll. Abr. 545.

Trespass vi et armis, may be brought by him that hath the possession of goods, or of a house, or land, if he be disturbed in his possession; for the disturbance, besides the private damage, is also a breach of the public peace. 1 Inst. 57: 2 Roll. Abr. 572: 2 Lil. Abr. 596.

It is a settled distinction, that where an act is done which is in itself an immediate injury to another's person or property, there the remedy is usually by an action of Trespass vi et armis: But where there is no act done, but there is only a culpable omission, or where the act is not immediately injurious, but only by consequence and collaterally, there no action of Trespass vi et armis will lie, but an action on the special case for the damages consequent on such omission or act. 11 Mod. 180: Ld. Raym. 1402: Stra. 635: 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 123; c. 12. p. 208. The distinctions in these cases are frequently very delicate. See the subject much considered in 2 Black. Rep. 892.

Thus it is lawful for a man to make a dam on his own ground; but if, by making it, the water overflows his neighbour's land, an action on the case lies against him. Mod. Cas. in L. & E. 275: 1 Strange 634. Trespass lies generally for breaking a man's close; for chasing cattle, whereby they die or are injured; taking away pales, and breaking of fences, or of doors or windows of a house; for driving a cart and horses over the ground of another, where there is no way for it: Fishing in another person's pond, and for breaking the pond; for eating the corn of another with cattle, and digging in any man's coal mines, and carrying away coals; for taking away so much of the plaintiff's money; tearing a bond, &c. 1 Bro. Ab. 338: 1 Saund. 220: 2 Cro. 463: Latch 144.

Trespass lies for setting the end of a bridge on another man's soil, though it be a highway, 2 Strange 1004; and for erecting a stall in a market, without agreeing for stallage, Ibid. 1238.

In Trespass for taking goods, the plaintiff must allege a property in himself; because in such case there may be two intendments, one that they were the defendant's own goods, and then the taking is lawful; and the other that they were the goods of the plaintiff, when the taking will be wrongful; but wherever the construction is indifferent, it shall always be most strong against the plaintiff. 2 Lev. 20: Yelv. 36.

A man may have one action of Trespass for several Trespasses: And if divers actions of Trespass are brought for one and the same cause, the defendant may get them united in one, if brought to vex him; but the Trespasses must not be of several natures, which may not be tried in one action. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

In all Trespasses there ought to be a voluntary act, and also a damage; and in detinue and trover, where the thing itself is in demand, it should be particularly named: if Trespass be laid in a declaration for the taking of goods, without expressing the quantity and quality of them, or the value, &c. it is bad upon a general demurrer; though, as to the omission of the value, it hath been held to be good after verdict. Latch 13: Style 170, 230: Lutw. 1384: Sid. 39.

Trespass quod cepit & abduxit lies not for the father for taking and carrying away any of his children, except for taking of a son or daughter who is heir. Cro. Eliz. 769. A man committed adultery with a woman in Southwark, where they both dwelt, and the woman went to Ratcliff in Middlesex, from whence the man brought her to Richmond in Surrey; the husband brought an action of Trespass de uxore rapta & abducta cum bonis viri; and it was a doubt whether, upon the matter given in evidence, the defendant could be found guilty in London; but the Jury found him guilty generally, and gave the plaintiff 300*l.* damages. Dyer 256.

Executors may bring Trespass for goods taken out of their possession, or for goods and chattels taken in the life of the testator: Also administrators shall have it for goods of intestates; and an Ordinary may bring action of Trespass for goods in his own possession to administer as Ordinary, &c. If a man voluntarily take away my goods or cattle, and keep them till I pay him money, on pretence that they are his heriot, &c. when they are not so, I may have action of Trespass. Bro. Tres. 354. And if the Sheriff have a writ against the lands and goods of one man, and he by mistake execute it upon my lands or goods; this action lies against him, and it will be no excuse that the plaintiff or any other informed him they were the goods, &c. of the defendant. Dyer 295: Keilw. 119, 129.

If a man hurt my beasts, in ground belonging to me, or some other person; he is liable to action of Trespass. Though the owner of the land wherein cattle are doing this Trespass, may gently by himself, or his dogs, chase them them out, and justify the same. Bro. Tresp. 421: 8 Rep. 67.

Trespass will not lie against a Ministerial Officer, for any thing done merely in pursuance of his duty; though it is somewhat in support of a wrong, but a wrong to which he is no way accessary or assenting: As, where a distress is tortiously taken and impounded, an action will not lie against the pound-keeper. Cowp. 476.

Trespass will not lie against the Master or Seaman of a King's ship or privateer, for taking a vessel as prize on the Seas; though the capture is afterwards determined to be illegal in the Court of Admiralty; for questions of prize, or not prize, belong exclusively to that Court; which gives damages for the detention. Rous v. Hassard, Doug. 580: See 1 Lev. 243: Sid. 267: Lindo v. Rodney, Doug. 501.

With respect to Officers in the Excise and Customs, various Acts of Parliament have been made to protect them in the exercise of their duty; that they might not be harassed with actions of Trespass, where they have acted bonâ fide. See particularly, stats. 6 Geo. 1. c. 21: 19 Geo. 2. c. 34: and Esp. Ni. Pri. Ch. 8.

A Court, which is not a Court of Record, cannot hold plea of Trespass vi et armis. F. N. B. 85. Writs of Trespass lie either to the Sheriff to determine the matter in the County Court, or returnable in B. R. or C. B. F. N. B. 86, 190. Trespass quare vi et armis clausum fregit was brought, wherein the plaintiff laid damage to the value of 20*s.* and the defendant demurred for that cause, alleging that B. R. could have no cognizance at Common Law, or by the statute of Gloucester, to hold plea in action where the damages are under 40*s.* But it was adjudged, that Trespass quare vi et armis will lie in this Court, be the damages what they will. 3 Mod. 275.

At Common Law, in Trespass vi et armis, if the defendant was convicted, he was to be fined and imprisoned; but in other Trespasses only amerced Jenk. Cent. 185 In action of Trespass against two persons for carrying away goods, &c. one lets judgment go by default, and the other justifies under a licence from the plaintiff, and has a verdict; this goes to the whole, and judgment shall be arrested as to the other defendant. 2 Ld. Raym. 1372, 1374.

Trespass in a limited and confined sense, as relates to land, signifies no more than an entry on another man's ground without a lawful authority, and doing some damage, however inconsiderable, to his real property. For the right of meum and tuum, or property, in lands being once established, it follows as a necessary consequence, that this right must be exclusive; that is, that the owner may retain to himself the sole use and occupation of his soil: every entry, therefore, thereon, without the owner's leave, and especially if contrary to his express order, is a Trespass or transgression; for satisfaction of which an action of Trespass will lie; but the quantum of that satisfaction is to be determined by considering how far the offence was wilful or inadvertent, and by estimating the value of the actual damage sustained. 3 Comm. c. 12.

Every unwarrantable entry on another's soil, the Law entitles a Trespass by breaking his close; the words of the writ of Trespass commanding the defendant to shew cause quare clausum querentis fregit. For every man's land is in the eye of the Law inclosed and set apart from his neighbour's: and that either by a visible and material fence, as one field is divided from another by a hedge; or, by an ideal, invisible boundary, existing only in the contemplation of Law, as when one man's land adjoins to another's in the same field. And every such entry or breach of a man's close carries necessarily along with it some damage or other: for, if no other special loss can be assigned, yet still the words of the writ itself specify one general damage, viz. the treading down and bruising his herbage. F. N. B. 87, 88.

One must have a property (either absolute or temporary) in the soil, and actual possession by entry, to be able to maintain an action of Trespass: or, at least, it is requisite that the party have a lease and possession of the vesture and herbage of the land. Dyer 285: 2 Roll. Abr. 549: Mo. 456. Thus, if a meadow be divided annually among the parishioners by lot, then, after each person's several portion is allotted, they may be respectively capable of maintaining an action for the breach of their several closes: for they have an exclusive interest and freehold therein for the time. Cro. Eliz. 421. But, before entry and actual possession, one cannot maintain an action of Trespass, though he hath the freehold in Law. 2 Roll. Abr. 553. And therefore an heir before entry cannot have this action against an abator: though a disseisee might have it against the disseisor, for the injury done by the disseisin itself, at which time the plaintiff was seised of the land: but he cannot have it for any act done after the disseisin, until he have gained possession by re-entry, and then he may well maintain it for the intermediate damage done; for, after his re-entry, the Law, by a kind of jus postliminii, supposes the freehold to have all along continued in him. 11 Rep. 5. Neither, by the Common Law, in case of an intrusion or deforcement, could the party kept out of possession sue the wrong-doer, by a mode of redress, which was calculated merely for injuries committed against the land while in the possession of the owner. But now, by the stat. 6 Ann. c. 18, if a guardian or trustee for any infant, a husband seised jure uxoris, or a person having any estate or interest determinable upon a life or lives, shall, after the determination of their respective interests, hold over and continue in possession of the lands or tenements, without the consent of the person entitled thereto, they are adjudged to be Trespassers. See also the stats. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28: 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, as to tenants for years, &c. holding over, and this Dictionary, titles Sufferance; Rent; Distress, &c.

He that is possessed of lands, though he hath no good title, shall have this action for a Trespass against one who hath no right to the lands; but not against him that hath right. Plowd 431, 546: Keilw 163. The lessee for years, after his lease is expired, may have action for a Trespass on the land before his lease was ended. Bro. Tresp. 456. An action of Trespass was brought by the Lord of a manor, for Trespass done in the highway, by a tenant's beast breaking out of his close into the waste; and it was adjudged it would not lie. 1 Bulst. 157.—The reason of this determination seems to be, that the locus was a highway, and the cattle had not eaten therein; but that Trespass by the Lord of a manor, as owner of the soil, will lie, is indisputable. See 3 Burr, 1824.

If A. is bound to fence his close against B., and he against C. a neighbour; and neither of them inclose against one another, so that the beasts of C. for want of inclosure go out of the ground to that of B. and thence to A.'s ground: In this case A. shall have Trespass against C., for he is bound only to fence against B., and every one ought to keep his cattle as well in open grounds, not inclosed, as in several grounds where there is inclosure. Dyer 366: Jenk. Cent. 161.

One drives my cattle into another man's land, I may go on the land and fetch them out: yet by this I am a Trespasser to the owner of the ground, and he may have his action against me for it, and I must take my counter remedy against him that drove them in. 21 H. 7. 27: 1 Rep. 54. If another man have a horse, or other goods in my house or ground, and he enter to take it away, without my leave, action of Trespass lies against him: But if I drive the cattle or carry the goods of another into my land, he may come upon the land and take them, and no action lieth. 4 Shep. Abr. 135, 136.

A man is answerable for not only his own Trespass, but that of his cattle also; for, if by his negligent keeping they stray upon the land of another, (and much more if he permits, or drives them on,) and they there tread down his neighbour's herbage, and spoil his corn or his trees, this is a Trespass for which the owner must answer in damages. And the Law gives the party injured a double remedy in this case; by permitting him to distrain the cattle thus damage feasant, or doing damage till the owner shall make him satisfaction; or else by leaving him to the common remedy by action. And the action that lies in either of these cases of Trespass committed upon another's land, either by a man himself or his cattle, is the action of Trespass vi et armis; whereby a man is called upon to answer, quare vi et armis clausum ipsius A. apud B. fregit, et blada ipsius A. ad valentiam entum solidorum ibidem nuper crescentia, cum quibusdam averiis depastus fuit, conculcavit, et consumpsit, &c. Registr. 94. For the Law always couples the idea of force with that of intrusion upon the property of another. And herein, if any unwarrantable act of the defendant or his beasts, in coming upon the land, be proved, it is an act of Trespass for which the plaintiff must recover some damages; such however as the Jury shall think proper to assess. 3 Comm. c. 12.

In Trespasses of a permanent nature, where the injury is continually renewed, (as by spoiling or consuming the herbage with the defendant's cattle,) the declaration may allege the injury to have been committed by continuation from one given day to another; (which is called laying the action with a continuando;) and the plaintiff shall not be compelled to bring separate actions for every day's separate offence. 2 Roll. Abr. 545: Lord Raym. 240. But where the Trespass is by one or several acts, each of which terminates in itself, and being once done cannot be done again, it cannot be laid with a continuando; yet if there be repeated acts of Trespass committed, (as cutting down a certain number of trees,) they may be laid to be done, not continually, but at divers days and times within a given period. Salk. 638, 639: Ld. Raym. 823: 7 Mod. 152.

Things must lie in continuance, and not terminate in themselves, or a continuando will not be good: And where a Trespass is alleged with a continuance, that cannot be continued, the evidence ought only to be to the first act. 2 Salk. 638, 639.

The best way to declare for such Trespasses which lie in continuance, is for the plaintiff to set forth in his declaration that the defendant, between such a day and such a day, cut several trees, &c. and not to lay a continuando transgressionis from such a day to such a day; and upon such declaration, the plaintiff may give in evidence a cutting on any day within those days. 3 Salk. 360.

If the defendant makes the place where the Trespass was done material by his plea, he must shew it with great certainty; but if it be a Trespass quare clausum fregit in B. and the defendant pleads that the place where is his freehold, which is the common bar in this case, so justifies as in his freehold, &c. if issue be taken thereon, the defendant may give in evidence any close in which he hath a freehold; though if the plaintiff had replied and given the close a name, defendant must have a freehold in that very close. 2 Salk 453: Carthew's Rep. 176.

A plaintiff may make a new assignment of the place where, &c. and then the defendant may vary from his first justification: As for instance; an action of Trespass assigned to be done generally in D., the defendant justified the taking damage feasant; and the plaintiff in his replication made a new assignment, upon which the defendant justified for a heriot; and it was adjudged good. Moor 540. The defendant in his plea may put the plaintiff to the new assignment; and every new assignment is a new declaration, to which the defendant is to give a new answer, and he may not traverse it, but must either plead or demur; yet where Trespasses are alleged to be done in several places, and the defendant pleads to some, and agrees to the places wherein the plaintiff alleged the Trespasses to be done, there the plaintiff may answer that part of the plea by a traverse, and shew a new assignment as to the rest. Cro. Eliz. 492, 812. See titles New Assignment; Pleading.

One action of Trespass may be brought for a Trespass committed in lands which lie in several towns or vills, if they are in one and the same county; for else they cannot receive one trial, as they are local causes of action triable in the county where done. 2 Lil. Abr. 595.

As Trespass quare clausum fregit is a local action, Trespass for breaking and entering a house in Canada in America, will not lie in this country. 4 Term Rep. 503.

In some cases Trespass is justifiable; or, rather, entry on another's land or house shall not in those cases be accounted Trespass: as if a man comes thither to demand or pay money, there payable; or to execute, in a legal manner, the process of the Law. Also a man may justify entering into an inn or public house, without the leave of the owner first specially asked; because, when a man professes the keeping of such inn or public house, he thereby gives a general licence to any person to enter his doors. ee title Inns. So a landlord may justify entering to distrain for rent; a commoner to attend his cattle, commoning on another's land; and a reversioner, to see if any waste be committed on the estate; for the apparent necessity of the thing. 8 Rep. 146. Also it hath been said, that, by the Common Law and custom of England, the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's ground after the harvest, without being guilty of Trespass; but modern determinations have denied this right. See this Dictionary, title Gleaning.—The Common Law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey, as badgers and foxes, in another man's land; because the destroying such creatures is said to be profitable to the Public. Cro. Jac. 321. See title Game Laws.

But

But in cases where a man misdemeans himself, or makes an ill use of the authority with which the Law entrusts him, he shall be accounted a Trespasser ab initio; as if one comes into a tavern and will not go out in a reasonable time, but tarries there all night, contrary to the inclinations of the owner; this wrongful act shall affect and have relation back even to his first entry, and make the whole a Trespass. Finch. L. 47; Cro. Jac. 148: 2 Roll. Abr. 561. But a bare non-feasance, as not paying for the wine he calls for, will not make him a Trespasser; for this is only a breach of contract, for which the taverner shall have an action of debt or assumpsit against him. 8 Rep. 147. So, if a landlord distrained for rent, and wilfully killed the distress, this, by the Common Law, made him a Trespasser ab initio: and so indeed would any other irregularity have done, till the statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. See Finch. L. 47; and this Dictionary, title Distress. But still, if a Reversioner, who enters on pretence of seeing waste, breaks the house, or stays there all night; or if the commoner, who comes to tend his cattle, cuts down a tree: in these and similar cases the Law judges that he entered for this unlawful purpose; and therefore, as the act which demonstrates such his purpose is a Trespass, he shall be esteemed a Trespasser ab initio. 8 Rep. 146. So also, in the case of hunting the fox or the badger, a man cannot justify breaking the soil, and digging him out of his earth: for though the Law warrants the hunting of such noxious animals for the public good, yet it is held that such things must be done in an ordinary and usual manner; therefore, as there is an ordinary course to kill them, viz. by hunting, the Court held that the digging for them was unlawful. Cro. Jac. 321. See title Game Laws.

A man may also justify in an action of Trespass, on account of the freehold and right of entry being in himself; and this defence brings the title of the estate in question. This is therefore one of the ways devised, since the disuse of real actions, to try the property of estates; though it is not so usual as that by Ejectment, because that, being now a mixed action, not only gives damages for the ejection, but also possession of the land: whereas in Trespass, which is merely a personal suit, the right can be only ascertained, but no possession delivered; nothing being recovered but damages for the wrong committed. 3 Comm. c. 12. See title Ejectment.

One Justification in Trespass also arises from the leave or licence of the party complaining; and as to this the following has been stated as the difference:

There is difference between a positive abuse of an authority or licence in fact, and of an authority or licence in Law: The reason of this difference is in one book said to be, that the abuse in the latter case is deemed a Trespass with force ab initio; because the Law intends from the subsequent tortious act, that there was from the beginning a design to be guilty thereof. 8 Rep. 146. The Six Carpenters' case.

But this reason, which equally applies to both cases, is by no means conclusive: for it may be as well intended in the former case, from the subsequent tortious act, that there was from the beginning a design of being guilty thereof. Perhaps the difference between the two cases may be better accounted for in the following manner: in the one, where the Law has given an authority or licence, it seems reasonable, that the same law should, in order to secure the persons, who are without their direct assent made the objects thereof, from all positive abuses of such authority or licence, whenever either of these is positively abused, make the same void from the beginning; and leave the abuser thereof in the same situation, as if he had acted without any authority or licence. And this agrees perfectly with the maxim, Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. But in the other case, where a man, who was under no necessity of giving an authority or licence to any person, has thought proper to give one of these to a certain person, who is afterwards guilty of a positive abuse thereof, there is no reason that the Law should interpose, and make all that has been done, under the authority or licence by him so voluntarily given, void from the beginning; because it was his own folly to place a confidence in a man, who was not fit to be trusted. 5 New Abr. 156.

In order to prevent trifling and vexatious actions of Trespass, as well as other personal actions, it is (inter alia) enacted, by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6: 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 9. § 136, that where the Jury, who try an action of Trespass, give less damages than 40*s.* the plaintiff shall be allowed no more costs than damages; unless the Judge shall certify under his hand, that the freehold or title of the land came chiefly in question. But this rule now admits of two exceptions more, which have been made by subsequent statutes: One is by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, which enacts, that in all Actions of Trespass, wherein it shall appear that the Trespass was wilful and malicious, and it be so certified by the Judge, the plaintiff shall recover full costs. Every Trespass is wilful, where the defendant has notice, and is especially forewarned not to come on the land; as every Trespass is malicious, though the damage may not amount to forty shillings, where the intent of the defendant plainly appears to be, to harass and distress the plaintiff; as in cases of sportsmen warned to go off, or not to come again on another's land. Esp. N. P. 425. The other exception is by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23, which gives full costs against any inferior tradesman, apprentice, or other dissolute person, who is convicted of a Trespass in hawking, hunting, fishing, or fowling, on another's land; and these costs such inferior tradesman is liable to in case of such Trespass, whatever qualification he may have in point of estate. Ld Raym. 149: 3 Comm. c. 12. See this Dict. titles Costs; Game-Laws.

If the defendant, in Trespass quare clausum fregit, disclaim any title to the land, and the Trespass is involuntary, or by negligence, he may be admitted to plead a disclaimer and tender of amends before the action brought, &c. And if it be found for the defendant, the plaintiff shall be barred. Stat. 21 Jac. c. 16. See title Tender.

TRIAL,

TRIAL,

TRIATIO.] The examination of a cause, civil or criminal, before a Judge who has jurisdiction of it, according to the Laws of the Land. 1 Inst. 124: Finch. L. 36.

I. Of the Course of Trial, in Civil Cases.
II. ——————— in Criminal Cases.
III. Of New Trials.

I. TRIAL is the examination of the matter of fact in issue; of which there are many different species, according to the difference of the subject to be tried: As for example, Trial by Record; by Inspection, or Examination; by Certificate; by Witnesses; by Wager of Battel; by Wager of Law; and by Jury.

The first six of these species of Trial are only had in certain special and eccentrical cases, where the Trial by the Country per pais, or by Jury, would not be so proper or effectual. See this Dictionary, titles Record; Inspection; Certificate; Battel; Wager of Law; as to those Trials.

Trial by Witnesses, per testes, without the intervention of a Jury, is the only method of Trial known to the Civil Law; in which the Judge is left to form, in his own breast, his sentence, upon the credit of the witnesses examined: But it is very rarely used in our Law, which prefers the Trial by Jury before it, in almost every instance: Save only, that when a Widow brings a Writ of Dower, and the Tenant pleads that the Husband is not dead; this being looked upon as a dilatory plea, is, in favour of the Widow, and for greater expedition, allowed to be tried by Witnesses examined before the Judges: And so, saith Finch, shall no other case in our Law. But Coke mentions some others; as, to try whether the Tenant in a real action was duly summoned, or the validity of a challenge to a Juror; so that Finch's observation must be confined to the Trial of direct, and not collateral, issues. And in every case Coke lays it down, that the affirmative must be proved by two witnesses at the least. 1 Inst. 6: 3 Comm. c. 22.

For the proceedings on the Trial in Civil Cases by Jury, as relate to the summoning and appearance of the Jury, see this Dict. title Jury I: As also titles Assises; Justices of Assise.

Trials by the Country are at Bar, or Nisi Prius.

TRIALS AT BAR are those which take place before all the Judges, at the Bar of the Court in which the action is brought. Before the stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 30, Civil Causes were tried either at the Bar of the Court, or, when of no great moment, before the Justices in Eyre; a practice having very early obtained, of continuing the cause from Term to Term, in the Court above, provided the Justices in Eyre did not previously come into the county where the cause of action arose; and if it happened that they arrived there within that interval, then the cause was removed from the jurisdiction of the Justices at Westminster, to that of the Justices in Eyre. See title Jury I. Afterwards, when the Justices in Eyre were superseded by the modern Justices of Assise, it was enacted by the above statute, "that inquisitions to be taken of trespasses pleaded before the Justices of either Bench, shall be determined before the Justices of Assise, unless the trespass be so heinous that it requires great examination; and that inquisitions of other pleas pleaded in either Bench, wherein the examination is easy, shall be also determined before them: But inquisitions of many and weighty matters, which require great examination, shall be taken before the Justices of the Benches, &c.; and when such inquests are taken, they shall be returned into the Benches, and there judgment shall be given, and they shall be inrolled." Since the making of this statute, causes in general are tried at Nisi Prius; Trials at Bar being only allowed in Ejectment, and other causes which require great examination. This statute, extending only to the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, whenever an issue is joined in the Exchequer, to be tried in the Country, there is a particular Commission, authorising the Judges of Assise to try it. Bull. N P. 304.

When the Crown is immediately concerned, the Attorney-General has a right to demand a Trial at Bar. In all other cases, it is entirely in the discretion of the Court, governed by the circumstances of the case; even if the parties consent, such a mode of Trial cannot be had without leave of the Court. The grounds on which this Trial ought to be granted are, the great value of the subject-matter in question, the probable length of the inquiry, and the likelihood that difficulties may arise in the course of it. In Ejectment, it is said, the rule has been not to allow a Trial at Bar, except where the yearly value of the land is 100 l.; and value alone, or the probable length of the inquiry, is not a sufficient ground for it; but difficulty must concur; and in order to obtain it upon that ground, it is not sufficient to say generally in an affidavit, that the cause is expected to be difficult; but the particular difficulty which is expected to arise, ought to be pointed out, that the Court may judge whether it be sufficient. Tidd's Pract. K. B., and the authorities there cited.

If one of the Justices of either Bench, or a Master in Chancery, be concerned, it is a good cause for a Trial at Bar, be the value what it may; and, it is said, that such Trial was never denied to any Officer of the Court, nor hardly to any Gentleman at the Bar. The plaintiff may have a Trial of this nature, by the favour of the Court, though he sue in formâ pauperis: But, where the plaintiff is poor, the Court will not grant it to the defendant, unless he will agree to take Nisi-Prius costs if he succeed, and if he fail, to pay Bar costs. In London, it is said, a cause cannot be tried at Bar, by reason of their charter, which exempts them from serving upon Juries out of the city. But the great cause of Lockyer against the East India Company, was tried at Bar (M. 2 Geo. 3.) by a Special Jury of Merchants of London. 2 Salk. 644: 1 Term Rep. 366. In that case, however, the Jury consented to be sworn, and waived their privilege. 2 Wils. 136. And where the cause of action arises in a County Palatine, it has been doubted whether the Court of K. B. can compel the inhabitants of the Palatinate to attend as Jurors. Tidd's Pract.

A Trial at Bar is never granted before issue joined, except in Ejectment; in which, as issue is very seldom joined till the Term is over, it would afterwards be too late to make the application. This sort of Trial should regularly be moved for in the Term preceding that in which it is intended to be had; as in Hilary for Easter, and in Trinity for Michaelmas Term, except where where lands lie in Middlesex; and it is never allowed in an issuable Term, unless the Crown be concerned in interest, or under very particular and pressing circumstances. In Easter Term, they did not formerly allow more than ten Trials at Bar; and they must have been brought on a fortnight at least before the end of it, to allow sufficient time for the other business of the Court. Tidd's Pract.

Anciently, there was no other notice given of such Trial, than the rule in the office; but now there must be 15 days' notice. The plaintiff however, as in other cases, may countermand his notice, and prevent the cause from being tried at the day appointed; after which, it cannot be brought to Trial again, unless some new day be appointed by the Court. And it is said, that a second rule cannot be made for a Trial at Bar, between the same parties, in the same Term. Previous to giving notice, the day appointed for the Trial must be entered with the Clerk of the Papers; and it could not formerly have been on a Saturday, or the last Paper Day in Term, except in the King's case. Tidd's Pract.

A Trial at Bar is had upon the Venire Facias or Distringas, &c. as at Common Law, without any clause of Nisi Prius; and it is mostly by a Special Jury of the county where the action is laid. But it may be had, by consent, by a Jury of a different county; and in Wales or Berwick upon Tweed, &c. or where an impartial Trial cannot be had, the Jury must come from the next English or adjoining county, where the King's writ of Venire runs. Six days' notice at least ought to be given to the Jurors before the Trial; and if a sufficient number do not attend to make a Jury, the Trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo Tales awarded, as at Common Law; for the parties in this case cannot pray a Tales upon the statutes. See title Jury. And no writ of alias or pluries Distringas, with a Tales, for the Trial of Issues at the Bar, shall be sued out, before the precedent writ of Distringas, with a Panel of the names of the Jury annexed, shall be delivered to the Secondary of the Court, to the intent that the Issues, forfeited by the Jury for not appearing upon the precedent writ, may be duly estreated. After a Trial at Bar, if the parties be dissatisfied with the verdict, they may move for a new Trial, as in other cases. Tidd's Pract. and authorities there cited.

TRIALS AT NISI PRIUS are always had in the county where the Venue is laid, and where the fact was or is supposed to have been committed; except where the Venue is laid in Wales or Berwick upon Tweed, &c., or in a county where an impartial Trial cannot be had; in which cases the cause shall be tried in the next English or adjoining county, where the King's writ of Venire runs. Tidd's Pract. See title Venue.

When the Day of Trial is fixed, the plaintiff or his attorney must bring down the Record to the Assises, and enter it with the proper Officer, (the Clerk of the Papers,) in order to its being called on in course. If it be not so entered, it cannot be tried; therefore it is in the plaintiff's breast to delay any Trial by not carrying down the Record; unless the defendant, being fearful of such neglect in the plaintiff, and willing to discharge himself from the action, will himself undertake to bring on the Trial, giving proper notice to the plaintiff. Which proceeding is called the Trial by Proviso; by reason of the clause then inserted in the Sheriff's Venire, viz. "Proviso, provided that if two writs come to your hands, (that is, one from the plaintiff and another from the defendant,) you shall execute only one of them." But this practice hath begun to be disused, since the stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 17, which enacts, that if, after issue joined, the cause is not carried down to be tried according to the course of the Court, the plaintiff shall be esteemed to be nonsuited, and judgment shall be given for the defendant as in case of a nonsuit. See title Nonsuit.

In case the plaintiff intends to try the cause, he is bound to give the defendant (if he lives within forty miles of London) eight days' notice of Trial; and, if he lives at a greater distance, then fourteen days' notice, in order to prevent surprise: And if the plaintiff then changes his mind, and does not countermand the notice, six days before the Trial, he shall be liable to pay costs to the defendant for not proceeding to Trial, by the same last-mentioned statute. The defendant, however, or plaintiff, may, upon good cause shewn to the Court above, as upon absence or sickness of a material witness, obtain leave upon motion to defer the Trial of the cause till the next Assises. 3 Comm. c. 23.

The stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 17, only requires ten days' notice of Trial; but at the Sittings in London and Westminster, the former practice of fourteen days' notice was still continued. But in all country causes, ten days' notice is sufficient: As where the Commission-Day is on the fifteenth of any month, notice of Trial must be given on or before the fifth. Impey's Pract. If the defendant resides within forty miles of London, and if the cause is to be tried at the Sittings in London or Westminster, then two days' notice of countermand, before it is to be tried, is sufficient. Sellon's Pract.

Where there have been no proceedings within four Terms, a full Term's notice must be given previous to the Assises or Sittings; unless the cause has been delayed by the defendant himself, by an injunction or other means. Sellon's Pract: 2 Black. Rep 784: 3 Term Rep. 530.—If the defendant proceed to Trial by Proviso, he must give the same notice as would have been required from the plaintiff. Sellon's Pract —Sometimes the Courts impose it as a condition upon the defendant, that he shall accept short notice of Trial; which, in country causes, shall be given at least four days before the Commission-Day, one day being exclusive, and the other inclusive. 3 Term Rep. 660.—But in town causes, two days' notice seems sufficient in such a case. Tidd's Pract.

The old rule for entering causes in London and Middlesex was, that unless they were entered with the Chief Justice, two days before the Sittings upon which they were to be tried, the Marshal might enter a ne recipiatur, at the request of the defendant or his attorney. And this rule still holds, with regard to Trials at the Sittings in Term. But if a cause was to be tried at the Sittings after Term, no ne recipiatur could be entered, until after Proclamation made, by order of the Chief Justice, for bringing in the record; and then, if the record was not brought in, the defendant's attorney might enter a ne recipiatur. Tidd's Pract.

At present, the practice with regard to entering causes for Trial, at the Sittings after Term or Assises, stands thus: In Middlesex, no record or writ of Nisi Prius will be received, at any Sitting after Term, unless the same shall shall be delivered to and entered with the Marshal, within two days after the last day of every Term; and in London, no record of Nisi Prius will be received, at any Sitting after Term, unless the same shall be delivered to and entered with the Marshal, the day before the day to which the Sittings in London shall be adjourned, by nine in the evening. At the Assises, the writ and record are entered together; and no writ and record of Nisi Prius shall be received, in any county in England, unless they shall be delivered to and entered with the Marshal, before the first Sitting of the Court, after the Commission-Day, except in the counties of York and Norfolk, and there the writs and records shall be delivered to and entered with the Marshal, before the first Sitting of the Court, on the second day after the Commission-Day, otherwise they shall not be received. And both in London and Middlesex, as well as at the Assises, every cause shall be tried in the order in which it is entered, beginning with remanets, (those which have stood over from former Sittings,) unless it shall be made out to the satisfaction of the Judge, in open Court, that there is reasonable cause to the contrary; who thereupon may make such order for the Trial of the cause, so to be put off, as to him shall seem just. Rule Hil. 14 Geo. 2. Special-Jury causes are appointed for particular days, and in London and Middlesex no cause can be tried by a Special Jury, unless the rule for such Jury be drawn up, and the cause marked as a Special Jury, in the Marshal's book of Causes, before the Adjournment-Day after each Term. Rule Trin. 30 Geo. 3.

The cause being entered, stands ready for Trial, at the Bar of the Court, or before the Judge at Nisi Prius; and previous to its coming on, a Brief should be prepared for each party, and delivered to Counsel; containing a short abstract of the pleadings, a clear statement of the case, and a proper arrangement of the proofs, with the names of the witnesses. The grand rule to be observed in drawing Briefs, consists in conciseness with perspicuity. Tidd's Pract. K.B.: Sellon's Pract.

When the cause is called on in Court, in its turn, according to a list or paper, made out from the order in which the several causes are entered for hearing, by the Attornies in each cause, the Record is handed to the Judge to peruse and observe the pleadings, and what issues the parties are to maintain and prove. If no plea puis darrein continuance (see title Pleading I. 3.) intervenes, the Jury being completed, sworn, and ready to hear the merits, in order to fix their attention the closer to the facts which they are impanelled and sworn to try, the pleadings are opened to them by Counsel on that side which holds the affirmative of the question in issue. For the issue is said to lie, and proof is always first required, upon that side which affirms the matter in question. The opening Counsel briefly informs them what has been transacted in the Court above; the parties, the nature of the action, the declaration, the plea, replication, and other proceedings; and lastly, upon what point the issue is joined, which is there sent down to be determined. Instead of which, formerly, the whole record and process of the pleadings was read to them in English by the Court, and the matter in issue clearly explained to their capacities. The nature of the case, and the evidence intended to be produced, are next laid before them by Counsel also on the same side; and, when their evidence is gone through, the Advocate on the other side opens the adverse case, and supports it by evidence; and then the party which began is heard by way of reply. 3 Comm. c. 23.

As to the nature of the Evidence at the Trial, see this Dictionary, titles Evidence; Jury III.

When the Evidence is gone through on both sides, the Judge, in the presence of the parties, the Counsel, and all others, sums up the whole to the Jury; omitting all superfluous circumstances, observing wherein the main question and principal issue lies, stating what evidence has been given to support it, with such remarks as he thinks necessary for their direction, and giving them his opinion in matters of Law arising upon that evidence: The Jury then (unless the case be very clear) withdraw from the Bar to consider of their verdict; and when they are unanimously agreed, return, and before they deliver their verdict, the plaintiff is bound to appear in Court, by himself, Attorney, or Counsel, in order to answer the amercement to which by the old Law he is liable, in case he fails in his suit, as a punishment for his false claim. To be amerced, or à mercie, is to be at the King's mercy with regard to the fine to be imposed; in misericordiâ Domini Regis pro falso clamore suo. The amercement is disused, but the form still continues; and if the plaintiff does not appear, no verdict can be given, but the plaintiff is said to be nonsuit, non sequitur clamorem suum. Therefore it is usual for a plaintiff, when he or his Counsel perceives that he has not given evidence sufficient to maintain his issue, to be voluntarily nonsuited, or withdraw himself; whereupon the Crier is ordered to call the plaintiff, and if neither he, nor any body for him, appears, he is nonsuited, the Jurors are discharged, the action is at an end, and the defendant shall recover his costs. The reason of this practice is, that a nonsuit is more eligible for the plaintiff, than a verdict against him. See title Nonsuit; and further, title Jury III.

When a verdict will carry all the costs, and it is doubtful, from the evidence, for which party it will be given, and the action is trivial, though founded in strict Law, it is a common practice for the Judge to recommend, and the parties to consent, that a Juror shall be withdrawn: And thus no verdict is given, and each party pays his own costs.

If the plaintiff appears, the Clerk asks the Jury who they find for? and if for the plaintiff, what damages? The Jury naming the sum, and what costs, or pronouncing for the defendant, the Associate enters the verdict on the back of the panel of the Jurors' names, and repeats it to the Jury, which finishes the Trial.—The Verdict, Nonsuit, or whatever else passes at the Trial, is entered on the back of the Record of Nisi Prius: which entry, from the Latin word it began with, is called the Postea, the substance of which is, that postea, afterwards, the said plaintiff and defendant appeared by their Attornies at the place of Trial, and a Jury being sworn, found such a Verdict; or as the case may happen. This, being added to the roll, is returned to the Court from which it was sent, and the history of the cause is thus continued. See titles Pleading; Practice; Record.

When the cause is tried at the Sittings in London or Middlesex, the Associate in the Court of K. B. delivers the record to the party for whom the verdict is given; and he afterwards indorses the Postea, from the Associate's Minutes, on the Panel: But when the cause is tried at the Assises, the Associate keeps the record till the next Term, and then delivers it, with the Postea indorsed thereon, to the party obtaining the verdict. On a motion for a new Trial, the Postea was brought into Court, and after the new Trial had been denied, the Postea could not be found; the Court, on debate, ordered a new one to be made out, from the record above, and the Associate's notes. If the Postea be wrong, it may be amended by the Plea-roll, by the memory or notes of the Judge, or by the notes of the Associate or Clerk of Assise. Tidd's Pract. K.B.; and see Sellon's Pract.

After these proceedings, the party entitled proceeds to enter up his Judgment; for which a certain period is allowed, and of which notice must be given to the opposite party by a rule of Court: And within the time allowed by that rule, motion must be made for a New Trial, (see post. III.) or in arrest of Judgment, &c. See titles Judgment; Practice; Motion, &c.

Many deserved eulogies are bestowed on this mode of Trial by Jury, in the Commentaries; where also some defects in it are suggested; as, the want of a complete discovery by the oath of the parties; the want of power to examine witnesses abroad; or to compel the production of books and papers belonging to the parties; and the prejudices or inconveniences arising from the locality of Trial and jurisdiction.—All, or most of these defects are, however, generally remedied in practice: And, on the whole, this mode of decision will be found (with all its unavoidable imperfections) the best criterion for investigating the truth of facts ever established in any country. See 3 Comm. c. 23.

Seisin of a house in the East Indies is not triable here. 1 Strange 646. In covenant the action was laid in London, and issue joined upon a feoffment in Oxfordshire, of lands in that county, and the cause was tried in London; after verdict it was objected that the Trial ought to have been in Oxfordshire; but resolved, that by the stat. 17 Car. 2, it was well tried in the county where the action was brought: But though the words of that statute are, that it shall be good, if tried by the county where the action is laid, it hath been adjudged, that must be understood of a Trial by the county where the matter in issue doth arise; for otherwise it would destroy the whole Law concerning Trials by Juries. 3 Salk. 364. See this Dict. titles Action; Venue; Indictment, &c.

II. THE SEVERAL methods of Trial and Conviction of Offenders, established by the Laws of England, were formerly more numerous than at present; and among them were reckoned the Trial by Ordeal; by Corsned; and by Battel. See this Dictionary, under those titles.

The Trial of Peers, in cases of Treason and Felony, or Misprision of either, is by the Peers of Great Britain in the Court of Parliament, or the Court of the Lord High Steward, when a Peer is indicted: For in case of Appeal, and all other criminal prosecutions therein, for the offences above mentioned, they are tried like Commoners by a Jury. 9 Rep. 30: 3 Inst. 30: 2 Inst. 49. See this Dictionary, titles Appeal; Peers IV.

The Trial by Jury, or the Country, per patriam, is also that Trial by the Peers of every Englishman, which, as the grand bulwark of his liberties, is secured to him by the Great Charter.

As to the mode of proceeding and giving the verdict, in the Trial of Criminal Cases, see, in general, titles Jury IV. 2 Evidence (Introd.); Treason V.

The following summary will give a general idea of the nature of Trials in Criminal Cases:

The Bill of indictment against an offender having been prepared; the party prosecutor and others being bound over to give evidence, the Grand Jury having found the Bill; the prisoner is brought to the bar of the Court; and the Crier, or Clerk of the Arraigns, says to him, "A. B. hold up thy hand: Thou standest indicted by the name of A. B. for such a felony, &c. (reciting the crime laid in the indictment): How sayest thou, art thou guilty of this felony, &c. whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty?" To which the prisoner answers, "Not Guilty:" Whereupon the Clerk of the Peace says, "Culprit, (see title Pleading II,) How wilt thou be tried?" And the offender answers, "By God and my Country."

This was formerly a very significant question and answer, when there were Trials by Battel, and by Ordeal, as well as by Jury; and when the offender answered the question, "By God and his Country," it shewed that he made choice to be tried by a Jury: But now there is no other way of Trial of Criminals. Blount's Dict.

When the prisoner has pleaded Not Guilty, (which is the common plea,) it is to be recorded; and then the Petit Jury are called upon the panel, and a full Jury appearing, the prisoner is told they are to pass upon his life and death, and that he may challenge any of them as they come to the book to be sworn, and before they are sworn; for not being indifferent, but partial, or other defect, &c. Then the Jury are sworn, well and truly to try the prisoner, and to bring in a true verdict. This being done, the indictment is recited, and the Jury are acquainted with the particular crimes of which the prisoner stands indicted; and the Clerk of the Peace, addressing the Jury, states the crime laid in the indictment; and adds, "To which indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are: So that you (the Jury) are to inquire whether he be guilty of the felony, &c. whereof he stands indicted, or not? If you find him Guilty, you are to make inquiry into what goods and chattels he had at the time that the said felony, &c. was committed, or at any time since: And if you find him Not Guilty, you shall inquire whether he did fly for it; and if he fled for it, what goods, &c. he had at the time of his flight; but if you find him Not Guilty, and that he did not fly, you shall then say no more." Then the Clerk of the Peace swears the witnesses to give true evidence; to speak the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and when the evidence is given to the Jury concerning the prisoner, the Jury (if they go out of the Court to consider of their verdict) are to be kept in a room, by a sworn Bailiff appointed, without meat, drink, fire, or candle, and without any persons speaking to them, till they bring in their verdict. See title Jury IV. All things being given in charge, the Jury go to their room, and consider of the matter; when they are all agreed, and returned within or near the bar, the prisoner is brought forth, and the Jury are called over; who all appearing, and the prisoner being set to the bar, the Clerk of the Peace says to them, "Look upon the prisoner, you Gentlemen of the Jury; How say you, is A. B. Guilty of the felony, &c. of which he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?" If the Jury say Not Guilty, it is recorded, and the prisoner taken away; if they say Guilty, the Clerk of

of the Peace says, "Gentlemen of the Jury, hearken to your verdict as the Court hath recorded it; You say A. B. is Guilty of the felony, &c. whereof he stands indicted:" To which they answer "Yes:" Then proclamation is made for all persons to keep silence, on which the prisoner is set to the bar, and sentence passed upon him; after which an order or warrant is made for his execution.—Though this part of passing sentence only takes place immediately, in cases of Murder; the felons being all brought up together, at the end of the Sessions, to receive their several sentences.

It is not customary nor agreeable to the general course of proceedings, (unless by consent of parties, or where the defendant is actually in gaol,) to try persons, indicted for misdemeanors, at the same Court in which they have pleaded Not Guilty, or traversed the indictment. But they usually give security to the Court to appear at the next Assizes or Sessions, and then and there to try the traverse, giving notice to the Prosecutor of the same. 4 Comm. c. 27 p. 351.

Every defendant, indicted for a misdemeanor, should give full eight days' notice of Trial to the prosecutor, before the Assises, if the Trial is to be held; at the Sessions, it is usual to give two or three days' notice: Or the Justices at Sessions fix, as a general rule, what time they think a reasonable notice in such cases. Cro. Circ. Comp. 17; 48.

When the Jury is sworn, if it be a cause of any consequence, the indictment is usually opened, and the evidence marshalled, examined, and enforced by the Counsel for the Crown or Prosecution. But it is a settled rule at Common Law, that no Counsel shall be allowed a prisoner upon his Trial, upon the General Issue in any capital crime, unless some point of Law shall arise proper to be debated.—This has been considered as so great a hardship, and so very inconsistent with the general principles of the English Laws, that the Judges never scruple to allow a prisoner Counsel, to instruct him what questions to ask, or even to ask questions for him, with respect to matters of fact: But the Counsel are not allowed to address the Jury; except in cases of Treason, under stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. See title Treason V. But in matters of Law, or in the Trial of Issues, or collateral facts, prisoners are entitled to the full assistance of Counsel. See 4 Comm. c. 27: Fost. 232, 242.

If the Jury find the prisoner Not Guilty, he is then for ever quit and discharged of the accusation, except he be appealed of Felony, within the time limited by Law. See title Appeal. And upon such his acquittal or discharge, for want of prosecution, he shall be immediately set at large, without payment of any fee to the Gaoler. Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 20. But if the offender is convicted, two collateral circumstances immediately arise, 1. On a conviction, (or even upon an acquittal where there was a reasonable ground to prosecute, and in fact a bonâ fide prosecution,) for any Grand or Petit Larceny, or other Felony, the reasonable expences of prosecution, and also, if the prosecutor be poor, a compensation for his trouble and loss of time, are by stats. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36: 18 Geo. 3. c. 19, to be allowed him out of the County stock, if he petitions the Judge for that purpose; and by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, explained by the same statute 18 Geo. 3. c. 19, all persons, appearing upon recognisance or subpœna to give evidence, whether any indictment be preferred or not, and as well without conviction as with it, are entitled to be paid their charges, with a farther allowance (if poor) for their trouble and loss of time. 2. On a conviction of Larceny, in particular, the prosecutor shall have restitution of his goods; as to which, see this Dictionary, title Restitution.

III. Causes of suspending the Judgment, by granting A New Trial, are at present wholly extrinsic; that is, arising from matters foreign to, or dehors the record. —Of this sort are want of Notice of Trial; or any flagrant misbehaviour of the party prevailing towards the Jury, which may have influenced their verdict; or any gross misbehaviour of the Jury among themselves; also, if it appears by the Judge's report, certified to the Court, that the Jury have brought in a verdict without, or contrary to evidence, so that he is reasonably dissatisfied therewith; or if they have given exorbitant damages; or if the Judge himself has misdirected the Jury, so that they found an unjustifiable verdict; for these, and other reasons of the like kind, it is the practice of the Court to award a New, or Second Trial. But if two Juries agree in the same or a similar verdict, a third Trial is seldom awarded; for the Law will not readily suppose, that the verdict of any one subsequent Jury can countervail the oaths of the two preceding ones. 3 Comm. c 24. Though the Court will grant any number of new Trials in the same Action, if the Jury find verdicts contrary to the established Law. Tindal and Brown, 1 Term Rep.

The exertion of these superintendent powers of the King's Courts, in setting aside the verdict of a Jury, and granting a New Trial, on account of misbehaviour in the Jurors, is of a date extremely ancient. There are instances, in the Year-books of the reigns of Edward III., Henry IV., and Henry VII. of Judgments being staid, (even after a Trial at Bar,) and new Venire's awarded, because the Jury had eat and drank without consent of the Judge, and because the plaintiff had privately given a paper to a Juryman before he was sworn. And upon these the Chief Justice Glynn, in 1655, grounded the first precedent that is reported in our books, for granting a New Trial upon account of excessive damages given by the Jury; apprehending, with reason, that notorious partiality in the Jurors was a principal species of misbehaviour. Sty. 466. A few years before, a practice took rise in the Common Pleas, of granting New Trials upon the mere Certificate of the Judge, (unfortified by any report of the evidence,) that the verdict had passed against his opinion; though Chief Justice Rolle (who allowed of New Trials in case of misbehaviour, surprise, or fraud, or if the verdict was notoriously contrary to evidence) refused to adopt that practice in the Court of King's Bench. And at that time it was clearly held for Law, that whatever matter was of force to avoid a verdict, ought to be returned upon the Postea, and not merely surmised by the Court; lest Posterity should wonder why a new Venire was awarded, without any sufficient reason appearing upon the record. But very early in the reign of Charles II. New Trials were granted upon Affidavits; and the former strictness of the Courts of Law, in respect of New Trials, having driven many parties into Courts of Equity, to be relieved from oppressive verdicts; they are now more liberal liberal in granting them; the maxim at present adopted being this, that (in all cases of moment) where justice is not done upon one Trial, the injured party is entitled to another. 3 Comm. c. 24.

Formerly, the principal remedy for reversal of a verdict unduly given, was by writ of Attaint; which is at least as old as the institution of the Grand Assise by Henry II. in lieu of the Norman Trial by Battel; and as to which, see this Dictionary, title Attaint.

Next to doing right, the great object in the administration of public justice, should be to give public satisfaction. If the verdict be liable to many objections and doubts, in the opinion of his Counsel, or even in the opinion of By-standers, no party would go away satisfied unless he had a prospect of reviewing it. Such doubts would with him be decisive; he would arraign the determination as manifestly unjust; and abhor a Tribunal which he imagined had done him an injury without a possibility of redress. 3 Comm. c. 24.

Granting a new Trial, under proper regulations, cures all these, and many other, inconveniences; and at the same time preserves entire, and renders perfect, that most excellent method of decision, which is the glory of the English Law. A new Trial is a rehearing of the cause before another Jury; but with as little prejudice to either party, as if it had never been heard before. No advantage is taken of the former Verdict on the one side, or the Rule of Court for awarding such second Trial on the other; and the subsequent verdict, though contrary to the first, imports no tittle of blame upon the former Jury; who, had they possessed the same lights and advantages, would probably have altered their own opinion. The parties come better informed, the Counsel better prepared, the Law is more fully understood, the Judge is more master of the subject, and nothing is now tried but the real merits of the case. 3 Comm. c. 24.

A sufficient ground must however be laid before the Court, to satisfy them that it is necessary to justice that the cause should be farther considered. If the matter be such, as did not, or could not, appear to the Judge who presided at Nisi Prius, it is disclosed to the Court by Affidavit; if it arises from what passed at the Trial, it is taken from the Judge's information, who usually makes a special and minute report of the evidence. Counsel are heard on both sides, to impeach or establish the verdict, and the Court give their reasons at large, why a new examination ought or ought not to be allowed. The true import of the evidence is duly weighed, false colours are taken off, and all points of Law which arose at the Trial are, upon full deliberation, clearly explained and settled. 3 Comm. c. 24.

Nor do the Courts lend too easy an ear to every application for a review of the former verdict. They must be satisfied that there are strong probable grounds to suppose that the merits have not been fairly and fully discussed, and that the decision is not agreeable to the justice and truth of the case. A new Trial is not granted, where the value is too inconsiderable to merit a second examination. It is not granted upon nice and formal objections, which do not go to the real merits. It is not granted in cases of strict right, or summum jus, where the rigorous exaction of extreme legal justice is hardly reconcileable to conscience. Nor is it granted where the scales of evidence hang nearly equal: that which leans against the former verdict, ought always very strongly to preponderate. 3 Comm. c. 24.

In granting such farther Trial, (which is matter of sound discretion,) the Court has also an opportunity, which it seldom fails to improve, of supplying the defects in this mode of Trial, before shortly alluded to, by laying the party applying under all such equitable terms, as his antagonist shall desire, and mutually offer to comply with; such as, the discovery of some facts upon oath; the admission of others not intended to be litigated; the production of deeds, books, and papers; the examination of witnesses, infirm or going beyond sea; and the like. And the delay and expence of this proceeding are so small and trifling, that it seldom can be moved for to gain time, or to gratify humour. The motion must be made within the first four days of the succeeding Term after the Verdict, within which Term it is usually heard and decided. And it is worthy observation, how infinitely superior to all others the Trial by Jury approves itself, even in the very mode of its revision. In every other country of Europe, and in those of our own Tribunals which conform themselves to the process of the Civil Law, (the Scotch Courts, for example,) the parties are at liberty, whenever they please, to appeal from day to day, and from Court to Court, upon questions merely of fact; which is a perpetual source of obstinate chicane, delay, and expensive litigation. With us, no new Trial is allowed, unless there be a manifest mistake, and the subject-matter be worthy of interposition. The party who thinks himself aggrieved, may still, if he pleases, have recourse to his writ of Attaint after judgment; in the course of the Trial he may demur to the Evidence; or tender a Bill of Exceptions. And, if the first is totally laid aside, and the other two very seldom put in practice, it is because long experience has shewn, that a motion for a second Trial is the shortest, cheapest, and most effectual cure for all imperfections in the verdict; whether they arise from the mistakes of the parties themselves, of their Counsel or Attornies, or even of the Judge or Jury. 3 Comm. c. 24.

If the verdict of the Jury be agreeable to Equity and Justice, the Court will not grant a new Trial, though there may have been an error in the admission of evidence, or in the direction of the Judge. 4 Term Rep. 468. —And it will not be granted merely because it has been discovered, after Trial, that a witness examined was incompetent. 1 Term Rep. 717.—But excessive damages in all cases, except in actions for Adultery, are a sufficient ground to grant a new Trial. 5 Term Rep. 257.

A new Trial may be granted on account of the misconduct of the Jury, as if they have referred to chance to determine the party for whom the verdict was given: But the Courts have frequently refused to hear any affidavit of such conduct from the Jury themselves. 1 Term Rep. 11.

It is generally said, that there cannot be a new Trial, in penal actions and criminal prosecutions, when there is a verdict for the defendant; the principle of this being the great favour which the Law shews to the liberty of the Subject. But the rule does not extend to informations in the nature of Quo Warranto. See that title, and 2 Term Rep. 484.—Nor does it extend to an action on a penal statute, in which a verdict is given for the defendant, in conseconsequence of the misdirection of the Judge. 4 Term Rep. 753.

TROVER, From the Fr. Trouver, i. e. invenire.] An action which lies where one man gets possession of the goods of another, by delivery, finding, or otherwise, and refuses to deliver them to the owner, or sells or converts them them to his own use, without the consent of the owner; for which the owner, by this action, recovers the value of his goods. Esp. Ni. Pri. cap 12: 2 Lill. Abr. 618.

The action of Trover and Conversion was in its original an action of Trespass on the Case, for recovery of damages, against such person as had actually found another's goods, and refused to deliver them on demand, but converted them to his own use: from which finding and converting, it is called an action of Trover and Conversion. The freedom of this action from Wager of Law, and the less degree of certainty requisite in describing the goods, gave it so considerable an advantage over the action of Detinue, that, by a fiction of Law, actions of Trover were at length permitted to be brought against any man who had in his possession, by any means whatsoever, the personal goods of another, and sold them or used them without the consent of the owner, or refused to deliver them when demanded. The injury lies in the Conversion: for any man may take the goods of another into possession, if he finds them; but no finder is allowed to acquire a property therein, unless the owner be for ever unknown: and therefore he must not convert them to his own use, which the Law presumes him to do, if he refuses to restore them to the owner: for which reason, such refusal alone is, primâ facie, sufficient evidence of a Conversion. The fact of the finding, or Trover, is therefore now totally immaterial: for the plaintiff needs only to suggest (as words of form) that he lost such goods, and that the defendant found them; and, if he proves that the goods are his property, and that the defendant had them in his possession, it is sufficient. But a Conversion must be fully proved: and then in this action the plaintiff shall recover damages, equal to the value of the thing converted, but not the thing itself; which nothing will recover but an action of Detinue or Replevin. (See those titles.) 3 Comm. c. 9.

In Trover, the Conversion is the Gist of the Action; and the manner in which the goods come to the defendant's hands is but inducement; the plaintiff may therefore declare upon a devenerunt ad manus generally, or specially by finding; (though in fact the defendant came to them by delivery;) or that the defendant fraudulently obtained them; as by winning them at cards from the plaintiff's wife: And this being inducement, need not be proved: but it is sufficient to prove property in the plaintiff; the possession of, and conversion by, the defendant. Bull. N. P. 33: Esp. N. P. c. 12.

If in Trover, an actual Conversion cannot be proved, then proof is to be had of a demand made, before the action brought, of the thing for which the action is commenced, and that the thing demanded was not delivered: In this case, though an actual Conversion may not be proved, a demand, and refusing to deliver the things demanded, is a sufficient evidence to the Jury that he converted the same, till it appears to the contrary. 10 Rep. 56, 401: 2 Lill. 619.

Where a defendant really comes to the possession by finding, denial is a Conversion; but if he had the goods, &c by delivery, there denial is no Conversion, but evidence of a Conversion: And in both cases, the defendant hath a lawful possession, either by finding or by delivery; and where the possession is lawful, the plaintiff must shew a demand and a refusal, to make a Conversion: Though if the possession was tortious, as if the defendant takes away the plaintiff's hat, the very taking is a sufficient proof of the Conversion, without proving a demand and refusal. Sid. 264: 3 Salk. 365.

By Holt, Chief Justice, the denial of goods to him who hath a right to demand them, is a Conversion; and after a demand and refusal, if the defendant tender the goods, and the plaintiff refuse to receive them, that will go only in mitigation of damages; not to the right of the action of Trover, for the plaintiff may have that still. Mod. Cas. 212. An action of Trover and Conversion may be brought for goods, although the goods come into possession of the plaintiff before the action is brought; which doth not purge the wrong, or make satisfaction for that which was done to the plaintiff by detaining the goods: If a man takes my horse and rides him, and afterwards delivers him to me, Trover lies against him: for this is a Conversion, and the re-delivery is no bar to the action. 1 Danv. Abr. 21: 2 Lill. 618.

If goods are delivered to one to deliver over to another, and he to whom they were first delivered do afterwards refuse to deliver them over, and converts them to his own use; he is liable to action of Trover not only by him who first delivered them, but also by him to whom they were to be delivered: And a plaintiff may choose to have his action of Trover against the first finder of goods, or any other who gets them afterwards by sale, &c. 1 Bulst. 68: 1 Leon 183.

If a common carrier has goods delivered to him to carry to a certain place, and a stranger takes them out of his possession, and converts the goods to his own use; action of Trover and Conversion lies, for the carrier, against him. 1 Mod. 31. Trover doth lie against a common carrier for negligence in losing goods; though it doth not for an actual wrong: And if goods are stolen from a carrier, he may not be charged in Trover and Conversion; but by action upon the case on the custom of the Realm, &c. 2 Salk. 655. See title Carrier.

Where goods are stolen, and, before prosecution of the offender by indictment, the party robbed brings action of Trover, it lies not; for so felonies might be compounded: But where A. steals the goods or money of B. and is convicted, and hath his clergy, upon the prosecution of B, if B. brings Trover and Conversion for the money, and on Not Guilty pleaded this special matter is found, the plaintiff shall recover. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 546. See title Restitution.

If, upon a Fieri Facias, the Sheriff takes goods in execution, and, before the sale of them, a stranger takes them away and converts them to his own use; the Sheriff may have an action of Trover and Conversion, as he had a lawful possession, and is answerable for them. 2 Saund. 47. An Executor may have Trover for the goods of the Testator; the Law gives him a property, which draweth the possession to it, though there be not an actual possession. Latch 214.

There must be a right or property in the goods, or a lawful possession, &c. which is to be proved by the plaintiff in Trover, before the goods came to the defendant's hands: and such owner may maintain Trover against any person into whose hands the goods have fallen, though the person in whose possession they are found may (as far as relates to himself) have honestly obtained it: provided it was not by sale in market overt, or by other fair transfer. Espin. N. P. c. 12.

Trover lies for the finder of a jewel, against a goldsmith who defrauded him of it; 1 Stra. 503; for possession alone gives a sufficient title to maintain this action against all persons, except against the actual owner. Drawing out part of a vessel, and filling it up with water, is Conversion of all the liquor. 1 Stra. 576. A recovery in Trover vests the property of the goods in the defendant. 2 Strange 1078.

In Trover for a bond, the plaintiff need not shew the date; for the bond being lost or converted, he may not know the date: and if he should set out the date, and mistake it, he would fail in his action. Cro. Car. 262. If the defendant find the bond, and receive the money, action of Account lieth against the receiver, and not Trover. Cro. Eliz. 723.

The place of Conversion must be generally mentioned in Trover, or it will be naught. Cro. Eliz. 78, 79. And yet where the Trover of goods is in one county, and the Conversion in another county, the action brought for these goods may be laid in the county where the Conversion was, or in any other county, as it is only a transitory action; and neither the place of Trover, nor Conversion, are traversable. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R.

Trover lies against baron and feme, setting forth that they converted the goods to the use of the husband; for the feme may be a trespasser, and convert them to the husband's use, or the use of the stranger, but not to her own use; and if the Conversion be laid ad usum of herself and husband, or ad usum proprium, &c. it will not be good. Cro. Car. 494. In Trover, the plaintiff may lay a Conversion here, and prove it to have been in Ireland. Stile 331: 1 Mod. Engl. Entr. 393.

Action of Trover or Detinue, at the plaintiff's election, may be brought for goods detained; for it is but justice that the party should have his goods detained if they may be had, or else damages to the value for the detaining and Conversion of them. 2 Lill. Abr. 618. Action of Trespass, or Trover, lies for the same thing; though they cannot be brought in one declaration: And the allegation of the Conversion of the goods in trespass, is for aggravation of the damages, &c. Cro. Jac. 50: Lutw. 1526. See titles Detinue; Trespass.

Detinue doth not lie for money numbered; but Trover and Conversion lies for it: For though, in the finding and converting generally, the money of one person cannot be distinguished from that of another, all money being alike; yet the proof that the plaintiff lost, and the defendant converted so much, maintains the action, if the verdict finds it. Jenk. Cent. 208. Where money is given to a person to keep, though it be not in bags, action of Trover will lie; because this action is not to recover the money, but damages. Poph. 91: 3 Salk. 365. In case a master delivers corn to his servant to sell, who does so, and converts the money, the master may bring Trover against the servant. 2 Bulst. 307: 1 Roll. Rep. 59. Trover lieth not for any part of a freehold; but if doors fixed are removed and converted, it will lie. Wood's Inst. 540.

There is no proper plea in action of Trover, where it lies, but the General Issue Not Guilty; on which the special matter may be given in evidence, to prove the plaintiff hath no cause of action; or to entitle the defendant to the thing in controversy. 2 Bulst. 313. Vide also, 2 Salk. 654: Yelv. 198: Cro. Car. 27: 2 Lill. 622. But there are several instances of Special Pleas in Justification, in the books, though the purpose of many of them might have been answered by Evidence under the General Issue: Such plea in justification should always shew a complete title in the defendant; and such plea should either traverse the Conversion, or confess and avoid it: So the Statute of Limitations may be pleaded in Trover: and it begins to run from the time of the Conversion. See Esp. N. P. c. 12; and which see on the whole of the subject.

TROY-WEIGHT, Pondus Trojæ] A Weight of twelve ounces to the pound, having its name from Troyes, a city in Champaign, whence it first came to be used here. But see title Pondus Regis, for a different etymology; and this Dict. tit. Weights.

TRUCE, Treuga] A league or cessation of arms; anciently there were Keepers of Truces appointed; as King Edw. III. constituted, by commission, two Keepers of the Truce between him and the King of Scots, with this clause, Nos volentes treugam prædictam quantum ad nos pertinet observari, &c. Rot. Scot. 10 Edw. 3. See titles Conservators of the Truce; Safe Conduct.

TRUG-CORN, Truga frumenti] A measure of Corn. At Leominster, at this day, the Vicar hath Trug-Corn allowed him for officiating at some chapels of ease within that parish. Liber Niger Heref.

TRUNCUS, A Trunk set in churches, to receive the oblations of pious people; of which, in the times of Popery, there were many at several altars and images, like boxes which, since the Reformation, have been placed near the doors of churches, for receiving all voluntary contributions for the Poor: The customary free-will offerings that were dropt into those Trunks, made up a good part of the endowment of Vicars, and thereby oftentimes rendered their condition better than in latter times. See Ordin. Vic. Lancast. Anno 1430.

TRUSSA, A Truss, or bundle of Corn; mentioned among the customary services done by tenants. Cartular. S. Edmund. MS.

TRUST,

FIDUCIA, CONFIDENTIA.] A Confidence which one man reposes in another;—but, as generally used in Law, it is a right to receive the profits of land, and to dispose of the land itself (in many cases) for particular purposes, as directed by the lawful owner, or pointed out by settlement, &c. or by that deed of conveyance which created the Trust. A Trust is but a new name given to an Use.—For the origin of Trusts, and their former and present connexion with Uses, see this Dictionary under title Uses. What follows here is chiefly miscellaneous information on the nature and property of Trusts, and Trust-Terms; and the duty of Trustees: as to which, see more at large Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity, in the notes passim; and particularly, as to Trusts Executory and Executed, and the existing distinctions between them, lib. i. c. 6. § 8.—As to who may be seised to Use, or may be a Trustee, lib. ii. c. 6. § 1, in n.—What acts may or ought to be done by a Trustee, to alter or perfect the intent of his Trust, lib ii. c. 7. § 2, in n. And on the whole of the subject, Vin. Ab. tit. Trust:—And Mr. Butler's disquisition on this subject, in his note on 1 Inst. 290, b.

Trusts and legal estates are to be governed by the same rules; and this is a maxim which has universally prevailed. It is so in the rules of Descent, as in Gavelkind, and Borough-English lands; there is a possessio fratris of a Trust, as well as of a legal estate. The like rules in Limit-

Limitations, and also of barring Entails of Trusts, as of legal estates; per the Master of the Rolls; who said he thought there was no exception out of this general rule, nor is there any reason that there should; and that it would be impossible to fix boundaries, and shew how far, and no farther, it ought to go; and that perhaps in early times the necessity of keeping thereto was not seen, or thoroughly considered. 2 P. Wms. 645.

Declarations and Creations of Trust, of lands, tenements or hereditaments, are to be in writing, signed by the party empowered to declare such Trust, &c. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. But it is provided, that this shall not extend to Resulting Trusts, or Trusts arising by implication or construction of Law; which shall be of like force as before that act. See post, as to Resulting Trusts. Infants, seised of estates in fee in Trust, may make conveyances of such estates, by order of the Chancery. Stat. 7 Ann. c 19. If a man buys land in another person's name, and pays the money for the land, this will be a Trust for him that paid the money, though there be no deed declaring the Trust; because the Statute of Frauds extends not to Trusts raised by the implication of Law: And a bare declaration by parol, on a deed assigned, may prevent any resulting Trust to the assignor. 2 Vent. Rep. 361: 2 Vern. 294. Where there has been fraud in gaining a conveyance from another, that is a reason of making the grantee considered as a Trustee: But the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, relates only to Equitable Trusts and Interests, and not to an Use, which is a legal estate. 1 P. Wms. 113.

There are only two kinds of Trusts by Operation of Law; either where the deed or conveyance has been taken in the name of one man, and the purchase-money paid by another; or where the owner of an estate has made a voluntary conveyance of it, and declared the Trust with regard to one part to be for another person, but hath been silent as to the other part: In which case he himself ought to have the benefit of that, it being plainly his intent. Barnardist. 388.

A Fine and Recovery of Cestui-que-Trust shall bar and transfer a Trust, as it should an estate at Law, if it were upon a consideration. Chanc. Rep. 49. See titles Fine of Lands; Recovery: and Treat. Eq. lib. i. c. 3. § 1, in n. And a Cestui-que-Trust may bar an entail of a Trust without fine or recovery, particularly, by Devise. See Treat. Eq. l. i. c. 4. § 40, in n.

In Equity, Trusts are so regarded, that no act of a Trustee will prejudice the Cestui que-Trust; for though a Purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, shall not have his title any ways impeached, yet the Trustee must make good the Trust: But if he purchases, having notice, then he is the Trustee himself, and shall be accountable. Abr. Cas. Eq. 384. Where Trustees in a settlement join with tenant for life in any conveyance, to defeat a remainder, before it comes in esse, this is a plain breach of Trust; and those who claim under such deed, having notice of the Trust, will be liable to make good the estates. 2 Salk. 680. Yet in case a Trustee joins with Cestui-que-Trust in tail, in a deed to bar the entail, as it is no more than what he may be compelled to, it is no breach of his Trust. 1 Chan. Cas. 49, 213. See further, as to the several modes by which prejudice may be induced by acts of the Trustee, and of the interposition of Courts of Equity in favour of the Trustee and Cestui-que-Trust, Treat. Eq. l. ii. c. 3. § 1.

For much useful information, as to the manner in which the Courts have remedied the mischiefs arising from the secret nature of Trusts, both with respect to the Cestui-que-Trust, and the Public at large, see 1 Inst. 290, b. &c. and the long and learned note there.

This, with respect to the Cestui-que-Trust has been effected, in some degree, by Courts of Equity having held that persons paying money to Trustees, with notice of the Trust, are, generally speaking, obliged to see it properly applied.—It is perhaps to be wished that the operations and consequences of Trusts had been confined to the Trustee and Cestui-que-Trust: There is no doubt but the doctrine is, in many instances, of great service to the Cestui-que-Trust, as it preserves his property from the peculations, and other disasters, to which, if it were left solely to the discretion of the Trustee, it would necessarily be subject. Yet it may be questioned, whether the admission of it is not in general productive of more inconvenience than real good; for if the Cestui-que-Trust is a married woman, an infant, or otherwise incapable of giving assent to the payment of the money to the Trustee, the persons paying it cannot be indemnified against the Trustee's misapplication of it, but by paying it under the sanction of a Court of Equity. This retards and often absolutely impedes the progress of the business, involves the parties in an expensive and intricate litigation, and puts them to very great and, in other respects, useless expence. To avoid this, it is become usual to insert a clause in deeds or wills, that the receipts of the Trustees shall, of themselves, discharge the persons to whom they are given, from the obligation of seeing to the application of money paid by them as purchasers, &c. See this Dict. tit. Purchase; and further, 1 Inst. 290, b. in n.

The prevention of the mischief arising from Trusts, with respect to the Public, has been effected, in some measure, by the rule laid down in Courts of Equity, that in any competition of claims, where the Equity of the parties is equal, he who has the Law shall prevail. If a person has the legal estate or interest of the subject-matter in contest, he must necessarily prevail at Law over him whose right is only equitable, and therefore not even noticed by the Courts of Law: This advantage he carries with him even into a Court of Equity, so far, that if the equitable claims of the parties are of equal force, Equity will leave him who has the legal right in full possession of it; and not do any thing to reduce him to an equality with the other, who has the equitable right only. This very important rule of Equity is most fully illustrated, by an inquiry into the doctrine of Courts of Equity respecting Trust-Terms of Years attendant upon the Inheritance: In this inquiry, the origin and effect of these terms, and the general rules as to the cases in which it is necessary that they should be from time to time assigned to Trustees to attend the inheritance, and protect a purchaser from all mesne incumbrances, are very clearly and explicitly stated; though these rules must from their nature be subject to an endless variety of modifications. It is concluded by the learned Writer, that, in all cases of this description, it is infinitely better to err by an excess of care, than to trust any thing to hazard. "There is no doubt that the precautions used for the security of purchasers appear sometimes to be excessive; and satisfactory reasons cannot always be given for requiring some of them: Yet the more a person's experience increases, the more he finds the reason and real utility of them; and the more he will be convinced that very few of the precautions required, by the general practice of the Profession, are without their use, or can be safely dispensed with. 1 Inst. 290, b. &c. in notis: And see Treat. Eq. lib. ii. c. 4. § 3, in n.; and also this Dict. title Mortgage.

By the operation of these long terms; the legal estate being separated from the beneficial interest, many inconveniences would have resulted from them, had not Courts of Equity interposed, and laid down certain rules, restrictive of the legal rights of the Trustee. Hence it became a rule in Equity, that where the Tenant for years is but a Trustee for the Owner of the inheritance, he shall not keep out his Cestui-que-Trust; nor, pari ratione, obstruct him in doing any act of Ownership, or in making any assurances of his estates; and therefore, in Equity, such a term for years shall yield and be moulded according to the uses, estates, or charges which the Owner of the inheritance declares or carves out of the Fee. See 1 Term Rep. 765. Courts of Law, feeling the reasonableness of this rule, allow it to prevail as an exception to the general rule, which requires a plaintiff in Ejectment to recover by the strength of a legal title; so that it is now established by many decisions, that, even at Law, an estate in Trust, merely for the benefit of the Cestui-que-Trust, shall not be set up against him; any thing shall rather be presumed. See Cowp. 46: Doe v. Pott, Doug. 721: Bull. N. P. p. 110, Lade v. Holford: 1 T. Rep. 758: 2 T. Rep. 698.

It has been decreed, that a Trust for a son, &c. shall pass with the lands into whose hands soever they come, and cannot be defeated by any act of the father or Trustees. And though a husband and wife have no children in many years, and they and the Trustees agree to sell the land settled, &c. it will not be permitted in Chancery. Abr. Cas. Eq. 391: 1 Vern. 181. A Termor grants his lands in Trust for himself for life, and to his wife for life, and after to his children for their lives, and then to A. B. This Trust to A. B. is good; though, if it had been to the heirs of their bodies, it would be otherwise. Chanc. Rep. 230, 239.

A Trust to pay portions, legacies, &c. out of the rents and profits of the lands, at the day prefixed, gives the Trustees power to sell; if the annual profits will not do it within that time, then they may sell the land, being within the intention of the Trust: And they cannot sell to raise the money, except it be to be paid at a certain time. Rep. Chanc. 176. A Trustee for sale of lands for payment of debts, paying debts to the value of the land, thereby becomes a purchaser himself. Ibid. 199. Where a Trustee for paying portions, pays one child his full share, and the Trust-estate decays, he shall not be allowed such payment. 2 Chan. Ca. 132. If one devises land to Trustees until his debts are paid, with remainder over, and the Trustees misapply the profits, they shall hold the land only till they might have paid the debts, if the rents had been duly applied; and after that the land is to be discharged, and the Trustees are only answerable. 1 P. Wms. 519. A person having granted a lease of land to Trustees, in Trust to pay all the debts which he should owe at his death, in a just proportion, without any preference; it was here declared, that the simple-contract debts became as debts due by mortgage, and should carry interest. Ibid. 229.

Trust of a fee-simple estate, or fee-tail, is forfeited by Treason, but not by Felony; for such forfeiture is by way of escheat, and an escheat cannot be but where there is a defect of a tenant; and here is a tenant. Hard. 495. See Jenk. Cent. 245. A Trust for a term is forfeited to the King, in case of Treason or Felony; and the Trustees in Equity shall be compelled to assign to the King. Cro. Jac. 513. If a bond be taken in another's name, or a lease be made to another in Trust for a person, who is afterwards convicted of Treason or Felony, they are as much liable to be forfeited, as a bond or lease made in his own name, or in his possession. See title Forfeiture; and Treat. Eq. lib. ii. c. 7. § 1, in n.

Trustees being obliged to join in receipts, one is not chargeable for money received by the other: In the case of executors it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 318: 2 Vern. Rep. 515.

But where Trustees so join in a receipt, that it cannot be distinguished what was received by one, and what by the other, there they shall both be charged with the whole: So, where one Trustee having received the Trust-money handed it over to his companion, he shall be charged; for where, by any act or any agreement of a Trustee, money gets into the hands of his companion, whether a Trustee or Co-executor, they shall both be answerable. So, if a Trustee be privy to the embezzlement of the Trust-fund by his companion, he shall be charged with the amount. Treat. Eq. ii. c. 7. § 5, in n.

It seems now to be settled, notwithstanding some old determinations to the contrary, that a Trustee (or Executor) is chargeable in Equity with Interest on the Trust-fund in his hands, wherever it appears that he has made Interest: and not only so, but if he appear to have employed the Trust-money in trade, whence he has derived profits beyond the rate of Interest, he shall account for the whole of such profits: And still further, if a Trustee, or Executor, retain money in his hands for any length of time, which he might by application to the Court, or by vesting in the Funds, have made productive, he shall be charged with Interest thereon. Treat. Eq. ii. c. 7. § 6, in n.—A Trustee is entitled to no allowance for his trouble in the Trust; but he will be paid his costs in case of an unfounded suit against him. Treat. Eq. ii. c. 7. § 3, in n.

A Trustee, robbed by his own servant, shall be discharged of it on account; though great negligence may charge him with more than he hath received, in the Trust. 2 Chan. Ca. 2: 1 Vern. 144.

Lord Hobart is stated to have been of opinion, that an action at Law might be maintained against a Trustee for Breach of Trust. See 1 Eq. Ab. 384, in n. But this opinion is inconsistent with Lord Hardwicke's definition of a Trust; which is, that it is such a confidence between parties, that no action at Law will lie, but is merely a case for the consideration of Courts of Equity. 2 Atk. 612.—That a Trustee is liable, in Equity, for a Breach of Trust, was expressly determined in Vernon v. Vaudrey, Barn. C. 303. But it is material to observe, that even in Equity the Cestui-que-Trust is considered but as a simple-contract Creditor, in respect of such Breach of Trust; unless the Trustee has acknowledged the debt to the Trust-estate under hand and seal. See 2 Atk. 119: Forrest. 109.

Of a Resulting Trust, or Trust by Implication of Law.

It was ruled, by Lord Chancellor Cowper, that the Statute of Frauds, stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 8, which says, "That all Conveyances, where Trusts and Confidences shall arise or result by implication of Law, shall be as if that act had never been made," must relate to Trusts and equitable Interests, and cannot relate to any use which is a legal estate. 1 P. Wms. 112. See Treat. Eq. l. ii. c. 5. § 1, and note there.

Nothing is more certain than that if a man makes a conveyance in Trust for such persons, and such estates as he shall appoint, and makes no appointment, the Resulting Trust must be to him and his heirs. The Trust in Equity must follow the rules of Law in the case of an Use, and that it would be so in the case of an Use is undoubtedly true, and that was Sir Edward Clere's case, in 6 Rep. per Lord Chancellor. Fitz-Gib. 223.

Where a daughter's portion was charged upon the father's land, she, at the request of her father, had released her interest in the land, to the intent that he might be enabled to make a clear settlement thereof upon the son. It was declared by the Lord Keeper, that if this was done by the daughter without any consideration, there would be a Resulting Trust in the father, whereby he should be chargeable to the daughter for so much money. Freem. 305.

Where a Trustee purchases lands out of the profits of the Trust-estate, and takes the conveyance in his own name; it was formerly held, that though probably, if he could not make other satisfaction for the misapplication, these lands might be sequestered, yet they could not be declared to be a Trust for Cestui que Use, no more than if A. borrows money of B., for it is not a Trust in writing; and a Resulting Trust it could not be, because that would be to contradict the deed by parol proof, directly against the Statute of Frauds. But it was allowed, that if this purchase had been recited to have been made with the profits of the Trust-estate, this appearing in writing might ground a Resulting Trust. And on appeal to the House of Lords, this decree was affirmed. Kirk v. Webb, Chan. Prec. 84. pl. 77. See 2 P. Wms. 414.

So, where a testator empowered the executor to lay out the personal estate in land, and settled it on A. and his heirs; and the executor being about to purchase, told A.'s mother of it, and asked her consent, but took the conveyance in his own name, and no Trust in writing was declared, but it was proved that he at several times declared it must be sold to make A. satisfaction; yet the Court (though inclined to decree a conveyance to A. the executor being dead insolvent) declared it could not, because there was no express proof of the application of the Trust-money. Chan. Prec. 168. pl. 139.—It has, however, been held in more modern cases, that evidence aliunde is admissible to shew, that the purchase was made with the Trust-money; and that upon such fact being clearly proved, a Trust will result. See Ambl. 409.

With respect to the cases in which a Trust shall result to the heir, where the particular purpose for which land was to be converted into money may have failed, see 3 P. Wms. 20, and Mr. Cox's note (1) there, where the cases are collected and referred to their respective principles.

TRUSTEES OF PAPISTS, Are disabled to make presentations to Churches, by stat. 12 Ann. c. 14. See title Papists.

TUB, A measure containing sixty pounds weight of tea; and from fifty-six to eighty-six pounds of camphire, &c. Merch. Dict.

TUB-MAN; See title Pre-audience.

TUMBRELL, Tumbrellum, Turbichetum.] Is an engine of punishment, which ought to be in every Liberty that hath view of frank-pledge, for the correction of scolds and unquiet women. Kitchin, fol. 13. See titles Castigatory; Pillory.

TUN, Sax.] In the end of words, signifies a Town, or dwelling-place.

TUN, Lat. Tunellum.] A vessel of wine and oil, being four hogsheads. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 12.—A Tun of Timber is a measure of forty solid feet, cut to a square. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18. Twenty hundred weight is a Tun of Coals, &c. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13.

TUNNAGE, Lat. Tunnagium.] A custom or impost granted to the Crown for merchandize imported or exported, payable after a certain rate for every Tun thereof. See title Customs on Merchandize.

TUN-GREVE, Sax. Tungerævus, i. e. villæ præpositus.] A Town-Reeve or Bailiff, qui in villis (& quæ dicimus maneriis) Domini personam sustinet, ejusque vice omnia disponit & moderatur. Spelman.

TURBAGIUM, The liberty of digging Turfs. Mon. Ang. i. 632.

TURBARY, Turbaria, from Turbus or Turba, an obsolete Latin word for Turf.] Is a right to dig Turfs on a common, or in another man's ground. Kitch. 94. Also it is taken for the place where Turfs are dug. See title Common of Turbary.

TURBOTS, The importation of, is regulated by the Navigation Acts. See that title.

TURKEY COMPANY. The trade to the Levant subsisted under a charter in the 3d year of King James I. confirmed by letters patent of 13 Car. II. The incorporation was by the name of The Governor and Company of Merchants of England trading into the Levant Seas. The qualifications for admission to this Company were these: They were to be mere Merchants; and no person residing within 20 miles of London was to be admitted, unless he was made free of the City. The fee of admission was, by the charter of Jac. I., 25*l.* for those under 26 years old, and 50*l.* for those above that age. The greatness of this fee, and the peculiarity of the description of candidates, were thought unnecessary restraints: And by stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 18, it was enacted, that every Subject of Great Britain may be admitted, upon proper application, into The Turkey Company, upon paying the sum of 20*l.* and no more. § 1.—And all persons free of that Company may, separately or jointly, export from Great Britain to any port or place within the limits of the letters patent, in any British or Plantation-built ship, navigated according to Law, to any person being a freeman of the Company, and a Christian Subject, and submitting to the direction of the British Ambassador, and Consuls, any goods not prohibited to be exported; and import, in like manner, from any place within the said limits, raw silk, or any other goods purchased within those limits, and not prohibited by Law. § 3.

The limits of this trade were mentioned very generally in the first charter granted in 1581; the liberty there given was "to trade to Turkey." In the 2d charter, in 1593, the trade is specified more particularly; namely, "to Venice, Zant, Cephalonia, Candia, and other Venetian territories, the dominions of the Grand Seignior, by Land and Sea, and through his Countries over land to the East Indies." These charters were both temporary; the first for seven, the second for twelve

twelve years. Quære, Did the limits continue the same under the charters of King James and Car. II.? Reeves's L. S. 213, 214.

TURKINS, A kind of sky-coloured cloth, mentioned in stat. 1 R. 2. c. 8.

TURN, or TOURN, The great Court-Leet of the County, as the County-Court is the Court-Baron; of this the Sheriff is Judge, and this Court is incident to his office; wherefore it is called the Sheriff's Tourn: And it had its name originally from the Sheriff's taking a Turn or Circuit about his Shire, and holding this Court in each respective Hundred. See 4 Comm. 273: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10.

The nature of the jurisdiction of this and the Court-Leet are exactly the same, the former being only a larger species of the latter, extending over more territory, but not over more causes. Much of the business of both has now (we will not say whether properly or not) by degrees devolved on the Court of Quarter Sessions. See titles County-Court; Court Leet; and 2 Hawk. P. C. ubi supra; and Com. Dig. title Leet.

The Turn is a Court of Record; and, by the Common Law, every Sheriff ought to make his Turn or Circuit throughout all the Hundreds in his County, in order to hold a Court in every Hundred for redressing common grievances, and preservation of the peace; and this Court might be holden at any place within the Hundred, and as often as the Sheriff thought fit: But this having been found to give the Sheriff too great power of oppressing the People, by holding his Court at such times and places at which they could not conveniently attend, and thereby increase the number of his amercements; by the Statute of Magna Charta, c. 35, it was enacted, that no Sheriff shall make his Turn through a Hundred but twice in a year, viz. once after Easter, and once after the feast of St. Michael; and at the place accustomed: Also a subsequent statute ordained, that every Sheriff shall make his Turn yearly, one time within the month after Easter, and another time within the month after Michaelmas; and if they hold them in any other manner, they shall lose their Turn for that time. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 15.

Since these statutes, the Sheriff is indictable for holding this Court at another time, than what is therein limited, or at an unusual place: And it has been held, that an indictment found at a Sheriff's Turn, appearing to have been holden at another time, is void. Dalt. Sher. 390, 391: Dyer 151: 38 Hen. 6.

At Common Law, the Sheriff might proceed to hear and determine any offence within his jurisdiction, being indicted before him, and requiring a trial, till Sheriffs were restrained from holding Pleas of the Crown by Magna Charta, cap 17. But that statute doth not restrain the Sheriff's Turn, from taking indictments or presentments, or awarding process thereon; though the power of awarding such process being abused, was taken from all the Sheriffs (except those of London) by stat. 1 Ed. 4. c 2, and lodged in the Justices of Peace at their Sessions; who are to award process on such indictments delivered to them by the Sheriff, as if they had been taken before themselves, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10.

The Sheriff's power in this Court is still the same as anciently it was, in all cases not within the statutes abovementioned; he continues a Judge of Record, and may inquire in his Turn of Treasons and Felonies, by the Common Law; as well as the lowest offences against the King, such as purprestures, seizure of treasure-trove, of waifs, estrays, goods wrecked, &c. All common nusances and annoyances, and other such like offences; as, selling corrupt victuals, breaking the assise of beer and ale, or keeping false weights or measures, are here indictable; also all common disturbers of the peace, barretors, and common oppressors; and all dangerous and suspicious persons, &c. The Sheriff, in his Turn, may impose a fine on all such as are guilty of contempts in the face of the Court; and upon a suitor to the Court making default, or refusing to be sworn on the Jury; or on a Bailiff not making a panel; on a Tithing man neglecting to make his presentment; or a person whose Constable refusing to be sworn, &c. He may amerce for offences; which fines and amerciaments are leviable and recoverable by distress, &c. See 2 H. P. C. c. 10.

TYLWITH, Brit. from Tyle, i. e. locus ubi stetit domus, vel locus ædificandæ domui aptus, or from tylath, trabs, tignus.] Signifies a place whereon to build a house, or a beam in the building: And it is applied to familia, a tribe or family branching forth of another, which, in the old English Heraldry, is called Second or Third Houses; so that in case the great paternal stock brancheth itself into several Tylwiths, or houses, they carry no second or younger houses farther; and the use of these Tylwiths was to shew not only the originals of families as to the pedigree, but the several distinctions and distances of birth, that in case any line should make a failure, the next in any degree may claim their interest according to the rule of descent, &c. Cowell. See title Descent.

TYNMOUTH. There is a customary descent of lands in the honour of Tynmouth, that if any tenant hath issue two or more daughters, and die seised in fee, the land shall go to the eldest daughter for life only, and after to the cousins of the male-line; and for default thereof, to escheat. 2 Keb. 113, 114.

VACARIA, A void place, or waste ground. Mem. in Scacc. Mich. 9 Edw. 1.

VACATING RECORDS; See title Record.

VACATION, Vacatio.] Is all the time between the end of one Term and the beginning of another; and it begins the last day of every Term, as soon as the Court rises. The time from the death of a Bishop, or other spiritual person, till the Bishopric or dignity is supplied with another, is also called Vacation. Stats. Westm. 1. c. 21: 14 Edw. 3. st. 4. c. 4.

VACATURA, An avoidance of an Ecclesiastical Benefice; as, prima Vacatura, the first Avoidance, &c.

VACCARY, Vaccaria. A House or Place to keep Cows in; a Dairy house, or Cow-pasture. Fleta, lib. 2.

VACCARIUS, The Cow-herd, who looks after the common herd of cows. Fleta.

VADIARE DUELLUM, To wage a combat, where two contending parties, on a challenge, give and take a mutual pledge of fighting. Cowell. See title Battel.

VADIUM PONERE, To take security, bail, or pledges, for the appearance of a defendant in a Court of Justice. Reg. Orig. See Pone.

VADIUM MORTUUM; See Mortgage.

VADIUM VIVUM, A living Pledge; as when a man borrows a sum of another, and grants him an estate, as of 20*l. per annum*, to hold until the rents and profits shall repay the sum borrowed. See Mortgage.

VAGABOND, Vagabundus.] One that wanders about, and has no certain dwelling; an idle fellow. See Vagrants.

VAGRANTS,

VAGRANTES.] These are divided into three classes; viz. Idle and Disorderly Persons—Rogues and Vagabonds—and Incorrigible Rogues: And are thus described and particularised at full length in the stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.—They who threaten to run away and leave their wives or children to the parish; or unlawfully return to a parish from whence they have been legally removed; or, not having wherewith to maintain themselves, live idle, and refuse to work for the usual wages; and all persons going from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, &c. to beg in the parishes where they dwell, shall be deemed Idle and Disorderly Persons. § 1.

All persons going about as patent-gatherers, or gatherers of alms, under pretence of losses by fire, &c. or as collectors for prisons, &c.; all fencers and bearwards; all common players of interludes; and persons who, for hire, gain, or reward, act, represent, or perform, or cause to be acted, &c. any interlude, tragedy, comedy, opera, play, farce, or other entertainment of the stage, or any part therein, not being authorised by Law; all minstrels, jugglers; all persons pretending to be gypsies, or wandering in the habit or form of Egyptians, or pretending to have skill in physiognomy, palmistry, or other crafty science, or to tell fortunes, or using any subtle craft to deceive and impose on a person; or playing or betting at any unlawful games or plays; and all persons who run away and leave their wives and children, whereby they become chargeable to any parish; all pedlars not duly licensed; all persons wandering abroad, and lodging in alehouses, barns, outhouses, or in the open air, not giving a good account of themselves; and all persons wandering abroad and begging, pretending to be soldiers, mariners, or pretending to go to work in harvest, not having proper certificates; and all other persons wandering abroad and begging; and all persons going from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, &c. to beg in the parishes where they dwell, who being apprehended for the same, shall resist or escape, shall be deemed Rogues and Vagabonds. § 2.

All end-gatherers offending against the stat. 13 Geo. 1. c. 23, being convicted; all persons apprehended as rogues and vagabonds, and escaping, or refusing to go before a Justice, or to be examined upon oath before such Justice, or refusing to be conveyed by pass; or giving a false account of themselves after warning of the punishment; and all rogues or vagabonds breaking or escaping out of any House of Correction; and all persons who, having been punished as Rogues and Vagabonds, shall again commit any of the said offences; and offenders against this act, having children with them, (and such children being put out apprentices or servants pursuant to this Act,) being again found with the same children, shall be deemed Incorrigible Rogues. § 4.

The punishment of Idle and Disorderly Persons is commitment to the House of Correction, there to be kept to hard labour, not exceeding a month. § 1.

Rogues and Vagabonds are to be publicly whipt, or sent to the House of Correction until the next Sessions, or any less time; and, after such whipping or commitment, may be passed to their last legal settlement or place of birth; or if under fourteen, and having a father or mother living, to the place of abode of such father and mother. And if committed until the next Sessions, and adjudged a Rogue or Vagabond, the Justices may order them to be kept in the House of Correction to hard labour, not exceeding six months. § 8.

A person adjudged at the Sessions an Incorrigible Rogue, may be kept in the House of Correction to hard labour, not exceeding two years, nor less than six months; and during the confinement be corrected by whipping, at such times and places as the Justices shall think fit, and may then be passed as aforesaid: And if a male, and above the age of 12 years, the Justices, before his discharge, may send him to be employed in the King's service, either by sea or land. If, before the expiration of his confinement, he shall escape from the House of Correction; or offend again in the like manner, he shall be deemed to be guilty of Felony, and transported for any time not exceeding seven years. § 9.

Any Person may apprehend and carry before a Justice persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways, or passages, to beg alms in the parishes where they dwell; and the Justices may order the Overseers of the Poor to pay such person 5 s. for every offender; which, on refusal of payment, may be levied on the Overseers' goods. § 1.

A Constable refusing or neglecting to use his endeavour to apprehend any offender, shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 10*s.* to the use of the Poor, to be levied by distress. And any other person charged by a Justice of Peace to apprehend such offender, refusing so to do, shall forfeit 10 s. A Justice may order the High Constable to pay to any person, whether a Constable or not, who shall apprehend any such offender, 10 s. for every offender. The Justices are, four times in the year at least, to cause a general privy search to be made in one night, for the apprehending Rogues and Vagabonds. §§ 5, 6.

To prevent expences in passing Rogues, Vagabonds, and Incorrigible Rogues, the Justice is to deliver to the Officer a note, directing how they are to be conveyed, whether in a cart, by horse, or on foot. § 10. The Constable is to convey such person, in such manner and time as by the pass is directed, the next direct way to the place where such person is ordered to be sent, if in the same county, &c.; but if in another county, &c. he shall deliver the person to the proper Officer of the first town in the next county, &c. in the direct way to the place where such person is to be conveyed, together with the pass and duplicate of examination; taking his receipt for the same; and such Officer is immediately to apply to a Justice of Peace in the same county, who is to make a like note, and deliver it to the Officer, who is to convey the person to the first parish, &c. in the next county; and so in like manner from one county to another, till they come to the place where such person is sent: And if the Officer who shall receive such person there, shall think the examination to be false, he may carry the person before a Justice of Peace, who, if he see cause, may commit such person to the House of Correction, till the next Sessions; where the Justices, if they see cause, may deal with such person as an Incorrigible Rogue; but he shall not be removed but by order of two Justices § 11.

If the Vagrant, upon search, be found to have effects sufficient to pay all or part of the expence of passing him, the Justice may order the same to be sold and employed for that purpose. The Justices at Sessions may direct what rates and allowances shall be made for passing such Rogues, Vagabonds, &c. and make orders for the more regular proceeding therein. The High Constable is to pay to the Petty Constable, or other Officer, the rates so allowed, on penalty of forfeiting double the sum, to be levied by distress. § 12.

When a Vagrant is to be passed to Ireland, the Isle of Man, Jersey, Guernsey, or Scilly, the master of any ship bound to those places shall, on a warrant from a Justice of Peace, and being paid such allowance as the Justice shall think proper, receive such Vagrant, and convey him to such place, and give a receipt for the Vagrant and money on the back of the warrant, on penalty of 5 l. to the Poor, to be levied by distress; but not to be obliged to take above one Vagrant for every twenty tons burthen of his ship. The parish to which any Vagrant shall be passed may employ him in work till he shall betake himself to some service; and if he shall refuse to work or go to service, he may be sent to the House of Correction. § 14.

From the above statute, and others cited, it appears that Idle and Disorderly Persons are, 1. Those who threaten to run away, and to leave their families upon the parish. (For further provisions as to these, see title Poor III. 2.)—2. Who return to the parish from which they are removed as paupers, without a certificate; (see title Poor VI.)—3. Who refuse to work for the usual wages.—4. Who beg within their own parishes.—5. (By stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45. § 8.) Who neglect work, or who spend their money idly, without making a sufficient allowance for the subsistence of their families.—All these are punishable with one month's imprisonment in the House of Correction.

Rogues and Vagabonds are thus described:—1. Gatherers of alms under pretence of losses, or for prisons or hospitals.—2. Fencers.—3. Bearwards.—4. Players of Interludes, not being authorised by Law; (see title Playhouse.)—5. Minstrels.—6. Jugglers.—7. Gypsies; (see title Egyptians.)—8. Fortune-tellers.—9 Deceivers by subtle craft.—10. Players and Betters at unlawful games —11. Persons who run away and leave their families chargeable to the parish; (see title Poor III. 2.)—12. Unlicensed Pedlars; (see title Hawkers and Pedlars.)—13. Persons who wander abroad, and lodge in alehouses, outhouses, or in the open air, without giving a good account of themselves.—14. Persons wandering from home, under pretence of seeking harvest-work, without a proper certificate; (see title Poor V.)—15. All wandering Beggars.—16. (By stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 88.) All persons apprehended with any picklock or implement, with intent to feloniously break and enter any dwelling-house; or with any offensive weapon, with intent to feloniously assault any person; or who shall be found in or upon any dwelling-house, out-house, yard, area, or garden, with intent to steal.—17. (By stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45. § 7.) Soldiers and Mariners wandering about and begging. [Before this Act, it was the practice of some Justices to grant begging passes. Const's Bott. 791, n]—These are all punishable with whipping, or imprisonment six months.

Incorrigible Rogues, are Rogues and Vagabonds who escape when they are apprehended; or refuse to go before a Justice; or to be examined; or who give a false account of themselves, after warning of the consequences; or who refuse to be conveyed by a pass; or who escape from the House of Correction; or who commit, after punishment, a second offence.—These are punishable with whipping, and imprisonment not exceeding two years; and escaping from confinement, when committed as incorrigible, are liable to be transported for seven years.

Persons harbouring Vagrants are liable to a fine of 40 s., and to pay all expences brought on the parish thereby. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 23.

Female Vagabonds are subject to imprisonment the same as Males; but are not now, in any instance, liable to whipping. Stat. 32 Geo 3. c. 45.

The Justice, or Court of Quarter Sessions, may, if they think proper, order a Vagabond, after punishment, to be conveyed to his place of settlement by a pass. Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. §§ 7, 8. But by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45.

c. 45. § 1. No Justice of Peace shall order any Vagrant to be conveyed by a pass, who has not been convicted of an act of Vagrancy, and actually whipt, or imprisoned for at least seven days; which shall be certified in the pass. The object of this was to correct an abuse which much prevailed, of removing Paupers by a Pass, who had committed no act of Vagrancy, and who ought to have been removed by an Order of Removal. For the effects of an Order of Removal and a Vagrant Pass are very different; in the first place, the Parish removing bears all the travelling expences of the Paupers; but the expence of conveying Vagrants by a pass is borne by each County through which they are carried: And no appeal lies against a Vagrant Pass, so that the Parish to which the Vagrant is conveyed must be at the expence of sending, by an order of removal, the Vagrant back again; or to such place as, on inquiry, may be thought his legal settlement. 3 Burn. J. tit. Vagrants X.: And see Const's Bott. ii. 782. pl. 733. that a person, not in a state of Vagrancy cannot be passed, even with his own consent.

By stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, it shall be lawful for any two or more Justices, in case any person apprehended, upon any general privy search, or by virtue of any special warrant, shall be charged before them with being a Rogue and Vagabond, or an idle and disorderly person, or with suspicion of felony, (although no direct proof be then made thereof,) to examine such person upon oath, not only to the parish or place where he was last legally settled, but also as to his means of livelihood; the substance of which examination shall be put into writing, and be subscribed by the persons so examined, and the said Justice shall likewise sign the same, and transmit it to the next Sessions of the Peace, to be there filed and kept on record: And if such person shall not make it appear to such Justices, that he has a lawful way of getting his livelihood, or shall not procure some responsible housekeeper to appear to his character, and to give security for his appearance before such Justices, at some day to be fixed, (if the same shall be required,) to commit such person to some prison or house of correction, for any time not exceeding six days; and in the mean time to order the Overseers of the Poor where such person shall be apprehended, to insert an advertisement in some public paper, describing such suspicious person, and any things which shall be found upon him, and which he shall be suspected not to have honestly come by, and mentioning the place to which he is committed, and time and place when and where such person is to be again brought before them to be re-examined; and if no accusation shall then be laid against him, then such person shall be discharged. § 12.

By stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45, no reward shall be paid for apprehending any Rogue or Vagabond, until he shall have been punished as such. § 2.—Convicts discharged from prison, and persons acquitted at the Assises, &c. may be conveyed by passes. § 4.—Justices may order Vagrants to be conveyed by Masters of Houses of Correction. § 5.—The Sessions shall fix the rate to be allowed for passing Vagrants. § 6.

A common Soldier, billeted in a distant parish from that in which his family resides, is not a Vagrant within the stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5, as a person who has run away from his family, although he is able, and refuse to maintain them; and they, in consequence of being thus abandoned, become chargeable to the parish. Const's Bott. i. 335. pl. 424.—A person committed by one Justice of the Peace, under the said statute, (§ 7,) cannot be bailed by another Justice, for such commitment is in execution. Id. ib. pl. 425; 341. pl. 426.—Although it is settled that an appeal does not lie by a parish against a Vagrant Pass, yet it is not decided that it will not lie in the case of a Foreigner, taken in an act of Vagrancy, and sent, upon a false examination, to a parish to which he does not belong. Const's Bott. ii. 790. pl. 737.

VALET, VALECT, or VADELET, Valettus vel Valecta.] Was anciently a name specially denoting young gentlemen, though of great descent or quality; but afterwards attributed to those of lower rank, and now a servitor, or gentleman of the chamber. Camd.: Selden's Tit. Hon.: Bract. lib. 3. In the accounts of the Inner Temple, it is used for a bencher's clerk or servant; and the butlers of the house corruptly call them Varlets.

VALENTIA, The value or price of any thing. See Value.

VALESHERIA, Signifies the proving by the kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on the side of the mother, that a man was a Welshman. It is mentioned in stat. Walliæ, 12 Ed. 1. c. 4. See Englecery.

VALOR MARITAGII. Under the ancient tenures, while an infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement or inequality: Which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage to their guardian; that is, so much as a Jury would assess, or any one would bonâ fide give to the guardian for such an alliance: And if the infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double the value. This was one of the greatest hardships of our ancient tenures.—But the tenures being taken away, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, the Law is abolished. See title Tenures II. 4.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION; See title Consideration.

VALVASORS; See Vavasors.

VALUE, Valentia, Valor.] Is a known word; and the Value of those things as to which offences are committed, is usually comprised in indictments; which seems necessary in theft to make a difference from petit larceny, and in trespass to aggravate the fault, &c. But in other cases a distinction has been made between Value and Price. If a plaintiff declares in an action of trespass for the taking away of live cattle, or one particular thing, he ought to say that the defendant took them away, pretii so much; if the declaration be for taking of things without life, it must be alleged ad valentiam, &c. so that live cattle are to be prized at such a Price, as the owner of them did esteem them to be worth; and dead things to be reckoned at the Value of the market which may be certainly known. Of coin, not current, it shall be pretii; but of common coin, current, it shall be neither said pretii nor ad valentiam, for the Value and Price thereof is certain: The difference between pretii and ad valentiam may proceed from the rule in the register of writs, which shews it to be according to the ancient forms used in the Law. West. Symb. par. 2: 2 Lil. Abr. 629. A jewel, it is said, is not valuable in Law, but only according to the Valuation of the owner of it, and is very uncertain: But there seems to be a certain Value for diamonds among the merchant jewellers, according to their weight and lustre, &c. Hil. 21 Car. B.R. 2 Lil. 628. A man cannot say that another owes him so much, when the Value of the thing owing is uncertain; for which reason, actions in these cases are always brought in the detinet, and the declaration ad valentiam, &c. 1 Lutw. 484. See titles Pleading; Money, &c.

diamonds

VANTARIUS, Præcursor.] As Vantarius Regis, the King's fore footman. Rot. de finibus. Term Mich. 2 Ed. 2.

VARIANCE, Variantia, from the Fr. Varier, i. e. Alterare] An alteration of a thing formerly laid in a plea; or where the declaration in a cause differs from the writ, or from the deed upon which it is grounded, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 629. If there is a Variance between the declaration and the writ, it is error; and the writ shall abate. And if there appear to be a material Variance between the matter pleaded and the manner of the pleading it, this is not a good plea; for the manner and matter of pleading ought to agree in substance, or there will be no certainty in it. Cro. Jac. 479: 2 Lil. 629.

But when the pleading is good in substance, a small Variance shall not hurt. 3 Mod. 227. If the record of Nisi Prius agrees with the declaration delivered, a Variation from the issue is not material. 2 Strange 1131. Where the original writ varies from the declaration, it is not remedied by any statute of Jeofails. 5 Rep. 37. Though verdict in ejectment was for a messuage next the messuage of A. B., and the judgment for a messuage next another messuage in the occupation of A. B., this is no material Variance, but is amendable by the stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8: Raym. 398: 3 Salk. 368. The original writ in C. B. concluded ad damnum 40*l.* and the declaration was ad damnum 100*l.* The Jury gave 12*l.* damages; and on a writ of error brought, this Variance was assigned: it was held that this had been a good objection in the original action; but it is not so after verdict; not being matter in point of judgment, especially as the Jury found only 12*l.* damages; but if the verdict had found more damages than what was mentioned in the writ, though less than what was set forth in the declaration, it had been ill, because there was no writ to warrant such damages. 2 Cro. 629: 1 Bulst. 49.

If a defendant pleads a Variance between the writ and declaration, he is to crave Oyer of the writ before he shall have any advantage of the Variance, because the writ and declaration are not upon the same roll; and therefore, if the defendant plead to it without demanding Oyer, on demurrer, judgment may be for him to answer over, &c. 2 Salk. 658. If in the imparlance-roll the declaration is in debt, and in the plea-roll it is in trespass, this is such a Variance, that if the plaintiff hath judgment it shall be reversed. 3 Bulst. 229.

In writ of error in the Exchequer-chamber to remove a record out of B. R, of a certain trespass the husband and wife hath done, the record certified was of a trespass done by the woman alone; and for this Variance the writ was abated, and the record judged not removed. Sid. 269: 3 Salk. 369.

On Variance in the persons or number of acres, &c. between a Fine and an Indenture to lead the uses; if the party avers, there was not any other consideration, or new agreement, but that the Fine was levied according to the uses and intents mentioned in the indenture, it is good. 5 Rep. 25. See further, titles Amendment; Abatement; Error; Pleading; Averment; Verdict, &c.

VASSAL, Vassalus] In our ancient customs signified a Tenant or Feudatary; or person who vowed fidelity and homage to a Lord, on account of some land, &c. held of him in fee; also a slave or servant, and especially a domestic of a Prince. Du Cange. Vassalus is said to be quasi inferior socius, as the Vassal is inferior to his master, and must serve him; and yet he is in a manner his companion, because each of them is obliged to the other. Skene. See 2 Comm. 53; and this Dict. title Tenures.

VASSALAGE, The state of a Vassal, or servitude and dependency on a superior Lord: Liege Vassalage belonged only to the King.

VASSELERIA, The tenure or holding of Vassals. Cowell.

VASTO, A writ against tenants for term of life or years, committing Waste. F. N. B 55: Reg. Orig. 72. See title Waste.

VASTUM, A Waste, or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning. Paroch. Antiq. 171.

VASTUM FORESTÆ VEL BOSCI, That part of a Forest, or Wood, wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed, that it lay in a manner waste and barren. Paroch. Antiq. p. 351.

VAVASORS, The first name of dignity, next beneath a Peer, was anciently that of Vidames, Vice-domini, Valvasors, or Vavasors, who are mentioned by our ancient Lawyers, as viri magnæ dignitatis: and Sir Edward Coke speaks highly of them. Yet they are now quite out of use; and our legal Antiquarians are not agreed upon even their original or ancient office. 1 Comm. c. 12. p. 403: Bract. lib. 1. c. 8: Spelm.

VAVASORY, Vavasoria.] The lands that a Vavasor held. Bract. lib. 2.

UBIQUITY OF THE KING; See title King V. 3.

VEAL MONEY, The Tenants within the manor of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, pay a yearly rent by this name to their Lord; in lieu of Veal paid formerly in kind. Blount's Ten.

VECTIGAL JUDICIARIUM, Is applied to money or fines paid to the King, to defray the charge he is at in maintaining the Courts of Justice, and protection of the People. 3 Salk. 33.

VEJOURS, Visores, from the Fr. Veier, i. e. Cernere.] Such persons as are sent by the Court, to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right thereto. It is also used for those that are appointed to view an offence. Old Nat. Br. 112: Bract. lib. 5. See View.

VELTRAIA, Ministerium de Veltraia.] The office of dog leader, or a courser. Rot. Pip. 5 Steph.

VELTRARIUS, One who leads greyhounds; which dogs, in Germany, are called Welters; in Italy, Veltres, &c. Blount's Tenures, p. 9.

VELUM QUADRAGESIMALE, A veil or piece of hangings, drawn before the Altar in Lent, as a token of mourning and sorrow. Synod. Exon. Anno 1217.

VENARIA, Beasts which are caught in the woods by hunting. Leg. Canut. c. 108.

VENATIO, In the statute of Charta de Foresta, signifies Venison, in Fr. Venaison. It is called Venaison, of the means whereby the beasts are taken, quoniam ex Venatione capiuntur, and being hunted are most wholesome: And they are termed beasts of Venary, because they are gotten by hunting. 4 Inst. 316.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS, A Judicial Writ, directed to the Sheriff, commanding him to sell goods which he hath formerly taken into his hands, for the satisfying a judgment given in the King's Court. Reg. Judic. 33: Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 21. If the Sheriff upon a Fieri facias takes goods in execution, and returns that he hath so done, and cannot find buyers; or if he delay to deliver them to the party, &c. then the writ, Venditioni exponas, shall issue to the Sheriff, reciting the former writ and return, and commanding the Sheriff to make sale of the goods, and bring in the money. 13 H. 7. 1: Dyer 363. If a Supersedeas be not delivered to the Sheriff till he hath in part executed a writ of execution, he may afterwards be authorised to go through with it by a Venditioni exponas; as he may also in the like case after a writ of error. Dyer 98: Cro. Eliz. 597: 1 Roll. Abr. 894.

If goods are not taken to the value of the whole, the plaintiff may have a Venditioni exponas for part, and a Fieri facias for the residue, in the same writ. Thes. Brev. 305. And it seems that a Venditioni exponas may be directed to the new Sheriff, where the old one returns that he has taken goods, which remain in his hands for want of buyers. 2 Saund. 343. But the more usual way of proceeding in such case, is by writ of Distringas to the new Sheriff, commanding him to distrain the old one, till he sell the goods, &c. Of this writ there are two sorts; the first, which is the more ancient, commands the Sheriff, to whom it is directed, to distrain the late Sheriff, so that he expose the goods to sale, and cause the monies arising therefrom to be delivered to the present Sheriff, in order that such Sheriff may have those monies in Court at the return. Gilb. Ex. 21: 34 Hen. 6. 36. The other writ, which is the most usual, is to distrain the late Sheriff to sell the goods, and have the money in Court himself. 6 Mod. 299: Rast. 164: Thes. Brev. 90: Off. Brev. 45: 2 Ld. Raym. 1074, 5: 1 Salk. 323.

VENDITOR REGIS, The King's Salesman; being the person who exposed to sale goods and chattels seized or distrained to answer any debt due to the King: This office was granted by King Edw. I. to Philip de Lardiner, in the county of York; but the office was seized into the King's hands for the abuse thereof; Anno 2 Ed. 2.

VENDOR AND VENDEE. Vendor is the person who sells any thing, and Vendee the person to whom it is sold. Where a man sells a thing to another, it is implied that the Vendor shall make assurance by bill of sale to the Vendee, but not unless it be demanded; per Finch, Chancellor. 2 Chan. Cases 5. See 21 Vin. Abr. title Vendor and Vendee.

VENELLA, A narrow or strait way. Monast. i. 408.

VENIA, A kneeling or low prostration on the ground, by penitents. Walsing. 196.

VENIRE FACIAS, A writ judicial awarded to the Sheriff to cause a Jury in the neighbourhood to appear, when a cause is brought to issue, to try the same. Old Nat. Br. 157. See title Jury I.

Formerly, many questions arose concerning the place, or places, from whence a Jury should come; Vide 2 Lill. Ab. 633, 636: Cro. Eliz. 260: 3 Salk. 381: Yelv. 104: Moor 357, 412: 5 Rep. 36: Lutw. 213. But now, by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, a Venire Facias may be from the body of the county, &c. In an information against a county for not repairing a bridge, it was held, that the Attorney-General might take a Venire to any adjacent county; and that it might be de corpore of the whole, or de vicineto of some particular place therein next adjoining. 3 Salk. 381.

One Venire Facias is sufficient to try several issues, between the same parties, and in the same county. 2 Cro. 550. Where an action was brought against two, they both joined issue, and one died; and after the Venire Facias was awarded to try the issue between both, which was done; and held to be no error, because one of the defendants was living. Cro. Car. 308. See title Amendment. If a Venire Facias is returned by the Coroner for defect of the Sheriff, &c. when it ought to be returned by the Sheriff, the trial is wrong, and not remedied by any statute of Jeofails. 5 Rep. 36. In all cases, where there is to be a Special Jury, the Venire must be special: If the matter to be tried be within divers places, and one and the same county, the Venire Facias shall be general; and if in several counties, it shall be special. 2 Lill. Abr. 635.

If a matter of Law be depending in Court, or if there be judgment by default as to part, and an issue also joined as to other part, there is to be a special Venire awarded, tam ad triandum exitum, quam ad inquirendum de dampnis, &c. as well to try the issue, as to inquire of the damages, both upon the issue and the matter put in judgment of the Court. 2 Lill. Abr. 636.

At a trial at Nisi Prius, the plaintiff changed the Venire Facias and panels, and had a Jury the defendant knew not of; and ruled, that the defendant cannot be aided, if the first Venire was not filed: And a difference was taken when the first Venire was not filed, that he cannot be aided, because he may resort to the Sheriff, and have a view of the panel, to be prepared for his challenges; but if the first Venire was filed, then the defendant shall have a new trial. Raym. 79.

A Venire Facias after filed, cannot be altered without consent of parties: Though where a verdict in a cause is imperfect, so that judgment cannot be given upon it, there shall be a new Venire Facias to try the cause, and find a new verdict. 2 Lill. 634, 635. Venire is now little more than form, unless in case of a trial at bar.

Venire Facias, is the common process upon any Presentment; being in nature of a summons for the party to appear; and is a proper process to be first awarded on an indictment for any crime, under the degree of Treason, Felony, or Maihem, except in such cases wherein other process is directed by statute. See title Process II. The Venire Facias ad respondendum may be without a day certain, because by an appearance the fault in this process is cured; but a Venire Facias ad triand. exitum must be returnable on a day certain, &c. 3 Salk. 371.

VENIRE FACIAS tot Matronas; See this Dictionary, title Ventre Inspiciendo.

VENIRE FACIAS, de Novo; The ancient proceeding of the Common Law, to send a cause to a New Trial: And this proceeding is still preserved in certain cases. New Trials are generally granted where a General

Verdict

Verdict is found; a Venire Facias de Novo, upon a Special Verdict. But the most material difference between them is this, that a Venire Facias de Novo must be granted upon matter appearing upon the record; while a New Trial may be granted upon things out of it, if the record be never so right: A Venire de Novo therefore is granted, 1st, If it appears upon the face of the record, that the Verdict is so imperfect that no judgment can be given upon it. 2d, Where it appears that the Jury ought to have found facts differently from what they do. See 1 Wils. 55; and this Dictionary, title Trial.

The following seem to be the cases in which a Venire de Novo is grantable: 1st, Where the Jury are improperly chosen, or there is any irregularity in returning them.—2dly, Where they have improperly conducted themselves.—3dly, Where they give general damages, upon a declaration consisting of several counts; and it afterwards appears that one or more of them is defective.—4thly, Where the Verdict, whether general or special, is imperfect, by reason of some ambiguity or uncertainty; or by finding less than the whole matter put in issue; or by not assessing damages. Tidd's Pract. K. B.; and the authorities there cited.

By stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32. § 1, if the plaintiff, after issuing Jury process, does not proceed to trial at the first Assises, he may sue a Venire de Novo: but if the Jury be discharged at the Assises in order to have a view, there is no need of a Venire de Novo. Com. 248.

A Venire de Novo may be granted by a Court of Error; or after a Demurrer to Evidence; or Bill of Exceptions. Tidd's Pract.

VENITARE, The Book of Ecclesiasticus; so called because of the Venite exultemus Domino, Jubilate Deo, &c. written in the Hymn-book or Psalter as it is appointed to be sung, &c. It often occurs in the history of our English Synods; and is called Venitarium. Mon. Ang. iii. 432.

VENTER, Lat.] Literally the belly; it is used in Law to distinguish the issue, where a man hath children by several wives; (said to be by a first or second Venter.) How they shall take in descents of lands; See tit. Descent.

VENTRE INSPICIENDO, A writ to search a Woman who saith she is with Child, and thereby withholdeth lands from the next heir: The Trial whereof is by a Jury of Women. Reg. Orig. 227.

Where a Widow is suspected to feign herself with Child, in order to produce a Supposititious Heir to the estate, the Heir presumptive may have this Writ to examine whether she be with Child or not; and if she be, to keep her under proper restraint till delivered: But if the Widow be, upon examination, found not pregnant, the presumptive heir shall be admitted to the inheritance, though liable to lose it again on the birth of a Child within forty weeks from the death of a husband. 1 Comm. c. 16. See title Bastard.

C.*; in which King, C. on petition, granted the writ, though the persons applying were only Tenants in Tail. And this writ is now granted, not only to an Heir at Law, but to a Devisee, whether for Life, or in Tail, or in Fee; and whether his interest is immediate or contingent. Ex parte Bateman, at the Rolls, 16th Dec. 1784: Ex parte Bellett, at the Rolls, 20th Dec. 1786: Ex parte Brown, *in Canc. In Mosely's Report of Aiscough's Case, a case of Personal Estate is cited, in which the then Master of the Rolls, in conformity to the reason of the Common Law, directed that the Master should appoint two Matrons to inspect a Woman. See 1 Inst. 8, b. note 3; where the necessity of an Act of Parliament to regulate the proceedings on this writ is suggested. See also this Dictionary, title Execution and Reprieve.

Thomas de Aldham of Surrey, brother of Adam de Aldham, Anno 4 Hen. 3, claimed his brother's estate: But Joan, widow of the said Adam, pleaded she was with Child; whereupon the said Thomas obtained the writ Ventre Inspiciendo, directed to the Sheriff—Quod assumptis tecum discretis et legalibus militibus, et discretis et legalibus mulieribus de comitatu tuo, in propria persona accedas ad ipsam Joannam et ipsam à prædictis mulieribus coram præfatis militibus videri facias et diligenter tractari per ubera et Ventrem, et inquisitionem factam certificari facias sub sigillo tuo et sigillo duorum militum, justiciariis nostris apud Westm &c.

In Easter Term, 39 Eliz. this writ was sued out of the Chancery into C. B. at the prosecution of Percival Willoughby, who had married the eldest of the five daughters of Sir Francis Willoughby, who died without any son, but left a wife named Dorothy, that at the time of his death pretended herself to be with Child by Sir Francis; which, if it were a son, all the five sisters would thereby lose the inheritance descended unto them; which writ was directed to the Sheriffs of London, and they were commanded to cause the said Dorothy to be viewed by twelve Knights, and searched by twelve Women, in the presence of the twelve Knights, et ad tractandum per ubera et ad Ventrem inspiciendum, whether she were with Child, and to certify the same to the Court of Common Pleas; and if she were with Child, to certify for how long in their judgments, et quando sit paritura; upon which the Sheriffs accordingly caused her to be searched, and returned that she was twenty weeks gone with Child, and that within twenty weeks more fuit paritura: Thereupon another writ issued out of C. B. requiring the Sheriffs safely to keep her in such a house, and that the doors should be well guarded; and that every day they should cause her to be viewed by some of the women named in the writ; and when she should be delivered, that some of them should be with her to view her birth, whether it be male or female, to the intent that there should be no falsity: And upon this writ the Sheriffs returned, That they had caused her accordingly to be kept and viewed, and that such a day she was delivered of a Daughter. Cro. Eliz. 566.

The Sheriffs of London, with a Jury of Women, whereof two were Midwives, came to the Lady's house, and into her chamber, and sent to her the women, sworn by the Sheriffs before, to search, try, and speak the truth whether she was with Child or not. The men all went out, and the women searched the Lady, and gave their verdict that she was with Child; whereupon the Sheriffs returned the writ accordingly. Moore 523. pl. 692.

In the 22d year of King James I., the Widow of one Duncomb married within a week after the death of her first husband; and his cousin and heir brought the writ Ventre Inspiciendo directed to the Sheriff of L. who returned that he had caused her to be searched by such Matrons, who found her with Child, et quod paritura fuit within such a time; and thereon it was prayed, that the Sheriff might take her into his custody, and keep her till she was delivered; but because she ought to live with her husband, they would not take her from him; but he was ordered to enter into a recognizance not to remove her from his dwelling-house, and a writ was awarded to the Sheriff to cause her to be inspected every day by two of the women which he had returned had searched her, and that three of them should be present at her delivery, &c. Cro Jac. 685.

VENUE,

VICINETUM, or VISNETUM.] A Neighbouring Place, locus quem vicini habitant: The place from whence a Jury are to come for Trial of Causes. F. N. B. 115.

The want of a Venue is only curable by such a plea as admits the fact, for the trial whereof it was required to lay a Venue. 3 Salk. 381.

Where the Action could only have arisen in a particular county, it is local, and the Venue (by original) must be laid in that county; for if it be laid elsewhere, the defendant may demur to the Declaration, or the plaintiff, on the General Issue, will be nonsuited at the Trial. But where the Action might have arisen in any county, it is transitory, and the plaintiff may, in general, lay the Venue wherever he pleases; subject to its being changed by the Court, if not laid in the very county where the Action arose. Thus, in an Action upon a Lease for Rent, &c. founded on the privity of estate, as in Debt by the Assignee or Devisee of the Lessor against the Lessee; or by the Lessor, or his personal Representatives, against the Assignee of the Lessee; or against the Executor of the Lessee, in the debet and detinet; or in Covenant, by the Grantee of the Reversion against the Assignee of the Lessee; the Action is local, and the Venue must be laid in the county where the estate lies. But in an Action upon a Lease for Rent, &c. founded on the privity of contract; as in Debt by the Lessor against the Lessee, or his Executor in the detinet only; or in Covenant, by the Lessor or Grantee of the Reversion against the Lessee, the Action is transitory, and the Venue may be laid in any county, at the option of the plaintiff. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

There are, however, some Actions of a transitory nature, wherein the Venue must be laid in the county where the facts which are the ground of the Action were committed, and not elsewhere. Such are all Actions upon Penal Statutes, stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. § 2. Actions upon the Case, or Trespass, against Justices of Peace, Mayors, or Bailiffs, of Cities or Towns-Corporate, Head-boroughs, Portreves, Constables, Tithingmen, Churchwardens, &c. or other persons acting in their aid and assistance, or by their command, for any thing done in their official capacity. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. § 5. Actions against any person or persons, for any thing done by an Officer or Officers of the Excise or Customs, or others acting in his or their aid, in execution or by reason of his or their office. See stats. 20 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 34: 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 47. § 35. In these Actions, the Venue must be laid in the county where the facts were committed, and not elsewhere. On the other hand, the Venue in a transitory Action is, in some cases, altogether optional in the plaintiff; as where the Action arises in Wales, or beyond the Sea, or is brought upon a Bond or other Specialty, Promissory Note, or Bill of Exchange; for Scandalum Magnatum, or a Libel dispersed throughout the kingdom; against a Carrier or Lighterman; for an Escape or False Return; and, in short, wherever the cause of action is not wholly and necessarily confined to a single county. In these cases, the Venue cannot be changed by the Court, but upon a special ground. Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the Authorities there cited.

The Venue by Bill is local or transitory, as by Original. In local Actions, it must be laid in the county where the cause of action arose; in transitory Actions, it may be laid in any county. The county in the margin will help, but not hurt. Hence, if there be no Venue laid in the body of the Declaration, reference must be had to the margin; but where a proper Venue is laid in the body, the word in the margin will not vitiate it. Tidd's Pract. K. B.: 3 Term Rep. 387.

The Law having settled the distinction between local and transitory Actions, it seems that, towards the reign of Richard II. this distinction was but little attended to; for a litigious plaintiff would frequently lay his Action in a foreign county, at a great distance from where the cause of it arose, and by that means oblige the defendant to come with his witnesses into that county. To remedy which, it was ordained by stat. 6 R. 2. c. 2. "To the intent that writs of Debt and Accompt, and all other such Actions, be from henceforth taken in their counties, and directed to the Sheriffs of the counties where the contracts of the same Action did arise; that if from henceforth, in Pleas upon the same Writs, it shall be declared, that the contract thereof was made in another county than is contained in the original Writ, that then incontinently the same Writ shall be utterly abated." The design of this statute was to compel the suing out of all Writs arising upon contract, in the very county where the contract was made; agreeably to a Law of Hen. 1. c. 31: Gilb. C. P. 89, n. But as the statute only prescribes, that the Count shall agree with the Writ in the place where the contract was made, it did not effectually prevent the mischief: And therefore the stat. 4 H. 4. c. 18, directed all Attornies to be sworn, that they will make no suit in a foreign county; and there is an old Rule of Court, which makes it highly penal for Attornies to transgress this statute. R. Mich. 1654.

Soon after the statute of Henry IV. a practice began of pleading, in abatement of the Writ, the impropriety of its Venue, even before the plaintiff had declared. At first, in the reign of Henry V. they examined the plaintiff, upon oath, as to the truth of his Venue. But, soon after, they began to allow the defendant to traverse the Venue, and to try the traverse by the Country. This practice being subject to much delay, the Judges introduced the present method of Changing the Venue upon motion, on the equity of the above statutes; which, Ld. Holt says, began in the time of James I. 2 Salk. 670. The forms of the rule and affidavit are also stated by Styles, as established in 23 Car. 1. Sty. P. R. 631. (ed. 1707.)

It is now settled that, in transitory Actions, the Venue may be changed upon motion, either by the plaintiff or defendant. The plaintiff shall not directly alter his Venue after the Essoign Day of the next Term after appearance; appearance; though he would pay costs, or give an imparlance. Yet he may in effect do it, by moving to amend; and that after the defendant has changed the Venue, or pleaded, and even after two Terms have elapsed from the delivery of the Declaration. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

The defendant is, in general, allowed to change the Venue in all transitory Actions, arising in a county different from that where the plaintiff has laid it; and he may even change it from London to Middlesex, or vice versa. But the Venue cannot be changed in local Actions. And, in transitory Actions, where material evidence arises in two counties, the Venue may be laid in either. R. M. 10 Geo. 2. reg. 2. (c). And if it be laid in a third county, the Court will not change it; for the plaintiff in such case cannot make the necessary affidavit, that the cause of action arose in a particular county, and not elsewhere. 1 Wilf. 178. In order to change the Venue, therefore, it is indispensably necessary that the cause of action should be wholly confined to a single county; and therefore, where that is not the case, the Court will not change it. Thus, in an Action of Debt on Bond or other Specialty, the Court will not change the Venue, unless some special ground be laid; for debitum & contractus sunt nullius loci; and Bonds and other Specialties are bona notabilia, wherever they happen to be. In analogy to which, it is now holden, agreeably to the practice of the Court of Common Pleas, that the Venue cannot be changed in an Action upon a Promissory Note or Bill of Exchange; though this has been doubted; but the Venue may still be changed in an Action upon a Policy of Insurance, not being by deed; or in any other action, the right of which is founded upon simple contract. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

In an Action for Scandalum Magnatum, the Court will never change the Venue; because a Scandal raised of a Peer of the Realm is not confined to any particular county, but reflects on him through the whole kingdom; and he is a person of so great notoriety, that there is no necessity for obliging him to try his cause in the neighbourhood; though this was denied in the case of Lord Sandwich v. Miller. So in an Action for a Libel, published in a news-paper in one county, and circulated in other counties, or contained in a letter written by the defendant in one county, and directed into another, the Court will not change the Venue; because the defendant cannot make the common affidavit, that the cause of action arose in a single county, and not elsewhere: And, for a similar reason, the Venue cannot be changed in an Action against a Carrier or Lighterman, or for an Escape, or False Return. Tidd. But in an Action for a Libel, the Court will change the Venue into a county in which it was both written and published. And the distinction seems to be, between a Libel which is dispersed through several counties, and a Letter which is written in one county, and opened in another; on the former the Venue cannot be changed, on the latter it may. See 3 Term Rep. 306, 652.

Though the Court in general will not change the Venue, where it is laid in the proper county, yet they will change it, even then, upon a special ground. Thus, in Debt on Bond, where the Venue was laid in London, and the plaintiff's and defendant's witnesses lived in Lincolnshire, the Court changed it into the latter county. 1 Term Rep. 781; but see Id. 782: 1 Wilf. 162. And, on the other hand, though the Court will in general change the Venue, where it is not laid in the proper county, yet if an impartial or satisfactory Trial cannot be had there, they will not change it; as in an Action for words spoken of a Justice of the Peace, by a Candidate, upon the hustings, at a county election. Cowp. 510.

So, where the Venue is not laid in the proper county, the privilege of the plaintiff will, in some cases, prevent the Court from changing it. Thus, in an Action brought by a Barrister, Attorney, or other Officer of the Court, if the Venue be laid in Middlesex, the plaintiff, suing as a privileged person, has a right to retain it there, on account of the supposed necessity of his attendance on the Court. But if the Venue be laid in any other county, as in London; or the plaintiff sue as a common person, by original or otherwise, or en autre droit, as executor or administrator, or jointly with his wife or other persons, he has no such privilege. And where a Barrister, Attorney, or other Officer of the Court, is defendant, it seems that he has not any privilege respecting the Venue. Tidd's Pract. K. B.; and see this Dict. title Privilege I.

When the cause of action arises in an English county, where the Assises are regularly holden twice a year, it is a matter of course to change the Venue into that county. R. M. 1654, § 5. But where the cause of action arises out of the realm, the Court will not change the Venue, because the action may as well be tried in the county where the Venue is laid, as in any other where the cause of action did not arise. And, in order to avoid delay, the Court will not change the Venue, except by consent, into a Northern county, where there are no Lent Assises, in Michaelmas or Hilary Term; nor into Hull, Canterbury, &c. where the Justices of Nisi Prius seldom come; nor into the city of Worcester or Gloucester, out of the county at large, because the Assises for the city and county at large are holden at the same place. Tidd.

Where the cause of action arises in Wales, and the Venue is laid elsewhere, it cannot be changed, without consent, into the next adjoining English county; because the defendant cannot make the common affidavit, which is never dispensed with, that the cause of action arose in that particular county, and not elsewhere. And it has been doubted, whether the Venue can be changed, otherwise than by consent, directly into Wales; inasmuch as no Trial can be had there, but the issues (if any) must be tried in the next adjoining English county; and if the defendant let judgment go by default, it is doubtful whether the Court can award a writ of inquiry. Tidd; and see stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 51. §§ 1, 2. The Venue, however, has been frequently changed into the Counties Palatine; because the Court can send down the record there by Mittimus. And, it has even been changed into next adjoining county. 12 Mod. 313: Tidd.

The motion for the defendant to change the Venue is a motion of course; and must formerly have been made within eight days after the Declaration delivered, which was the time allowed by the Rules of the Court for pleading. And accordingly it is said, that if a Declaration be delivered so early in Term, that the defendant has eight days in that Term, he cannot move to change the the Venue the next Term. But it is now settled, that the defendant may move to change the Venue, at any time before plea pleaded. R. M. 1654, § 5. And he is even allowed to change it, after an order for time to plead, though upon the terms of pleading issuably; but not after an order for time to plead, where the terms are to plead issuably, and take short notice of trial, at the first or other Sittings within Term, in London or Middlesex, because a trial would by that means be lost. And the Venue cannot be changed, in any case, after plea pleaded; even though the defendant afterwards have leave to withdraw his plea, and plead it de novo with a notice of set-off. Tidd's Pract.

In order to change the Venue, the defendant must make a positive affidavit, that the plaintiff's cause of action (if any) arose in the county of A. and not in the county of B. (where the Venue is laid,) or elsewhere out of the county of A. R. M. 10 Geo. 2. reg. (2). An affidavit was necessary, because the motion succeeded, and was equivalent to a plea in abatement; and the form of the affidavit is always most strictly adhered to. Tidd's Pract.

Yet as it would be hard to conclude the plaintiff by the single affidavit of the defendant, he is at liberty to aver that the cause of action arose in the county where the Venue is laid, and to go to trial thereon at the same time that the merits are tried, by undertaking to give material evidence arising in that county. And, upon such undertaking, the Court will discharge the rule for changing the Venue This practice is equivalent to joining issue, before alluded to, that the cause of action arose in the first county: And if the plaintiff fail in proving it, he must be nonsuited at the trial; which has, in this case, the same effect as quashing the writ by a judgment on a plea in abatement, viz. quod eat sine die, and the plaintiff must begin again. 2 Salk 669. Originally it was required, that the plaintiff should give no evidence at the trial but what arose in the county wherein the Venue was retained; and if he gave no such evidence, he must have been nonsuited of course. But when it was laid down (more liberally) that the plaintiff might lay his Venue in any county wherein part of the cause of action arose, he was then bound only to give some evidence, and not the whole, (dare aliquam evidentiam,) in the county where the Venue was laid; which continues to be the rule at this day. The evidence however must be material; and therefore it is not sufficient merely to prove that the witnesses to the contract reside in the county where the Venue is laid. Tidd's Pract. K. B. But where a rule to change the Venue from Middlesex to London was discharged, on the plaintiff's undertaking to give material evidence in Middlesex, the Court held, that the undertaking was complied with, by proving a Rule of Court, obtained by the defendant in Middlesex, for paying money into Court; although that rule was obtained, after the rule for changing the Venue was discharged. 2 T. Rep. 275.

It was formerly holden, that the plaintiff must move to discharge the Rule for changing the Venue, before Replication; and therefore that he came too late after Issue was joined, and delivered to the defendant's agent. But now, as the plaintiff may alter his Venue, by moving to amend, so, for avoiding circuity, he may move to discharge the Rule for changing the Venue, on undertaking to give material evidence in the county where it is laid, at any time before the cause is tried; and it was accordingly discharged in one case, after the cause had been twice taken down for trial. Cowp. 409: Tidd's Pract. K. B.

VERDEROR, Viridarius, from the Fr. Verdeur, i. e. Custos Nemoris.] An Officer in the King's Forest, whose office is properly to look to the Vert, and see it well maintained; and he is sworn to keep the Assises of the Forest, and view, receive, and inrol the attachments, and presentments of trespasses of Vert and Venison, &c. Manwood, par. 1. p. 332. See title Forest.

VERDICT,

VEREDICTUM; QUASI DICTUM VERITATIS.] The answer of a Jury given to the Court, concerning the matter of fact in any cause committed to their trial; wherein every one of the twelve Jurors must agree, or it cannot be a Verdict: and the Jurors are to try the fact, and the Judges to adjudge according to the Law that ariseth upon it. 1 Inst. 226. See title Jury III. IV.

On a general Verdict, the Jury were liable to be attainted if they gave a false Verdict. To relieve them from this difficulty, it was enacted by stat. Westm. 2. (13 Edw. 1.) c. 30. § 2, "That the Justices of Assise shall not compel the Jurors to say precisely whether it be disseisin or not, so as they state the truth of the fact, and pray the aid of the Justices; but if they will say, of their own accord, that it is disseisin, their Verdict shall be admitted at their own peril." Upon this statute, it has become the practice for the Jury, when they have any doubt as to the matter of Law, to find a Special Verdict, stating the facts, and referring the Law arising thereon to the decision of the Court. See title Jury III.

In finding Special Verdicts, where the points are single and not complicated, and no special conclusion, the Counsel, if required, are to subscribe the points in question, and agree to amend omissions or mistakes in the mesne conveyance, according to the truth, to bring the point in question to judgment. And unnecessary finding of deeds in hæc verba, where the question rests not upon them, but are only derivation of title, ought to be spared; or they ought to be found shortly, according to the substance they bear in reference to the deed, as feoffment, lease, grant, &c. It is also a general rule, that, in a Special Verdict, the Jury must find facts, and not merely the evidence of facts: And if in this, or any other particular, the Verdict be defective, so that the Court are not able to give judgment thereon, they will amend it, if possible, by the Notes of Counsel, or even by an Affidavit of what was proved upon the Trial; or, otherwise, they will supply the defect by awarding a Venire de novo. Tidd's Pract. and the references there.

If, at the prayer of a plaintiff or defendant, a Special Verdict is ordered to be found, the party praying it is to prosecute the Special Verdict, that the matter in Law may be determined; and if either party delay to join in drawing it up, and pay his part of the charges, or if the Counsel for the defendant refuses to subscribe the Special Verdict, the party desiring it shall draw it up and enter it ex parte. Where the parties disagree, or the Special

Special Verdict is drawn contrary to the notes agreed upon, the Court on motion will rectify it; and the Court may amend a Special Verdict, to bring the Special Matter into question. 2 Lil. Abr. 645, 6, 653.

In all cases and all actions, the Jury may give a General or Special Verdict; and the Court is bound to receive it, if pertinent to the point in issue; and if the Jury doubt, they may refer themselves to the Court, but are not bound so to do. 3 Salk. 373.

A Special Case (see title Jury III,) has this advantage over a Special Verdict, that it is attended with much less expence, and obtains a much speedier decision; the Postea being staid in the hands of the Officer at Nisi Prius till the question is determined; and the Verdict is then entered for the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may happen. But as nothing appears upon the record, except the General Verdict, the parties are precluded hereby from the benefit of a Writ of Error, if dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court or Judge, in point of Law; which makes it a thing to be wished, that a method could be devised of either lessening the expence of Special Verdicts, or else of entering the case at length upon the Postea 3 Comm. c. 23.

Where there is a Special Verdict, the plaintiff's Attorney generally gets it drawn from the Minutes taken at the trial, and settled by his Counsel, who signs the draft. It is then delivered over to the opposite Attorney, who gets his Counsel to peruse and sign it; and when the Verdict is thus settled and signed, it is left with the Clerk of Nisi Prius in a town cause, or with the Associate in the country, who makes copies for each party. The whole proceedings are then entered, docketed, and filed of record; after which a concilium is moved for, a rule drawn up thereon with the Clerk of the Rules, the cause entered with the Clerk of the Papers, copies of the record made and delivered to the Judges, and Counsel instructed and heard, in like manner as upon arguing a demurrer; only that a Special Verdict must be set down in the paper for argument, within four days, and cannot be set down afterwards without leave of the Court. After judgment given, the prevailing party is immediately entitled to tax his costs, and take out execution, without giving a four-day rule for judgment; but the other party may have a rule to be present at taxing costs. Tidd's Pract.: and see Sellon's Pract.

In a Special Case, as in a Special Verdict, the facts proved at the trial ought to be stated, and not merely the evidence of facts. It is usually dictated by the Court, and signed by the Counsel, before the Jury are discharged; and if, in settling it, any difference arises about a fact, the opinion of the Jury is taken, and the fact stated accordingly. For the argument of a Special Case, the same steps must be taken, as for that of a Special Verdict, except that it is not entered of record. Tidd's Pract. When a Special Case is reserved, the Verdict ought always to be for the plaintiff; and the rule of Nisi Prius ought to be to the following effect: That if the Court should be of opinion for the defendant, then judgment of Nonsuit should be entered; otherwise the defendant could have no remedy in case of the plaintiff's death. Barnes 460: Sellon's Pract.

If a Special Verdict in a Criminal Case do not sufficiently ascertain the fact, a Venire de novo ought to issue. Skin. 667: Ld. Raym. 1521; for a Special Verdict ought not to be amended in Criminal Cases, Ld. Raym. 141; unless there are unobjectionable minutes to amend it by. See Stra. 514, 1197: And in Forgery, a Special Verdict has been amended where the fault was committed by the defendant. Stra. 844. If a Special Verdict find only part of the matter in issue, or do not take in the whole issue, or if the imperfection is such that judgment cannot be given, it is bad. Ld. Raym. 1522: Cro. Jac. 31. But if there be several issues, and the Jury find only some of them, the Court may give judgment. Stra 845. For in a General Verdict on several counts, if any one of them is good, it is sufficient in Criminal Cases. Salk. 384: Doug 730.

A Juryman withdrawing from his Fellows, or keeping them from giving their Verdict, without giving good reason for it, shall be fined; but if he differ from them in judgment, he shall not. Dyer 53. If one of the Jury that found a Verdict, were outlawed at the time of the Verdict, it is not good: And where a Verdict is given by thirteen Jurors, it is said to be a void Verdict; because no Attaint will lie. 2 Lil. 644, 650. If there be eleven Jurors agreed, and but one dissenting, the Verdict shall not be taken, nor the Refuser fined, &c. Though it is said, anciently, it was not necessary, that all the Twelve should agree in civil causes, 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 297.

In capital cases, a Verdict must be actually given; and if the Jury do not all agree upon it, they may be carried in carts after the Judges, round the Circuit, till they agree; and in such case they may give their Verdict in another county. 1 Inst. 227, 281: 1 Vent. 97. If the Jury acquit a person of an indictment of Felony against evidence, the Court, before the Verdict is recorded, may order them to go out again and reconsider the matter; but this hath been thought hard, and of late years is not so frequently practised as formerly. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 47. § 11.

In case a Jury acquits a man upon trial against full evidence, and being sent back to consider better of it, are peremptory in and stand to their Verdict, the Court must take it, but may respite judgment upon the acquittal: And here the King may have an Attaint: And if the Jury will, by Verdict, convict a person against or without evidence, and against the opinion of the Court; they may reprieve him before judgment, and certify for his pardon. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 310.

If the fact upon which the Court was to judge, be not found by the Verdict, a new Venire facias may be granted. 1 Rol. Abr. 693. A Verdict being given where no issue is joined, there can be no judgment upon it; but a repleader is to be had. Mod. Ca. 4. And if a Verdict be ambiguous, insufficient, repugnant, imperfect, or uncertain, judgment shall not pass upon it. 1 Saund. 154, 155. See title Venire facias de Novo.

Verdicts must in all things directly answer the issue, or they will not be good; and if a Verdict finds only part of the issue, it may be ill for the whole. 3 Salk. 374. But there is a difference between actions founded on a wrong, and on a contract; for where it is founded on a wrong, as on a trespass, or escape, &c. it is maintainable if any part of it is found: So in debt for rent, a less sum than demanded may be found by the Verdict, because it may be apportioned; but where an action is founded on a contract, there it is entire, and otherwise.

2 Cro.

2 Cro. 380. If several persons are indicted, or jointly charged in an information, a Verdict may find some of the defendants guilty, and not others. And if the substance of an issue be found, or so much as will serve the plaintiff's turn, although not directly according to the issue, the Verdict is good. 1 Lev. 142: Hob 73: 1 Mod. 4. Where only two are found guilty of a Riot, (which cannot be committed by less than three,) or only one found guilty of a Conspiracy, (to which two at least are required,) they having in both cases been indicted with others, judgment shall be given against them, even though the others who were indicted do not come to trial, Stra. 193, 1227. So where six were indicted for a Riot, and two died before trial, two were acquitted, and two only found guilty, judgment was given: For they must have been found guilty with one or both of those who had not been tried, or it could not have been a Riot. Burr. 1262.

If the Jury find the issue and more, it is good for the issue, and void for the residue: And where a Jury find a point in issue, and a superfluous matter over and above, that shall not vitiate the Verdict. 2 Lev. 253. Yet if a man brings an action of Debt, and declares for 20*l.* and the Jury, upon nil debet pleaded, find that the defendant owed 40*l.* this Verdict is ill; for the plaintiff cannot recover more than he demands; and in this case he may not recover what he demands, because the Court cannot sever their judgment from the Verdict. 3 Salk 376. See title Debt.

A Verdict found against a Record, which is of a higher nature than any Verdict, is not good: But where a Verdict may be any ways construed to make it good, it shall be so taken, and not to make it void. 2 Lill. 644, 651. Upon a General Issue, a Verdict which is contrary to another record, may be allowed; but not where the Verdict found is against the same record upon which it is given. Dyer 300. A Verdict against the confession of the party, is void: But it has been held, that the Verdict may be good in the disjunctive, though it be not formal; but if it find a thing merely out of the issue, it is not good. Jenk. Cent. 257: Hob. 53, 54. Where the Jury begin with a direct Verdict, and end with Special Matter, &c. that shall make the Verdict: Also if they begin with any Special Matter, and after make a general conclusion upon it, contrary to Law; the Judges will judge of the Verdict, according to the Special Matter. Hob. 53.

No Verdict will make that good, which is not so by Law, of which the Court is to judge; judgment is to be given on Verdicts, that stand with Law; and what both parties have agreed in the pleading, must be admitted so to be, though the Jury find it otherwise, it being a rule in Law. Hob. 112: 2 Cro. 678: 2 Mod. 4.

At Common Law, where any thing is omitted in the Declaration, though it be matter of substance, if it be such as, without proving it at the trial, the plaintiff could not have had a Verdict, and there be a Verdict for the plaintiff, such omission shall not arrest the judgment. This rule, however, is to be understood with some limitation; for, on looking into the cases, it appears to be, that where the plaintiff has stated his title, or ground of action, defectively, or inaccurately, (because, to entitle him to recover, all circumstances necessary, in form or substance, to complete the title so imperfectly stated, must be proved at the trial,) it is a fair presumption, after a Verdict, that they were proved; but that, where the plaintiff totally omits to state his title or cause of action, it need not be proved at the trial, and therefore there is no room for presumption. And hence it is a general rule, that a Verdict will aid a title defectively set out, but not a defective title. Thus, where the grant of a reversion is stated, which cannot take effect without attornment, that, being a necessary ceremony, may be presumed to have been proved. But where, in an action against the indorser of a bill of exchange, the plaintiff did not allege a demand on and refusal by the acceptor, when the bill became due, or that the defendant had notice of the acceptor's refusal, this omission was held to be error, and not cured by the Verdict; For in this case, it was not requisite for the plaintiff to prove either the demand on the acceptor, or the notice to the defendant, because they were neither laid in the declaration, nor were they circumstances necessary to any of the facts charged. Doug. 679. See Tidd's Pract.

Another rule at Common Law is, that surplusage will not vitiate after Verdict; utile per inutile non vitiatur. And therefore, in Trover, if the plaintiff declare that on the 3d of March he was possessed of goods, which came to the defendant's hands; and that afterwards, to wit, on the 1st of March, he converted them to his own use: This is cured after Verdict; for that he afterwards converted them is sufficient, and the sc. is void. Cro. Jac. 428: Tidd's Pract.

The Statute of Jeofails helps, in certain cases, after Verdict; as it supposes the matter left out was given in evidence, and that the Judge directed accordingly. 1 Mod. 292. See title Amendment.

Where a Verdict is found for the plaintiff, and he will not enter it, the defendant may compel him to do it, on motion; or the defendant may enter it himself. 2 Lill. After a Verdict is returned into Court, it cannot be altered, but if there be any misprision, it is to be suggested before: And a mistake of the Clerk of the Assises appearing to the Court, was ordered to be amended. Cro. Eliz. 112, 150. See title Amendment.

VERONICA. Paris, Anno* 1216, pag. 514: Bromp. 121.

VERT, Fr. Verd. i. e Viridis, otherwise called Greenhue.] In the Forest Laws signifies every thing that beareth a green leaf within a forest, that may cover a deer; but especially great and thick coverts. Of Vert there are divers kinds; some that bear fruit, which may serve for food, as chesnut-trees, service-trees, nut-trees, crab-trees; &c. And for the shelter of the Game, some are called Haut-boys, (high-wood,) serving both for food and browze; also for the defence of them, as oaks, beeches, &c. and for shelter and defence, such as ashes, poplars, maples, alder, &c. Of Sub-boys, (underwood,) some are for browze and for food of the Game; of bushes and other vegetables, some are for food and shelter, as the haw-thorn, black-thorn, &c. And some for hiding and shelter, such as brakes, gorse, heath, &c. But herbs and weeds, although they be green, our legal Vert extendeth not to them. 4 Inst 327.

Manwood divides Vert into Overt-vert and Nether-vert: The Overt-vert is that which the Law-books term haut-boys; and Nether vert, what they call sub-boys: And into Special-vert, which is all trees growing within the forest that bear fruit to feed deer: called special, because the destroying of it is more grievously punished than of any other Vert. Manw. par. 2. pag. 33. Vert is sometimes taken for that power which a man hath by the King's grant to cut green-wood in the forest. See title Forest.

VESTRY; see tit. Churches III. 1. A Place or Room adjoining to a church, where the Vestments of the Minister are kept; also a meeting at such place: Heretofore the Bishop and Priests sat together in Vestries, to consult of the affairs of the Church; in resemblance of which ancient custom, the Ministers, Churchwardens, and chief men of most parishes, do at this day make a Parish Vestry: And, in general, a person is chosen in every Parish to act as Vestry Clerk, whose duty is to attend at all Parish meetings, to draw up and copy all orders and other acts of Vestry, and to give out copies thereof when necessary; for which purpose he has the custody of all books and papers relating thereto.

The Sunday before a Vestry is to meet, public notice ought to be given either in the church after divine service is ended, or else at the church-door as the parishioners come out, both of the calling of the said meeting, and also of the time and place of the assembling of it; and it ought also to be declared for what business the said meeting is to be held, that no one may be surprised, but that all may have full time before to consider of the subject-matter of the meeting. It is also usual to toll one of the church bells for half-an-hour preceding the time when the Vestry is to assemble, in order to remind the parishioners of the appointed time. See 5 Mod. 66: Lu. 21: Hetl. 61: Litt. 263: Popb. 137: 1 Mod. 194: 2 Vent. 167: Burn. Eccl. L.

Every parishioner who is assessed to, and pays the church rates, or scot and lot, is, of common right, entitled to be admitted into a General Vestry, and to give his vote therein. Thus where Phillibroun, an inhabitant and parishioner, paying scot and lot in the parish of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, in London, was excluded from the Vestry-room of that parish by Ryland, the churchwarden, he brought his action for this injury, and, on a demurrer to the declaration, it was insisted that Vestries are voluntary meetings only, and therefore the exclusion was neither an injury or damage to Phillibroun; but that, admitting the shutting of the door against him and keeping him out was a damage, yet it was no more than a public damage, for which no Action would lie. But on the other side, it was contended that every inhabitant has a right to be present at such meetings, and give his vote: And the Court made no difficulty but that such an action was maintainable; but they gave judgment for the defendant, because it was not stated in the declaration that the parishioners had a right to hold their Vestry in this room; for that in an action of this nature, the plaintiff must first shew a Right in the thing claimed, and then a Disturbance in the enjoyment of it. 2 Ld. Raym. 1388: 1 Stra. 624: 8 Mod. 52, 351.

The Rector, Vicar, or Curate also have a right to be admitted into the Vestry, and to vote upon the question therein propounded, although not assessed to the church rates.

So also, all Out-dwellers, occupying land in the parish, have a right to vote in the Vestry as well as the Inhabitants. Burn. Eccl. L.

When the parishioners, thus qualified, are assembled at the time and place appointed, those who are present include all those who are absent, and the votes of the major part of those present bind all the rest. Vent. 367.

The persons assembled at a Vestry being all upon an equal footing, the power of adjourning it does not reside singly in the minister, or in any other person as chairman, nor in the churchwardens, but in the whole assembly; for inter pares non est potestas; and therefore the adjournment, as well as every other act of the Vestry, must be decided by the majority of votes. 2 Stra. 1045.

To prevent disputes, it may be convenient that every Vestry Act be entered in the Parish Books of Accounts, and that every man's hand consenting, be set thereto. Burn Eccl. L.

SELECT VESTRIES—In large and populous parishes, especially in and about the Metropolis, a custom has obtained of yearly choosing a select number of the chief and most respectable parishioners to represent and manage the concerns of the parish for that year; and this has been held to be a good and reasonable custom. 2 P. Wms. 3: Lutw. 1027: Burn Eccl L.

It seems also to have been held a good and reasonable custom to choose a certain number of parishioners as a Select Vestry; and that as often as any one of the members die, the rest shall choose one other fit and able parishioner of the same parish to fill up the vacancy of him so so deceased; but this can only be supported upon the basis of prescription, and constant immemorial usage.

The custom, however, differing in different parishes as to the election, government, and proceedings of Select Vestries, it is enacted by the stat. 10 Ann c. 11. §20, for building fifty new churches in or near London and Westminster, that the Commissioners shall appoint a convenient number of sufficient Inhabitants to be Vestry-men, and from time to time, upon the death, removal, or other voidance of any such Vestry-man, the rest, or majority of them, may choose another.

In several private Acts for building particular churches, the Legislature has described the persons of whom the Select Vestry shall respectively consist. Thus, in Spittlefields, by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 10, the Rector, Churchwardens, Overseers, and all other persons who have served or fined for those offices, shall, so long as they continue householders within the parish, and pay the Poor-rate, be Vestry-men of the said parish for the time being, and have the management of the affairs of the parish.—So also, in the parish of Wapping, Stepney, by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 30, the Rector, Churchwardens, Overseers, and all other persons who shall pay two shillings a month, or more, towards the relief of the Poor, and no other, shall be Vestry-men of the said parish.

A Vestry was called to consider about building a Workhouse, where it was agreed to, and to borrow money for that purpose: And that whoever should be bound for it should be indemnified by the parish. This order was confirmed by another, and both signed by the Vicar and several of the Inhabitants. 300*l.* being the sum agreed upon, was borrowed of A. to whom B. gave bond for it. An order of Vestry was made for raising the money, but, upon appeal to the Quarter Sessions by some new parishioners, was quashed. B. was sued on the bond, and paid the money, and then brought a bill for relief. And the Master of the Rolls decreed him his principal, interest, and costs at Law, and in Chancery; and that the defendants the Vicar, Churchwardens, and Overseers of the Poor, call a Vestry to make a rate for payment; and if the Inhabitants refuse payment, the plaintiff to be at liberty to apply to the Court: And said that he did not see why the Court might not as well compel those who are not parties to pay the rate, as order tenants, though not parties, to pay the rates; and because the defendants had put in a fair answer, their costs were decreed to be raised by the same rate; but said, that if those who had appealed to the Quarter Sessions had been before the Court, they should have paid all the costs. 2 P. Wms. 332. See 21 Vin. Abr. p. 448.

VESTURA, Vesture: A Crop of Grass or Corn; An allowance of some set portion of the products of the earth, as Corn, Grass, Wood, &c. for part of the salary or wages to some officer, servant, or labourer, for their livery or vest. So Foresters had a certain allowance of timber and underwood yearly out of the Forest for their own use. Paroch. Antiq. p. 620.

VESTURE, A Garment; metaphorically applied in Law to a possession or seisin. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 5. Vesture of an Acre of Land is the profit of it; "It shall be inquired how much the Vesture of an acre of ground is worth, and how much the land," &c. 4 Ed. 1; 14 Ed. 3. By grant of Vestura terræ, the soil will pass; and the Vesture being the profit of land, it is generally all one to have that, as the land itself. 1 Vent. 393: 2 Roll. Abr. 2.

UFFINGI, The Kings of the East Angles were so termed; from King Uffa, who lived in the year 578. Matt. West.

VIA REGIA, The Highway or common road, called the King's Way, because authorised by him, and under his protection: It is also denominated Via Militaris. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 80; Bract. lib. 4. See tit. Highway.

VICAR, Vicarius, quasi vice fungens Rectoris.] The Priest of every parish is called Rector, unless the predial tithes are appropriated, and then he is styled Vicar; and when Rectories are appropriated, Vicars are to supply the Rectors' places. See title Parson I. Where the Vicar is endowed, and comes in by institution and induction, he hath curam animarum actualiter; and is not to be removed at the pleasure of the Rector, who in this case hath only curam animarum habitualiter; but where the Vicar is not endowed, nor comes in by institution and induction, the Rector hath curam animarum actualiter, and may remove the Vicar. 1 Vent. 15: 3 Salk. 378.

Upon endowment, the Vicar hath an equal, though not so great an interest in the church as a Rector; the freehold of the church, church-yard, and glebe is in him; and as he hath the freehold of the glebe, he may prescribe to have all the tithes in the parish, except those of Corn, &c. Many Vicars have a good part of the great tithes; and some Benefices, that were formerly severed by impropriation, have, by being united, had all the glebe and tithes given to the Vicars; But tithes can no other way belong to the Vicar than by gift, composition, or prescription; for all tithes de jure appertain to the Parson; and yet generally Vicars are endowed with glebe and tithes, especially small tithes, &c. If a Vicar be endowed of small tithes by prescription, and afterwards land, which had been arable time out of mind, is altered, and there are growing small tithes thereon, the Vicar shall have them; for his endowment goes to such tithes, in any place within the parish. Cro. Eliz. 467: Hob. 39. But where the Vicar is endowed out of the Parsonage, he shall not have tithes of the Parson's glebe, or of land that was part thereof at the time of the endowment, but now severed from it: Yet it seems to be otherwise, if the glebe lands are in the hands of the Parson's lessee. Cro. Eliz. 479: Mallor. Q. Imped. 4. See title Tithes.

VICARAGE, Vicaria,] Of places did originally belong to the Parsonage or Rectory, being derived out of it: The Rector of common right is patron of the Vicarage; but it may be settled otherwise; for if he makes a lease of his Parsonage, the patronage of the Vicarage passes as incident to it. 2 Roll. Abr. 59. And if a Vicarage become void, during the vacancy of the Parsonage, the Patron of the Parsonage shall present to such Vicarage. 19 Edw. 2. 41. If the profits of the Parsonage or Vicarage fall into decay, that either of them by itself is not sufficient to maintain a Parson and Vicar, they ought again to be reunited: Also, if the Vicarage be not sufficient to maintain a Vicar, the Bishop may compel the Rector to augment the Vicarage. 2 Roll. 337:

Parf. Counfell. 195, 196: Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8. Upon the appropriation of a Church, and endowment of a Vicar out of the fame, the Parfonage and Vicarage are two diftinct ecclefiaftical benefices: and it hath been held, that where there is a Parfonage and Vicarage endowed, that the Bifhop in the vacation may diffolve the Vicarage; but if the Parfonage be impropriated, he cannot do it; for on a diffolution the cure muft revert, which it cannot into lay-hands. 2 Cro. 518: Palm. 219.

For the moft part, Vicarages were endowed upon appropriations; but fometimes Vicarages have been endowed without any appropriation of the Parfonage.

The Parfon, Patron, and Ordinary, may create a Vicarage, and endow it: And in time of vacancy of the church, the Patron and Ordinary may do it; but the Ordinary alone cannot create a Vicarage, without the Patron's affent. 17 Edw. 3. 51: Cro. Jac. 516. Where there is a Vicarage and Parfonage, and both are vacant, and in one perfon's Patronage; if he prefents his Clerk as Parfon, who is thereupon inducted, this fhall unite the Parfonage and Vicarage again. 11 H. 6. 32. Vicarage, or not, is to be tried in the Spiritual Court, becaufe it could not begin to be created but by the Ordinary. 3 Salk. 378. VICE-GERENT, A deputy or lieutenant. Stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10.

VICE-MARSHAL, Is mentioned with Vice-Conftable in Pryn's Animad. on 4 Inft. 71.

VICE-ROY, Pro Rex.] The King's Lord Lieutenant over a Kingdom, as Ireland.

VICE-TREASURER, An officer under the Lord Treafurer in the reign of Henry VII. See Under-Treafurer of England.

VICINAGE, Fr. Voifinage, Vicinetum.] Neighbourhood, or near dwelling. Magn. Chart. c. 14. See title Venue:—As to Common by reafon of Vicinage, fee title Common.

VICIS ET VENELLIS MUNDANDIS, An ancient writ againft a Mayor or Bailiff of a town, &c. for the clean keeping of their ftreets. Reg. Orig. 267.

VICOUNT, or VISCOUNT, Vicecomes.] Signifies as much as Sheriff. Between which two words, there feems to be no other difference, but that the one comes from the Normans, the other from our anceftors the Saxons; of which, fee Sheriff. Vifcount alfo fignifies a degree of Nobility next to an Earl, which Camden (Britton, pag. 170,) fays, is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongft us, till Henry VI. who, in his eighteenth year in Parliament, created John Lord Beaumont, Vifcount Beaumont; but far more ancient in other countries. See Selden's Tit. Hon. 761; and this Dictionary, title Peers of the Realm I.

VICOUNTIEL, or VICONTIEL, An adjective, from Vifcount, and fignifieth any thing that belongeth to the Sheriff; as, Writs Vicontiel are fuch Writs as are triable in the County or Sheriff's Court; of which kind there are divers Writs of Nufance, &c. mentioned by Fitzherbert. Old Nat. Brev. 109: F. N. B. 184.

Vicontiels are certain farms, for which the Sheriff pays a rent to the King, and he makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel Rents ufually come under the title of firma comitatûs; of thefe the Sheriff hath a particular roll given in to him, which he delivers back with his accounts. See ftats 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 16: 2 & 3. Ed. 6. c. 4: 22 Car. 2. c. 6.; this Dict. title Sheriff; and Hale's Sheriff's Ac. 40.

VICOUNTIEL JURISDICTION, That Jurifdiction which belongs to the Officers of a County; as to Sheriffs, Coroners, Efchreators, &c.

VICTUALS, Victus.] Suftenance, things neceffary to live by, as meat and provifions. Victuallers are thofe that fell Victuals; and we call now all common alehoufe-keepers by the name of Victuallers. Victuallers fhall fell their Victuals at reafonable prices, or forfeit double value: Victuallers, Fifhmongers, Poulterers, &c. coming with their Victuals to London, fhall be under the governance of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; and fell their Victuals at prices appointed by Juftices, &c. See ftats. 23 Edw. 3. c. 6: 31 Edw. 3. c. 10: 7 R. 2. c. 11: 13 R. 2. ft. 1. c. 8. No perfon during the time that he is a Mayor, or in office in any town, fhall fell Victuals, on pain of forfeiture, &c. But if a Victualler be chofen Mayor, whereby he is to keep the Affife by Statute, two difcreet perfons of the fame place, who are not Victuallers, are to be fworn to affife Bread, Wine, and Victuals, during the time that he is in office; and then, after the price affeffed by fuch perfons, it fhall be lawful for the Mayor to fell Victuals, &c. Stat. 6 R. 2. c. 9: 3 Hen. 8. c. 8.—If any one offend againft thefe Statutes, the party grieved may fue a writ directed to the Juftices of Affife, commanding them to fend for the parties, and to do right; or an attachment may be had againft the Mayor, Officer, &c. to appear in B. R. In fome manors they choofe yearly two Surveyors of Victuals, to fee that no unwholefome Victuals be fold, and deftroy fuch as are corrupt. 1 Mod. 202. The rates of Victuals in all places, except Corporations, fhall be affeffed by the King's Juftices, &c. by proclamation. Victuals are not to be tranfported. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 2. Thefe ancient acts feem now totally difregarded, though the provifions in fome of them are not unworthy attention. See further, titles Foreftalling; Monopoly; Regrating; Navigation Acts, &c.

VI ET ARMIS, With force and arms. Words used in indictments, &c. to express the charge of a forcible and violent committing any crime or trespass Where the omission of Vi et Armis, &c. is helped in indictments, see stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16; and this Dictionary, title Indictment.

VIEW, Fr. Veue, i. e, Visus.] Originally, where a real action was brought, and the tenant did not know certainly what was in demand, he might pray that the Jury might view it. Britton, c. 45: F. N. B. 178.

This View was for the Jury to see the land or thing claimed, and in controversy: Formerly, a View was not granted in personal actions: and see stat. 13 E. 1. c. 48, which restrains it in certain real actions. At present, in actions of Waste, Trespass quare clausum fregit, Ejectment, and other actions where a View appears to the Court to be proper and necessary, that the Jurors, whether common or special, who are to try the issues, may, for the better understanding of the evidence, have the View of messuages, lands, or place in question, the Court is authorised by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. § 3, "to order special writs of distringas or habeas corpora to issue, by which the Sheriff, or other officer to whom they are directed, shall be commanded to have six out of the first twelve of the Jurors named in such writs, or some greater number of them, at the place in question, some convenient time before the trial, who then and there shall have the matters in question shewn to them, by two persons in the said writs named, to be appointed by the Court, and the said Sheriff or other officer, who is to execute the said writs, shall, by a special return upon the same, certify that the View hath been had, according to the command of the said writs." And, by stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 14, "where a View shall be allowed in any cause, in such case six of the Jurors named in such Panel, or more, (who shall be mutually consented to by the parties, or their agents on both sides, or, if they cannot agree, shall be named by the proper officer of the respective Courts of King's Bench, &c. for the causes in their respective Courts, or, if need be, by a Judge of the respective Courts where the cause is depending, or by the Judge or Judges before whom the cause shall be brought on to trial respectively,) shall have the View, and shall be first sworn, or such of them as appear, upon the Jury to try the said cause, before any drawing as directed by the act; and so many only shall be drawn, to be added to the Viewers who appear, as shall, after all defaulters and challenges allowed, made up the number of twelve, to be sworn for the trial of such cause." See title Jury.

Before the stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, there could be no View, till after the cause had been brought on to trial; when, if the Court saw the question involved in any obscurity, which might be cleared up by a View, the cause was put off, that the Jurors might have a View before it came on again. Upon this statute, it had become the practice to grant a View of course, upon the motion of either party: and a notion having prevailed, that six of the first twelve, upon the Panel, must attend upon the View, and that if they did not appear at the trial, the cause must be put off, Lord Mansfield, and the rest of the Judges, thought it their duty to interfere, and to take care that their ordering a View should not obstruct the course of justice, and prevent the cause from being tried; for they were all clearly of opinion, that the act of Parliament meant that a View should not be granted, unless the Court were satisfied that it was proper and necessary; and they thought it better, that a cause should be tried upon a View had by any six, or by fewer than six, or even without any View at all, than that the trial should be delayed for a great length of time. Accordingly they resolved, not to order a View any more, without a full examination into the propriety and necessity of it, unless the party applying would come into such terms, as might prevent an unfair use being made of it. Agreeably to this resolution, they required a consent, which has ever since been made a part of the rule, that in case no View be had, or if a View be had by any of the Jurors, though not six of the first twelve, yet the trial shall proceed, and no objection be made on either side, on account thereof, or for want of a proper return to the writ. 1 Burr. 253, 7.

In actions of Waste, and Trespass quare clausum fregit, the necessity for a View appearing on the face of the pleadings, the motion for it is a motion of course, requiring only Counsel's signature; upon which a rule of Court is drawn up in the Term-time, or a Judge's order in Vacation. But, in other cases, a special application must be made for the rule or order, to the Court or a Judge, upon an affidavit of the circumstances; and it is always made a part of the rule or order, that the expences of taking the View shall be equally borne by both parties, and that no evidence shall be given on either side, at the time of taking thereof. Before the rule or order is drawn up, an application should be made to the opposite Attorney, for the name of his Shewer; and the names of both Shewers must be inserted in the rule or order, and also in the writ, with the time and place of meeting for proceeding on the View. The rule or order being drawn up, a copy of it must be served on the opposite Attorney, and the original left with the Sheriff, together with the names of the Jurors, if special, and he will summon them; if common, he will summon such as he thinks proper. Tidd's Pract.: Impey's Pract.

Where, in action of Waste, several places are assigned, and the Jury hath not the View of some of them, they may find no Waste done in that part which they did not view: In Waste for wasting of Wood, if the Jury view the Wood without entering into it, it is good; also Waste being assigned in every room of an house, the View of an house generally is sufficient, 1 Leon. 259, 267. If a rent or common is demanded, the land out of which is issues must be put in View. 1 Leon. 56. And if a View be denied, where it ought to be granted, or granted where it ought not to be, &c. it is error. 2 Lev. 217. So a View may be on indictment for a Nusance. See Nusance.

VIEW OF FRANK-PLEDGE; See title Frank-Pledge.

VIGIL, Vigilia.] The eve, or next day before any solemn feast; because then Christians were wont to watch, fast, and pray in their churches. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19.

VI LAICA REMOVENDA, A writ that lies where two Parsons contend for a church, and one of them enters into it with a great number of laymen, and holds out the other vi et armis; then he that is holden out shall have this writ directed to the Sheriff, that he remove the force: But the Sheriff ought not to remove the Incumbent out of the Church, whether he is there by right or wrong, but only the force. F. N. B. 54: 3 Inst.

161; and see stat. 15 R. 2. c. 3. The writ Vi laica removenda ought not to be granted, until the Bishop of the diocese where such church is, hath certified into the Chancery such resisting and force, &c. though it is said in the New Natura Brevium, it lieth upon a surmise made by the incumbent, or by him that is grieved, without any such certificate of the Bishop, New Nat. Br. 121. A restitution was awarded to one who was put out of possession by the Sheriff upon a Vi laica removenda. Cro. Eliz. 466: 5 Mod. 443.

VILL, or VILLAGE, Villa.] Is sometimes taken for a Manor, and sometimes for a Parish, or part of it: But a Vill is most commonly the out-part of a parish, consisting of a few houses, as it were separate from it. Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus, vicinata, & collata ex pluribus vicinis. 1 Inst. 115. Fleta mentions the difference between a Mansion, a Village, and a Manor, viz. a Mansion may be of one or more houses, but it must be but one dwelling-place, and none near it; for, if other houses are contiguous, it is a Village; and a Manor may consist of several Villages, or one alone. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 51. According to Fortescue, the boundaries of Villages are not by houses or streets; but by a circuit of ground, within which there may be hamlets, woods, and waste ground, &c. Fortesc. de L. L. Ang. c. 24. The word Town, or Vill, is now, by the alteration of times and language, become a general term; comprehending under it the several species of Cities, Boroughs, and common Towns. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4.

When a place is named generally, in legal proceedings, it is intended to be a Vill, because, as to civil purposes, the Kingdom was first divided into Vills; and it is never intended a Parish, that being an ecclesiastical division of the kingdom to spiritual purposes, though, in many cases, the Law takes notice of Parishes as to civil purposes. 1 Mod. 250. If no Vill, &c. is alleged, where a messuage and lands lie, no trial can be had concerning it: But some Counties in the north of England, and in Wales, have no Vills but Parishes. Jenk. Cent. 33, 328. A Vill and a Parish by intendment shall be all one; and in process of appeal, a Parish may be intended a Vill. Cro. Jac. 263: 3 Salk. 380. If a Venue be laid in Gray's Inn, which is no Parish or Vill, the defendant must plead there is no such Vill as Gray's Inn, or it shall be intended a Vill after verdict, &c. 3 Salk 381. Two houses in an extraparochial place are not enough to denominate a Vill. 2 Stra. 1004, 1071. See titles Poor I. 1; City; Town.

VILLA REGIA, A title given to those Country Villages where the Kings of England had a Royal Seat, and held the manor in their own demesne, having there commonly a free chapel, not subject to ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Paroch. Antiq. 53.

VILLAIN, VILLEIN, Villanus, Fr. Vilain, i. e. Vilis.] A man of base or servile condition, a Bondman, or Servant. Of these Bondmen or Villains there were two sorts in England; one termed a Villain in Gross, who was immediately bound to the person of the Lord, and his heirs: the other, a Villain Regardant to a Manor, being bound to his Lord as a member belonging and annexed to a manor, whereof the Lord was owner. And he was properly a pure Villain, of whom the Lord took redemption to marry his daughter, and to make him free; and whom the Lord might put out of his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, at his will, and chastise, but not maim him: For if he maimed his Villain, he might have appeal of Maihem against the Lord; as he could bring appeal of the death of an ancestor against his Lord, or appeal of Rape done to his wife. Bract. lib. 1. c. 6: Old Nat. Br. 8: Terms de Ley.

Some were Villains by title or prescription, that is to say, that all their blood had been Villains Regardant to the Manor of the Lord time out of mind: And some were made Villains by their confession in a Court of Record, &c. Though the Lord might make a manumission to his Villain, and thereby infranchise him: And if the Villain brought any action against his Lord, other than an appeal of Maihem, &c. and the Lord, without protestation, made answer to it; by this the Villain was made free. Terms de Ley 576.

Villain estate was contradistinguished to free estate, by the stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 11. The Villains were such as dwelt in villages, and of that servile condition, that they were usually sold with the farm to which they respectively belonged; so that they were a kind of slaves, and used as such: Villenage, or Bondage, it is said, had beginning among the Hebrews. Terms de Ley 455.

VILLENAGE cometh of Villain, and was a base tenure of lands or tenements, whereby the tenant was bound to do all such services as the Lord commanded, or were fit for a Villain to perform: The division of Villenage, by Bracton, was into purum Villenagium à quo præstatur servitium incertum & indeterminatum, & Villenagium socagium; which was to carry the Lord's dung into his fields, to plough his ground at certain days, sow and reap his corn, &c.; and even to empty his jakes; as the inhabitants of some places were bound to do, though afterwards turned into a rent, and that villanous service excused. Every one that held in Villenage was not a Villain or Bondman; for tenure in Villenage could make no Freeman a Villain, unless it were continued time out of mind; nor could free land make a Villain free. Bract. l. 2. c. 8. See further, this Dictionary, title Tenures III. 1; 13; Villenage; and 2 Comm. c. 5.

The slavery of this custom hath been long ago taken off; for we have hardly heard of any case in Villenage since Crouche's Case in Dyer's Rep. There are not properly any Villains now; and the title and tenure of Villenage are abolished by the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

VILLANIS REGIS SUBTRACTIS REDUCENDIS, A writ that lay for the bringing back of the King's Bondmen, that had been carried away by others out of his manors, whereto they belonged. Reg. Orig. 87.

VILLANOUS JUDGMENT, Villanum Judicium.] Is that which casts the reproach of Villany and shame upon him against whom it is given, as a Conspirator, &c. And the judgment in such a case shall be like the ancient Judgment in Attaint, viz. That the offender shall not be of any credit afterwards; nor shall it be lawful for him to approach the King's Court; and his lands and goods shall be seised into the King's hands, his trees rooted up, and body imprisoned, &c. Staundf. P. C. 157: Lamb. Eiren. 63. The better opinion is, that the Villanous Judgment is now by disuse become obsolete, not having been pronounced for some ages; though the punishment at this day appointed for Perjury may partake of the name of Villanous Judgment, as it hath somewhat more in it than corporal or pecuniary pain,

i. e. the discrediting the testimony of the offender for ever. See 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 136.

VILLEIN FLEECES, Bad Fleeces of Wool, shorn from scabbed Sheep. Stat. 31 Edw. 3. c. 8.

VILLENAGE, Villenagium; from Villain.] A servile kind of tenure belonging to land or tenements, whereby the Tenant was bound to do all such services as the Lord commanded, or were fit for a Villain to do. Ubi sciri non poterit vespere quale servitium fieri debet mane. For every one that held in Villenage was not a Villain, or Bondman: Villenagium vel servitium nihil detrahit libertati, habita tamen distinctione utrum tales sunt Villani & villanis in Villano socagio de dominico Domini Regis. Bract. l. 1. c. 6. num. 1.

The division of Villenage was into Villenage by Blood, and Villenage by Tenure. Tenure in Villenage could make no Freeman Villain, unless it were continued time out of mind, nor even free land make a Villain free. Bracton (l. 2. c. 8. num. 3,) divides it into purum Villenagium à quo præstatur servitium incertum & indeterminatum, ubi sciri non poterit vespere, quale servitium fieri debet mane, viz. ubi quis facere tenetur quicquid ei præceptum fuerit: The other he calls Villanum Socagium, and was tied to the performance of certain services agreed upon between the Lord and Tenant; and was to carry the Lord's dung into his field, to plough his ground at certain days, to reap his corn, plash his hedges, &c.; as the inhabitants of Bickton were bound to do for those of Clumcastle in Shropshire, which was afterwards turned into a Rent, now called Bickton Silver, and the service excused. There were likewise Villani Sockmanni, which were those who held their land in Socage; and there were Villani Adventitii, who were those who held land by performing certain services expressed in their deeds. Bract. l. 2. c. 8. See title Tenures III. 1: 2 Comm. c. 5.

VINAGIUM, Tributum à Vino.] A payment of a certain quantity of Wine, instead of rent, to the chief Lord, for a Vineyard. Mon. Ang. ii. 980.

VINCULO MATRIMONII, Divorce à. See title Divorce.

VINEGAR AND VERJUICE, Are liable to certain duties of Customs and Excise, on the importation from abroad, or the manufactory at home; which are regulated by stats. 24 G. 3. st. 2. c. 41: 26 G. 3. c. 73: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 21: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 30: 27 G. 3. c. 13, &c.

VINEYARDS. The owners of Vineyards may make wine of British grapes only growing there, free from any duty. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 17.

VINNET, or Vignet, Fr.]. A flower or border which Printers use to ornament printed leaves of books; mentioned in stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 33.

VIOLATING THE QUEEN, &c. See title Treason III. 6.

VIOLENCE, Violentia.] All Violence is unlawful. If a man assault another with an intention of beating him only, and he dieth, it is Felony. And where a person knocks another on the head who is breaking his hedges, &c. this will be Murder, because it is a violent act, beyond the provocation. Kel. Rep. 64, 131. VIOLENT PRESUMPTION; See title Evidence.

VIRGA, A Rod, or White Staff, such as Sheriffs, Bailiffs, &c. carry as a badge or ensign of their office. Cowell.

VIRGATA TERRÆ, A Yard Land, ex 24 acris constat, quatuor Virgatæ bidam faciunt, & quinque bidæ feodum militis. Kennet's Gloss.

VIRGE, Tenant by. A species of Copyholders, i. e. such as are said to hold by the Virge, or Rod. In fact, Copyholders and Customary Tenants differ not so much in nature as in name, for though called by different names, yet they all agree in substance and kind of tenure: Their lands are holden in one general kind, that is, by custom and continuance of time. See Calthorpe on Copyholds, 51, 54: 2 Comm. c. 9. p. 148; and this Dict. titles Copyhold; Verge.

VIRIDARIO ELIGENDO, A writ for the choice of a Verderor in the Forest. Reg. Orig. 177.

VIRIDIS ROBA, A Coat of many colours; for, in the old books, Viridis is used for varius. Bract. l. 3.

VIRILIA, The Privy Members of a Man; to cut off which was Felony by the Common Law, though the party consented to it. Bract. l. 3. p. 144. See tit. Maihem.

VIS, Lat.] Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance, relating to a man's person, or his goods, right in lands, &c. See Force; Assault, &c.

VISCOUNT, Vicecomes.] A degree of Nobility next to an Earl. They are now made by patent, as an Earl; but their number is small in this kingdom, in comparison with the other degrees of Peerage. See title Peers of the Realm.

VISITATION, Visitatio.] That office which is performed by the Bishop of every diocese once every three years, or by the Archdeacon once a year, by visiting the Churches and their Rectors throughout the whole diocese. Reform. Leg. Eccl. 124. When a Visitation is made by the Archbishop, all acts of the Bishop are suspended by Inhibition, &c. A Commissary, at his Court of Visitation, cannot cite lay-parishioners, unless it be churchwardens and sidesmen; and to those he may give his articles, and inquire by them. Noy 123: 3 Salk. 370. Proxies and Procurations are paid by the Parsons whose Churches are visited, &c. See those titles.

VISITATION-BOOKS OF HERALDS, when admissible in evidence; see title Court of Chivalry.

VISITOR, An Inspector of the government of a Corporation, &c. The Ordinary is Visitor of Spiritual Corporations; but Corporations instituted for private charity, if they are lay, are visitable by the Founder, or whom he shall appoint; and from the sentence of such Visitor there lies no appeal. By implication of Law, the Founder and his Heirs are Visitors of lay-foundations, if no particular person is appointed by him to see that the charity is not perverted. 3 Salk. 381. See further, title Corporation IV.

VISITOR OF MANNERS, In ancient time, was wont to be the name of the Regarder's office in the forest. Manwood, par. 1. p. 195.

VISNE, Visnetum.] A neighbouring place, or place near at hand. See Venue.

VISUS, View, or inspection; as wood is to be taken per Visum forestarii, &c. Hoved. 784.

VIVARY, Vivarium.] A place, by land or water, where living creatures are kept. In Law, it is most commonly used for a park, warren, piscary, &c. 2 Inst. 100.

VIVA VOCE, Is where a Witness is examined personally in open Court. See title Evidence.

VIVO VADIO, Estate in. See titles Vadium Vivum; Mortgage.

ULCUS, A Hulk of a ship of burden. Leg. Ethelred.

ULLAGE, Is when there is want of measure in a cask, &c.

ULNAGE, The same with Alnage; which see.

ULNA FERREA, Is the standard Ell of Iron, kept in the Exchequer for the rule of Measure. Mon. Angl. ii. 383.

UMPIRE AND UMPIRAGE; See title Award.

UNANIMITY OF JURIES; See title Jury.

UNCEASESATH, An obsolete word, mentioned in Leg. Inæ, cap. 37; viz. he who kills a thief, may make oath that he killed him in flying for the fact, & parentibus ipsius occisi juret unceasesath; that is, that his kindred will not revenge his death: From the Saxon, ceas, litis, and un, which is a negative particle, and signifies without; and ath, which is oath; i. e. to swear that there shall be no contention about it. Blount.

UNCERTAINTY OF THE LAW. On this subject, see 3 Comm. 325; where the popular doctrine of the hardship and inconveniency of this supposed evil is very ably explained and refuted.

UNCIA TERRÆ; UNCIA AGRI. These phrases often occur in the Charters of the British Kings, and signify some Measure or Quantity of Land. It was the quantity of 12 modii, and each modius possibly 100 feet square. Mon. Angl. iii. 198.

UNCORE PRIST, The Plea of a defendant, in nature of a Plea in Bar; where being sued for a debt due on bond at a day past, to save the forfeiture of the bond, he says that he tendered the money at the day and place, and that there was none there to receive it; and that he is also still ready to pay the same. See title Tender.

UNCUTH, Sax. Unknown. See title Third-Night-Awn-Hinde.

UNDE NIHIL HABET; See Dote unde nihil habet.

UNDER-CHAMBERLAIN OF THE EXCHEQUER, An Officer there that cleaved the Tallies written by the Clerk of the Tallies, and read the same, that the Clerk of the Pell, and Comptrollers thereof, might see their entries were true. He also made searches for all records in the Treasury, and had the custody of Domesday-book. There were two Officers of this name. Cowell. This office is now abolished. See title Exchequer.

UNDER-ESCHEATOR, Sub-Eschaetor.] Mentioned in stat. 5 E. 3. c. 4. See Escheator.

UNDER-SHERIFF, Sub-Vicecomes.] See title Sheriff.

UNDERTAKERS, Such as the King's Purveyors employed as their Deputies. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. The name is given in several statutes to persons who undertake any great work, as draining of fens, &c. See stats. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 6: 43 Eliz. c. 11.

UNDER-TREASURER OF ENGLAND, Vice-Thesaurarius Angliæ.] An Officer first created in the time of King Henry VII.; but some think he was of a more ancient original. His business was to chest up the King's Treasure at the end of every Term, to note the content of money in each chest, and see it carried into the King's Treasury, for the ease of the Lord Treasurer, as being a thing beneath him, but fit to be performed by a man of great trust and secrecy: And, in the vacancy of the Lord Treasurer's office, he did all things in the receipt, &c. This Officer is mentioned in several statutes; and named Treasurer of the Exchequer, till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when he was termed Under-Treasurer of England. See stat. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

UNDERWOOD, STEALING OF, is punishable criminally, by whipping, small fines, imprisonment, &c. See stats. 43 Eliz. c. 7: 15 Car. 2. c. 2.; and this Dict. title Larceny I. 1.

UN DIEU, ET UN ROY, One God, and One King. The learned Judge Littleton's Motto.

UNDRES, A word used for Minors, or persons under age, not capable to bear arms, &c. Fleta, l. 1. c. 9.

UNFRID, One that hath no quiet or peace. Sax.

UNGELD, A person out of the protection of the Law; so that, if he were murdered, no Geld or fine should be paid, or composition made, by him that killed him. Leg. Ethelred.

UNGILDA AKER. This is mentioned in Brompton, Leg. Athelred, p. 898; and it signifies almost the same as Ungeld, viz. where a man was killed attempting any felony, he was to lie in the field unburied, and no pecuniary compensation was to be paid for his death: From the Sax. un, without, gilda, solutio, and acre, ager. Cowell.

UNIFORMITY, Uniformitas.] One form of Public Prayers, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, is prescribed by stats. 1 Eliz. c. 2: 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. See titles Dissenters; Nonconformists.

UNION, Unio.] A combining and consolidating of two Churches into one: Also, it is when one Church is made subject to another, and one man is Rector of both; and where a Conventual Church is made a Cathedral. Lyndewode. In the first signification, if two Churches were so mean that the Tithes would not afford a competent provision for each Incumbent, the Ordinary, Patron, and Incumbents, might unite them at Common Law, before any statute was made for that purpose; and in such case it was agreed which Patron should present first, &c.; for though, by the Union, the Incumbency of one Church was lost, yet the Patronage remained, and each Patron might have a Quare impedit upon a disturbance to present in his turn. 3 Nels. Abr. 480. The licence of the King is not necessary to an Union, as it is to the Appropriation of Advowsons; because an Appropriation is a Mortmain, and the Patronage of the Advowson is lost, and, by consequence, all Tenths and First Fruits. Dyer 259: Moor 409, 661. See title Appropriation.

By assent of the Ordinary, Patron, and Incumbent, two Churches, lying not above a mile distant one from the other, and whereof the value of the one is not above 6*l.* a year in the King's Books of First Fruits, may be united into one. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21. And, by another statute, in cities and corporation-towns, it shall be lawful for the Bishop, Patrons, and Mayors, or Chief Magistrates of the place, &c. to unite Churches therein; but where the income of the Churches united exceeds 100*l.* a year, the major part of the Parishioners are to consent to the same; and after the Union made, the Patrons of the Churches united shall present, by turns, to that Church only which shall be presentative, in such order as agreed; and, notwithstanding the Union, each of the Pariſhes united ſhall continue diſtinct as to rates, charges, &c. though the Tithes are to be paid to the Incumbent of the united Church. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 3. A Union made of Churches of greater yearly value than mentioned in the ſtat. 37 H. 8, was held good at Common Law; and, by the Canon Law, the Ordinary, with conſent of the Patron, might make an Union of Churches, of what value ſoever; ſo, by ſtatute, with the aſſent of the King. Dyer 259: 2 Roll. Abr 778.

When two Parochial Churches were thus united, the reparations continued ſeveral as before; and therefore the inhabitants of the pariſh where any ſuch Church was demoliſhed, were not obliged to contribute to the repairs of the remaining Church to which it was united. Hob. 67. This occaſioned the ſtat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 12; by which it is ordained, that where any Churches have been united, by virtue of the ſtat. 17 Car. 2 c. 3, and one of them is demoliſhed; when the other Church ſhall be out of repair, the Pariſhioners of the pariſh whoſe Church is down, ſhall pay in proportion towards the charge of ſuch repairs, &c.

UNION OF ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND; See title Scotland.

UNITY OF POSSESSION, Unitas Poſſeſſionis] Is where a man hath a right to two eſtates, and holds them together jointly in his own hands; as if a man take a leaſe of lands from another at a certain rent, and after he buys the fee-ſimple, this is an Unity of Poſſeſſion, by which the leaſe is extinguiſhed, becauſe that he who had before the occupation only for his rent, is now become Lord and Owner of the land. Terms de Ley. A Leſſee for years of an advowſon, on the Church becoming void, was preſented by the Leſſor, and inſtituted and inducted; and it was held, that this was a ſurrender of his leaſe; for they cannot ſtand together in one perſon, and by the Unity of Poſſeſſion one of them is extinguiſhed. Hut. 105. No Unity will extinguiſh or ſuſpend Tithes, but, notwithſtanding any Unity, they remain, &c. 11 Rep. 14: 2 Lill. 658. Unity of Poſſeſſion extinguiſheth all privileges not expreſsly neceſſary; but not a way to a cloſe, or water to a mill, &c. becauſe they are thus neceſſary. A way of eaſe is deſtroyed by Unity of Poſſeſſion; and a rent, or eaſement, do not exiſt during the Unity, wherefore they are gone. Latch 153, 154: 1 Vent. 95. See further, title Joint-tenants.

UNIVERSITY,

UNIVERSITAS; the Civil Law term for a Corporation. 1 Comm. 469] A place where all kinds of Literature are univerſally taught.

The Univerſities, with us, are taken for thoſe two Bodies which are the nurſeries of learning and liberal ſcience in this kingdom, viz. Oxford and Cambridge; endowed with great privileges. By ſtat. 13 El. c 29, it was enacted, That each of the Univerſities ſhall be incorporated by a certain name, though they were ancient Corporations before; and that all Letters Patent and Charters granted to the Univerſities ſhall be good and effectual in Law: That the Chancellor, Maſters, and Scholars, of either of the ſaid Univerſities, ſhall enjoy all manors, lands, liberties, franchiſes, and privileges, and all other things which the ſaid Corporate Bodies have enjoyed, or of right ought to enjoy, according to the intent of the ſaid Letters Patent; and all Letters Patent, and Liberties, Franchiſes, &c. ſhall be eſtabliſhed and confirmed; any law, uſage, &c. to the contrary notwithſtanding.

The Univerſities have the keeping of the aſſiſe of bread and beer, and are to puniſh offences concerning it: Alſo they have the aſſiſe of wine and ale, &c. And the Chancellor, his Commiſſary, and Deputy, are Juſtices of Peace for the vill of Oxon, county of Oxon, and Berks, by virtue of their offices; ſee ſtats 51 H. 3: 31 Ed. 1: 7 Ed. 6: 2 & 3 P. & M.: and the Chart. 29 Ed. 3: 14 H. 8. &c. Perſons acting theatrical performances within the precincts of either Univerſity, or five miles thereof, ſhall be deemed Vagrants; and the Chancellor, &c. may commit them to the Houſe of Correction, or Common Gaol for one month Stat 10 Geo 2. c. 19.

Their Courts are called the Chancellor's Courts. The Chancellors are uſually Peers of the Realm, and are appointed over the whole Univerſity. But the Courts are kept by their Vice Chancellors, their Aſſiſtants, or Deputies; the cauſes are managed by Advocates or Proctors. See Chart. 14 H. 8.

As to the power of theſe Courts in Civil Caſes, ſee this Dictionary, title Courts of the Univerſities. The following particulars are alſo deſerving notice.

Theſe Courts have juriſdiction in all cauſes, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, (except thoſe relating to Freehold,) where a Scholar, Servant, or Miniſter of the Univerſity, is one of the parties in ſuit. Cro Car. 73.

Their proceedings are in a ſummary way, according to the practice of the Civil Law; and in their ſentences they follow the juſtice and equity of the Civil Law, or the Laws, Statutes, Privileges, Liberties, and Cuſtoms of the Univerſities, or the Laws of the Land, at the diſcretion of the Chancellor. Cro. Car. 73: Hetley 25: Hard. 508.

If there is an erroneous ſentence in the Chancellor's Court of the Univerſity of Oxford, an appeal lies to the Congregation, thence to the Convocation, and thence to the King in Chancery, who nominates Judges Delegates to hear the appeal; the appeal is of the ſame nature in Cambridge. Wood's Inſt. 549: 2 Lord Raym. 13, 46.

As cognizance is granted to the Univerſity of all ſuits ariſing any where in Law or Equity againſt a Scholar, Servant, or Miniſter of the Univerſity, depending before the Juſtices of the King's Bench, Common Pleas, and others there mentioned, and before any other Judge, though the matter concern the King; therefore, if an Indebitatus aſſumpſit is brought by Quo minus in the Exchequer againſt a Scholar or other privileged perſon, the Univerſity ſhall have conuſance, for the Court of Exchequer is included in the general words. Cro. Car. 73: Hard. 505.

But if a Debtor and Accountant to the King ſues a Scholar by bill in Equity in the Exchequer, or if an Attorney ſues a Scholar by writ of Privilege, it is ſaid that the Univerſities ſhall not have conuſance, for a general grant ſhall not take away the ſpecial Privilege of any Court. Hard. 189: Lit. Rep. 304: 3 Lev. 149.

But in the caſes where Privilege is allowable, a Scholar, &c. cannot waive his Privilege, and have a prohibition in the Courts of Weſtminſter; for the Univerſity by right right has the conusance of the plea, where one is a privileged person; and a stranger is forced to sue a privileged person in their Courts, by reason of that right vested in them. Cro. Car. 73: Hetl. 28.

But a Scholar ought to be resident in the University at the time of the suit commenced; and no other ought to be joined in the action with him, for in such case he shall not have privilege. Hetl. 28. Though it is said that Servants of the University are privileged, yet it has been held, that a Bailiff of a College was not capable of privilege. Brownl. 74. Neither is a Townsman entitled to privilege, to exempt him from an office in the town, if he keeps a shop and follows a trade, though he is matriculated as Servant to a Scholar. 2 Vent. 106.

It is to be observed, that though cases as to Freehold appear, as above, to be the only causes excepted in their Charter; yet it has been held that in actions for the recovery of the possession of a Term, without claiming title to the Freehold, the Universities shall have no privilege, because the Freehold may come in question. Cro. Car. 87, 88: Litt. Rep. 252.

It hath been disputed how far the words of the Grant entitled them to privilege, in matters of Equity. And the general principle of construction seems to be, that where chattels only are concerned, or where damages only are to be given, there their privilege is allowable; but where the suit is for the thing itself, there their privilege cannot be allowed. Vide 2 Vent. 362.

The jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts in the University of Oxford, is thus stated by Blackstone; and it is believed that of Cambridge is nearly similar. See 2 Lord Raym. 13, 46.

The Chancellor's Court of Oxford hath authority to determine all causes of property, wherein a privileged person is one of the parties, except only causes of Freehold; and also all criminal offences or misdemesnors under the degree of Treason, Felony, or Mayhem. The prohibition of meddling with Freehold still continues; but the Trial of Treason, Felony, and Mayhem, by a particular Charter, is committed to the University jurisdiction in another Court, namely the Court of the Lord High Steward of the University.

For by the Charter of 7 June, 2 Hen. 4. (confirmed, among the rest, by the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 29,) cognizance is granted to the University of Oxford of all Indictments of Treasons, Insurrections, Felony, and Mayhem, which shall be found in any of the King's Courts against a Scholar or privileged person; and they are to be tried before the High Steward of the University, or his deputy, who is to be nominated by the Chancellor of the University for the time being. But, when his office is called forth into action, such High Steward must be approved by the Lord High Chancellor of England; and a Special Commission under the Great Seal is given to him, and others, to try the indictment then depending, according to the Law of the Land and the Privileges of the said University. When, therefore, an indictment is found at the Assises, or elsewhere, against any Scholar of the University, or other privileged person, the Vice-Chancellor may claim the cognizance of it; and (when claimed in due time and manner) it ought to be allowed him by the Judges of Assise; and then it comes to be tried in the High Steward's Court. But the indictment must first be found by a Grand Jury, and then the cognizance claimed: For it seems that the High Steward cannot proceed originally ad inquirendum; but only, after inquest in the Common Law Courts, ad audiendum et determinandum. Much in the same manner as when a Peer is to be tried in the Court of the Lord High Steward of Great Britain, the indictment must first be found at the Assises, or in the Court of King's Bench, and then, (in consequence of a writ of certiorari,) transmitted to be finally heard and determined before his Grace the Lord High Steward and the Peers. See titles Parliament; Peers.

When the cognizance is so allowed, if the offence be inter minora crimina, or a misdemesnor only, it is tried in the Chancellor's Court by the ordinary Judge. But if it be for Treason, Felony, or Mayhem, it is then, and then only, to be determined before the High Steward, under the King's Special Commission to try the same. The process of the trial is this: The High Steward issues one precept to the Sheriff of the County, who thereupon returns a panel of eighteen Freeholders; and another precept to the Beadles of the University, who thereupon return a panel of eighteen matriculated Laymen, "laicos privilegio Universitatis gaudentes:" And by a Jury formed de medietate, half of Freeholders and half of matriculated persons, is the indictment to be tried; and that in the Guildhall of the city of Oxford. And if execution be necessary to be awarded, in consequence of finding the party guilty, the Sheriff of the County must execute the University Process; to which he is annually bound by an oath. 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 277, 8.

The Universities and Royal Colleges are excepted out of the statute of Charitable Uses, stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. § 2. See title Charitable Uses. The presentation of benefices belonging to Papists given to the two Universities, stats. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 26: 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14. Universities may file a Bill in Equity to discover Trusts, stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14. § 4. Pending quare impedit, a Rule may be made for examining Patron and Clerk, stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 14. § 5. Grants made by Papists of Ecclesiastical Livings vested in the Universities, void, stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 5. See title Papists.

Collegians refusing to take the oaths, the King may nominate persons to succeed. Mandamus lies to admit the King's nominee, stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13. See title Mandamus.—Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge may act as Justice of the County without the landed qualification, stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 10. See title Justices of Peace. The Universities and Royal Colleges excepted out of the Mortmain Act.—Colleges possessed of more advowsons than a moiety of the Fellows, not to purchase more, stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36. §§ 4, 5. See title Mortmain.

UNKNOWN PERSONS, Larceny from. An indictment will lie, for stealing the goods of a Person Unknown. 1 Hal. P. C. 512. See title Larceny.

UNLAGE, A Saxon word, denoting an unjust Law; in which sense it is used in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 34.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY, Illicita Congregatio.] The meeting of three persons or more together, by force, to commit some unlawful act. Lamb. See title Riot.

UNQUES PRIST; See Uncore-prist; Tender.

VOCIFERATIO, An outcry, or hue and cry. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 12. See title Hue and Cry.

VOIDANCE, Vacatio.] The want of an Incumbent upon an Ecclesiastical Benefice. See Avoidance.

VOID AND VOIDABLE. In the Law, some things are absolutely void, and some are voidable. A thing is void which is done against Law at the very time of the doing of it, and it shall bind no person: But a thing which is only voidable, and not void, although it be what he that did it ought not to have done, yet, when it is done, the doer cannot avoid the same; though by some act in Law it may be made void by his heir, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 653. But see post. Where a grant is void at the commencement, no act afterwards can make it good: If a lease is absolutely void, acceptance of rent will not affirm it; it is otherwise when a lease is only voidable, there it will make it good. A lease for life which is voidably only, must be made void by re-entry, &c. 3 Rep. 64. This position is very general and perhaps wrong—If an ejectment is brought, the want of entry is cured by the defendant's entering into the rule to confess lease, entry, and ouster, in all cases, except where a fine is to be avoided.—It is generally held that covenants made in a void lease or deed, are also void. Yelv. 18. See Owen 136.

A deed of exchange, entered into by an infant, or one non sanæ memoriæ, is not void; but may be avoided by the infant, when arrived at age, or by the heir of him who is non sanæ memoriæ. Perk. 281. But it hath been adjudged, that a bond of an infant, or of one non compos, is void, because the Law hath not appointed any thing to be done to avoid such bonds; for the party cannot plead non est factum, as the cause of nullity doth not appear upon the face of the deed. 2 Salk. 675. See titles Idiots; Infants. Where the condition of a bond is void, in part by statute, it may be void totally; though it is otherwise if void in part by the Common Law, for there it shall be good for the residue. Moor 856: 1 Brownl. 64. A deed being voidable, is to be avoided by special pleading; and where an Act of Parliament says, that a deed, &c. shall be void, it is intended that it shall be by pleading, so as it is voidable, but not actually vacated. 5 Rep. 119. A judgment given by persons who had no good commission to do it, is void, without writ of error, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 50. § 3. But an erroneous attainder is not void, but voidable by writ of error, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 40. See titles Judgment; Attainder.

VOIRE, Old Fr. now vrai, Truth. Law Fr. Dict.

VOIRE DIRE, Fr. Veritatem dicere.] Is when it is prayed upon a Trial at Law, that a witness may be (previously to his giving evidence in a cause) sworn to speak the Truth, whether he shall get or lose by the matter in controversy; and if it appears that he is unconcerned, his testimony is allowed, otherwise not. Blount. On a Voire Dire, a witness may be examined by the Court, if he be not a party interested in the cause, as well as the person for whom he is a witness; and this has been often done, where a busy evidence, not otherwise to be excepted against, is suspected of partiality. Terms de Ley 581. So in case of Trial of Infancy by Inspection, the Court may examine the Infant himself upon the oath of Voire Dire, to make true answer to such questions as the Court shall demand of him. See 3 Comm. c. 22; and this Dict. title Infant.

VOLUMUS. The first word of a clause in the King's Writs of Protection and Letters Patent. See Protection.

VOLUNTARY, As applied to a Deed, is where any conveyance is made without a consideration, either of money, or marriage, &c. Thus Remainders limited in settlements, to a man's right heirs, &c. are deemed voluntary in Equity, and the persons claiming under them are called Voluntiers. Abr. Cas. Eq. 385: 3 Salk. 174. See title Fraud.—So an escape may be voluntary. See title Escape.—And as to Voluntary Oaths and Voluntary Waste, see those titles.

VOTUM, A vow or promise, used by Fleta for nuptiæ; so dies votorum, is the wedding-day. Fleta, l. 4.

VOUCHE, Fr. in Latin Voco.] To call one to warrant lands, &c. See title Recovery.

VOUCHEE. The person vouched in a Writ of Right. See title Recovery.

VOUCHER, A word of art, when the Tenant in a Writ of Right calls another into the Court, who is bound to him to warranty; and is either to defend the right against the demandant, or yield him other lands to the value, &c. And it extends to lands or tenements of freehold or inheritance, and not to any chattel real, personal, or mixed: He that voucheth is called the Voucher, and he that is vouched, is called the Vouchee; and the process whereby the Vouchee is called, is a summoneas ad warrantizandum; on which writ if the Sheriff return that the party hath nothing whereby he may be summoned, then goes out another writ called sequatur sub suo periculo, &c. Co. Litt. 101. See title Recovery.

There is also a Foreign Voucher, when the Tenant being impleaded within a particular jurisdiction, as in London, voucheth one to Warranty in some other county out of the jurisdiction of that Court, and prays that he may be summoned, &c. 2 Rep. 50. On a suit in England, a Voucher doth not lie in Ireland: But it lies in Wales, and the Tenant shall be summoned in the next county to it. A Vouchee by entering into Warranty, becomes Tenant in Law of the Lands; and when the demandant counts against him, he may plead a release, &c. Jenk. Cent. 41, 100. In a Writ of Entry in the degrees, none shall vouch out of the line: And in Writs of Right and Possession, it is a good counterplea, that neither the Vouchee nor his ancestors had ever seisin of the land. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 40. The demandant may aver a Vouchee to be dead, and that there is no such person, where the tenant voucheth a person deceased, to Warranty. Stat. 14 E. 3. st. 1. c. 18. See further, titles Recovery; Warranty.

VOUCHER, Is also used for a Ledger Book, or Book of Accounts, wherein are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 1. Voucher signifies also, any acquittance or receipt, discharging a person, or being evidence of payment.

VOX, Vocem non habere. A phrase made use of by Bracton, signifying an infamous person, one who is not to be admitted to be a witness. Bract. lib. 3.

UPHOLDERS, UPHOLSTERS, or UPHOLSTERERS. None shall put to sale any Beds, Bolsters, &c. except such as are stuffed with one sort of dry pulled feathers, or clean down; and not mixed with scalded feathers, fen-down, thistle-down, sand, &c. on pain to forfeit the same, or the value: And they are to stuff quilts, quilts, mattrasses, and cushions, with clean wool, and flocks; without using horse-hair, &c. therein, under the like forfeiture. Stats. 11 H. 7. c. 19: 5 & 6 Ed. 6, c. 23.

U S E,

USUS.] Is, in application of Law, the Profit or Benefit of Lands and Tenements; or a Trust and Confidence reposed in a man for the holding of lands, that he to whose Use the Trust is made shall take the profits thereof. West. Sym par. 1: 1 Inst. 272.

The following extract from the Commentaries, (lib. 2. c. 20,) seems to afford the clearest and most perspicuous view of this very intricate part of our Law; and on which our modern Conveyances are in general founded. See further, as connected with the subject, this Dictionary, titles Conveyance; Deed; Lease and Release; Fine of Lands; Recovery; Mortmain; Trust, &c.

USES AND TRUSTS, are, in their original, of a nature very similar; or, rather, exactly the same: Answering more to the fidei commissum, than the Usus-fructus, of the Civil Law; which latter was the temporary right of using a thing, without having the ultimate property or full dominion of the substance: But in our Law, a Use was a Confidence reposed in another, who was Tenant of the Land, or Terre-tenant, that he should dispose of the land according to the intentions of Cestui-que-Use, or him to whose Use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. As, if a Feoffment was made to A. and his heirs, to the Use of (or in Trust for) B. and his heirs; here, at the Common Law, A. the Terre-tenant, had the legal property and possession of the land, but B., the Cestui-que-Use, was in conscience and equity to have the profits and disposal of it. Plowd. 352.

This notion was transplanted into England from the Civil Law, about the close of the reign of Edward III. by means of the foreign Ecclesiastics; who introduced it to evade the statutes of Mortmain, by obtaining grants of lands, not to their Religious Houses directly, but to the Use of the Religious Houses; which the Clerical Chancellors of those times held to be fidei-commissa, and binding in conscience; and therefore assumed the jurisdiction of compelling the execution of such Trusts in the Court of Chancery. See stats. 50 Edw. 3. c. 6: 1 Ric. 2. c. 9: 1 Rep. 139; and this Dictionary, title Mortmain. And, as it was most easy to obtain such grants from dying persons, a maxim was established, that though by Law the lands themselves were not devisable, yet if a Testator had enfeoffed another to his own Use, and so was possessed of the Use only, such Use was devisable by will. But this evasion was crushed in its infancy, by stat. 15 Ric. 2. c. 5, with respect to Religious Houses. See Mortmain.

Yet, the idea being once introduced, however fraudulently, it afterwards continued to be often innocently, and sometimes very laudably, applied to a number of civil purposes; particularly as it removed the restraint of alienations by will, and permitted the owner of lands, in his life-time, to make various designations of their profits, as prudence, or justice, or family convenience, might from time to time require. Till at length, during our long Wars in France, and the subsequent Civil Commotions between the Houses of York and Lancaster, Uses grew almost universal: Through the desire that men had (when their lives were continually in hazard) of providing for their children by will, and of securing their estates from forfeitures; when each of the contending parties, as they became uppermost, alternately attainted the other. Wherefore, about the reign of Edward IV. (before whose time, Lord Bacon remarks, there are not six cases to be found relating to the doctrine of Uses), the Courts of Equity began to reduce them to something of a regular system. See Bacon on Uses, 313.

Originally it was held that the Chancery could give no relief, but against the very person himself intrusted for Cestui-que-Use, and not against his heir or alienee. This was altered in the reign of Henry VI., with respect to the heir; and afterwards the same rule, by a parity of reason, was extended to such alienees as had purchased either without a valuable Consideration, or with an express notice of the Use. Keilw. 42, 46: Y. B. 22 Ed. 4. c. 6: Bac. Uses, 312. But a purchaser, for a valuable Consideration, without notice, might hold the land discharged of any Trust or Confidence. And also it was held, that neither the King or Queen, on account of their Dignity Royal, nor any Corporation Aggregate, on account of its limited capacity, could be seised to any Use but their own; that is, they might hold the lands, but were not compellable to execute the Trust. Bac. Uses, 346, 347. And, if the Feoffee to Uses died without heir, or committed a forfeiture, or married, neither the Lord who entered for his escheat or forfeiture, nor the Husband who retained the possession as tenant by the curtesy, nor the Wife to whom dower was assigned, were liable to perform the Use; because they were not parties to the Trust, but came in by Act of Law; though doubtless their title in reason was no better than that of the Heir. 1 Rep. 122.

On the other hand, the Use itself, or Interest of Cestui-que-Use, was learnedly refined upon, with many elaborate distinctions. And, 1. It was held that nothing could be granted to a Use, whereof the Use is inseparable from the Possession; as Annuities, Ways, Commons, and Authorities, quæ ipso Usu consumuntur; or whereof the Seisin could not be instantly given. 1 Jon. 127: Cro. Eliz. 401.—2. A Use could not be raised without a sufficient Consideration. For where a man makes a Feoffment to another without any Consideration, Equity presumes that he meant it to the Use of himself; unless he expressly declares it to be to the Use of another, and then nothing shall be presumed contrary to his own expressions. 1 And. 37. But, if either a good or a valuable Consideration appears, Equity will immediately raise a Use

Use correspondent to such Consideration. Moor 684.—3. Uses were descendible according to the rules of the Common Law, in the case of Inheritances in Possession: for, in this and many other respects, Æquitas sequitur legem, and cannot establish a different rule of Property from that which the Law has established. 2 Roll. Abr. 780.—4. Uses might be assigned by secret deeds between the parties, or be devised by last will and testament: For, as the legal estate in the soil was not transferred by these transactions, no Livery of Seisin was necessary; and, as the intention of the parties was the leading principle in this species of Property, any Instrument, declaring that Intention, was allowed to be binding in Equity. Bac. Uses, 312, 318. But Cestui-que-Use could not, at Common Law, aliene the legal Interest of the lands, without the concurrence of his Feoffee; to whom he was accounted by Law to be only Tenant at Sufferance. See stat. 1 R. 3. c. 1.—5. Uses were not liable to any of the Feodal Burdens; and particularly did not escheat for Felony, or other defect of blood; for Escheats, &c. are the consequence of Tenure, and Uses are held of nobody: But the land itself was liable to Escheat, whenever the blood of the Feoffee to Uses was extinguished by crime or by defect: and the Lord (as was before observed) might hold it discharged of the Use. Jenk. 190.—6. No Wife could be endowed, or Husband have his Curtesy, of a Use: For no Trust was declared for their benefit, at the original grant of the estate. 4 Rep. 1: 2 And 75. And therefore it became customary, when most estates were put in Use, to settle, before marriage, some joint estate to the Use of the Husband and Wife for their lives; which was the original of modern Jointures. See title Jointure.—7. A Use could not be extended by writ of Elegit, or other legal Process, for the debts of Cestui-que-Use. For, being merely a Creature of Equity, the Common Law, which looked no farther than to the person actually seised of the land, could award no Process against it. Bro. Abr. title Executions, 90.

It is impracticable here to pursue the doctrine of Uses, through all the refinements and niceties, which the ingenuity of the times, (abounding in subtile disquisitions,) deduced from this child of the imagination; when once a departure was permitted from the plain simple rules of Property established by the Ancient Law. These principal outlines will be fully sufficient to shew the ground of Lord Bacon's complaint, that this course of proceeding "was turned to deceive many of their just and reasonable Rights. A man, that had cause to sue for land, knew not against whom to bring his action, or who was the owner of it. The Wife was defrauded of her Thirds; the Husband of his Curtesy; the Lord of Wardship, Relief, Heriot, and Escheat; the Creditor of his Extent for Debt; and the poor Tenant of his Lease." Bac. Use of the Law 153.—To remedy these inconveniences, abundance of statutes were provided, which made the lands liable to be extended by the Creditors of Cestui-que-Use; allowed Actions for the Freehold to be brought against him, if in the actual pernancy or enjoyment of the Profits; made him liable to Actions of Waste; established his Conveyances and Leases, made without the concurrence of his Feoffees; and gave the Lord the Wardship of his Heir, with certain other Feodal Perquisites. See stats. 50 Edw. 3. c. 6; 2 Ric. 2. stat. 2, 3: 19 Hen. 7. c. 15: 1 Ric. 2. c. 9: 4 Hen. 4. c. 7: 11 Hen. 6. c. 3: 1 Hen. 7. c. 1: 11 Hen. 6. c. 5: 1 Rich. 3. c. 1: 4 Hen. 7. c. 17: 19 Hen. 7. c. 15.

These provisions all tended to consider Cestui-que-Use as the real owner of the estate; and at length that idea was carried into full effect by the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. which is usually called THE STATUTE OF USES, or, in Conveyances and Pleadings, The Statute for transferring Uses into Possession. The hint seems to have been derived from what was done at the Accession of King Richard III.; who having, when Duke of Gloucester, been frequently made a Feoffee to Uses, would upon the assumption of the Crown, (as the Law was then understood,) have been entitled to hold the land discharged of the Use. But, to obviate so notorious an injustice, an Act of Parliament was immediately passed, which ordained, that, where he had been so enfeoffed jointly with other persons, the land should vest in the other Feoffees, as if he had never been named; and that, where he stood solely enfeoffed, the estate itself should vest in Cestui-que-Use, in like manner as he had the Use. Stat. 1 Ric. 3. c. 5. And so the statute of Henry VIII., after reciting the various inconveniences before-mentioned, and many others, enacts, that "when any person shall be seised of lands, &c. to the Use, Confidence, or Trust, of any other person or Body-Politic, the person or Corporation entitled to the Use in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be seised or possessed of the land, &c. of and in the like estates as they have in the Use, Trust, or Confidence; and that the estate of the person so seised to Uses, shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the Use, in such quality, manner, form, and condition, as they had before in the Use." The statute thus executes the Use, as the Lawyers term it: that is, it conveys the Possession to the Use, and transfers the Use into Possession; thereby making Cestui-que-Use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at Law as in Equity. 2 Comm. c. 20.

The Statute having, thus, not abolished the Conveyance to Uses, but only annihilated the intervening estate of the Feoffee, and turned the interest of Cestui-que-Use into a legal, instead of an equitable, Ownership; the Courts of Common Law began to take cognizance of Uses, instead of sending the party to seek his relief in Chancery. And, considering them now as merely a mode of Conveyance, very many of the rules before established in Equity were adopted, with improvements, by the Judges of the Common Law. The same persons only were held capable of being seised to a Use, the same considerations were necessary for raising it, and it could only be raised of the same hereditaments, as formerly. But as the statute, the instant it was raised, converted it into an actual possession of the land, a great number of the incidents, that formerly attended it in its fiduciary state, were now at an end. The land could not escheat or be forfeited by the act or defect of the Feoffee, nor be aliened to any purchaser discharged of the Use, nor be liable to Dower or Curtesy on account of the seisin of such Feoffee; because the legal estate never vests in him for a moment, but is instantaneously transferred to Cestui-que-Use, as soon as the Use is declared. And, as the Use and the land were now convertible terms, they became liable to Dower, Curtesy, and Escheat, in consequence of the seisin of Cestui-que-Use, who is now become the

Terre-tenant

Terre-tenant also; and they likewise were no longer devisable by will. 2 Comm. c. 20.

The various necessities of mankind induced also the Judges very soon to depart from the rigour and simplicity of the rules of the Common Law, and to allow a more minute and complex construction upon Conveyances to Uses than upon others. Hence it was adjudged, that the Use need not always be executed the instant the Conveyance is made: but, if it cannot take effect at that time, the operation of the statute may wait till the Use shall arise upon some future contingency, to happen within a reasonable period of time; and in the mean-while the ancient Use shall remain in the original grantor: As, when lands are conveyed to the use of A. and B., after a marriage shall be had between them, or to the Use of A. and his heirs till B. shall pay a sum of money, and then to the Use of B. and his heirs. 2 Roll. Abr. 791: Cro. Eliz. 439: Bro. Abr. title Feoffm. al. Uses, 30. Which doctrine, when Devises by Will were again introduced, and considered as equivalent in point of construction to Declarations of Uses, was also adopted in favour of Executory Devises. See that title. But herein these, which are called Contingent or Springing Uses, differ from an Executory Devise; in that there must be a person seised to such Uses at the time when the Contingency happens, else they can never be executed by the statute; and therefore if the estate of the Feoffee to such Use be destroyed by alienation, or otherwise, before the Contingency arises, the Use is destroyed for ever: whereas by an Executory Devise the freehold itself is transferred to the future Devisee. 1 Rep. 134, 138: Cro. Eliz. 439. And, in both these cases, a fee may be limited to take effect after a fee; because, though that was forbidden by the Common Law in favour of the Lord's escheat, yet, when the legal estate was not extended beyond one fee simple, such subsequent Uses (after a Use in fee) were before the statute permitted to be limited in Equity; and then the statute executed the legal estate in the same manner as the Use before subsisted. Pollexf. 78: 10 Mod. 423. It was also held, that a Use, though executed, may change from one to another by circumstances ex post facto; as, if A. makes a feoffment to the Use of his intended wife and her eldest son for their lives, upon the marriage the wife takes the whole Use in severalty; and, upon the birth of a son, the Use is executed jointly in them both. Bac. Us. 351. This is sometimes called a Secondary, sometimes a Shifting Use. And, whenever the Use limited by the deed expires, or cannot vest, it returns back to him who raised it, after such expiration or during such impossibility, and is styled a Resulting Use. As, if a man makes a Feoffment to the Use of his intended wife for life, with remainder to the Use of her first-born son in tail: here, till he marries, the Use results back to himself: after marriage, it is executed in the wife for life; and, if she dies without issue, the whole results back to him in fee. Bac. Us. 350: 1 Rep. 120. It was likewise held, that the Uses originally declared may be revoked at any future time, and new Uses be declared of the land, provided the grantor reserved to himself such a power at the creation of the estate; whereas the utmost that the Common Law would allow, was a deed of Defeasance coeval with the grant itself (and therefore esteemed a part of it) upon events specifically mentioned. And, in case of such a revocation, the old Uses were held instantly to cease, and the new ones to become executed in their stead. Co. Litt. 237. And this was permitted, partly to indulge the convenience, and partly the caprice of mankind; who (as Lord Bacon observes) have always affected to have the disposition of their property revocable in their own time, and irrevocable ever afterwards. Bac Us. 316.

By this equitable train of decisions in the Courts of Law, the power of the Court of Chancery over landed property was greatly curtailed and diminished. But one or two technical scruples, which the Judges found it hard to get over, restored it with ten-fold increase. They held, in the first place, that "no Use could be limited on a Use;" and that when a man bargains and sells his land for money, which raises a Use by implication to the bargainee, the limitation of a farther Use to another person is repugnant, and therefore void. Dy. 155: 1 And. 37, 136. And therefore, on a feoffment to A. and his heirs, to the Use of B. and his heirs, in trust for C. and his heirs, they held that the statute executed only the first Use, and that the second was a mere nullity; not adverting, that the instant the first Use was executed in B., he became seised to the use of C.; which second Use the statute might as well be permitted to execute as it did the first; and so the legal estate might be instantaneously transmitted down, through a hundred Uses upon Uses, till finally executed in the last Cestui-que-Use. [It is now the practice to introduce only the names of the Trustee and Cestui-que-Trust; the estate being conveyed to A. and his heirs, to the Use of A. and his heirs in trust for B. and his heirs.] Again; as the statute mentions only such persons as were seised to the Use of others, this was held not to extend to terms of years, or other chattel interests, whereof the termor is not seised, but only possessed; and therefore, if a term of one thousand years be limited to A., to the Use of (or in trust for) B., the statute does not execute this Use, but leaves it at Common Law. Bac. Us. 335: Jenk. 244: Poph. 76: Dyer 369. And, lastly, (by more modern resolutions,) where lands are given to one and his heirs, in trust to receive and pay over the profits to another, this Use is not executed by the statute; for the land must remain in the trustee to enable him to perform the trust. 2 Comm. c. 20, cites 1 Eq. Ab. 383, 384.

It seems, however, now to be decided, that, to prevent a trust from being executed by the statute in cases of this kind, it is necessary that the Trustees should have some control and discretion in the application of the profits of the estate, as to make repairs, or provide for the maintenance of the Cestui-que-Trust. Where there is no such special circumstance, it appears to be equivalent to a direction to Trustees to permit Cestui-que Trust, to take the profits of the estate; which is fully established, to be a Use executed. 1 Comm. c. 20, in n., cites 1 Bro. C. R. 75: 2 Term Rep. 444: 1 Eq. Ab. 383.

Of the two more ancient distinctions the Courts of Equity quickly availed themselves. In the first case it was evident that B. was never intended by the parties to have any beneficial interest; and, in the second, the Cestui-que-Use of the term was expressly driven into the Court of Chancery to seek his remedy: and therefore that Court determined, that though these were not Uses, which the statute could execute, yet still they were were Trusts in Equity, which in conscience ought to be performed. To this the reason of mankind assented, and the doctrine of Uses was revived, under the denomination of Trusts: And thus, by this strict construction of the Courts of Law, a Statute made upon great deliberation, and introduced in the most solemn manner, has had little other effect than to make a slight alteration in the formal words of a Conveyance. Vaugh. 50: Atk. 591.

However, the Courts of Equity, in the exercise of this new jurisdiction, have wisely avoided, in a great degree, those mischiefs which made Uses intolerable. The Statute of Frauds, stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, having required that every Declaration, Assignment, or Grant of any Trust, in Lands and Hereditaments, (except such as arise from implication or construction of Law,) shall be made in writing signed by the party, or by his written will; the Courts now consider a Trust-estate (either when expressly declared or resulting by such implication) as equivalent to the legal Ownership, governed by the same rules of Property, and liable to every charge in Equity, which the other is subject to in Law: And, by a long series of uniform determinations, for now near a century past, with some assistance from the Legislature, they have raised a new System of rational jurisprudence, by which Trusts are made to answer in general all the beneficial ends of Uses, without their inconvenience or frauds. The Trustee is considered as merely the instrument of Conveyance, and can in no shape affect the estate, unless by Alienation for a valuable Consideration to a Purchaser without Notice; which, as Cestui-que-Use is generally in possession of the land, is a thing that can rarely happen. 2 Freem. 43. The Trust will descend, may be aliened, is liable to Debts, to Executions on Judgments, Statutes, and Recognizances, (by the express provision of the Statute of Frauds,) to Forfeiture, to Leases, and other Incumbrances, nay even to the Curtesy of the Husband, as if it was an Estate at Law. It has not yet indeed been subjected to Dower, more from a cautious adherence to some hasty precedents, than from any well-grounded principle. 1 Chanc. Rep. 254: 2 P. Wms. 640. It hath also been held not liable to escheat to the Lord, in consequence of Attainder or want of Heirs; because the Trust could never be intended for his benefit. Hardw. 494: Burgess and Wheat, 1 Black. Rep. 123. See further, title Trusts.

The only service, therefore, to which this celebrated Statute of Uses is now consigned, is in giving efficacy to certain new and secret species of Conveyances; introduced in order to render transactions of this sort as private as possible, and to save the trouble of making Livery of Seisin, the only ancient Conveyance of Corporeal Freeholds; the security and notoriety of which public investiture abundantly overpaid the labour of going to the land, or of sending an Attorney in one's stead: But which has given way to a species of Conveyance called a Covenant to stand seised to Uses; by which a man, seised of lands, covenants, in consideration of Blood or Marriage, that he will stand seised of the same to the Use of his Child, Wife, or Kinsman; for Life, in Tail, or in Fee. Here the Statute executes at once the estate; for the party intended to be benefited, having thus acquired the Use, is thereby put at once into Corporal Possession of the land, without ever seeing it, by a kind of Parliamentary Magic. But this Conveyance can only operate, when made upon such weighty and interesting considerations as those of Blood or Marriage. 2 Comm. c. 20. See this Dictionary, titles Conveyance; Covenant to stand seised, &c.

When the legal and equitable Estates meet in the same persons, the Trust or equitable Estate is merged in the legal Estate: As if a Wife should have the legal Estate and the Husband the equitable; and if they have an only Child, to whom these Estates descend, and who dies intestate without issue, the two Estates, having united, the descent will follow the legal Estate, and the Estate will go to the Heir on the part of the Mother. Doug. 771: Goodright d. Alston v. Wells.

Superstitious Uses. A Devise of lands or goods to Superstitious Uses, is where it is to find or maintain a Chaplain or Priest to pray for the souls of the dead; or a lamp in a chapel, a stipendiary Priest, &c. These, and such like, are declared to be Superstitious Uses; and the lands and goods so devised are forfeited to the King by stat. 1 Ed. 6 c. 14: See also stat. 23 H. 8. c. 10. and this Dict. titles Mortmain; Charitable Uses. A man devised lands to Trustees and their heirs, to find a Priest, to pray for his soul, so long as the Laws of the land would permit; and if the Laws would not permit it, then to apply the profits to the Poor, with power to convert the profits to either of the said Uses; adjudged this was not a Devise to any Superstitious Use. 3 Nels. Abr. 259. Where certain profits arising out of lands are given to Superstitious Uses, the King shall have only so much of the yearly profits, which were to be applied to the Superstitious Uses; though when the land itself is given to the testator, declaring that the profits, without saying how much, shall be employed for such Uses, in this case the King shall have the land itself. Moor 129. If a sum certain is given to a Priest, and other goods which depend upon the Superstitious Use, all is forfeited to the King; yet if land, &c. is given to find an obit, or anniversary, and for another good Use, and there is no certainty how much shall be employed to the Superstitious Use, the gift to the good Use shall preserve the whole from forfeiture. 4 Rep. 104: 2 Roll. 205. Where a Superstitious Use is void, so that the King could not have it, it is not so far void, as to result to the heir at law; and therefore the King may apply it to charity. 1 Salk. 163. It seems now, that, independent of the statutes, Devises of this kind could not have effect: for either they would be void by the Mortmain statutes, or when not within the reach of any of them, would be deemed superstitious by the Courts of Equity; which would therefore direct the money to be applied to some Use really charitable, at the Court's discretion; or should the determined Uses not be thought strong enough to warrant the exercise of a discretion so large, would consider the Devisee as a Trustee, for such as would be entitled if there were no Devise. 1 Inst. 112, b. n. 2. USURY.

USURA.] Money given for the Use of Money; it is particularly defined to be the gain of any thing by contract above the principal, or that which was lent, exacted in consideration of Loan thereof, whether it be of Money, or any other thing. 3 Inst. 151. Some make Usury to be the Profit exacted for a Loan made to a person in want and distress; but properly it consists in extorting an unreasonable rate for Money, beyondw hat is allowed by positive Law. The letting Money out at Interest, or upon Usury, was against the Common Law; and in former times, if any one after his death had been found to be an Usurer, all his goods and chattels were forfeited to the King, &c. And according to several ancient statutes, all Usury is unlawful; but at this time neither the Common or Statute Law absolutely prohibit Usury. 3 Inst. 151, 152. By this is meant Interest for Money lent, not exceeding the settled rate: Interest being the lawful gain: Usury the extortion of unlawful gain.

If judgment cannot be given on the statute against Usury, it hath been said that if it be found that a person took money for forbearance by corrupt agreement, judgment may be given against him at Common Law, of fine and imprisonment. 3 Salk 391.

Whatever were the prejudices of early times against the taking of Interest, they appear to have worn off in the reign of Henry VIII.; a rational commerce having taught the Nation, that an estate in money, as well as an estate in land, houses, and the like, might be let out to hire, without the breach of one moral or religious duty. And indeed, when the source of this prejudice is examined, it will be found to have originated in a political, and not a moral precept; for though the Jews were prohibited from taking Usury, that is, Interest, from their brethren, they were in express words permitted to take it from a stranger. 2 Comm. 455, 6.

What shall be a reasonable profit for the loan of money must necessarily depend on a variety of circumstances. In the reign of Henry VIII. 10 l. per cent. was allowed, as the legal rate of Interest, but by stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 20, it was observed, that the stat. 37 H. 8. c. 9, allowing this rate of Interest, had been construed to give a licence and sanction to all Usury not exceeding 10 l. per cent.; and this construction was declared to be utterly against Scripture; and therefore all persons were forbid to lend or forbear by any device, for any Usury, Increase, Lucre, or Gain whatsoever, on pain of forfeiting the thing, and the Usury or Interest, and of being imprisoned and fined; and so the Law stood till the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8, which revived the stat. 37 H. 8. c. 9, and ordained that all brokers should be guilty of a præmunire who transacted any contracts for more; and the securities themselves should be void. The statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 17, further reduced the rate of interest to 8 l. per cent.; and it having been lowered in 1650, during the Usurpation, to 6 l. per cent. the same reduction was re-enacted after the Restoration, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 13. And, lastly, this rate of Interest was reduced to 5 l. per cent. by stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 16.

By this stat. 12 Ann. c. 16, no person shall take, directly or indirectly, for loan of any money, or any thing, above the value of 5 l. for the forbearance of 100 l. for a year, and so proportionably for a greater or less sum; and all bonds, contracts, and assurances made for payment of any principal sum to be lent on Usury, above the rate of 5 l. per cent. shall be utterly void: And whoever shall take, accept, or receive by way of corrupt bargain, loan, &c. a greater Interest, shall forfeit treble the money borrowed, one half of the penalty to the prosecutor, the other to the King: And if any Scrivenor or Broker takes more than 5 s. per cent. procuration-money, or more than 12*d.* for making a Bond, he shall forfeit 20 l. with costs, and suffer half-a-year's imprisonment. See also title Annuities for Life.

These restrictions, however, do not apply to contracts made in foreign countries, for on such contracts our Courts will direct the payment of Interest according to the Law of the country in which such contract was made. Ekins v. East India Company, 1 P. Wms. 396: 2 Bro. P. C. 72. Thus Irish, American, Turkish, and Indian Interest have been allowed in our Courts to the amount of even 12 l. per cent. For the moderation or exorbitance of Interest depends upon local circumstances; and the refusal to enforce such contracts would put a stop to all foreign trade. And by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 79, all mortgages and other securities upon estates and other property, in Ireland, or the Plantations, bearing Interest not exceeding 6 l. per cent. shall be legal, though executed in the kingdom of Great Britain, unless the money lent shall be known at the time to exceed the value of the thing in pledge; in which case, also, to prevent Usurious Contracts at home, under the colour of such foreign securities, the Borrower shall forfeit treble the sum so borrowed. 2 Comm. 463, 4. See title Mortgage.

The following determinations will further explain the general principles that govern the cases on this subject.

It is not necessary that Money should be actually advanced, to constitute the offence of Usury, but any contrivance or pretence whatever to gain more than legal Interest, where it is the intent of the parties to contract for a Loan, will be Usury: As where a person applies to a tradesman to lend him money, who, instead of cash, furnishes him with goods, to be paid for at a future day, but at such an exorbitant price as to secure himself more than legal Interest, upon the amount of their intrinsic value, this is an Usurious Contract. The question of Usury, or whether a Contract is a colour and pretence for an Usurious Loan, or is a fair and honest transaction, must, under all its circumstances, be determined by a Jury, subject to the correction of the Court by a New Trial. Cowp. 112, 770; Doug. 708; 3 Term Rep. 531.

It is remarkable, that one particular species of indirect Usury is guarded against by the stat. 37 H. 8. c. 9, and this part of the statute seems still in force.—By this it is enacted, that no person shall sell his merchandizes to any other, and, within three months after, buy the same, or any part thereof, upon a lesser price, knowing them to be the same, on pain to forfeit treble the value; half to the informer, and half to the King; and also to be punished by fine and imprisonment.

It is now clearly settled that Bankers, and others discounting bills, may not only take 5*l. per cent.* for Interest, but also a reasonable sum besides, for their trouble and risk, in remitting cash, and for other incidental expences. 5 Term Rep. 52.—But still whether such a charge is reasonable, or usurious, must be decided by a Jury, assisted by the direction of the Judge.—If a contract is entered into to pay more than legal Interest, though all securities are immediately void, yet the penalty is not incurred till more than legal Interest is actually paid. Doug. 223. The Borrower may be produced as a witness to prove the Usury in an action for the penalty, if he swears that he has repaid the sum borrowed. 4 Burr. 2251. See Raym. 191.—It was formerly held, that the Borrower could not be admitted to prove the repayment of the money, for till that was proved he was no witness at all. 1 Stra. 633.

If a Bill of Exchange, or note, is given in consequence of an Usurious Contract, it is absolutely void, even in the hands of an innocent person, who may have taken it in the fair and regular course of business, without any notice of the Usury: And evidence of Usury will be a good defence, in an action, brought upon such bill or note against the drawer, acceptor, or indorser. Lowe v. Waller, Doug. 708. So in cases of Gaming Debts. See title Gaming. The Borrower may be a witness though the money is not paid, if the Usury neither affects the debt, nor avoids the contract: And where the matter is doubtful, the objection shall only go to his credit, and not to his competency as a witness. 1 Term Rep. 153.

A contract for 6*l. per cent.* made before the statute, is not within the meaning of it; and therefore it is still lawful to receive such Interest, in respect of any such contract. The receipt of higher Interest than is allowed by the statute, by virtue of an agreement subsequent to the first contract, doth not avoid an assurance fairly made; and a bond made to secure a just debt, payable with lawful Interest, shall not be avoided by a corrupt Usurious Agreement between others, to which the obligee was no ways privy; Nor shall mistakes in drawing writings make void a fair agreement. 1 Mod. 69.

If the original contract be not usurious, nothing done afterwards can make it so; A counter-bond to save one harmless against a bond made upon a corrupt agreement, will not be void by the statutes. But if the original agreement be corrupt between all the parties, and so within the statute, no colour will exempt it from the danger of the statutes against Usury. 1 Brownl. 73: 2 And. 428: 4 Shep. Abr. 170.

A fine levied, or judgment suffered as a security for money, in pursuance of an Usurious Contract, may be avoided by an averment of the corrupt agreement, as well as any common specialty or parol contract; It is not material, whether the payment of the Principal and the Usurious Interest be secured by the same, or by different conveyances; for all writings whatsoever for the strengthening such a contract are void; also a contract reserving to the lender a greater advantage than allowed, is usurious, if the whole is reserved by way of Interest, or in part only under that name, and in part by way of rent for a house, let at a rate plainly exceeding the known value; so where part is taken before the end of the time, that the Borrower hath not the profit of the whole principal money, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 82, § 22.

By Holt, Chief Justice, if A. owes B. 100*l.* who demands his money, and A. acquaints him, that he hath not the money ready, but is desirous to pay it, if B. can procure it to be lent by any other person; and thereupon B. having present occasion for his money, contracts with C. that if he will lend A. 100*l.* he will give him 10*l.*, on which C. lends the money, and the debt is paid to B.; this is a good and lawful contract, and not usurious between B. and C. Carth. 252. It is not Usury, if there be not a corrupt agreement, for more than the statute Interest; and the defendant shall not be punished, unless he receive some part of the money in affirmance of the usurious agreement. 3 Salk. 390.

There can be no Usury, without a Loan; and the Court hath distinguished between a Bargain and a Loan. 1 Lutw 273: Sid. 27. If a man lend another 100*l.* for two years, to pay for the loan 30*l.* and if he pays the principal at the year's end, he shall pay nothing for Interest; this is not Usury, because the party may pay it at the year's end, and so discharge himself. Cro. Jac. 509: 5 Rep. 69. And it is the same where a person, by special agreement, is to pay double the sum borrowed, &c. by way of penalty, for non-payment of the principal debt; the penalty being in lieu of damages, and the Borrower might repay the principal at the time agreed, and avoid the penalty. 2 Inst. 89: 2 Roll. Abr. 801. But if these clauses be inserted merely to evade the statute, the contract is void, and the lender is liable to the penalties of Usury. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 82. § 19.

A man surrenders a copyhold estate to another, upon condition that if he pays 80*l.* at a certain day, then the surrender to be void; and after it is agreed between them that the money shall not be paid, but that the surrenderor shall forfeit, &c. In consideration whereof, the surrenderee promises to pay to the surrenderor, on a certain day, 60*l.* or 6*l. per annum* from the said day pro Usu & Interesse of the said 60*l.* till that sum is paid: This 6*l.* shall be taken to be interesse damnorum, and not lucri; and but limited as a penalty for non-payment of the 60*l.* as a nomine pœnæ, &c. 2 Roll. Rep. 469: 1 Danv. Abr. 44. On a loan of 100*l.* or other sum of money for a year, the lender may agree to take his Interest half-yearly, or quarterly; or to receive the profits of a manor or lands, &c. and it will be no Usury, though such profits are rendered every day. Cro. Jac. 26.

If a grant of rent, or lease for 20*l.* a year of land which is worth 100*l. per annum*, be made for one hundred pounds, it is not usurious; if there be not an agreement, that this grant or lease shall be void, upon payment of the principal and arrears, &c. Jenk. Cent. 249. But if two men speak together, and one desires the other to lend him an hundred pounds, and, for the loan of it, he will give more than legal Interest; and, to evade the statute, he grants to him 20*l. per annum* out of his land for ten years, or makes a lease for one hundred years to him, and the lessee regrants it upon condition that he shall shall pay 30*l.* yearly for the ten years: In this case it is Usury, though the lender never have his own hundred pounds again. 1 Cro. 27. See 1 Leon. 119.

A man granted a large rent for years, for a small sum of money: The Statute of Usury was pleaded; and it was adjudged, that if it had been laid to be upon a loan of money, it had been usurious; though it is otherwise if it be a contract for an annuity. 4 Shep. Abr. 170. If one hath a rent-charge of 30*l.* a year, and another asketh what he shall give for it, and they agree for 100*l.* this is a plain contract for the rent-charge, and no Usury. 3 Nelf. 510. The grant of an annuity for lives, not only exceeding the rate allowed for interest, but also the proportion for contracts of this kind, in consideration of a certain sum of money, is not within the statutes against Usury; and so of a grant of an annuity, on condition, &c. Cro. Jac. 253: 2 Lev. 7. See 1 Sid. 182; and this Dict. title Annuities for Lives.

Where interest exceeds 5*l. per cent. per annum* on a bond, if possibly the principal and interest are in hazard, upon a contingency or casualty, or if there is a hazard that one may have less than his principal, as when a bond is to pay money upon the return of a ship from sea, &c. these are not Usury. 2 Cro. 208, 508: 1 Cro. 27: Show. 8. Though where B. lends to D. three hundred pounds on bond, upon an adventure during the life of E. for such a time; if therefore D. pays to B. twenty pounds in three months, and, at the end of six months, the principal sum, with a farther præmium, at the rate of 6*d. per* pound a month; or if before the time mentioned E. dies, then the bond to be void: This, differing from the hazard in a bottomry bond, was adjudged an usurious contract. Carthew 67, 68: Comberb. 125. One hundred pounds is lent to have 120*l.* at the year's end, upon a casualty; if the casualty goes to the interest only, and not the principal, it is Usury. The difference is, that where the principal and interest are both in danger of being lost, there the contract for extraordinary interest is not usurious; but when the principal is well secured, it is otherwise. 3 Salk. 391. See title Insurance IV. as to Bottomry Bonds.

A lender accepting a voluntary gratuity from the borrower, on payment of the principal and interest; or receiving the interest before due, &c. without any corrupt agreement, shall not be within the statutes against Usury. 2 Cro. 677: 3 Cro. 501. Also if one gives an usurious bond, and tenders the whole money; yet if the party will take only legal interest, he shall not forfeit the treble value by statute, 4 Leon. 43. Judgment on an indictment for Usury was arrested, because it only laid a corrupt agreement, without any loan, or taking excessive interest in pursuance of it. 2 Strange 816.

In action for Usury, a corrupt agreement must be set forth: It is not sufficient to plead the statute, and say that for the lending of 20*l.* the defendant took more than 5*l. per cent.* without setting forth a corrupt agreement or contract. Lutw. 466: 2 Lill. 672. In case of Usury, &c. an obligor is admitted to aver against the condition of a bond, or against the bond itself, for necessity's sake. Pasch. 6 W. & M. B. R.

In all questions, in whatever respect repugnant to the statute, the nature and substance of the transaction, and the view of the parties, must be ascertained to satisfy the Court, that there is A Loan and Borrowing: And where the real truth is, a loan of money, the wit of man cannot find a shift to take it out of the statute: And though the statute mentions only loans of monies, wares, merchandizes, and other commodities, yet any other contrivance, if the substance of it be a loan, will come under the word, indirectly. Cowp, 115, 796: Doug. 712.

WAGE, Vadiare, from Fr. Gage.] The giving of security for performance of any thing; as to Wage or gage deliverance, to Wage law, &c. Co. Litt. 294. See Wager of Law.

WAGER OF BATTLE; See title Battel.

WAGER OF LAW, Vadiatio Legis.] So called, because the defendant puts in sureties, vadios, that at such a day he will make his Law, that is, take the benefit which the Law has allowed him. 3 Comm. c. 22: 1 Inst. 295.

This takes place where an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract between the parties, without deed or record: and the defendant swears in Court in the presence of eleven compurgators, that he oweth the plaintiff nothing, in manner and form as he hath declared: The reason of this waging of Law is, because the defendant might have paid the plaintiff his debt in private, or before witnesses who may be all dead, and therefore the Law allows him to wage his Law in his discharge; and his oath shall rather be accepted to discharge himself, than the Law will suffer him to be charged upon the bare allegation of the plaintiff. 2 Inst. 45. Wager of Law is used in actions of debt without specialty; and also in action of detinue, for goods or chattels lent or left with the defendant, who may swear on a book, that he detaineth not the goods in manner as the plaintiff has declared, and his compurgators, (who must, in all cases, as it seems now, be eleven in number,) swear that they believe his oath to be true. 3 Comm. c. 22.

The manner of waging Law is thus: He that is to do it, must bring his compurgators with him into Court, and stand at the end of the bar towards the right hand of the Chief Justice; and the Secondary asks him, whether he will wage his Law? If he answers that he will, the Judge admonisheth him to be well advised, and tells him the danger of taking a false oath; and if he still persists, the Secondary says, and he that wages his Law repeats after him: "Hear this, ye Justices, That I A. B. do not owe to C. D. the sum of, &c. nor any penny thereof, in manner and form as the said C. D. hath declared against me: So help me God." Though, before he takes the oath, the plaintiff is called by the Crier thrice; and if he do not appear he becomes nonsuited, and then the defendant goes quit without taking his oath; and if he appear, and the defendant swears that he owes the plaintiff nothing, and the compurgators do give it upon oath that they believe he swears true, the plaintiff is barred for ever; for when a person has waged his Law, it is as much as if a verdict has passed against the plaintiff: If the plaintiff do not appear to hear the defendant perform his Law, so that he is nonsuit, he is not barred, but may bring a new action. 1 Inst. 155: 2 Lil. Abr. 674.

In an action of debt on a by-law, the defendant waged his Law; a day being given on the roll for him to come and make his Law, he was set at the right corner of the Bar, and the Secondary asked him, if he was ready to Wage his Law; who answering that he was, he laid his hand on the book, and then the plaintiff was called: Then the Judges admonished him and his compurgators not to swear rashly; and thereupon he made oath, that he did not owe the money modo et forma as the plaintiff had declared; and then his compurgators, who were standing behind him, were called, and each of them laying his right hand upon the book, made oath that they believed what the defendant had sworn was true. 2 Vent. 171: 2 Salk. 682. The defendant cannot wage his Law in any action, but personal actions, where the cause is secret; and Wager of Law has been denied on hearing the case, and the defendant been advised to plead to issue, &c. 2 Lil. 675, 676.

Executors and administrators, when charged for the debt of the deceased, shall not be admitted to wage their Law: For no man can, with a safe conscience, wage Law of another man's contract; that is, swear that he never entered into it, or at least that he privately discharged it. Finch L. 424. The King also has his prerogative; for, as all Wager of Law imports a reflection on the plaintiff for dishonesty, therefore there shall be no such Wager on actions brought by him. Finch L. 425. And this prerogative extends and is communicated to, debtor and accomptant; for, on a writ of quo minus in the Exchequer for a debt on simple contract, the defendant is not allowed to wage his Law. 1 Inst. 295.

In short, the Wager of Law was never permitted, but where the defendant bore a fair and irreproachable character; and it also was confined to such cases where a debt might be supposed to be discharged, or satisfaction made in private, without any witnesses to attest it: And many other prudential restrictions accompanied this indulgence. But at length it was considered, that (even under all its restrictions) it threw too great a temptation in the way of indigent or profligate men; and therefore by degrees new remedies were devised, and new forms of actions were introduced, wherein no defendant is at liberty to wage his Law. So that now no plaintiff need at all apprehend any danger from the hardiness of his debtor's conscience, unless he voluntarily chooses to rely on his adversary's veracity, by bringing an obsolete, instead of a modern, action. Therefore one shall hardly hear at present of an action of debt brought upon a simple contract; that being supplied by an action of trespass on the case for the breach of a promise, or assumpsit; wherein, though the specific debt cannot be recovered, yet damages may, equivalent to the specific debt: And this being an action of trespass, no Law can be waged therein. So, instead of an action of detinue to recover the very thing detained, an action of trespass on the case in trover and conversion is usually brought; wherein, though the horse or other specific chattel cannot be had, yet the defendant shall pay damages for the conversion, equal to the value of the chattel; and for this trespass also no Wager of Law is allowed. In the room of actions of account, a bill in equity is usually filed; wherein, though the defendant answers upon his oath, yet such oath is not conclusive to the plaintiff; but he may prove every article by other evidence, in contradiction to what the defendant has sworn. So that Wager of Law is quite out of use, being avoided by the mode of bringing the action: but still it is not out of force. And therefore, when a new statute inflicts a penalty, and gives an action of debt for recovering it, it is usual to add, "in which no Wager of Law shall be allowed;" otherwise an hardy delinquent might escape any penalty of the Law, by swearing he had never incurred, or else had discharged it. See 3 Comm. c. 22; where many particulars as to this obsolete species of trial by the oath of a defendant, and his compurgators, are detailed.

WAGERING POLICIES; See title Insurance.

WAGERS. By stat. 7 Ann. c. 17, all Wagers laid upon a contingency relating to the then war with France, and all securities, &c. therefore were declared to be void; and persons concerned were to forfeit double the sums laid.

In general, a Wager may be considered as legal, if it be not an incitement to a breach of the peace, or to immorality; or if it do not affect the feelings or interest of a third person, or expose him to ridicule; or if it be not against sound policy. Cowp. 729: 2 Term Rep. 610: 3 Term Rep. 697: where the principal cases on this point are very fully considered. WAIFS, from the Sax. Wafian; Fr. Chose guaive; Lat. Bona Waviata.] Goods which are stolen and waived (i. e. abandoned) by the felon, on his being pursued, for fear of being apprehended; which are forfeited to the King; or Lord of the Manor, if he hath the franchise of Waif. Kitch. 81. If a felon in pursuit waives the goods; or, having them in his custody, and thinking that pursuit was made, for his own ease and more speedy flight, flies away and leaves the goods behind him; then the King's Officer, or the Bailiff of the Lord of the Manor within whose jurisdiction they are left, who hath the franchise of Waif, may seize the goods to the King's or Lord's use, and keep them; except the owner makes fresh pursuit after the felon, and sue an Appeal of Robbery within a year and a day, or give evidence against him whereby he is attainted, &c. In which case, the owner shall have restitution of his goods so stolen and waived. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 11: 5 Rep. 109: Finch L. 212.

Waived goods also do not belong to the King, till seised by somebody for his use; for if the party robbed can seise them first, though at the distance of 20 years, the King shall never have them. Finch L. 212: 1 Comm. c. 8.

Goods waived by a felon, in his flight from those who pursue him, shall be forfeited. And though Waif is generally spoken of goods stolen, yet if a man be pursued with hue and cry as a felon, and he flies and leaves his own goods, these will be forfeited as goods stolen; but they are properly fugitive's goods, and not forfeited, till it be found before the Coroner, or otherwise of record, that he fled for the felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. § 17. The Law makes a forfeiture of goods waived, as a punishment to the owner of the goods, for not bringing the felon to justice: But if the thief had not the goods in his possession when he fled, there is no forfeiture. If a felon steal goods and hide them, and afterwards flies, these goods are not forfeited: So where he leaves stolen goods any where, with an intent to fetch them at another time, they are not waived; and in these cases, the owner may take his goods where he finds them, without fresh suit, &c. Cro. Eliz. 694: 5 Rep. 109: Moor 785.

The goods of a foreign Merchant, though stolen and thrown away in flight, shall never be Waifs. Fitz. Abr. tit. Estray 1: 3 Bulst. 19. The reason assigned for this is, not only for the encouragement of trade, but also because there is no wilful default in the foreign Merchant's not pursuing the thief; he being generally a stranger to our laws, our usages, and our language. 1 Comm. c. 8. p. 297.

Waifs and 'Strays are said to be nullius in bonis; and therefore they belong to the Lord of the Franchise where found. Briton, c. 17. We read of placita coronæ & Waif, in the manor of Upton, &c. in com. Salop. See 22 Vin. Abr. 408—410; and this Dict. title Estray.

WAINAGE; see Gainage.

To WAIVE, Waiviare.] In the general signification, is to forsake; but is specially applied to a woman, who for any crime for which a man may be outlawed, is termed waived. Reg. Orig. 132. See title Outlawry.

WAIVER, The passing by of a thing, or a declining or refusal to accept it. Sometimes it is applied to an estate or something conveyed to a man, and sometimes to a plea, &c. A Waiver or disagreement as to goods and chattels, in case of a gift, will be effectual. Lit. § 710. If a jointure of lands be made to a woman after marriage, she may waive this after her husband's death. 3 Rep. 27. An infant, or, if he die, his heirs, may by Waiver avoid an estate made to him during his minority. 1 Inst. 23, 348. But where a particular estate is given with a remainder over, there regularly he that hath it may not waive it, to the damage of him in remainder: Though it it is otherwise where one hath a reversion, for that shall not be hurt by such Waiver. 4 Shep. Abr. 192. WALES, Wallia.] Part of Great Britain, on the West side of England; formerly divided into three provinces, North-Wales, South-Wales, and West-Wales; and inhabited by the offspring of the ancient Britons, chased thither by the Saxons, called in to assist them against the Picts and Scots. Lamb.: Stat. Walliæ, 12 Edw. 1.—England and Wales were originally but one nation, and so they continued till the time of the Roman conquest: But when the Romans came, those Britons who would not submit to their yoke, betook themselves to the mountains of Wales; from whence they came again soon after the Romans were driven away by their dissensions here. After this came the Saxons, and gave them another disturbance; and then the kingdom was divided into an Heptarchy: and then also began the Welsh to be distinguished from the English. Yet it is observable, that though Wales had Princes of their own, the King of England had superiority over them, for to him they paid homage. Camden: 2 Mod. 11. See further, 1 *Comm. WAR, Bellum.] A fighting between two Kings, Princes, or Parties, in vindication of their just rights; also the state of War, or all the time it lasts. By our Law, when the Courts of Justice are open, so that the King's Judges distribute justice to all, and protect men from wrong and violence, it is said to be a time of Peace: But when, by invasion, rebellion, &c. the peaceable course of justice is stopped, then it is adjudged to be a time of War: And this shall be tried by the Records and Judges, whether justice at such a time had her equal course of proceeding or not. For time of War gives privilege to them that are in War, and all others within the kingdom. 1 Inst. 249. In the Civil Wars of King Charles I. it was computed that there were not fewer than 200,000 foot and 50,000 horse in arms on both sides; which was an extraordinary host, considering it composed of Britons, sufficient to have shaken Europe, though it was otherwise fatally employed. In ancient times, when the Kings of England were to be served with soldiers in their Wars, a Knight or Squire that had revenues, farmers, and tenants, would covenant with the King, by indenture inrolled in the Exchequer, to furnish him with such a number of military men; and those men were to serve under him, whom they knew and honoured, and with whom they must live at their return. 1 Inst. 71. And although a Warrant of Attorney given by a man in custody to confess a judgment, no Attorney being present, is void as to the entry of a Judgment; yet it may be a good Warrant to appear and file Common Bail. 2 Lil. Abr. 682. A Warrant of Attorney which warrants the Action, is of course put in by the Attornies for the plaintiff and defendant; so that it differs from a Letter of Attorney, which passes ordinarily under the WARRANTIA CHARTÆ, A Writ where a man is enfeoffed of lands with Warranty, and then he is sued or impleaded in Assise or other action, in which he cannot vouch or call to Warranty. By this Writ, he may compel the Feoffor or his Heirs to warrant the land unto him; and if the land be recovered from him, he shall recover as much lands in value against the Warrantor, &c. But the Writ ought to be brought by the Feoffee depending the first Writ against him, or he hath lost his advantage. F. N. B. 134: Terms de Ley 372, 588. See title Pleadings I. 1.

If a person doth enfeoff another of lands by deed with Warranty, and the Feoffee make a feoffment over, and taketh back an estate in fee, the Warranty is determined, and he shall not have the Writ Warrantia Chartæ, because he is in of another estate. Also where one makes a Feoffment in Fee with Warranty against him and his Heirs, the Feoffee shall not have a Warrantia Chartæ upon this Warranty against the Feoffor or his Heirs, if he be impleaded by them; but the nature of it is to rebut against the Feoffor and his Heirs. Dalt. 48: 2 Lill. Abr. 684.

This Writ may be sued forth before a man is impleaded in any Action, but the Writ doth suppose that he is impleaded; and if the defendant appear and say that he is not impleaded, by that plea he confesseth the Warranty, and the plaintiff shall have judgment, &c.; and the party shall recover in value of the lands against the vouchee, which he had at the time of the purchase of his Warrantia Chartæ; and therefore it may be good policy to bring it against him before he is sued, to bind the lands he had at that time; for if he have aliened his lands before the voucher, he shall render nothing in value. New Nat. Br. 298, 299. If a man recover his Warranty in Warrantia Chartæ, and after he is impleaded, he ought to give notice to him against whom he recovered, of the Action, and pray him to shew what plea he will plead, to defend the land, &c. Where one upon a Warranty doth vouch and recover in value, if he is then impleaded of the land recovered, he may not vouch again, for the Warranty was once executed. 23 Edw. 3. 12. In a Warranty to the Feoffee in land, made by the Feoffor; upon voucher, if special matter be shewn by the vouchee, when he entered into the Warranty, viz. that the land at the time of the feoffment was worth only 100*l.* and now at the time of the voucher it is worth 200*l.* by the industry of the Feoffee; the plaintiff in a Warrantia Chartæ, &c. shall recover only the value as it was at the time of the sale. Jenk. Cent. 35. If the vouchee can shew cause why he should not warrant, that must be tried, &c. See title Recovery.

WARRANTIA DIEI, An ancient Writ, where one having a day assigned personally to appear in Court to any Action, is in the mean time employed in the King's service, so that he cannot come at the day appointed: It was directed to the Justices to this end, that they neither take nor record him in default for that time. Reg. Orig. 18: F. N. B. 17. See titles Essoin; Protection.

WARRANTY,

WARRANTIA.] A Promise or Covenant by deed by the bargainor, for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs, against all men, for the enjoying of the thing granted. Bract. lib. 2 & 5: West's Symb. par. 1.

As applied to Lands, it is defined to be a Covenant-real annexed to Lands or Tenements, whereby a man and his Heirs are bound to warrant the same; and either upon voucher, or by judgment in a Writ of Warrantia Chartæ, to yield other Lands and Tenements, to the value of those that shall be evicted by a former title; or else may be used by way of rebutter. 1 Inst. 365, a. See Litt. § 697; and Mr. Butler's Note there on the subject of Warranty. See also this Dictionary, titles Deed; Tenures I. 7; Recovery, &c.

The doctrine of Warranty, obsolete as it now is, and rather a matter of speculation than use, is considered by the learned Editor of The First Institute, as having still a powerful influence on our Landed Property: The following matter therefore, on this subject, is here introduced from 2 Comm. c. 20.

By the Clause of Warranty in a Deed, the Grantor doth, for himself and his Heirs, warrant and secure to the Grantee the estate so granted. By the Feodal Constitution, if the Vassal's title to enjoy the Feud was disputed, he might vouch, or call, the Lord or Donor, to warrant or insure his gift; which if he failed to do, and the Vassal was evicted, the Lord was bound to give him another Feud of equal value in recompence. And so, by our ancient Law, if, before the statute of Quia emptores, a man enfeoffed another in Fee, by the Feodal verb dedi, to hold of himself and his Heirs by certain services; the Law annexed a Warranty to this grant, which bound the Feoffor and his Heirs, to whom the services (which were the consideration and equivalent for the gift) were originally stipulated to be rendered. Co. Litt. 384. Or if a man and his ancestors had immemorially holden land of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, (which was called Homage Auncestrel,) this also bound the Lord to Warranty, the homage being an evidence of such a Feodal grant. Litt. § 143. And, upon a similar principle, in case, after a partition or exchange of lands of inheritance, either party or his Heirs be evicted of his share, the other and his Heirs are bound to Warranty, because they enjoy the equivalent. Co. Litt. 174. And so, even at this day, upon a Gift in Tail, or Lease for Life, rendering rent, the Donor or Lessor, and his Heirs, (to whom the rent is payable,) are bound to warrant the title. 1 Inst. 384. But in a Feoffment in Fee by the verb dedi, since the statute of Quia emptores, the Feoffor only is bound to the implied Warranty, and not his Heirs; because it is a mere personal contract on the part of the Feoffor, the tenure (and of course the ancient services) resulting back to the superior Lord of the Fee. 1 Inst. 384. And in other forms of alienation gradually introduced since that statute, no Warranty whatsoever is implied, they bearing no sort of analogy to the original Feodal donation. 1 Inst. 102. And therefore, in such cases, it became necessary to add an express clause of Warranty, to bind the Grantor and his Heirs; which is a kind of Covenant-real, and can only be created by the verb warrantizo or warrant. Litt. § 733.

These

These express Warranties were introduced, even prior to the statute of Quia emptores, in order to evade the strictness of the Feodal doctrine of Non-alienation without the consent of the Heir. For, though he, at the death of his ancestor, might have entered on any tenements that were aliened without his concurrence, yet, if a clause of Warranty was added to the ancestor's grant, this covenant descending upon the Heir, insured the Grantee, not so much by confirming his title, as by obliging such Heir to yield him a recompence in lands of equal value; the Law, in favour of alienations, supposing that no ancestor would wantonly disinherit his next of blood; and therefore presuming that he had received a valuable consideration, either in land, or in money which had purchased land, and that this equivalent descended to the Heir, together with the Ancestor's Warranty. Co. Litt. 373. So that when either an Ancestor, being the rightful Tenant of the Freehold, conveyed the land to a Stranger and his Heirs, or released the right in Fee-simple to one who was already in possession, and superadded a Warranty to his deed, it was held that such Warranty not only bound the Warrantor himself to protect and assure the title of the Warrantee, but it also bound his Heir; and this, whether that Warranty was lineal or collateral to the title of the land. Lineal Warranty was, where the Heir derived, or might by possibility have derived, his title to the land warranted, either from or through the Ancestor who made the Warranty; as where a Father, or an elder Son in the life of the Father, released to the Disseisor of either themselves or the Grandfather, with Warranty, this was lineal to the younger Son. Litt. §§ 703, 706, 707. Collateral Warranty was, where the Heir's title to the land neither was, nor could have been, derived from the warranting Ancestor; as where a younger Brother released to his Father's Disseisor, with Waraanty, this was collateral to the elder Brother. Litt. §§ 705, 707. But where the very Conveyance, to which the Warranty was annexed, immediately followed a Disseisin, or operated itself as such, (as, where a Father, tenant for Years, with remainder to his Son in Fee, aliened in Fee-simple with Warranty,) this being, in its original, manifestly founded on the tort or wrong of the Warrantor himself, was called a Warranty commencing by Disseisin; and, being too palpably injurious to be supported, was not binding upon any Heir of such tortious Warrantor. Litt. §§ 698, 702.

In both lineal and collateral Warranty, the obligation of the Heir (in case the Warrantee was evicted, to yield him other lands in their stead) was only on condition that he had other sufficient lands by descent from the warranting Ancestor. Co. Litt. 102. But though, without assets, he was not bound to insure the title of another, yet, in case of lineal Warranty, whether assets descended or not, the Heir was perpetually barred from claiming the land himself; for, if he could succeed in such claim, he would then gain assets by descent, (if he had them not before,) and must fulfil the Warranty of his Ancestor. And the same rule was, with less justice, adopted also in respect of collateral Warranties, which likewise (though no assets descended) barred the Heir of the Warrantor from claiming the land by any collateral title, upon the presumption of Law that he might hereafter have assets by descent either from or through the same Ancestor. Litt. § 711, 712. The inconvenience of this latter branch of the rule was felt very early, when Tenants by the Curtesy took upon them to alien their lands with Warranty; which collateral Warranty of the Father descending upon his son, (who was the Heir of both his Parents,) barred him from claiming his maternal inheritance. To remedy which, the statute of Gloucester, stat. 6 Edw. 1. c. 3, declared that such Warranty should be no bar to the Son, unless assets descended from the Father. It was afterwards attempted in 50 Edw. 3, to make the same provision universal, by enacting that no collateral Warranty should be a bar, unless where assets descended from the same Ancestor; but it then proceeded not to effect. Co. Litt. 373. However, by stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, notwithstanding any alienation with Warranty by Tenant in Dower, the Heir of the Husband is not barred, though he be also Heir to the Wife. And by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, all Warranties by any Tenant for Life shall be void against those in remainder or reversion; and all collateral Warranties by any Ancestor who has no estate of inheritance in possession, shall be void against his Heir. By the wording of which last statute it should seem, that the Legislature meant to allow, that the collateral Warranty of Tenant in Tail in possession, descending (though without assets) upon a Remainder-man or Reversioner, should still bar the remainder or reversion. For though the Judges, in expounding the statute De donis, held that, by analogy to the statute of Gloucester, a lineal Warranty by Tenant in Tail without assets should not bar the Issue in Tail, yet they held such Warranty with assets to be a sufficient bar. Litt. § 712: 2 Inst. 293. Which is therefore one of the ways whereby an Estate-tail may be destroyed; it being indeed nothing more in effect, than exchanging the lands entailed for others of equal value. See titles Tail and Fee-tail.—They also held, that collateral Warranty was not within the statute De donis; as that Act was principally intended to prevent the Tenant in Tail from disinheriting his own Issue; and therefore collateral Warranty (though without assets) was allowed to be, as at Common Law, a sufficient bar of the Estate-tail and all remainders and reversions expectant thereon. Co. Lit. 374: 2 Inst. 335. And so it still continues to be, notwithstanding the statute of Queen Anne, if made by Tenant in Tail in possession; who therefore may now, without the forms of a Fine or Recovery, in some cases, make a good conveyance in Fee-simple, by superadding a Warranty to his grant; which, if accompanied with assets, bars his own issue; and, without them, bars such of his Heirs as may be in remainder or reversion. 2 Comm. c. 20. p. 303.

As to Warranty of THINGS PERSONAL:—By the Civil Law, an implied Warranty was annexed to every sale, in respect to the title of the Vendor: And so too, in our Law, a Purchaser of Goods and Chattels may have a satisfaction from the Seller, if he sells them as his own, and the title proves deficient, without any express Warranty for that purpose. Cro. Jac. 474: 1 Ro. Ab. 90. But, with regard to the goodness of the wares so purchased, the Vendor is not bound to answer; unless he expressly warrants them to be sound and good; or unless he knew them to be otherwise, and hath used any art to disguise them; or unless they turn out to be different from what he represented to the buyer. F. N. B. 94: 2 Roll. Rep. 5: 2 Comm. c. 30. See title Deceit.

The following distinctions seem peculiarly referable to the sale of Horses: If the Purchaser gives what is called called a found price, that is, such as, from the appearance and nature of the horse, would be a fair and full price for it, if it were in fact free from blemish and vice; and he afterwards discovers it to be unsound or vicious, and returns it in a reasonable time; he may recover back the price he has paid, in an action against the Seller for so much money had and received to his use, provided he can prove the Seller knew of the unsoundness or vice at the time of the sale: For the concealment of such a material circumstance is a fraud which vacates the contract. But if a Horse is sold with an express Warranty by the Seller, that it is sound and free from vice, the Buyer may maintain an Action upon this Warranty or Special Contract, without returning the Horse to the Seller, or without even giving him notice of the unsoundness or viciousness of the Horse: Yet it will raise a prejudice against the Buyer's evidence, if he does not give notice within a reasonable time, that he has cause to be dissatisfied with his bargain. 1 H. Black. Rep. 17. The Warranty cannot be tried in a general Action of Assumpsit to recover back the price of the Horse. Cowp. 819. In an Action on a Warranty, it is not necessary that the Seller knew of the Horse's imperfections at the time of the sale. 2 Comm. c. 30, in n.

WARREN, Warrenna, from Germ. Wahren, i. e. Custodire; or the Fr. Garenne.] A Franchise, or place privileged by prescription or grant from the King, for the keeping of beasts and fowls of the Warren; which seem to be only Hares and Conies, Partridges and Pheasants; though some add Quails, Woodcocks, and Water-fowl, &c. Terms de Ley 589: 1 Inst. 233: 2 Comm. c. 3, in n. A person may have a Warren in another's land, for one may alien the land, and reserve the Franchise: But none can make a Warren, and appropriate those creatures that are Feræ Naturæ, without licence from the King, or where a Warren is claimed by prescription. 8 Rep. 108: 11 Rep. 87. A Warren may lie open; and there is no necessity of inclosing it, as there is of a Park. 4 Inst. 318. If any person offend in a Free Warren, he is punishable by the Common Law. If any one enter wrongfully into any Warren, and chase, take, or kill any Conies, without the consent of the Owner, he shall forfeit Treble Damages, and suffer Three Months' Imprisonment, &c. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. See also title Larceny. When Conies are on the soil of the party, he hath a property in them by reason of the possession, and Action lies for killing them; but if they run out of the Warren, and eat up a neighbour's corn, the Owner of the land may kill them, and no Action will lie. 5 Rep. 104: 1 Cro. 548. In Waste, &c. against a Lessee of a Warren, the Waste assigned was for stopping Coney-boroughs; and it was held that this Action did not lie, because a man cannot have the inheritance of Conies; and Action may be brought against him who makes holes in the land, but not against him who stops them, by reason the land is made better by it. Owen 66.

Blackstone says, A man that has a Franchise of Warren is in reality no more than a Royal Game-keeper: And asserts, that no man, not even a Lord of a Manor, could by Common Law justify sporting on another's soil, or even on his own, unless he had the liberty of Free Warren. 2 Comm. c. 3. This latter position is very earnestly combated by Mr. Christian. See this Dict. title Game-Laws.

This Franchise is almost fallen into disregard, since the new statutes for preserving the Game; the name being now chiefly preserved in grounds set apart for breeding Hares and Rabbits.

WARSCOT, A Contribution usually made towards Armour, in the time of the Saxons. Leg. Canut.

WARTH, A customary payment for Castle-guard. Blount's Ten. 60.

WASH, A shallow part of a river, or arm of the Sea; as the Washes in Lincolnshire, &c. Knight 1346.

WASSAILE, Sax.] A festival song, heretofore sung from door to door about the time of the Epiphany. See Wassel-bowl.

WASTE,

VASTUM.] Hath divers significations: First, It is a spoil made either in houses, woods, lands, &c. by the tenant for life or years, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in the reversion or remainder. Kitchin, fol. 168. Whereupon the writ of Waste is brought, for the recovery of the thing wasted, and treble damages. As to which, see at large post.

Waste of the Forest is most properly where a man cuts down his own woods within the Forest, without licence of the King, or Lord Chief Justice in Eyre. See Manwood, part 2. cap. 8. numb. 4 & 5.

Waste is also taken for those lands which are not in any man's occupation, but lie common; which seem to be so called because the Lord cannot make such profit of them as of his other lands, by reason of that use which others have of it in passing to and fro; upon this none may build, cut down trees, dig, &c. without the Lord's licence. See title Common.

Year, Day, and Waste, annus, dies, & vastum, is a punishment or forfeiture belonging to Petit Treason or Felony; whereof see Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. c. 30; and this Dict. title Year, Day, and Waste.

WASTE, in its most usual acceptation, is a Spoil or Destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments; to the disherison (disinheritance) of him that has the remainder or reversion in fee-simple or fee-tail. 1 Inst. 53.

I. What shall be considered as Waste; generally, and in many particular specified Instances.

II. 1. Who may have a Remedy for Waste done: 2. Against whom such Remedy may be had.

III. Of the Punishment of Waste; and the Proceedings against Persons guilty thereof.

IV. Of Injunctions, and other Proceedings in Equity, to prevent, or relieve, against Waste.

Waste is either voluntary, or actual, which is a crime of commission, as by pulling down a house; or it is permissive or negligent, which is a matter of omission only, as by suffering it to fall for want of necessary reparations. Generally speaking, whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance is Waste. Hetl. 35. Therefore removing wainscots, floors, or other things once fixed to the freehold of a house, comes under the general notion of Waste. 4 Rep. 64. If a house be destroyed by tempest, lightning, or the like, which is the act of Providence, it is no Waste: but otherwise, if the house be burnt by the carelessness or negligence of the lessee; though now by the stat. 6 Ann. c. 31, no action will lie against against a tenant for an accident of this kind. See post. Waste may also be committed in ponds, dove-houses, warrens, and the like; by so reducing the number of the creatures therein, that there will not be sufficient for the reversioner when he comes to the inheritance. Co. Lit. 53. Timber also is part of the inheritance. 4 Rep. 62. Such are oak, ash, and elm in all places; and in some particular countries, by local custom, where other trees are generally used for building, they are for that reason considered as timber; and to cut down such trees, or top them, or do any other act whereby the timber may decay, is Waste. Co. Lit. 53. See title Timber:—But Underwood the tenant may cut down at any seasonable time that he pleases, and may take sufficient estovers of common right for house-bote and cart-bote; unless restrained (which is usual) by particular covenants or exceptions. 2 Roll. Abr. 817: Co. Lit. 41. The conversion of land from one species to another is Waste. To convert wood, meadow, or pasture, into arable; to turn arable, meadow, or pasture, into woodland; or to turn arable or woodland into meadow or pasture; are all of them Waste. Hob. 296. For, as Coke observes, it not only changes the course of husbandry, but the evidence of the estate; when such a close, which is conveyed and described as pasture, is found to be arable, and è converso. 1 Inst. 53. And the same rule is observed, for the same reason, with regard to converting one species of edifice into another, even though it is improved in its value. 1 Lev. 309. To open the land to search for mines of metal, coal, &c. is Waste; for that is a detriment to the inheritance: But if the pits or mines were open before, it is no Waste for the tenant to continue digging them for his own use; for it is now become the mere annual profit of the land. 5 Rep. 12: Hob. 295. These three are the general heads of Waste, viz. in Houses, in Timber, and in Land. Though, whatever else tends to the destruction, or depreciating the value of the inheritance, is considered by the Law as Waste. 2 Comm. c. 18. Which we therefore proceed to state more at large.

It has been laid down as a general principle, that the Law will not allow that to be Waste, which is not any way prejudicial to the inheritance. Hetl. 35. Nevertheless it has been held, that a Lessee or Tenant cannot change the nature of the thing demised; though, in some cases, the alteration may be for the greater profit of the Lessor. Thus if a Lessee converts a Corn-mill into a Fulling-mill, it is Waste; although the conversion be for the Lessor's advantage. Cro. Jac. 182. So the converting a Brewhouse of 120*l per ann.* into other Houses let for 200*l*. a year, is Waste; because of the alteration of the nature of the thing, and of the evidence. 1 Lev. 309.

WASTE IN LANDS.—It hath been already stated, that if a Tenant converts Arable into Wood, or è converso, it is Waste; for it not only changes the course of husbandry, but also the proof of evidence. Hob. 296. pl. 234. But if a Lessee suffers arable land to lie fresh, and not manured, so that the land grows full of thorns, &c. this is not Waste, but ill husbandry. 2 Roll. Abr 814. Likewise the conversion of Meadow into Arable is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, b. But if Meadow be sometimes Arable, and sometimes Meadow, and sometimes Pasture, there the plowing of it is not Waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. Neither is the division of a great Meadow into many parcels, by making of Ditches, Waste; for the Meadows may be better for it, and it is for the profit and ease of the occupiers of it. 2 Le. 174. pl. 210.

Likewise converting a Meadow into a Hop-garden, is not Waste; for it is employed to a greater profit, and it may be Meadow again; per Windham and Rhodes, J. But Periam said, though it be a greater profit, yet it is also with greater labour and charges. 2 Le. 174. pl. 210. But converting a Meadow into an Orchard, is Waste, though it be to the greater profit of the occupier. Per Periam. Id. ibid. If a Lessee ploughs the land stored with Conies, this is no Waste; unless it be a Warren by charter or prescription. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. So if a Lessee of land destroys the Coney-boroughs in the land, it not being a free Warren by charter or prescription, it seems is not Waste; for a man can have no property in them, but only a possession. Id. ibid.: Ow. 66.

It is Waste to suffer a wall of the sea to be in decay, so as by the flowing and reflowing of the sea the meadow or marsh is surrounded, whereby the same becomes unprofitable. But if it be surrounded suddenly by the rage and violence of the sea, occasioned by wind, tempest, or the like, without any default in the tenant, this is not Waste. Yet if the tenant repair not the banks or walls against rivers or other waters, whereby the meadows or marshes be surrounded and become rushy and unprofitable, this is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, b. So à fortiori, if arable land be surrounded by such default; for the surrounding washes away the marle and other manurance from the land. 2 Roll. Abr. 816.

WASTE in TREES and WOODS. Trees are parcel of the inheritance; and therefore, if a lessee assigneth his term, and excepts the Timber-trees, it is void; for he cannot except that which doth not belong to him by Law. 5 Rep. 12. The Lessor, after he has made a lease for life or years, may by deed grant the Trees, or reasonable estovers out of them, to another and his heirs; and the same shall take effect after the death of the Lessee. But such a gift to a stranger is void during the estate for life, because of the particular prejudice which might be done to the Lessee. 11 Rep. 48. The Lessee hath but a particular interest in the Trees, but the general interest of the Trees doth remain in the Lessor; for the Lessee shall have the Waste and Fruit of the Trees, and the shadow for his cattle, &c. But the interest of the body of Tree is in the Lessor, as parcel of his inheritance. Therefore if Trees are overthrown, by the Lessee or any other, or by wind or tempest, or by any other means disjoined from the inheritance, the Lessor shall have them in respect of his general ownership. 11 Rep. 81.

With respect to Timber-trees, such as Oak, Ash, Elm, (which are Timber-trees in all places,) Waste may be committed in them, either by cutting them down, or lopping of them, or doing any act whereby the Timber may decay. Also in countries where Timber is scarce, and Beeches or the like are converted to building for the habitation of man, they also are accounted Timber. 1 Inst. 53, a; 54, b. Thus, Waste may be committed in cutting of Beeches in Buckinghamshire, because there by the the custom of the country it is the best Timber. 2 Roll. Abr. 814.

So, Waste may be committed in cutting of Birches in Berkshire, because they are the principal Trees there for the most part. 2 Roll. Abr. 814. If the Tenant cut down Timber-trees, or such as are accounted Timber, as mentioned tioned above, this is Waste; and if he suffers the young Germins to be destroyed, this is Destruction. So it is, if the Tenant cuts down Underwood (as he may by Law), yet if he suffer the young Germins to be destroyed, or if he stub up the same, this is Destruction. 1 Inst. 53, a. If Lessee, or his servants, suffer a Wood to be open, by which beasts enter and eat the Germins, though they grow again, yet it is Waste; for after such eating they never will be great Trees, but Shrubs. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. If a Termor cuts down Underwood of Hazel, Willows, Maple, or Oak, which is seasonable, it is not Waste. If Ashes are seasonable Wood to cut from ten years, it is not Waste to cut them down for house-boot. But if the Ashes are gross of the age of nine years, and able for great Timber, it is Waste to cut them down. 2 Roll. Abr. 817.

If Oaks are seasonable, and have been used to be cut always at the age of twenty years, it is not Waste to cut them at such age, or under; for in some countries, where there is a great plenty, Oaks of such age are but seasonable Wood. But, after the age of twenty-one years, Oaks cannot be said to be Wood seasonable, and therefore it shall be Waste to cut them down. 2 Roll. Abr. 817. Cutting down of Willows, Beech, Birch, Asp, Maple, or the like, standing in the defence and safeguard of the house, is Destruction. If there be a quickset fence of white thorn, if the tenant stub it up, or suffer it to be destroyed, this is also Destruction: And for all these and the like Destructions an Action of Waste lieth. 1 Inst. 53, a. The cutting of Horn-beams, Hazels, Willows, Sallows, though of forty years growth, is no Waste, because these Trees would never be Timber. Godb. 4. pl. 6.

If the Lessee covenant, that he will leave the Wood at the end of the term as he found it; if the Lessee cut down the Trees, the Lessor shall presently have an Action of Covenant: For it is not possible for him to leave the Trees at the end of the term. So that the impossibility of performing the covenant shall give a present action on a future covenant. But it is otherwise in the case of a house; for there, though the Lessee commit Waste, yet he may repair the Waste done, before the term expires. 5 Rep. 21.

The cutting down of Trees is justifiable for house-bote, hay-bote, plow-bote, and fire-bote. 1 Inst. 53, b: Hob. Rep. c. 296: Bro. Waste, 130. By the Common Law, Lessee shall have them, though the deed does not express it; but if he takes more than is necessary he shall be punished in Waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 30. The tenant may take sufficient Wood to repair the walls, pales, fences, hedges, and ditches, as he found them; but he cannot make new. Cutting of dead Wood is no Waste. But converting Trees into Fuel, when there is sufficient dead Wood, is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, b.

Cutting Wood to burn, where the tenant has sufficient Hedge-wood, is Waste. F. N. B. 59 (M). Where Lessee for years has power to take Hedge-bote by assignment, yet he may take it without assignment; for the affimative does not take away the power which the Law gives him. Dy. 19. pl. 115. If Lessor excepts his Trees in his lease, the Lessee shall not have Fire-bote, Hay-bote, &c. which he should have otherwise; and the property of the Trees is in the Lessor himself. 4 Le. 162. pl. 269. Sir Richard Leuknor's case. But it has been said, that Lessee for years, the Trees being excepted, has liberty to take the shrouds and loppings for Fire-bote; but if he cuts any Tree, it shall be Waste, as well for the lopping as for the body of the Tree. Noy 29. If a Tenant that has Fire-bote to his house in another man's land, cuts Wood for that intent to make his Bote-wood, and the owner of the land takes it away, an Action of Trover and Conversion lies against him by the Tenant of the land who hath such Fire-bote. Clayt. 40. pl. 69. Coram Berkley. Anon. See Dyer 36. pl. 38; Clayt. 47. pl. 81: 1 Lev. 171.

If, during the estate of a mere tenant for life, Timber is severed either by accident or by wrong, it belongs to the first person who has a vested estate of inheritance: But where there are intermediate contingent estates of inheritance, and the Timber is cut down by a combination between the Tenant for Life, and the person who has the next vested estate of inheritance; or if the Tenant for Life has himself such estate, and fells Timber; in these cases the Chancellor will order it to be preserved for him who has the first contingent estate of inheritance under the settlement. 3 Cox's P. Wms. 267: 3 Woodd. 400. See further, post. II. IV.

Waste in digging for Gravel, Mines, &c.—If the Tenant digs for Gravel, Lime, Clay, Brick, Earth, or Stone, hid in the ground, or for Mines of Metal or Coal, or the like, not being open at the time of the lease, it is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, b. If a man hath land in which there is a Mine of Coals, or the like, and maketh a lease of the land (without mentioning any mines) for life or for years, the Lessee, as to such Mines as were open at the time of the lease made, may dig and take the profits thereof. But he cannot dig for any new Mine that was not open at the time of the lease made, for that would be adjudged Waste. Likewise, if there be open Mines in the land, and the Owner leases it to another, with the Mines in it, he may dig in the open Mines, but not in the close mines; but otherwise it would be if there was not any open Mine there: for then the Lessee might dig for Mines, otherwise the grant would take no effect. 1 Inst. 54, b. If Lessee dig Slate-stone out of the land, it is Waste: So digging for Stones, unless in a Quarry, is Waste, though the Lessee fill it up again. 2 Roll. Abr. 816: Ow. 66. Likewise, if he have a lease of land, in which there was a Coal Mine, but not open at the time of the lease; if the Lessee open it, and assigns his interest, it is still Waste in the Assignee: but where the lease is of lands, and all Mines in it, there he may dig in it. 5 Rep. 12, a. b.

But if Lessee of land, with Mines of Coals, Iron, and Stone, digs the Coals, Iron, and Stones, so much as is necessary for him to use without selling, it is not Waste. If a Lessee digs Earth, and carries it out of the land, Action of Waste lies. 2 Roll. Abr. 816. If a Lessee digs for Gravel or Clay, for reparation of the house, not being open at the time of the lease, it is not Waste, any more than the cutting of Trees for reparation. 1 Inst. 53, b.

If a man leases lands with general words of "all Mines of Coals," where there is not any Mine of Coals open at the time of the demise, and after the Lessee opens a Mine, he cannot justify the cutting of Timber-trees for making puncheons, corses, roll-scoops, and other utensils in and about the Mine, though without them he could not dig and get the Coals out of the Mine: and this is like a new house built after the demise, for the reparation of which he cannot take Timber upon the land; and it had been Waste to open it, if it had not been granted by express words; And it was said by Hobart, that the Law had been the same if the Mine was open at the time of the demise. Hobart 296: Hut. 19.

WASTE IN GARDENS, Orchards, Fish-ponds, Dove-houses, Parks, &c.—If the Tenant cut down or destroy any Fruit-trees growing in the Garden or Orchard, it is Waste: But if such Trees grow upon any of the ground, which the Tenant holdeth out of the Garden or Orchard, it is no Waste. 1 Inst. 53, a. Breaking a Hedge also is no Waste. 1 Inst. 53, a. Destruction of Saffron-heads in a Garden, is not Waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 143, cites 10 H. 7. c. 2. If the Tenant of a Dove-house, Warren, Park, Vivary, Estangues, or such like, takes so many that so much store is not left as he found at the time of the demise, it is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, a: Hob Rep. c. 296. Likewise, if the Lessee of a Pigeon-house stops the holes, that the Pigeons cannot build, it is Waste. So suffering the Pales of a Park to decay, whereby the Deer are dispersed, is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, a. Also, if the Lessee of a Hop ground plow it up and sow grain there, it is Waste. Ow. 66, Moyle v. Moyle.

The breaking a Weare is Waste, or the Banks of a Fish-pond, so that the water and fish run out. Ow. 66.

WASTE with respect to HOUSES. Waste may be done in Houses, by pulling them down or prostrating them, or by suffering the same to be uncovered, whereby the spars or rafters, planchers or other timber of the House are rotten. 1 Inst. 53, a.—Default of Coverture of an House is Waste, though the timber be standing. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. But if the House be uncovered, when the Tenant cometh in, it is no Waste in the Tenant to suffer the same to fall down. Though there be no Timber growing upon the ground, yet the Tenant, at his peril, must keep the Houses from wasting. 1 Inst 53, a. If a Lessee rases the House, and builds a new House, if it be not so long and wide as the other, it is Waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. So, if he rebuilds it more large than it was before, it is Waste; for it will be more charge for the Lessor to repair it. 1 Inst. 53, a.

But if a Lessee of land makes a new House upon the land where there was not any before, this is not Waste; for it is for the benefit of the Lessor. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. Though, according to Coke, if the Tenant build a new House, it is Waste; and if he suffer it to be wasted, it is a new Waste. Yet, if the House be prostrated by enemies or the like, without default of the Tenant, or was ruinous at his coming in, and fall down, the Tenant may build the same again with such materials as remain, and with the other timber, which he may take growing on the ground, for his habitation; but he must not make the House larger than it was. 2 Roll. Abr. 815: 1 Inst. 53, a. If the House be uncovered by tempest, the Tenant must in convenient time repair it. 1 Inst. 53, a. If a Lessee flings down a Wall between a Parlour and a Chamber, by which he makes a Parlour more large, it is Waste; it cannot be intended for the benefit of the Lessor, nor is it in the power of the Lessee to transpose the House. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. So, if he pulls down a Partition between Chamber and Chamber, it is Waste. Bro. Waste, 143. Or if a Lessee pulls down a Hall or Parlour, and makes a Stable of it, it is Waste. If a Lessee pulls down a Garret over head, and makes it all one and the same thing, it is Waste. If a Lessee permits a Chamber fore in decasu pro defectu plaustrationis, per quod grossum maheremium devenit putridum, & camera illa turpissima & fœdissima devenit, Action of Waste lies for it. So, if a Lessee permits the Wall to be in decay for default of daubing, per quod maheremium devenit putridum, Action of Waste lies. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. Breaking of a Pale or of a Wall uncovered, is not Waste. But breaking of a Wall covered with Thatch, and of a Pale of Timber covered, is Waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 94.

If the Tenant do, or suffer, Waste to be done in his Houses, yet if he repair them before any Action brought, there lieth no Action of Waste against him; but he cannot plead quod non fecit vastum, but the special matter. 1 Inst. 53, a.

It may be of use here to add something on the progress of the Law, as to the accidental burning of Houses, so far as regards Landlord and Tenant. At the Common Law, Lessees were not answerable to Landlords for accidental or negligent burning; for as to Fires by accident, it is so expressed in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 12; and Lady Shrewsbury's case, 5 Rep. 13, b., is a direct authority to prove that Tenants are equally excusable for Fires by negligence. Then came the Statute of Gloucester, (6 E. 1.) which by making Tenants for life and years liable to Waste without any exception, consequently rendered them answerable for Destruction by Fire. Thus stood the Law in Lord Coke's time: But now, by stat. 6 Ann. c. 31, [the provisions of which are contained in the last Building-Act; see this Dictionary, title Fire;] the ancient Law is restored, and the distinction, introduced by the Statute of Gloucester, between Tenants at will and other Lessees, is taken away; for the Statute exempts all persons from Actions for accidental Fire in any House, except in the case of special Agreements between Landlord and Tenant. So much relates to Tenants coming in by Act or Agreement of Parties.—As to Tenants of particular estates coming in by Act of Law, as Tenant by the Curtesy, Tenant in Dower, and (before the Statute taking away Military Tenures) Guardian in Chivalry; these, or at least the two latter, being, at Common Law, punishable for Waste, were therefore responsible for losses by Fire; unless indeed they were answerable for Waste voluntary only, and not for Waste permissive; a distinction not found in the Books. If these Tenants in Curtesy or Dower were, at Common Law, responsible for accidental Fire, it may, some time or other, become necessary to determine whether they are within the Statute of Anne.—The Statute, in expression, is very general, and seems calculated to take away all Actions in cases of accidental Fire, as well from other persons as from Landlords.—N. B. It has been doubted on the Statute of Anne, whether a Covenant to repair generally, extends to the case of Fire, and so becomes an Agreement within the Statute; and therefore, where it is intended that the Tenant shall not be liable, it is most usual, in the Covenant for repairing, to except Accidents by Fire. 1 Inst. 57, in n.

But if a Lessee covenants to pay Rent, and to repair, with an express exception of Casualties by Fire, he may be obliged to pay rent during the whole term, though the premises are burned down by accident, and never rebuilt by the Lessor. 1 Term Rep. 310. See this Dict. titles Covenant; Rent; Lease.

WASTE in Things annexed to the FREEHOLD. The removing a Post in a house is Waste. 42 Edw. 3. 6. So, the removing of a Door. 1 Inst. 53. Or of a Window. 42 Edw. 3. 6. The digging up a Furnace annexed to the the frank-tenement, and selling it, is Waste. Bro. Waste, pl 143. The removing of a Bench is Waste, though annexed by the Tenant himself. Bro. Waste, pl. 143: 1 Inst. 53, a. But these are such trifles that a Landlord would now scarcely obtain a Verdict in an Action of Waste, it being so very penal; unless very great injury was done by the act. As to the Furnace he might maintain Trover for the value.—If Wainscot, annexed to the house, be taken away, it is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, a. Of Tables dormant and fixed in the land, and not to the walls by the termor, and taken off within his term, Waste does not lie; for the house is not impaired by it. Bro Waste, pl. 104.

Beating down a wooden Wall, or suffering a brick Wall to fall, is no Waste, unless it be expressly alleged, that the Walls were coped or covered. If Waste be assigned in pulling up a Plank Floor, and Mangers of a Stable, the plaintiff must shew that the same were fixed. Dy. 108, b. pl. 31. If Lessee erects a Partition, he cannot break it down without being liable to an Action of Waste, for he has joined it to the frank-tenement. Mo. 178. Shelves are parcel of the house, and not to be taken away; and though it is not shewn that the Shelves were fixed, it ought to be intended that they were fixed. 2 Bulst. 113. Pavement is a structure, for they use lime to finish. Id. ibid. If the Tenant suffers the Groundsels to waste, in his default of defence or removing the water from off them, or through dirt or dung or other nusance which lies or hangs upon it, the Tenant shall be charged, for he is bound to keep it in as good case as he took it. Ow. 43.

The Law, upon this part of the subject, has been relaxed; for during the term the Tenant may take away Chimney-pieces or Wainscot, which he has put up; but not after the term, for he would then be a Trespasser. 1 Atk. 477. A Fire-engine, erected by Tenant for life, shall go to his Executor. 3 Atk. 13. But the rule is different between the Heir and Executor, with regard to Fixtures upon the inheritance, that descend to the Heir. 1 H Black. Rep. 258. See title Heir III. 3.

It may be observed in general, that WASTE, which ensues from the act of God, is EXCUSABLE; or rather, it is no Waste. Thus, if a House falls by Tempest, the Tenant shall be excused in Action of Waste; but if it be uncovered by Tempest, and stands, there, if the Tenant has sufficient timber to repair it, and does not, the Lessor, if the lease be made on condition of re-entry for Waste, may re-enter, but not immediately upon the Tempest, for it is no Waste until the Tenant suffers it to be so long unrepaired, that the timber be rotted, and then it is Waste. Bro. Cond. pl. 40.

Likewise, if a House be abated by Lightning, or thrown down by a great Wind, it is not Waste: 1 Inst. 53, a. So, if Apple-trees are torn up by a great Wind, if Lessee afterwards cuts them, it is not Waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 39. If the Banks are well repaired by the Lessee, and the Water, notwithstanding, subverts them, and surrounds his Meadow, by which it is become rushy, it is not Waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 280: Contrà, 20 H. 6. c. 1, b. The Lessor cannot give Trees during the Tenant's lease. But if he grants then to a stranger, and commands the Tenant to cut and deliver them, who does it, this shall excuse him in an Action of Waste. And yet the Tenant was not bound by Law to obey and execute this command. Bro. Dow, &c. 13.

If Tenant in Tail grants all his estate, his Grantee is dispunishable of Waste; so such Grantee's Grantee is also dispunishable; per Clerk, J. 3 Le. 121. pl. 173. Anon. If a man devises land to two in Tail, and after the one Devisee dies without issue, by which the Reversion in Fee of one moiety reverts to the Heir of the Donor; but the other Devisee is Tenant for Life of the whole, and after he commits Waste, Action of Waste lies against him by the Heir of the Donor for the one moiety. New Abr. 469. But Action of Waste does not lie against Tenant in Tail after possibility, for the greatness of the estate of inheritance which was once in him: and also, as some say, because the estate was not within the statute at the creation. 11 Rep. 80, a Lewis v. Bowles. See post. II. 2.

If lands are given to the Husband and Wife, and to the Heirs of the body of the Husband, the remainder to the Husband and Wife, and to the Heirs of their two bodies begotten, and the Husband dies without issue: The Wife shall not be Tenant in Tail after possibility; for the remainder in special Tail was utterly void, for that it could never take effect. For, so long as the Husband should have issue, it should inherit by force of the general Tail; and if the Husband die without issue, then the special Tail cannot take effect, inasmuch as the issue, which should inherit in special Tail, must be begotten by the Husband; and so the general, which is larger and greater, hath frustrated the special, which is lesser; and the Wife, in that case, shall be punished for Waste. 1 Inst 28, b.

It has been agreed, that Tenant for years may cut Wood; but it has been doubted, if Tenant at will may; but it seems, that as long as Tenant at will is not countermanded he may cut seasonable Wood, &c. Bro Waste, pl. 114. Where a man leases a Wood which consists only of great Trees, the Lessee cannot cut them. Hobart's Rep. Cas. 296. Nevertheless, if the Lessee cuts Trees for reparation, and sells them, and after buys them again, and employs them in reparation, yet it is Waste by the sale. So, if Lessee cuts Trees, and sells them for money, though with the money he repairs the House, yet it is Waste. 1 Inst. 53, b. As to the cutting of Timber trees for repairs by Lessee, there is no difference whether the Lessor or Lessee covenants to repair the Houses; for in either case it is not Waste, if Lessee cuts them. Mo. 23. pl. 80. Anon.

If a House be prostrated by Enemies of the King, or such like, without default of the Lessee, the Lessee may rebuild it again with the same materials that remain, and may cut other Timber upon the land to rebuild it, but he must not make the House larger than it was. 1 Inst. 53, a. So, if the House was ruinous at the time of the lease, and fell within the term, this is not Waste in the Tenant. 1 Inst. 53, a: Bro. Waste, pl. 130. But the Lessee shall not cut Trees to make a new House where there was not any at the time of the lease. Hob. 296. So, if a Lessee suffers a House to fall for default of covering, which is Waste, he cannot cut Trees to repair the House. Bro. Waste, pl. 39. And in general, if the Tenant suffer the House to be wasted, he cannot justify the felling of Timber to repair it. 1 Inst 53, b. If a House be ruinous at the time of the lease, though the Lessee is not bound to repair it, ye he may cut Trees to repair it. 1 Inst. 54, b. The Tenant may likewise dig for Gravel or Clay for the reparation of the House, though the soil was not open when the Tenant came in; and it is justifiable as well as cutting of Trees. 1 Inst. 53, b. So, with regard to a Stable, if it fall without default of the Lessee, in time of the Lessor, the Lessee may take Trees of the Heir to make a new Stable, if it be of necessity. Bro. Waste, pl. 67. But if the Stable falls in default of the Lessee, in time of the Lessor, he cannot, in time of the Heir, cut Trees to make a new Stable. Bro. Waste, pl. 67.

II. 1. The Persons who be injured by Waste are such as have some interest in the estate wasted: for if a man be the absolute Tenant in fee-simple, without any incumbrance or charge on the premises, he may commit whatever Waste his own indiscretion may prompt him to, without being impeachable and accountable for it to any one. And, though his heir is sure to be the sufferer, yet nemo est hæres viventis: no man is certain of succeeding him, as well on account of the uncertainty which shall die first, as also because he has it in his own power to constitute what heir he pleases, according to the Civil Law notion of an hæres natus and an hæres factus: or, in the more accurate phraseology of our English Law, he may aliene or devise his estate to whomever he thinks proper, and by such alienation or devise may disinherit his heir at law. Into whose hands soever therefore the estate wasted comes, after a Tenant in fee-simple, though the Waste is undoubtedly damnum, it is damnum absque injuria. 3 Comm. c. 14.

One species of Interest, which is injured by Waste, is that of a person who has a right of common in the place wasted; especially if it be common of estovers, or a right of cutting and carrying away Wood for House-bote, Plough-bote, &c. Here, if the owner of the Wood demolishes the whole Wood, and thereby destroys all possibility of taking estovers, this is an injury to the commoner, amounting to no less than a disseisin of his common of estovers, if he chooses so to consider it; for which he has his remedy to recover possession and damages by Assise, if entitled to a freehold in such common; but if he has only a chattel-interest, then he can only recover damages, by an action on the case for this Waste and Destruction of the Woods, out of which his estovers were to issue. F. N. B. 59: 9 Rep. 112.

But the most usual and important Interest, that is hurt by this commission of Waste, is that of him who hath the remainder or reversion of the inheritance after a particular estate for life or years, in being. Here, if the particular Tenant, (be it the Tenant in Dower or by Curtesy, who was answerable for Waste at the Common Law, 2 Inst. 299, or the Lessee for life or years, who was first made liable by the statutes of Marlebridge, 52 H. 3. c. 23; (q. 24?) and of Gloucester, 6 Edw. 1. c. 5;) if such particular tenant, commits or suffers any Waste, it is a manifest injury to him that has the inheritance; as it tends to mangle and dismember it of its most desirable incidents and ornaments, among which Timber and Houses may justly be reckoned the principal. To him therefore in remainder or reversion, to whom the inheritance appertains in expectancy, the Law hath given an adequate remedy. Co. Litt. 63. For he, who hath the remainder for life only, is not entitled to sue for Waste; since his Interest may never perhaps come into possession, and then he hath suffered no injury. Yet a Parson, Vicar, Archdeacon, Prebendary, and the like, who are seised in right of their Churches of any remainder or reversion, may have an Action of Waste; for they, in many cases, have, for the benefit of the Church and of the successor, a fee-simple qualified: But, as they are not seised in their own right, the Writ of Waste shall not say, ad exhæredationem ipsius, as for other tenants in fee-simple; but ad exhæredationem ecclesiæ, in whose right the fee simple is holden. 1 Inst. 341: 3 Comm. c. 14.

By stat 13 Ed. 1. c. 22, the Action of Waste is given to one Tenant in Common against another. Where there are Tenants in Common for life, the one shall not have Trespass of Trees cut against the other, but shall have Waste pro indiviso, though they are only Tenants for term of Life, &c. Bro. Waste, pl. 79. If one Coparcener, before partition, makes Feoffment to another, and one of them does Waste in the Trees, Waste lies. 11 Rep. 49, a. Lifford's Case. Likewise, if two Joint-tenants do Waste, and after the one enters into Religion, Waste lies against the other alone. 2 Roll. Abr. 828. See post. III.

By stat. 20 Ed. 1. st. 2, an Action of Waste is maintainable by the Heir, for Waste done in the time of his Ancestor, as well as for Waste done in his own time.

This Action must be brought by him that hath the immediate estate and inheritance in Fee-simple or Fee-tail; but sometimes another may join with him. 1 Inst. 53, a; 285, a. It is said, that the Reversion must continue in the same state that it was at the time of the Waste done, and not granted over; for though the Reversioner taketh the estate back again, the Action is gone, because the estate did not continue: But in some special cases an Action of Waste shall lie; though the Lessor had nothing in the Reversion at the time of the Waste done: As, if a Bishop makes a Lease for life or years, and dies, and the Lessee, the See being void, doth Waste, the Successor shall have an Action of Waste. This is allowed, though the stat. of 20 Ed. 1. speaks only of those that are Inheritors. 1 Inst. 53, b; 356, a: 2 Roll. Abr. 825.

If a Tenant doth Waste, and he in Reversion dieth, the Heir shall not have an Action of Waste for Waste done in the life of the Ancestor: For he cannot say that the Waste was done to his disinherison, &c. 1 Inst. 341, a; 53, b; 356, a. If a Lease is made to A. for life, the Remainder to B. for life, Remainder to C. in fee; no Action of Waste lieth against the first Lessee during the estate in the mean Remainder, for then his estate would be destroyed. Otherwise, if B. had a mean Remainder for years, for that would be no impediment, the recovery not destroying the term of years. 5 Rep. 76, 77: 1 Inst. 54, a.

No person is entitled to an Action of Waste against a Tenant for life, but he who has the immediate estate of Inheritance, in Remainder or Reversion, expectant upon the estate for life. If, therefore, between the estate of the Tenant for life, who commits Waste, and the subsequent estate of Inheritance, there is interposed an estate of Freehold to any person in esse, then, during the continuance of such interposed estate, the Action of Waste is suspended: And if the first Tenant for life dies during the continuance of such interposed estate, the Action is gone for ever. But, though, while there is an estate for life interposed between the estate of the person committing Waste, and that of the Reversioner or Remainder-man in fee, the Remainder-man cannot bring his Action of Waste; yet, if the Waste be done by cutting down

Trees,

Trees, &c. such Remainder-man in fee may seise them; and if they are taken away, or made use of, before he seizes them, he may bring an Action of Trover. For, in the eye of the Law, a Remainder-man for life has not the property of the thing wasted: And even a Tenant for life in possession has not the absolute property of it, but merely a right to the enjoyment or benefit of it, as long as it is annexed to the inheritance, of which it is considered a part, and therefore belongs to the Owner of the Fee. 1 Inst. 218, b. in n. refers to 1 Inst. 53: 5 Rep. 77, Paget's Case: All. 81: 3 P. Wms. 267: 22 Vin. Abr. 523: 2 Eq. Abr. 727: 3 Atk. 757.

If Lessee for years commit Waste, and the years do expire, yet the Lessor shall have an Action of Waste for Treble Damages, though he cannot recover the place wasted; but if the Lessor accepteth of a Surrender of a Lease after the Waste done, he shall not have his Action of Waste. It is said, that if a Tenant repairs before Action brought, he in Reversion cannot have an Action of Waste; but he cannot plead that he did no Waste, therefore he must plead the Special Matter. 1 Inst. 283, a; 285, a; 306: 5 Rep. 119: 2 Cro. 658. By stat. 11 H 6. c. 5, where Tenants for life, or for another's life, or for years, grant over their estates, and take their profits to their own use, and commit Waste, they in Reversion may have an Action of Waste against them. 2 Inst. 302. He in the Remainder, as well as the Reversioner, may bring this Action, and every Assignee of the first Lessee, mediate or immediate, is within this Act. 5 Rep. 77: 2 Inst. 302.

2. By the Feodal Law, Feuds being originally granted for life only, the rule was general for all Vassals or Feudataries; "si vassallus feudum dissipaverit, aut insigni detrimento deterius fecerit, privabitur." Wright 44. See title Tenures. But in our ancient Common Law the rule was by no means so large; for not only he that was seised of an estate of inheritance might do as he pleased with it, but also Waste was not punishable in any Tenant, save only in three persons; Guardian in Chivalry, Tenant in Dower, and Tenant by the Curtesy; and not in Tenant for life or years. And it was even a doubt whether Waste was punishable, at the Common Law, in Tenant by the Curtesy. Regist. 72: Bro. Abr. title Waste: 2 Inst. 301. The reason of this diversity was, that the estate of the three former was created by the act of the Law itself, which therefore gave a remedy against them; but Tenant for life, or for years, came in by the demise and lease of the owner of the fee, and therefore he might have provided against the committing of Waste by his Lessee; and if he did not, it was his own default. 2 Inst. 299. But, in favour of the owners of the inheritance, the statutes of Marlebridge, stat. 52 Hen. 3. c. 23, (q. 24?) and of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 5, provided that the writ of Waste shall not only lie against Tenants by the Law of England, (or Curtesy,) and those in Dower, but against any Farmer or other that holds, in any manner, for life or years. So that, for above five hundred years past, all Tenants merely for life, or for any less estate, have been punishable, or liable to be impeached for, Waste, both voluntary and permissive; unless their leases be made, as sometimes they are, without Impeachment of Waste, absque impetitione vasti; that is, with a provision or protection that no man shall impetere, or sue him, for Waste committed. But Tenant in tail, after possibility of issue extinct, is not impeachable for Waste; because his estate was at its creation an estate of inheritance, and so not within the statutes. Co. Litt. 27: 2 Roll. Abr. 826, 828. Neither does an Action of Waste lie for the Debtor against Tenant by Statute, Recognizance, or Elegit; because against them the Debtor may set off the damages in account. Co. Litt. 54. But it seems reasonable that it should lie for the Reversioner, expectant on the determination of the Debtor's own estate, or of these estates derived from the Debtor. F. N. B. 58: 2 Comm. c. 18.

The Statute of Marlebridge, 52 H. 3. c. 23. § 2, (or c. 24,) enacts, that "Farmers, during their terms, shall not make Waste, Sale, nor Exile, of Houses, Woods, and Men, nor of any thing belonging to the Tenements that they have to farm, without special licence had by writing of covenant, making mention that they may do it; which thing if they do, and thereof be convict, they shall yield full damage, and shall be punished by amerciament grievously."

This act provideth remedy for Waste done by Lessee for life, or Lessee for years, and it is the first statute that gave remedy in those cases. 2 Inst. 145. This statute is a Penal Law, and yet, because it is a remedial Law, it has been interpreted by Equity. 10 Mod. 281.

Farmers.] Here Farmers do comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives, or for years, by deed or without deed. 2 Inst. 145. It has been resolved, likewise, that it should extend to Strangers. 10 Mod 281. Although the Register says sciand. that per statutum de Marlebridge, cap. 23, data fuit quædam prohibitio vasti versus tenementum annorum, which is true: Yet the statute extends to Farmers for life also; but this act extended not to Tenant by the Curtesy, for he is not a Farmer; but if a lease be made for life or years, he is a Farmer, though no rent be reserved. 2 Inst. 145.

Shall not make Waste] By these words they are prohibited to suffer Waste, for it has been resolved that this act extends to Waste omittendo, though the word is faciant, which literally imports active Waste. 10 Mod. 281.

Nor of any thing] Houses, Woods, and Men were before particularly named; and these words do comprehend Lands and Meadows belonging to the Farm. 2 Inst. 146. Also these general words have a further signification; and therefore, if there had been a Farmer for life, or years, of a manor, and a Tenancy had escheated, this Tenancy so escheated did belong to the Tenement, that he held in farm, and therefore this extended to it; and the Lessor shall have a writ generally, and suppose a lease made of the lands escheated by the Lessor, and maintain it by the special matter. 2 Inst. 146.

Special Licence by Writing] This grant ought to be by deed, for all Waste tends to the disinheritance of the Lessor, and therefore no man can claim to be dispunishable of Waste without deed. 2 Inst. 146. Likewise, this Special Grant is intended to be absque impetitione vasti; without Impeachment of Waste. 2 Inst. 146.

Yield full Damage] And this must be understood such a prohibition of Waste upon this statute as lay against a Tenant in Dower at the Common Law; and single damages were given by this statute against Lessee for life, and Lessee for years. 2 Inst. 146.

It has been said, that there are five Writs of Waste: two at the Common Law, as for Waste done by Tenant in Dower, or by Guardian; three by statute, as against Tenant for Life, Tenant for Years, and Tenant by the Curtesy. Tenant by the Curtesy, it is said, was punishable for Waste, by the Common Law, for that the Law created his estate as well as that of the Tenant in Dower, and therefore the Law gives like remedy against them. 1 Inst. 54, a: 2 Inst. 145, 299, 301, 305. But on this subject the authorities in the books are very contradictory, as the Reader will perceive by attending to the Note subjoined to the following clause of the Statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 5, which enacts, that, "A man from henceforth shall have a Writ of Waste in the Chancery against him that holdeth by the Law of England, or otherwise for term of life, or for term of years, or a Woman in Dower."

No Action of Waste lay before the Statute of Gloucester, but against Tenant in Dower and Guardian; and by the statute, Action of Waste is given against the Tenant by the Curtesy, Tenant for term of Life, and Tenant for term of Years. Bro. Waste, pl. 88. Lord Coke says, a reason is required, (that seeing as well the estate of the Tenant by the Curtesy, as the Tenant in Dower are created by Act in Law,) wherefore the prohibition of Waste did not lie as well against Tenant by the Curtesy as the Tenant in Dower at the Common Law; and the reason he assigns is this, for that, by having issue, the estate of the Tenant by the Curtesy is originally created, and yet after that he shall do homage alone in the life of the Wife, which proves a larger estate; and seeing that at the creation of his estate he might do Waste, the prohibition of Waste lay not against him after his Wife's decease; but, in the case of Tenant in Dower, she is punishable of Waste at the first creation of her estate. 2 Inst. 145. But see 2 Inst. 299, and the reasons there, as quoted above.

Shall have a Writ of Waste] Neither this Act, nor the Statute of Marlebridge, doth create new kind of Wastes, but gives new remedies for old Wastes; and what is Waste, and what is not, must be determined by the Common Law. 2 Inst. 300, 301.

Against him] If two are joint-tenants for years or for life, and one of them does Waste, this is the Waste of them both as to the place wasted, notwithstanding the words of the act are, him that holds. 2 Inst. 302.

Holds by the Law of England] Here Tenant by the Curtesy is named for two causes: 1st, For that albeit the common opinion was, that an Action of Waste did lie against him, yet some doubted of the same in respect to this word (tenet) in the writ, for that the Tenant by the Curtesy did not hold of the Heir, but of the Lord Paramount; and after this act, the Writ of Waste grounded thereupon doth recite this statute: 2dly, For that greater penalties were inflicted by this act than were at the Common Law. 2 Inst. 301.

Or otherwise for Term of Life or for Term of Years] A Lessee for his own Life, or for another man's Life, is within the words and meaning of this Law, and in this point this act introduces that which was not at the Common Law. 2 Inst. 301. If Feme Lessee for Life takes Husband, the Husband does Waste, the Wife dies, the Husband shall not be punished by this Law; for the words of this act be (a man that holds, &c. for Life), and the Husband held not for Life; for he was seised but in right of his Wife, and the estate was in his Wife. 2 Inst. 301. He that hath an Estate for Life by Conveyance at Common Law, or by Limitation of Use, is a Tenant within the statute. 2 Inst. 302. Tenant for years of a moiety, 3d or 4th part pro indiviso, is within this act; and so it is of a Tenant by the Curtesy, or other Tenant for Life of a moiety, &c. 2 Inst. 302.

Or a Woman in Dower] This is to be understood of all the five kinds of Dower whereof Littleton speaks, viz. Dower at Common Law, Dower by the Custom, Dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, Dower ex assensu patris, and Dower de la plus belle; and against all these the Action of Waste did lie at the Common Law. 2 Inst. 303. If Tenant in Dower be of a Manor, and a Copyholder thereof commits Waste, an Action of Waste lies against Tenant in Dower. 2 Inst. 303. Action of Waste lies against an Occupant for life, because he has the estate of the Lessee for life, and holds for life, as the statute mentions. 6 Rep. 37, b. If a Lessee for life be attainted of Treason, by which the lease is forfeited to the King, who grants it over to I. S. and he afterwards does Waste, though he comes en le post, yet Action of Waste lies against him. 2 Roll Abr. 826. So, if a man disseises the Tenant for life, and does Waste, yet Action of Waste lies against the Tenant for term of life; for he may have his remedy over against the Disseisor. Bro. Waste, pl. 138. Likewise, if an estate be made to A. and his heirs, during the life of B., A. dies, the heir of A. shall be punished in an Action of Waste. 1 Inst. 54, a.

A Tenant for life, without Impeachment of Waste, has as full power of cutting down Timber, and of opening new Mines for his own use, as if he had an Estate of Inheritance; and is in the same manner entitled to the Timber, if severed by others. 1 Term Rep. 56: 1 Inst. 220, n. But although such Tenant for life may commit Waste for his own benefit, yet he may be restrained by an injunction out of the Court of Chancery, from making Spoil and Destruction on the Estate: This distinction was first introduced in the case of Lord Barnard, as to Raby Castle. See post IV.

Though it is said, that an Action of Waste does not lie against Tenant by Statute-Merchant, Elegit, or Staple, because it is not an estate for life or years, and the statute mentions those who hold in any manner for life or years; yet see, contra, Fitzh. Nat. 58 H. and there said, that in the Register is a writ against him. 6 Rep. 37. Some books give the reason of it to be, because the Conusor, if he commits Waste, may have a venire facias ad computandum, and the Waste shall be recovered in the debt. Fitzh. N. B. 58, b. See 1 Inst. 57, b. in notis. If a man makes a lease for years, and puts out the Lessee, and makes a lease for life, and the Lessee for years enters upon the Lessee for life, and does Waste; the Lessee for life shall not be punished for it. 2 Inst. 303. If Lessee for years makes a lease of one moiety to A. and of the other moiety to B., and A. does Waste; the Action shall be against both; for the Waste of the one is the Waste of the other. Brownl. 38.

An Action of Waste lies against a Devisee, and the writ may suppose it ex legatione, for it is within the equity of the statute. Bro. Waste, pl. 132. If an Estate of Land to be made to Baron and Feme, to hold to them during the coverture, &c. if they waste, the Feoffor shall have Writ of Waste against them. Lit. §. 381. If Feme Lessee for life marries, and the Husband does Waste, Action lies against both. And if, in the above case, the Husband dies, Action of Waste lies against the Feme for the Waste he committed. But if Tenant in Dower marries, and the Husband does Waste, and dies, the Feme shall not be punished for this. Likewise, if Baron and Feme are are Lessees for life, and Baron does Waste, and dies, the Feme shall be punished in Waste, if she agrees to the estate. 2 Roll. Abr. 827: 1 Inst. 54: Kel. 113. But if she waives the estate, she shall not be charged. So, upon lease for years made to the Baron and Feme, Waste lies against both. And if Baron and Feme are joint Lessees for years, and Baron does Waste, and dies, Action of Waste lies for this against the Feme. Upon lease for life, to Baron and Feme, Waste lies against both. Likewise, if Feme commits Waste, and then marries, the Action shall be brought against both. 2 Roll. Abr. 827. And the writ may be Quod fecerunt vastum, or Quod uxor, dum sola fuit, fecit vastum. Bro. Waste, pl. 55.

If Baron seised for life of his Wife, in right of his Wife, does Waste, and after the Feme dies, no Action of Waste lies against the Baron in the tenuit, because he was seised only in right of his Wife, and the frank-tenement was in the Feme. 1 Inst. 54: 5 Rep. 75, b. But if the Baron, possessed for years in right of the Feme, does Waste, and after the Feme dies, Action of Waste lies against the Baron, because the Law gives the term to him. 1 Inst. 54. See Godb. 4, 5. pl. 6: Ow. 49.

Few cases, if any, can now happen of Waste or Injury done to Premises, but the Landlord, or person who has the inheritance, or even he who has a longer term in the Premises, or who is himself liable to answer over, may maintain an Action on the Case in nature of an Action of Waste, against the person committing the Injury, for Damages. See post. III. IV.

III. The Punishment for Waste committed, was, by Common Law and the Statute of Marlebridge, only single damages; except in the case of a Guardian, who also forfeited his Wardship by the provisions of the great Charter. 2 Inst. 146, 300: Stat. 9 Hen. 3. c. 4. But the Statute of Gloucester directs, that the other four species of Tenants (for Life, for Years, by Curtesy, or in Dower) shall lose and forfeit the place wherein the Waste is committed, and also treble damages, to him that hath the Inheritance. The expression of the statute is, "he shall forfeit the thing which he hath wasted;" and it hath been determined, that under these words the place is also included. 2 Inst. 303. And if Waste be done sparsim, or here and there, all over a Wood, the whole Wood shall be recovered; or if, in several Rooms of a House, the whole House shall be forfeited; because it is impracticable for the Reversioner to enjoy only the identical places wasted, when lying interspersed with the other. Co. Lit. 54. But if Waste be done only in one end of a Wood, (or perhaps in one Room of a House, if that can be conveniently separated from the rest,) that part only is the locus vastatus, or thing wasted, and that only shall be forfeited to the Reversioner. 2 Inst. 304: 2 Comm. c. 13.

The Redress for this injury of Waste is of two kinds; Preventive and Corrective: the former of which is by Writ of Estrepement, the latter by that of Waste.

Estrepement is an old French word, signifying the same as Waste, or Extirpation: and the Writ of Estrepement lay at the Common Law, after Judgment obtained in an Action real, and before the possession was delivered by the Sheriff; to stop any Waste which the vanquished party might be tempted to commit in Lands, which were determined to be no longer his. 2 Inst. 328. But as in some cases the Demandant may be justly apprehensive, that the Tenant may make Waste or Estrepement pending the suit, well knowing the weakness of his title, therefore the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. 1. c. 13, gave another writ of Estrepement, pendente placito, commanding the Sheriff firmly to inhibit the Tenant "ne faciat vastum vel estrepamentum pendente placito "dicto indiscusso." Regist. 77. And, by virtue of either of these writs, the Sheriff may resist them that do, or offer to do, Waste; and, if otherwise he cannot prevent them, he may lawfully imprison the Wasters, or make a warrant to others to imprison them: Or, if necessity require, he may take the posse comitatûs to his assistance. So odious in the sight of the Law is Waste and Destruction. 2 Inst. 329: 3 Comm. c. 14. See further, this Dict. title Estrepement.

A Writ of Waste is also an Action, partly founded upon the Common Law, and partly upon the Statute of Gloucester, c. 5; and may be brought by him who hath the immediate estate of inheritance in reversion or remainder, against the Tenant for Life, Tenant in Dower, Tenant by the Curtesy, or Tenant for Years. This Action is also maintainable, in pursuance of statute Westm. 2, (13 E. 1. c. 22,) by one Tenant in Common of the Inheritance against another, who makes Waste in the estate holden in common. The equity of which statute extends to Joint-tenants, but not to Coparceners: Because, by the old Law, Coparceners might make partition, whenever either of them thought proper, and thereby prevent future Waste; but Tenants in Common and Joint-tenants could not; and therefore the statute gave them this remedy, compelling the defendant either to make partition, and take the place wasted to his own share, or to give security not to commit any farther Waste. 2 Inst. 403, 404. But these Tenants in Common and Joint-tenants are not liable to the penalties of the statute of Gloucester, which extends only to such as have Life-estates, and do waste to the prejudice of the Inheritance. The Waste however must be something considerable; for if it amount only to twelve pence, or some such petty sum, the plaintiff shall not recover in an Action of Waste: nam de minimis non curat lex. Finch. L. 29: 3 Comm. c. 14.

This Action of Waste is a mixed action; partly real, so far as it recovers Land, and partly personal, so far as it recovers Damages: For it is brought for both those purposes; and, if the Waste be proved, the plaintiff shall recover the thing or place wasted, and also treble damages, by the Statute of Gloucester. The Writ of Waste calls upon the Tenant to appear and shew cause, why he hath committed Waste and Destruction in the place named, ad exhæredationem, to the disinherison, of the plaintiff. F. N. B. 55. And if the defendant makes default, or does not appear at the day assigned him, then the Sheriff is to take with him a Jury of twelve men, and go in person to the place alleged to be wasted, and there inquire of the Waste done, and the Damages; and make a return or report of the same to the Court, upon which report the judgment is founded. Poph. 24. For the Law will not suffer so heavy a judgment, as the forfeiture and treble damages, to be passed upon a mere default, without full assurance that the fact is according as it is stated in the writ. But if the defendant appears to the writ, and afterwards suffers judgment to go against him by default, or upon a nihil dicit, (when he makes no answer, puts in no plea, in defence,) this amounts to a confession confession of the Waste; since, having once appeared, he cannot now pretend ignorance of the charge. Now therefore the Sheriff shall not go to the place to inquire of the fact, whether any Waste has, or has not, been committed; for this is already ascertained by the silent confession of the defendant: but he shall only, as in defaults upon other actions, make inquiry of the quantum of damages. Cro. Eliz. 18, 290. The defendant, on the trial, may give in evidence any thing that proves there was no Waste committed, as that the destruction happened by lightning, tempest, the King's enemies, or other inevitable accident. Co. Litt. 53. But it is no defence to say, that a stranger did the Waste, for against him the plaintiff hath no remedy: though the defendant is entitled to sue such stranger in an Action of Trespass vi et armis, and shall recover the damages he has suffered in consequence of such unlawful act. Bull. N. P. 112.

When the Waste and Damages are thus ascertained, either by confession, verdict, or inquiry of the Sheriff, judgment is given, in pursuance of the statute of Gloucester, c. 5, that the plaintiff shall recover the place wasted; for which he has immediately a Writ of Seisin, provided the particular estate be still subsisting; (for, if it be expired, there can be no forfeiture of the land;) and also that the plaintiff shall recover treble the damages assessed by the Jury; which he must obtain in the same manner as all other damages, in actions personal and mixed, are obtained, whether the particular estate be expired, or still in being. 3 Comm. c. 14.

The Process incident to Action of Waste, is first a Writ of Summons made by the Cursitor of the county where the land lies, and on the return of this writ the defendant may essoin, and the plaintiff adjourn, &c. Then a pone is to be made out by the Filazer of the county, on the return of which a distringas issues for the defendant to appear, and upon his appearing the plaintiff declares, and the defendant pleads, &c. By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 3, a plaintiff shall have costs in all actions of Waste, where the damages found do not exceed twenty nobles; which he could not by the Common Law.

A common Writ of Waste is of this form:

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the Sheriff of S. greeting: If A. B. shall secure you, &c. then summon by good summoners C. D. that he be before our Justices, &c. to shew wherefore, whereas by the Common Council of this Kingdom of England, it is provided, that it shall not be lawful for any man to commit Waste, Spoil, or Destruction in Lands, Houses, Woods, or Gardens to him demised for term of life or years; the said C. in a House, Lands, and Woods at W. which he holds for the term of his life, of the demise of the said A. hath made Waste, Spoil, and Destruction, to the disinheriting of him the said A. and against the form of the provision aforesaid, &c.

IV. Besides the preventive redress at Common Law, the Courts of Equity, upon Bill exhibited therein, complaining of Waste and Destruction, will grant an Injunction, in order to stay Waste, until the defendant shall have put in his answer, and the Court shall thereupon make further order; which is now become the most usual way of preventing Waste. 3 Comm. c. 14.

If a Tenant for Life plant Wood on the land, which is of so poisonous a quality that it destroys the principles of vegetation, without an express power in his lease, where it is usual to have such powers, it may be considered as Waste, and the Court of Chancery may grant an Injunction. 5 New Abr. 493: MSS. Rep. Marquis of Powis v. Dorall, Canc.

If there be Lessee for Life, remainder for life, the reversion or remainder in fee, and the Lessee in Possession waste the lands, though he is not punishable for Waste by the Common Law, by reason of the mean remainder for life; yet he shall be restrained in Chancery, for this is a particular mischief. Moor 554: 1 Vern. 23. But if such Lessee has in his lease an express clause of without Impeachment of Waste, he shall not be enjoined in Equity. 1 Vern. 23.

If A. is Tenant for Life, remainder to B. for Life, remainder to first and other Sons of B. in Tail Male, remainder to B. in Tail, &c.; and B (before the birth of any son) brings a Bill against A. to stay Waste; and A. demurs to this Bill, because the Plaintiff had no right to the Trees, and no one that had the inheritance was party: Yet the Demurrer will be over-ruled, because Waste is to the damage of the Public, and B. is to take care of the inheritance for his Children, if he has any, and has a particular interest himself, in case he comes to the estate. 1 Eq. Abr. 400.

It seems to be a general principle, that Tenant in Tail after possibility, shall be restrained in Equity, in doing Waste, by Injunction, &c. because the Court will never see a man disinherited; per Chan. Finch. And he took a diversity, where a man is not punishable for Waste, and where he hath a right to do Waste; and cited Uvedale's Case, (24 Car. 1.) ruled by Lord Rolle, to warrant that distinction. 2 Show. 69. pl. 53.

A. devised lands, on which Timber was growing, to his Wife for Life, remainder to B. in Fee, paying several legacies within a limited time; and in default of payment, the remainder to C., he paying the legacies: And on a Bill brought by B., the Court gave him leave to cut Timber for the payment of the legacies, though it was opposed by the Tenant for Life and the Devisee over, he making satisfaction to the Widow for breaking the ground by Carriage, Waste, &c. 2 Vern. 152; and see ib. 218.

A Lease without Impeachment of Waste, takes off all restraint from the Tenant of doing it; and he may, in such case, pull up or cut down Wood or Timber, or dig Mines, &c. at his pleasure, and not be liable to any Action. Plowd. 135. But though the Tenant may let the houses be out of repair, and cut down Trees and convert them to his own use; yet where a Tenant in Fee-simple made a Lease for Years without Impeachment of Waste, it was adjudged that the Lessor had still such property, that if he cut and carried away the Trees, the Lessee could only recover damages in Action for the Trespass, and not for the Trees: Also it hath been held, that Tenant for Life without Impeachment of Waste, if he cuts down Trees, is only exempt from an Action of Waste, &c. 11 Rep. 82: 1 Inst. 220: 2 Inst. 146: 6 Rep. 63: Dyer 184. And if the words are, "to hold without Impeachment of Waste, or any Writ or Action of Waste," the Lessor may seize the Trees if the Lessee cuts them down, or bring Trover for them. Wood's Inst. 574. See ante II.

In many cases, likewise, the Court of Chancery will restrain Waste, though the Lease, &c. be made without Impeach-

Impeachment of Waste: For the clause of "without Impeachment of Waste" never was extended to allow the destruction of the estate itself, but only to excuse for permissive Waste; and therefore such a clause would not give leave to fell or cut down Trees ornamental or sheltering of a House, much less to destroy or demolish a House itself. See 5 New Abr. 495: MSS. Rep. in Chan. 1744, Packington v. Packington; and 2 Freem. 53, Abraham v. Bubb. So where A., on the marriage of his eldest Son, in consideration of 10,000 l. portion, settled (inter alia) Raby Castle on himself for life, without Impeachment of Waste, remainder on his Son for life, and to his first and other Sons in Tail Male: Afterwards, having taken some displeasure at his Son, he got 200 workmen together, and of a sudden stripped the Castle of the lead, iron, glass, doors, and boards, &c. to the value of 3000 l. The Court, on the Son's filing his Bill, granted an Injunction to stay committing Waste in pulling down the Castle; and, upon hearing the cause, not only the Injunction to continue, but that the Castle should be repaired, and put in the same condition it was in; and, for that purpose, a Commission was to issue to ascertain what ought to be repaired, and a Master to see it done at the charge and expence of the Father, and the Son to have his costs. 2 Vern. 738, 739: 1 Salk. 161, Vane v. Lord Barnard. Vide 1 P. Wms. 527.

A Bill was brought to restrain Tenant in Dower from getting Peat; Lord Chancellor dismissed it with costs, as it appeared to be vexatious; the Peat she sold not being above the value of 10 d. But herein it was said, that digging Peat is in many places the ordinary Bote, and perhaps the only fruit that can rise from the land. They do not carry away the Soil, for they dig off the Turf, then take away the Peat, and lay the Turf down again: And the Tenant for Life can no more dig Peat to sell, than cut down Timber to sell: And the Chancellor said, if he was to give any relief, he must direct an Issue; but that the cause was of too frivolous a nature to maintain the expence. 5 New Abr. 496: MSS. Rep. Wilson v. Bragg, 1742. Vide 2 Vern. 392.

A. Tenant for Life, remainder to Trustees to preserve, &c. remainder to D. the plaintiff in Tail, remainder over; with power to A. with consent of trustees, to sell Timber; and the money arising to be vested in lands, &c. to the same uses, &c. A. felled Timber to the value of 3000 l. without consent of Trustees, who never intermeddled; and A. had suffered some of the houses to go out of repair, D. by Bill prayed an Account and Injunction. The Master of the Rolls said, that the Timber might be considered under two denominations, to wit, such as was thriving and not fit to be felled; and such as was unthriving, and what a prudent man and good husband would fell, &c.; and ordered the Master to take an account, &c. And the value of the former, which was Waste, and therefore belonged to the plaintiff, the next in remainder of the inheritance, was to go to the plaintiff; and the value of the other was to be laid out according to the settlement, &c.; but as to repairs, the Court never interposes in case of permissive Waste, either to prohibit or give satisfaction, as it does in case of wilful Waste: And where the Court hath jurisdiction of the principal, viz. the prohibiting, it does in consequence give relief for Waste done, either by way of account, as for Timber felled, or by obliging the party to rebuild, &c. as in case of Houses, &c.; and mentioned Ld. Barnard's Case above. But as to repairs, it was objected, that the plaintiff here had no remedy at Law, by reason of the demesne Estate for Life to the Trustees, between Plaintiff's remainder in Tail and the Defendant's estate for Life; and that therefore Equity ought to interpose, &c. and that it was a point of consequence. Sed non allocatur. 5 New Abr. 496: MSS. Rep. Mich. Vac. 1733, Castlemain v. Lord Craven.

A Lord of a Manor may bring a Bill for an account of Ore dug, or Timber cut, by the Defendant's Testator. Thus, a customary Tenant of Lands, in which was a Copper Mine that never had been opened, opened the same, and dug out and sold great quantities of Ore, and died; and his Heir continued digging and disposing of great quantities out of the same Mine. The Lord of the Manor brought a Bill in Equity against the Executor and Heir, praying an account of the said Ore; and alleged that these Customary Tenants were as Copyhold Tenants; and that the freehold was in the Plaintiff as Lord of the Manor and Owner of the soil; and that the manner of passing the premises was by surrender into the hands of the Lord, to the use of the Surrenderee. It was insisted for the Defendants, that it did not appear that the admittance in this case was to hold ad voluntatem Domini secundum consuetudinem, &c. without which words, it was insisted, that there could be no Copyhold, as had been adjudged in Lord Ch. Just. Holt's time. And Lord Chan. Cowper said, it would be a reproach to Equity to say, that where a man has taken another's property, as Ore or Timber, and disposed of it in his lifetime, and dies, there should be no remedy. 1 P. Wms. 406. pl. 112, Bishop of Winchester v. Knight. Vide Fin. Rep. 135, Wild v. Sir Edw. Stradling. 2 Vern. 263, pl. 247.

Where Tenants of a Manor, claiming a right of Estovers, cut down a great quantity of growing Timber of great value, their title being doubtful, the Court of Chancery entertained a Bill, at the suit of the Lord of the Manor, to restrain this assertion of it. Stoner v. Strange; and v. Whiting, Can. Mich. 1767, Hil. 1768: Mitf. Treat. 123, 124.

One seised in Fee of Lands in which there were Mines, all of them unopened, by a deed conveyed those lands, and all Mines, Waters, Trees, &c. to Trustees and their Heirs, to the use of the Grantor for Life, (who soon after died,) remainder to the use of A. for Life, remainder to his first, &c. Son in Tail Male successively, remainder to B. for Life, remainder to his first, &c. Son in Tail Male successively, remainder to his two Sisters C. and D. and the Heirs of their Bodies, remainder to the Grantor in Fee. A. and B. had no Sons; and C., one of the Sisters, died without issue; by which the Heir of the Grantor, as to one moiety of the premises, had the first estate of inheritance. A. having cut down Timber and sold it, and threatened to open the Mines, the Heir of the Grantor, being seised of one moiety, ut supra, by the death of one of the Sisters without issue, brought his Bill for an account of the moiety of the Timber, and to stay A.'s opening of any Mine. And it was adjudged, the right of this Timber belongs to those who, at the time of its being severed from the freehold, were seised of the first estate of inheritance, and the property becomes vested in them. 2 P. Wms. 240.

A Bill

A Bill was brought against the Executors of a Jointress, to have a satisfaction out of assets for permissive Waste upon the Jointure of the Testatrix, &c. But by Cowper, the Bill must be dismissed, for here is no covenant that the Jointress shall keep the jointure in good repair; and in the common case, without some particular circumstances, there is no remedy in Law or Equity for permissive Waste, after the death of the particular tenant. Vin. Abr. tit. Waste, p. 523. cites MSS. Rep. 1 Geo. 1. in Canc. Turner v. Buck.

It has been said in Equity, that Remainder-man for Life shall, in Waste, recover damages in proportion to the wrong done to the inheritance, and not in proportion only to his own estate for life. 1 Vern. 158.

A. being Tenant for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, with Trustees to preserve remainder to his first and other Sons in Tail, remainder to B. in Tail; A. and B., before issue born of A., fell Timber. The eldest Son of A. afterwards brings his Bill, for an account and satisfaction of the Timber against B.—Per Lord Chan.: The plaintiff has no remedy at Law, either in his own name, or in the name of his trustees. A. if he had not consented to it, should have brought Trespass; for Tenant for years is considered as a fiduciary for Remainder-man, or his Lessor. If A. had an estate for life, and no limitation to Trustees, the plaintiff could have had no remedy; because Tenant for Life might have barred, or surrendered the whole estate to the Remainder-man: But here the freehold was in the Trustees; and the possession of Lessee for Years is in Law the possession of the Owner of the freehold. The Trustees however could not here have maintained Waste, because the Common Law gave no Action of Waste but to the Owner of the inheritance; and the statute of Gloucester gives the Writ to the same person; but the Trustees are in no other condition than Remainder-man for Life. Trustees may bring a Bill in Equity to stay Waste, before the contingent remainder comes in esse. If the Trustees had brought such a Bill, the Court, as to Trees actually cut, would have obliged them to have made satisfaction in money, to have been secured to attend the contingent uses. Where there is Tenant for life or years, subject to Waste, and Timber is blown down, the Owner of the first Remainder in Tail vested, shall have it; for the Common Law considers an estate in contingence as no estate; and when the Tree is severed, the property vests in somebody. If there be Tenant for Life, remainder for Life, remainder in Fee, Remainder-man can have no Action for Waste, because the plaintiff must recover the place wasted, which would be injustice to the remainder over; but such a Remainder-man of the inheritance after the intervening estate, may have Trover for the Trees; and if Remainder-man for Life dies in the Life of Remainder-man in Fee, he may bring Waste.—Though an Injunction is a proper remedy, yet it has never been determined that a Bill for an Account cannot be maintained afterwards: And though a Recovery was suffered after Waste done, it was to the use of plaintiff and his Heirs, which is no new use, and ought not to bar Waste in Equity. It is true, Action of Waste dies with the person; but though Waste will not lie at Law, as the person committing it is dead, yet he may have relief in this Court. It has been held in all cases of Fraud, the remedy never dies with the person, but relief may be had against the executor out of assets; and this Court will follow the assets of the party liable to the demand: and Collusion in this Court is the same as Fraud. Decreed, a satisfaction to be made to the plaintiff for the value of the Timber, as he is now Tenant in Fee of the estate; but without interest, as that would be carrying it too far. 5 New Abr. 499: Garth v. Cotton.

WASTEL-BOWL, from the Sax. Was-heal, i. e. Health be to you.] A large Silver Cup or Bowl, wherein the Saxons, at their entertainments, drank a Health to [illegible] another, in the phrase of Wass-heal. This Wastel [illegible]afs-heal Bowl, was set at the upper end of the table [illegible]igious houses for the use of the Abbot, who began the Health or poculum charitatis to strangers, or to his fraternity. Hence cakes and fine white bread, which were usually sopped in the Wastel-bowl, were called Wastel-Bread Mat Paris 141.

WATCH; To Watch is to stand sentry, or attend as a guard, &c. Watching is properly for the apprehending of rogues in the night, as Warding is for the day; and for default of Watch and Ward the Township may be punished. Our ancient statutes direct, that in all Towns, &c. between the day of Ascension and Michaelmas-day, Night-Watches are to be be kept, in every City, with six men at every gate; and six or four in Towns; and every borough shall have twelve men to watch, or according to the number of the inhabitants of the place, from sun-setting to sun-rising; who are to arrest strangers suspected, and may make hue and cry after them, and justify the detaining them until the morning; and Watches shall be kept on the Sea-coasts, as they have been wont to be. Stats. 13 Ed. 1. st. 2. c. 4: 5 Hen. 4. c. 3.

Every Justice of the Peace may cause these Night-Watches to be duly kept; which is to be composed of men of able bodies, and sufficiently weaponed: And none but inhabitants in the same town are compellable to watch, who are bound to keep it in turn; or to find other sufficient persons for them; or, on refusal, are indictable, *&c. WATERSCAPE, from the Sax. Waeter, Aqua, & Schap, ductus.] An Aqueduct, or passage for Water.

WATLING-STREET, Is one of those four ways which the Romans are said to have made in this kingdom, and called them Consulares, Prætorios, Militares, & Publicas. This Street is otherwise called Werlam-Street. See R. Hov. f. 248, a. n. 10. This Street leads from Dover to London, St. Albans, Dunstable, Towcester, Atherston, and the Severn, near the Wrekin, in Shropshire, extending itself to Anglesey in Wales. Anno 39 El. c. 2.

The Second is called Ikenild-Street, so called ab Icenis, stretching from Southampton over the River Isis, at Newbridge; thence by Camden and Litchfield; then it passeth the River Derwent by Derby, so to Bolsover Castle, and ends at Tinmouth.

The Third was called The Fosse, because in some places it was never perfected, but lies as a large Ditch; or, as Cowel says, from having a Ditch on one side of it: This way led from Cornwall through Devonshire, by Tetbury, near Stow in the Wolds, and besides Coventry to Leicester, Newark, and so to Lincoln.

The Fourth was called Ermine or Erminage Street, beginning at St. David's in West Wales, and going to Southampton. See the Laws of Edward the Confessor, whereby these four public ways had the privilege of Pax Regis. See Hollingshed's Chron. vol. 1. cap. 19; and Henry of Huntingdon, lib. 1. in principio. And in Leg Will. 1. c. 30, there are three ways mentioned; but Ikenild-Street is omitted: See also an old Description of these ways, made by Robert of *Gloucester. WAXSCOT, Ceragium.] A Duty anciently paid, twice a year, towards the charge of Wax Candles in Churches. Spelman.

WAY, Via.] A Passage, Street, or Road. Litt. A Way, or the Right of going over another man's Ground, is classed by Blackstone among Incorporeal Hereditaments. In such private Ways, a particular Man may have an Interest and a Right, though another be the Owner of the Soil. 2 Comm. c. 3.

This may be grounded on a special Permission; as when the Owner of the Land grants to another a Liberty of passing over his grounds, to go to Church, to Market, or the like; in which case the Gift or Grant is particular, and confined to the Grantee alone; it dies with the person; and if the Grantee leaves the country, he cannot assign over his Right to any other; nor can he justify taking another person in his company. Finch. L. 31. A Way may be also by Prescription; as if all the inhabitants of such a hamlet, or all the owners and occupiers of such a farm, have immemorially used to cross such a ground, for such a particular purpose; for this immemorial usage supposes an original grant, whereby a Right of Way thus appurtenant to land or houses may clearly be created. A Right of Way may also arise by act and operation of Law: for, if a man grants me a piece of ground in the middle of his field, he at the same time tacitly and impliedly gives me a Way to come at it; and I may cross his land for that purpose without trespass. Finch L. 63. For when the Law doth give any thing to one, it giveth impliedly whatsoever is necessary for enjoying the same. 1 Inst. 56.

Where a man has a Way to his Close, he cannot go further without a Prescription; but it is held if he go to a Mill or Bridge, it may be otherwise. 1 Ld. Raym. 75.

If a man has a Right of Way over another's land, and the Way becomes impassable by the overflowing of a river, he cannot justify going over the adjoining land, unless the Owner of the land is bound, by Prescription, or in his own Grant, to repair the Way: But if public Highways are foundrous, passengers are justified, from principles of convenience and necessity, in turning out upon the land next the road. Taylor v. Whitehead. Doug. 716.

Disturbance of Ways is very similar in its nature to Disturbance of Common. See title Common. It principally happening when a person, who hath a Right to a Way over another's grounds, by Grant or Prescription, is obstructed by inclosures, or other obstacles, or by ploughing across it; by which means he cannot enjoy his Right of Way, or at least not in so commodious a manner as he might have done. If this be a Way annexed to his estate, and the obstruction is made by the tenant of the land, this brings it to another species of injury; for it is then a Nusance, for which an Assise will lie. See title Nusance. But if the Right of Way, thus obstructed by the tenant, be only in gross, (that is, annexed to a man's person, and unconnected with any lands and tenements,) or if the obstruction of a Way belonging to an house or land is made by a stranger, it is then in either case merely a Disturbance: for the obstruction of a Way in gross is no detriment to any lands or tenements, and therefore does not fall under the legal notion of a Nusance, which must be laid ad nocumentum liberi tenementi; and the obstruction of it by a stranger can never tend to put the Right of Way in dispute: the remedy therefore for these Disturbances is not by Assise or any real action, but by the universal remedy, of Action on the Case to recover damages. 3 Comm. c. 16: *Hale on F. WEAR, A great dam made across a river, accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill. All Wears, for the taking of fish, are to be put down, except on the sea coasts, by Magna Carta, c. 23, and stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 4. c. 4. Commissions shall be granted to Justices, to keep the Waters, survey Wears and Mills, and to inquire of and correct abuses; and where it is found by them that any new Wears are made, or others altered, to the nusance of the Public, the Sheriff, by scire facias, is to give the person making them notice of it; and if he do not amend the same in three months, he shall forfeit 100 marks, &c. Stats. 1 H. 4. c. 12: 4 H. 4. c. 11: 12 Ed. 4. c. 7.

WEAVERS, Persons using the trade of a Weaver, shall not keep a tucking or fulling-mill, or use dying, &c. Or have above two looms in a house, in any Corporation or Market-town, on pain of forfeiting 20*s.* a week: And shall serve an apprenticeship of seven years to a Weaver or Clothier, or shall forfeit 20*l.* &c. Stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 11. By stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 68, the wages of Journeymen Weavers in London are to be settled by the Lord Mayor, Recorder, and Aldermen. Masters giving more wages than so appointed, to forfeit 50*l.*; and Journeymen demanding, or combining to demand more, to forfeit 40*s.* or be imprisoned for three months.

WED, Sax.] A covenant or agreement; whence to wed, a wedded husband, wedded bond-slave. Cowell.

WEDBEDRIP, The customary service which inferior tenants paid to their Lord in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties. From the Sax. Wed, (ante,) and Biddan to pray or desire, and Rippan to reap or mow. As a Covenant of the Tenant to reap for the Lord at the time of his bidding or commanding. Paroch. Antiq. 401: Cowell.

WEEK, Septimana.] Seven Days of Time; four of which Weeks make a Lunar Month, &c. The Week was said to be originally divided into seven Days, according to the number of the seven Planets. Skene.

WEIGH, Waga.] A Weigh of Cheese or Wool, containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds; in Essex, the Weigh of Cheese is three hundred pounds. A Weigh of Barley or Malt is six quarters, or forty-eight bushels. There is also a Weigh of Salt. See stat. 9 H. 6. c. 8.

WEIGHTS, Ponaera.] And Measures; are used between buyers and sellers of goods and merchandize, for reducing the quantity and price to a certainty, that there may be the less room for deceit and imposition. There are two sorts of Weights in use with us, viz. Troy-Weight and Avoirdupois: Troy-Weight contains twelve ounces to the pound, and no more; by which are weighed gold, silver, pearl, jewels, medicines, silk, wheat-bread, &c. Avoirdupois contains sixteen ounces in the pound, by which grocery wares, copper, iron, lead, flesh, cheese, butter, tallow, hemp, wool, &c. are weighed. In this Weight twelve pounds over are allowed to every hundred, so as one hundred and twelve pounds make the Hundred Weight. Dalt. 248.

In the composition of Troy-Weight, twenty pennyweights make an ounce, twenty-four grains a pennyweight, twenty mites a grain, twenty-four droits a mite, twenty perits a droit, and twenty-four blanks a perit. The Troy-Weight is said to be 20*s.* sterling in the pound; and the Avoirdupois-Weight 25*s.* sterling. 4 Shep. Abr. 194.

Fleta mentions a Weight, called a Trone-Weight, being the same with that we now call Troy-Weight; and, according to the same author, all our Weights have their composition from the Penny sterling, which ought to weigh weigh thirty-two wheat-corns of the middle sort; twenty of which Pence make an ounce, and twelve such ounces a pound; but fifteen ounces make the Merchants' pound. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12.

Every City, Borough, and Town shall have a common Balance, with common Weights sealed; on pain of 10*l* in the City, 5*l.* in the Borough, and 40*s.* the Town. Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 5. But only Cities and Market-towns are injoined to have common Balances, Weights, and Measures, by stat. 11 H. 7. c. 4. By this latter statute, Weights are to be marked by the chief officers of places, and sealed, &c. Refusing or delaying to do it, is liable to a penalty of 40*s.* Allowing Weights not agreeable to the standard, incurs a forfeiture of 5*l.* &c. The Mayors and such officers are once a year to view all Weights and Measures, and burn and destroy those which are defective; also fine the offenders, &c. And two Justices of Peace have power to hear and determine the defaults of Mayors.

By stat. 35 Geo. 3. c. 102, the Justices in Quarter Sessions in every county are required to appoint persons to examine the Weights and Balances within their respective jurisdictions. These Inspectors may seize and examine Weights in shops, &c. and seize false Weights and Balances; and the offender being convicted before one Justice, shall be fined, from 20*s.* to 5*s.* Persons obstructing the Inspectors to forfeit, from 40*s.* to 5*s.* Inspectors to be recompensed out of the County-rate. Standard Weights to be purchased by the Sessions out of the County-rate, and produced to all persons paying for the production thereof; Informations to be within one month. The Act not to infringe on the authority of Corporations, Court-Leets, &c. But persons punished by this Act not to suffer under any other Statute or Law.

By stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 85, a Balance and Weights are to be kept in every Corn Mill, which may be examined by Inspectors appointed under the preceding Act: the provisions of which are extended to Corn Mills. See also stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 86, to prevent abuses and frauds in the Packing, Weight, and Sale of Butter: And stat. 10 G. 3. c. 23, for regulating Weights, Balances, and Measures in Marybone; by means of Inspectors appointed by the Commissioners of Paving, &c.

It has been determined, that although there had been a custom in a town to sell butter by 18 ounces to the pound; yet the Jury of the Court-Leet were not justified in seizing the butter of a person who sold pounds less than that, but more than 16 ounces each; the Statute Weight. 3 *T. WERGILD, WEREGILD, Weregildus.] The price of Homicide, or other enormous offences; paid partly to the King for the loss of a Subject, partly to the Lord whose vassal he was, and partly to the party injured, or the next of kin of the person slain. LL. H. 1. See 4 Comm. 188.

In our Saxon Laws, particularly those of King Athelstan, the several Weregilds for Homicide were established in progressive order, from the death of the Ceorl or peasant, up to that of the King himself. And in the Laws of King Henry I. we have an account of what other offences were then redeemable by Weregild, and what were not so. The Weregild of a Ceorl was 266 thrysmas, that of the King 30,000; each thrysma being equal to about 1*s.* of our present money. The Weregild of a Subject was paid entirely to the Relations of the party slain; but that of the King was divided, one half being paid to the Public, the other to the Royal Family. 4 Comm. c. 23, & n. See further, this Dict. titles Appeal of Death; Homicide.

WILL, ESTATES AT; A species of Estates not Freehold. An Estate at Will is where lands and tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the Will of the Lessor, and the Tenant by force of this Lease obtains possession. Litt. § 68.

Such Tenant hath no certain indefeasible Estate, nothing that can be assigned by him to any other; because the Lessor may determine his Will, and put him out whenever he pleases. But every Estate at Will is at the Will of both parties, Landlord and Tenant; so that either of them may determine his Will, and quit his connexions with the other, at his pleasure. 1 Inst. 55. Yet this must be understood with some restriction; for if the Tenant at Will sows his land, and the Landlord, before the Corn is ripe, or before it is reaped, puts him out, yet the Tenant shall have the Emblements, and free ingress, egress, and regress, to cut and carry away the Profits. 1 Inst. 56. And this for the same reason upon which all the cases of Emblements turn, viz. the Point of Uncertainty; since the Tenant could not possibly know when his Landlord would determine his Will, and therefore could make no provision against it: and having sown the land, which is for the good of the Public, upon a reasonable presumption, the Law will not suffer him to be a loser by it. But it is otherwise, and upon reason equally good, where the Tenant himself determines the Will; for in this case the Landlord shall have the Profits of the land. 1 Inst. 55. See title Emblements.

What act does, or does not, amount to a determination of the Will on either side, has formerly been matter of great debate in our Courts. But it now seems settled, that, (besides the express determination of the Lessor's Will, by declaring that the Lessee shall hold no longer; which must either be made upon the land, or notice must be given to the Lessee,) the exertion of any act of Ownership by the Lessor, as entering upon the premises and cutting timber, taking a distress for rent and impounding it thereon, or making a feoffment, or lease for years of the land, to commence immediately; any act of Desertion by the Lessee, as assigning his estate to another, or committing waste, which is an act inconsistent with such a tenure; or, which is instar omnium, the death or outlawry of either Lessor or Lessee; puts an end to or determines the Estate at Will. 2 Comm. c. 9.

The Law is however careful, that no sudden determination of the Will by one party shall tend to the manifest and unforeseen prejudice of the other. This appears in the case of Emblements before mentioned; and, by a parity of reason, the Lessee, after the determination of the Lessor's Will, shall have reasonable ingress and egress to fetch away his goods and utensils. Litt. § 69. And, if rent be payable quarterly or half-yearly, and the Lessee determines the Will, the rent shall be paid to the end of the current quarter or half-year. Salk. 414: 1 Sid. 339. And, upon the same principle, Courts of Law have of late years leaned as much as possible against construing Demises, where no certain term is mentioned, to be Tenancies at Will; but have rather held them to be Tenancies from Year to Year so long as both parties please, especially where an annual rent is reserved; in which case they will not suffer either party to determine the Tenancy even at the end of the year, without reasonable notice to the other, which is generally understood to be half a year. 2 Comm. c. 9, & n.; and see this Dict. titles Sufferance; Lease.

The Notice must be to quit at the end of the year; and the time specified in the Notice will be supposed to be the end of the year, unless the contrary is shewn. 1 Term Rep. 159. If the Notice is not good for one year, it is not good for the next, it being supposed that the Landlord has waived it. 2 Bro. C. R. 161.

If the Landlord gives notice to quit, and afterwards receives Rent for the time subsequent to the end of the year, it is a question for the Jury to determine, whether it was accepted with intent to waive the Notice. Cowp. 243. I. 1. A WILL or Testament is, "the legal Declaration of a man's Intentions of what he wills to be performed after his death;" a Will or Testament being of no force till after the death of the Testator, or person making it. 2 Inst. 111.

A Will and a Testament, strictly speaking, are not words of the same meaning: A Will is properly limited to Land, and a Testament only to Personal Estate; and the latter requires Executors. Wills, by which Lands are disposed of, are regulated by several statutes made for that purpose, and are a Conveyance unknown to the old Common Law, which permitted a man only to dispose of his goods or personal property. So the word Devise seems most properly applicable to the disposition of Lands by Will; and Bequest or Legacy to that of Personal Estate. But in a course of time the words have come to be applied indifferently to a disposition of Lands or Goods, which are frequently and continually distributed and devised, at the same time, by the same Will. Burn. Eccl. L. title Wills.

Upon the notion that a Devise of Land by Will is merely a species of Conveyance, is founded the following distinction between such Devises, and Dispositions of Personal Estate; that a Devise of a man's goods and personal property will operate upon all such personal estate as the maker of the Will dies possessed of, at whatever distance of time he may die after making the Will: But a Devise of Real Estate, will only operate on such estates as were his at the time of executing and publishing his Will; so that freehold lands, purchased after making the Will, cannot pass under any Devise in that Will, unless the Will shall have been legally and formally republished subsequent to the purchase or contract. See post. IV. 1.

These Wills and Testaments are divided into two sorts; first, Written; and, secondly, Verbal, or Nuncupative.

The Law also takes notice of a particular Gift, in the nature of a Will, made by any one in contemplation of immediate death, which is called Donatio causâ mortis; a Gift in prospect of death. This is, where a man, being ill, and expecting to die, gives and delivers something to another, to be his in case the giver dies; but if he lives, he is to have it again. In every such Gift, there must be a delivery made by the giver himself, or some person by his order, in his last sickness, while he is yet alive; for the Gift will not be good if the delivery is made after his death. This delivery, however, may be made either to the person himself, for whom the Gift is intended, or to some other for his use, which will be equally effectual, so as it is made in the life-time of the party giving. See titles Legacy; Donatio causâ mortis.

No Stamp-Duty whatever is imposed on Wills, till after the death of the Testator; when the Probate or Letters of Administration are charged with certain Duties, in proportion to the value of the deceased's property. A Will may therefore be written and executed, by the Testator, on unstamped parchment or paper.

2. A NUNCUPATIVE WILL extends only to the personal property of the Testator, and is his Intention, declared in his last hours, before a sufficient number of Witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing.

As these Verbal Wills (which were formerly more in use than at present, when the art of writing is become almost universal) are liable to great impositions, and may occasion many perjuries, the Statute of Frauds, stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3, (amongst other things) enacts,

First, That no Written Will shall be revoked or altered by a subsequent Nuncupative one; except the same (the Nuncupative Will) be in the life-time of the Testator put in writing, and read over to him and approved; and unless the same be proved to have been so done, by the oaths of three Witnesses at the least; who, by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, must be such as are admissible upon Trials at Common Law. See title Evidence II. 1.

But

But where a man by Will, in writing, devised the residue of his personal estate to his Wife, and she dying, he afterwards, by a Nuncupative Codicil, bequeathed to another all that he had given to his Wife; this was resolved to be good: For, by the death of the Wife, the Devise of the residue was totally void, and the Codicil was no alteration of the former Will, but a New Will for the residue. 1 Eq. Ab. 408: T. Raym. 334.

Secondly, That no Nuncupative Will shall be good, (where the estate thereby bequeathed shall exceed the value of 30*l.*) which is not proved by the oaths of three Witnesses at the least, who were present at the making of it: nor unless it be proved that the Testator, at the time of pronouncing the same, did bid the persons present, or some of them, bear witness that such was his Will, or to that effect; nor unless such Nuncupative Will were made in the time of the last sickness of the deceased, and in the house of his habitation or dwelling, or where he hath been resident for the space of ten days or more, before the making of such Will; except where such person was surprised, or taken sick, being from his own house, and died before he returned.

Thirdly, That after six months passed after the speaking of the pretended testamentary words, no Testimony shall be received to prove any Nuncupative Will, except the said Testimony, or the substance thereof, were committed to writing within six days after the making the said Will.

Fourthly, That no Letters Testamentary, or Probate of any Nuncupative Will, shall pass the Seal of any Court till fourteen days at least after the death of the Testator; nor shall any Nuncupative Will be at any time received to be proved, unless Process have first issued to call in the Widow and next of kindred to the deceased, that they may contest the same if they please. Soldiers and Sailors, in actual service, may dispose of their moveables, wages, and personal estate, as they might before this Act. See the Statute.

The Legislature has, by the above restrictions, provided against frauds in setting up Nuncupative Wills, by so numerous a train of requisites, that the thing itself is fallen into disuse, and is hardly ever heard of; but in the only instance where favour ought to be shewn to it, when a person is surprised by sudden and violent sickness.

The words by which the Devise is made, must be spoken with an intent to bequeath, not any loose, idle discourse in his illness; for the sick man must require the by-standers to bear witness of such his intention: The Will must be made at home, among his family or friends, unless by unavoidable accident, to prevent impositions from strangers; it must be in his last sickness; for if he recovers, he may alter his disposition, and has time to make a Written Will. It must not be proved at too long a distance from the Testator's death, lest the words should escape the memory of the Witnesses; (but which is permitted to be remedied by their writing down, within six days, what they heard the Testator say;) nor yet too hastily, and without notice, lest the family of the Testator should be put to inconvenience, or surprised. 2 Comm. c. 30.

3. A CODICIL is a Supplement to a Will, or an Addition made by the person making the Will, annexed to, and to be taken as part of the Will itself, being for its explanation or alteration; to add something to, or to take something from, the former dispositions; or to make some alteration in the quantity of the Legacies, or the regulations contained in the Will. This Codicil may also be either written or verbal, under the same restrictions as regard Wills. 2 Comm. c. 32.

Whenever a Codicil is added to a Will or Testament, and the Testator declares that the Will shall be in force, in such case, if the Will happens to be void, for want of the forms required by Law in the execution, or otherwise, yet it shall be good as a Codicil, and shall be observed by the Administrator. And, though Executors cannot regularly be appointed in a Codicil, yet they may be substituted in the room of others named in the Will, and the Codicil is still good. If Codicils are regularly executed and witnessed, they may be proved as Wills; and so if they are found written by the Testator himself, they ought to be taken as part of the Will, as to the personal estate, and proved in common form by Witnesses, to be the Hand-writing of the person making the Codicil, and by giving an account when, where, and how the same was found. Burn. Eccl. Law.

4. If two Wills are found, and it does not appear which was the former or latter, both are void; but if two Codicils are found, and it cannot be known which was first or last, and one and the same thing is given to one person in one Codicil, and to another person in another Codicil, the Codicils are not void, but the persons therein named ought to divide the thing betwixt them. But if the Dates appear to the Wills or Codicils, the latter Will is always to prevail, and revoke the former; as also the latter Codicil, as far only as it is contradictory to the former; but as far as the Codicils are not contradictory, they are allowed to be both in force. For, though I make a Last Will and Testament irrevocable, or unalterable, in the strongest words, yet I am at liberty to revoke or alter it; because my own act or words cannot alter the disposition of Law, so as to make that irrevocable which in its own nature is revocable. If, in the same Will, there are two Clauses or Devises totally repugnant and contradictory to each other, it has been held, that the latter Clause or Devise shall take effect, on the same principle as respects prior and subsequent Wills. But it seems now, that where the same estate is given by a Testator to two persons in different parts of his Will, they shall be construed to take the estate as Joint-tenants, or Tenants in Common, according to the limitation of the Estates and Interests devised. 3 Atk. 493: 1 Inst. 112, b. n.

Where two Legacies are given to the same person by the same Will, or by Will and Codicil, the rule seems clear, that by the Devise of the same sum to a person by a second Clause in a Will as had before been given him by a former Clause in the same Will, he shall only take one of the Legacies, and not both. But where a Legacy is given to a person by a Codicil as well as by a Will, whether the Legacy given by the Codicil be more or less than, or equal to, the Legacy given by the Will, the Legatee shall take both: and if the Executor contests the payment, it is incumbent on him to shew evidence of the Testator's intention to the contrary. See title Legacy.

5. Several regulations have been made by the Law, in order to guard against any Frauds in the Disposition of real estate by Will. As to such Wills as dispose of goods and personal property only, if the Will is written in in the Testator's own hand, though it has neither his Name or Seal to it, and though there are no Witnesses to it, it is good, if sufficient proof can be obtained of the Hand writing. And even if it is in another person's Hand-writing, though not signed by the Testator, it will be good, if proof can be produced that it was made according to his instructions, and approved of by him. But as many mistakes and errors, not to say misfortunes, must often arise from so irregular a method of proceeding, it is the safer and more prudent way, and leaves less in the breast of the Ecclesiastical Judge, if it be signed and sealed by the Testator, and published in the presence of Witnesses. 2 Comm. c. 32.

It is expresly provided by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, that all Devises of Lands and Tenements shall not only be in Writing, but shall also be signed by the party so devising the same, or by some other person in his presence, and by his express direction; and shall be witnessed and subscribed in the presence of the person devising, by three or four credible Witnesses; or else the Devise will be entirely void, and the land will descend to the Heir at Law.

In the construction of this statute, it has been adjudged, that the Name of the person making the Will, written with his own hand, at the beginning of his Will, as, "I John Mills do make this my Last Will and Testament," is a sufficient Signing, without any Name at the bottom. But this seems doubtful, unless the whole Will be written by the Testator himself: And the safe and proper way is to sign the Name, not only at the bottom or end of the Will, but, as is usual and regular, at the bottom of each page or sheet of paper, if the Will contain more than one: and the Witnesses to the Will, seeing the Testator sign all the sheets, and put his Seal, (though this latter is not absolutely necessary in Law,) as well as his Name, to the last sheet, must write their Names under the Attestation in the last sheet only.

It has also been determined, that though the Witnesses must all see the Testator sign the Will, or at least acknowledge the Signing, yet they may do it at different times. Jones v. Dale, 5 Bac. Abr. But they must all subscribe their Names as Witnesses, in his presence, lest by any possibility they should make a mistake; and that a Will is good, though none of the Witnesses saw the Testator actually sign it, if he owns it before them to be his Hand-writing. It is remarkable, that the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, does not say the Testator shall sign his Will in the presence of the three Witnesses, but requires these three things:—First, that the Will should be in Writing; Secondly, that it should be signed by the person making the same; And, thirdly, that it should be subscribed by three Witnesses, in his presence. 3 P. Wms. 254. But it is not at all necessary that the Witnesses should be acquainted with the Contents of the Will; provided they are able, when called on, to identify the Writing; i. e. to say that the Paper, then shewed them, is the same they saw the Testator sign.

Though the Statute has required that the Witnesses to the Will shall witness it in the Testator's presence, (in order to prevent obtruding another Will in the place of the true one,) yet it is enough that the Testator might see the Witnesses; it is not necessary that he should see them signing; for otherwise, if a man should but turn his back, or look off, it might make the Will void. And in a case where the Testator desired the Witnesses to go into another room, seven yards distant, to witness the Will; in which room there was a window broken, through which the Testator might see them; it was, by the Court, adjudged to be a Witnessing in his presence. So where the Testator's carriage was drawn opposite the windows of an Attorney's office, in which the Witnesses attested the Will; this was clearly determined to be in the Testator's presence. 1 Bro. C. R. 99. But if a Will is executed at one time, and at another time, afterwards, the Witnesses put their Names to it, the Testator being then insensible, this will not be a good Will, as it cannot be said to be witnessed in his presence, if he is unconscious of what is passing. Doug. 241, Right d. Cater v. Price.

A Will made beyond Sea, of lands in England, must be attested by three Witnesses. 2 P. W'ms. 293.

A Will devising Copyhold land, witnessed by one or two Witnesses, or even without any Witness at all, is sufficient to declare the uses of a Surrender of such Copyhold lands made to the use of a Will; because the party to whom the land is given becomes entitled to it by means of the Surrender, and not by the Will. 2 Atk. 37: 2 Bro C. R. 58.

The Witnesses to a Will ought to be disinterested. In a case formerly determined by the Court of King's Bench, the Judges were extremely strict in regard to the credibility, or rather the competency, of the Witnesses: For they would not allow any Legatee, nor by consequence a Creditor, where the Legacies and Debts were charged on the real estate, to be a competent Witness to the Devise, as being too deeply concerned in interest not to wish the establishment of the Will; for if it were established, he gained a Security for his Legacy or Debt from the real estate, whereas, otherwise he had no claim but on the personal assets. 2 Stra. 1253. This determination, however, alarmed many Purchasers and Creditors, and threatened to shake most of the Titles in the kingdom, that depended on Devises by Will. For, if the Will was attested by a Servant to whom wages were due, by the Apothecary or Attorney whose very attendance made them Creditors, or by the Minister of the Parish who had any demand for Tithes or Ecclesiastical Dues, (and these are the persons most likely to be present in the Testator's last illness,) and if in such case the Testator had charged his real estate with the payment of his Debts, the whole Will, and every Disposition therein, so far as related to real property, were held to be utterly void. This occasioned the stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6, which restored both the competency and the credit of such Legatees, by declaring void all Legacies (and, in this are included, Devises of Lands and other Interests) given to Witnesses; and thereby removing all possibility of their Interest affecting their Testimony. The same Statute likewise established the competency of Creditors, by directing the Testimony of all such Creditors to be admitted, but leaving their Credit (like that of all other Witnesses) to be considered, on a view of all the circumstances, by the Court and Jury before whom such Will should be contested. And the Testimony of three Witnesses, who were Creditors, has been since held to be sufficiently credible, though the land be charged with the payment of debts. 2 Comm. c. 23.

II. 1. Regu-

II. 1. Regularly every person has full power and liberty to make a Will and Testament, who is not under some special prohibition by our Law, or by Custom; which prohibitions are principally upon three accounts:—1st, For want of sufficient discretion in the person making the Will.—2dly, For want of sufficient liberty and free-will.—And, 3dly, On account of their criminal conduct. 2 Comm. c. 32.

It may not be amiss, perhaps, first to mention a case which does not strictly come under either of these heads, unless on some occasions it might be supposed proper to be referred to the third: An Alien, while living under the English Government, may obtain money, goods, and personal property; and may make a Will, and dispose of such property as he pleases; contrary to the ancient custom in France, where the King, at the death of an Alien, was entitled to all he was worth in that kingdom; a custom repealed under the reign of the late unfortunate Louis XVI. A distinction is made in some of the Law-books, between Alien Friends and Alien Enemies: But in the case of an Alien, the Subject of a State at war with England, if he lives here and trades, and is not guilty of any unfriendly act, he is permitted to dispose of his goods and money as freely as any Subject; and this under the idea that he has the King's licence for staying in the kingdom, and is therefore in some degree entitled to the protection and privilege of a Subject. But an Alien (Friend or Enemy), not being capable of acquiring any right in land for his own benefit, can never, therefore, have any real estate to dispose of. Yet it seems undisputed, that an Alien may be a Devisee, even of Lands, whatever the further effect of his taking such lands may be. Powell on Devises.

Some doubts have arisen, but it is believed have never yet been brought before the Courts here, of the power of an Alien, during a temporary residence here, to devise his property in the Funds. It seems that such a Devise is certainly good, unless the Alien be positively restrained therefrom by the established Laws of his own country, or by his own Precontract. See further, title Alien.

2. It is particularly provided by the stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 5. § 14, that no person under the age of 21 years shall make a Will or Testament of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments. See post. III.

It appears settled, however, that a Male Infant of the age of 14 years and upwards, and a Female of 12 years or upwards, are capable of making a Will respecting only Personal Estate; but as the Ecclesiastical Court is the judge of every Testator's capacity, and decides on disputes respecting the validity of Wills relating to Personal Estates, the discretion of the person making the Will may be disputed there, and his capacity of devising, let him be of what age he will. But no custom can be good to enable any persons to make a Will, under the respective ages of 14 and 12 above-mentioned. Burn. Eccl. L. Though, by custom, in particular places, Infants may devise lands after that age, and before 21. Burn. Eccl. L. See further, title Infant.

An Idiot, or Natural Fool, notwithstanding he may be of lawful age to make a Will, cannot at any time make a Will or Testament, nor dispose either of his lands or goods: And, on the same principle, persons who are grown childish, either through old age or any infirmity or distemper, are, during the continuance of such incapacity, disabled from making a Will. 2 Comm. c. 32.

Lunatics, during the time of their madness, cannot make a Will or Testament, nor dispose of any thing thereby, and that for the most forcible of all reasons, their utter incapacity of knowing what they are doing: and it is a principle of Law, that in making of Wills, integrity, soundness, and perfectness of mind are absolutely requisite; the health of the body merely not being regarded. Yet if such mad persons have lucid intervals of reason, then during the time of such intervals, if they are fully possessed of a sound and disposing memory and understanding, they may make their Wills. Burn. Eccl. L. See this Dict. title Idiots and Lunatics.

Every person, however, is presumed to be of perfect mind and memory, unless the contrary is proved: And therefore, if any one attempts to call in question or overthrow the Will, on account of any supposed madness, or want of memory, in the Testator, he must prove such impediment to have existed previous to the date of the Will: but people of mean understanding and capacities, neither of the wise sort nor of the foolish, but indifferent betwixt both, even though they rather incline to the foolish sort, are not hindered from making their Wills. The Law will not scrutinize into the depth of a man's capacity, particularly after his death, if he was able to conduct himself reasonably in the common course of life; as it might be opening a wide door to support pretensions of fraud or imposition on the Testator. Burn. Eccl. L. And if a person of a sound mind make his Will, this shall not be revoked or affected by his subsequent infirmity. 4 Co. 61.

One overcome with drink is equally incapable of using his reason, during his drunkenness, as a madman: and therefore, if he makes his Will at that time, it is void. 2 Comm. c. 32.

Persons born Blind, Deaf, and Dumb, are incapable of making a Will, as they want the common inlets of understanding, and are incapable of having any desire of bequeathing or obtaining any knowledge with respect to property, or the disposal of it, and are in as helpless and ignorant a situation as idiots themselves; and even those who are only deaf and dumb by nature, cannot make any Will, unless it very manifestly appears, by strong and convincing proofs, that such persons understand what a Will means, and they have a desire to make a Will; for if they are possessed of such understanding, and desire, then they may, by signs and tokens, declare their intentions. Burn. Eccl. L.

A Blind Person may make a Nuncupative Will, by declaring his intentions before a sufficient number of Witnesses; and he may also make a Will in Writing, provided the Will be read to him before Witnesses, and in their presence acknowledged by him for his last Will; but if a Writing should be delivered to a blind man, and he, not hearing the same read, acknowledged the same for his Will, this would not be sufficient; for it might happen, that if he had heard the same read, he would not have acknowledged it for his Will. The best way, therefore, in such a case, is, that the Will be read over to the Testator, and approved by him, in the presence of all the subscribing Witnesses: and although the Law of England does not expressly require this regulation, in respect to the Will of Blind Persons, yet a Court of Justice will demand satisfactory proof of some kind that the identical Will was read over to him, though it was not in the presence of the Witnesses: it is therefore good policy to let all the subscribing Witnesses be present at the reading over such a Will; as in case of any dispute, which may be more likely in such extraordinary circumstances, they will be most capable of affording complete satisfaction to the minds of a Judge and Jury. Burn. Eccl. L.

The above precautions seem in like degree requisite in the case of a person who cannot read; for though the Law, in other cases, may presume that the person who executes a Will knows and approves the contents of it, yet that presumption will cease where, through defect of education, he cannot read, or is by sickness incapacitated to read the Will at that time. Burn. Eccl. L.

3. A Married Woman is restrained and prevented from devising any land or real estate whatsoever; being particularly excepted out of the stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 5, enabling other persons to dispose of their lands and tenements by Will; and it is a general rule, that she cannot make any Will, even of goods or personal estate, without the licence or consent of her Husband; because by the Law, as soon as a man and woman are married, all the goods and personal estate, of what nature soever, which the Wife had at the time of the marriage, or may acquire after, belong to the Husband, by force of the marriage; which empowers him to make such part of them his own as are not absolutely vested in him immediately by the marriage; and therefore it would be an inconsistency in the Law to give her a power of defeating that rule, by bequeathing those goods and chattels to another. 2 Comm. c. 32. See title Baron and Feme.

If a Woman makes a Will, and afterwards marries, and dies during the life of her Husband, yet being at the time of her death incapable by Law of devising, because her Husband is then living, the Will is void; for it is necessary, in order to make her Will of force in Law, that she had ability to make a Will; not only at the time of making thereof, when the Will received its being, but also at the time of her death, at which time only any Will can receive its strength and confirmation. 4 Rep. 60: 2 P. Wms. 624. If a Wife survives her Husband, a Will made during the marriage is not good; because she is, during such time, by Law restrained from making any Will: but if a Will is made during the marriage, and she survives her Husband, and approves and confirms the Will after his death, in this case it will be good, by reason of her new consent or new declaration of her Will; for then it is, as it were, a new Will. See post. IV. 1.

If a Woman makes her Will, and afterwards marries and survives her Husband, and dies a Widow, leaving such Will made before her marriage; it has been held, that the Will was revived, and in force. Plowd. Comm. 343.—But later determinations seem to have settled, that though she was able in Law to make a Will, both at the time of the execution of it and at her death, yet such Will shall not be good or valid in Law, without a republication; it having been once absolutely revoked and entirely made void by the marriage. See 2 T. Rep. 695.

Although a married Woman is, generally speaking, so entirely under the power of her Husband, that she cannot make what in propriety of speech is called a Will, yet she may, with the consent of her Husband, make what is termed an Appointment, and which, like a Will, does not take effect till her death, and may be altered or revoked during her life, and the usual way in such cases is for the intended Husband to enter into marriage articles, or a bond, before marriage, in a sufficient penalty conditioned, to permit his Wife to make a Will, and to dispose of money or legacies to a certain value, and to pay what she shall appoint, not exceeding such value; and in that case, if after the marriage, and during it, she makes any Writing, purporting to be her Will, and disposes of Legacies to the value agreed on, though in strictness of Law she cannot make a Will, without her Husband's positive assent to the specific Will, but only something like a Will, yet this shall be good as an Appointment, and the Husband is bound by his bond, agreement, or covenant, to allow the execution of it. 2 Comm. c. 32. And this Will, or Appointment, ought to be proved in the Spiritual Court. 1 Burr. 431: Stone v. Forsyth, Doug. 707.

To the above general rules there are also some few other exceptions.

The Queen-Consort is exempted from these restrictions, and she may dispose of her goods and personal estate by Will, without the consent of her Lord. See title Queen.

If a married Woman is Executrix to some other person, and in that right has goods and chattels, these do not become the property of the Husband by marriage, because she has them not for her own use, but as representing the person of another; and therefore, in this case, she may, for the continuation of the executorship only, and for no other purpose, make an Executor, and consequently a Will, without the consent of her Husband; but she cannot, either in her life-time, or by her Will, dispose of the goods which she is thus possessed of in right of another, any otherwise than as by Law she is required to do as Executrix. See title Baron and Feme VI.

If a married Woman has any pin-money, or separate maintenance, she may dispose of any savings made by her out of the same by Will, without the control of her Husband. Pre. Ch. 44.

Another remarkable exception is in favour of a married Woman, whose Husband is banished for his life by Act of Parliament; for she may make a Will, and act in every thing as if she was unmarried, or as if the Husband was dead. 2 Vern. 104. See title Baron and Feme VI.

Where personal property is given to a married Woman for her sole and separate use, she may dispose of it by Will without the assent of her Husband. 3 Bro. C. R. 8.

Where lands are conveyed to Trustees, a married Woman may have the power of appointing the disposition of them after her death, which Appointment must be executed like the Will of a Feme Sole, and will be subject to the same rules of construction. 2 Ves. 610: 1 Bro. C. R. 99.—And (though the contrary has been held) it has been determined by the House of Lords, that the Appointment of a married Woman is effectual against the Heir at Law; though it depends only upon an agreement of her Husband before Marriage, without any conveyance of the estate to Trustees. Bro. P. C. vi. 156.

4. A Will will be set aside which is made by a person in consequence of any threats made use of to him, whereby he is induced, through fear of any injury, to make make such a Will as he would not otherwise have wished to do; and as to this, no certain rule can be laid down, but it is left to the discretion of the Court to determine upon the particular circumstances of the case, whether or no such persons could be supposed to have a free Will in the disposing of their estates; and the Judge will, on such an occasion, not only consider the quality of the threats, but also the persons as well threatening as threatened; in the person threatening, his power and disposition; and in the person threatened, the sex, age, courage, pusillanimity, and the like. But if after making the Will, when there is no cause of fear, the maker of it ratifies and confirms it, it will be good in Law. Burn. Eccl. L.

If a Man makes a Will in his sickness, at the over-importunity of his Wife, contrary to his own wishes and desires, and merely that he may be quiet, this is a Will made by restraint, and shall not be good. Sty. 427.

The Ecclesiastical Court has jurisdiction of fraud or deception relating to a Will of personal estate, and can examine the parties by allegation concerning such fraud and deceit; and if the Will was falsely read to the Testator, then it is not his Will; but in the case of a real estate, a Will cannot be set aside even by a Court of Equity, for fraud or imposition, but must be tried at Law, on the question, whether the Testator did or did not in fact devise; the fraud or imposition in this case being a matter proper for a Jury to inquire into. Bransby v. Kerridge, Bro. P. C. See this Dict. title Fraud.

5. A Traitor lawfully convicted of High Treason, by verdict, confession, outlawry, or otherwise; besides the loss of his life, shall forfeit to the King all his goods and chattels, and all such lands and freehold property as he shall have at the time of his committing such treason, or at any time after; and so consequently is unable to dispose of any thing by Will: and Traitors are not only deprived of the privilege of making any kind of Last Will, from the time of their being convicted and found guilty, but any Will made before, does, by reason of such conviction, become void, in respect both of goods and lands. But if any person convicted of Treason obtain the King's Pardon, he is thereby restored to his former estate, and may make his Will, as if he had not been convicted; or if he had made any before his conviction and condemnation, such Will, by reason of the Pardon, recovers its former force and effect. See titles Treason; Forfeiture; Attainder.

A Felon, lawfully convicted, cannot make any Will, or other disposition of any goods or lands, because the Law has disposed thereof already; all his goods being forfeited to the King, who is to hold his freehold estate for a year and a day after his death, when it is forfeited to the chief Lord of the fee; so that it cannot be in the power of the Felon to devise it. But in this case also, a Pardon restores him to his former estate and capacity of making a Will. See titles Forfeiture; Attainder.

The Will of a Felo de se is void, both as to the Appointment of an Executor, and also with respect to any Legacy or Bequest of goods, for they are forfeited by the very act and manner of his death; but any Devise of Land made by him is good, as that is not subjected to any Forfeiture. See titles Homicide; Forfeiture.

An Outlaw is not only out of the King's protection and out of the aid of the Law, but also all his goods and chattels are forfeited to the King, by means of the Outlawry, although it should only be for Debt, and even though the action in which he is outlawed is not just, nevertheless his goods and chattels are forfeited, by reason of his contempt in not appearing; and therefore he that is outlawed cannot make his Will of his goods so forfeited. But a man outlawed for Debt, or in any other personal action, may, in some cases, make Executors; for he may have Debts upon Contract, which are not forfeited to the King, and those Executors may have a Writ of Error to reverse his Outlawry. Burn. Eccl. L. See title Outlawry.

It is the better opinion, that an Excommunicated Person may make a Will; though some disputes have heretofore arisen as to the effect of what is called the greater and lesser Excommunication; but these niceties are nearly put an end to, by the unusualness of the case ever happening at this time. Burn. Eccl. L.

With respect, however, to the Wills of Traitors, Felons, Outlaws, &c. though they are void as far as concerns the King, or the Lord who is entitled to the forfeiture of their lands or goods, yet the Will is of force against the Testator and his representatives, and all other persons whatsoever; so that if the King or the Lord pardons the Forfeiture, the Will is suffered to take effect.

Formerly Papists were under several disabilities, both as to the purchasing Lands and taking them by Descent or Devise; but those are now done away, and Papists rendered capable of purchasing and devising Lands, and having them by Descent, Purchase, and Devise, on taking the oath prescribed to them by the Act of the 18th Geo. 3. c. 60. See title Papists.

III. 1. ANCIENTLY there were in different parts of the kingdom, and particularly in Wales, and in the province of York, and in London, several Customs, the remains of the old Common Law, which prevented persons from disposing of more than the one-third part of their Goods and Personal Property: And this restraint continued till very modern times, when, in order to favour the power of bequeathing, and to reduce the whole kingdom to the same standard, three Acts of Parliament have been provided; (one, stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 2, explained by stat. 2 & 3 Anne, c. 5, for the province of York: another, stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 38, for Wales; and a third, stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 18. § 17, for London;) whereby all persons within those Districts, and liable to those Customs, are enabled to dispose of all their money and other personal estate by Will, and the claims of the Widows, Children, and other relations, to the contrary, under pretence of the Custom, are totally barred. Thus is the old Common Law, restraining Devises, and the Customs in those places, which were the relics of it, entirely abolished throughout all the kingdom of England; and a man may give the whole of his chattels by Will, as freely as he formerly could his third part; in disposing of which, he was bound, by the custom of many places, to remember his Lord and the Church, by leaving them his two best chattels; and afterwards he was left at his own liberty to bequeath the remainder as he pleased. 2 Comm. c. 32. These Customs, however, as far as they respect the distribution of an Intestate's estate, still remain in force. See title Executor V. 9.

It

It seems sufficiently clear, that, before the Conquest, Lands were devisable by Will. Wright of Tenures 172. But, upon the introduction of the Military Tenures, the restraint of devising Lands naturally took place, as a branch of the Feodal Doctrine of Non-alienation without the consent of the Lord. See title Tenures. And some have questioned, whether this restraint was not founded upon truer principles of Policy, than the power of wantonly disinheriting the Heir by Will, and transferring the estate, through the dotage or caprice of the Ancestor, from those of his Blood to utter Strangers. See 1 Comm. c 23.

However this be, we find that, by the Common Law of England since the Conquest, no estate, greater than for term of years, could be disposed of by Testament; except only in Kent, and in some ancient Burghs, and a few particular Manors, where their Saxon immunities by special indulgence subsisted. 2 Inst. 7: Litt. § 167: 1 Inst. 111. And though the feodal restraint on Alienations by Deed vanished very early, yet this on Wills continued for some centuries after; from an apprehension of infirmity and imposition on the Testator in extremis, which made such Devises suspicious. Besides, in Devises there was wanting that general notoriety, and public designation of the Successor, which in Descents is apparent to the neighbourhood; and which the simplicity of the Common Law always required in every transfer and new acquisition of property. 2 Comm. c. 23.

But when Ecclesiastical Ingenuity had invented the Doctrine of Uses, as a thing distinct from the Land, Uses began to be devised very frequently, and the Devisee of the Use could in Chancery compel its execution. For it has been observed, that, as the Popish Clergy then generally sate in the Court of Chancery, they considered that men are most liberal when they can enjoy their possessions no longer: and therefore at their death would choose to dispose of them to those, who, according to the superstition of the times, could intercede for their happiness in another world. But, when the Statute of Uses had annexed the Possession to the Use, these Uses, being now the very Land itself, became no longer devisable. See title Uses. This might have occasioned a great revolution in the Law of Devises, had not the Statute of Wills been made, about five years after, viz. stat. 32 H. 8. c. 1, explained by stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 5; which enacted, that all persons being seised in Fee-simple (except Feme-coverts, Infants, Idiots, and persons of nonsane memory) might by Will and Testament in Writing devise to any other person, except to Bodies Corporate, two-thirds of their Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, held in Chivalry, and the whole of those held in Socage; which now, through the alteration of Tenures by the Statute of Charles the Second, amounts to the whole of their Landed Property, except their Copyhold Tenements; and these latter pass, as we have seen, rather by Surrender than by Will: and in the latter case, rather as Personal than Real Property. 2 Comm. c. 23.

Corporations were excepted in these statutes, to prevent the extension of Gifts in Mortmain; but now, by construction of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, it is held, that a Devise to a Corporation for a Charitable Use is valid, as operating in the nature of an Appointment, rather than of a Bequest. See titles Mortmain; Charitable Uses.

With regard to Devises in general, experience soon shewed how difficult and hazardous a thing it is, even in matters of public utility, to depart from the Rules of the Common Law; which are so nicely constructed and so artificially connected together, that the least breach in any one of them disorders for a time the texture of the whole. Innumerable frauds and prejuries were quickly introduced by this parliamentary method of inheritance: For so loose was the construction made upon this Act by the Courts of Law, that bare Notes in the Hand-writing of another person were allowed to be good Wills within the statute. To remedy which the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries, 29 Car. 2. c. 3, already so fully stated, was passed: And to remedy the further inconveniences, as to Witnesses, the stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6, (see ante I. 5,) was found necessary.

One inconvenience more was at length found to attend this method of Conveyance by Devise; in that Creditors by Bond and other Specialties, which affected the Heir, provided he had Assets by Descent, were now defrauded of their Securities, not having the same remedy against the Devisee of their Debtor. To obviate which, the stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14, provided, that all Wills and Testaments, Limitations, Dispositions, and Appointments, of real Estates by Tenants in Fee-simple, or having power to dispose by Will, shall (as against such Creditors only) be deemed to be fraudulent and void: And that such Creditors may maintain their actions jointly, against both the Heir and Devisee. A Devise to raise a portion for younger Children, according to an agreement before marriage, and a Devise for payment of Debts, are exceptions in the statute, § 4. But it has been held, that the payment of the Debt must be provided for effectually, in order to bring it within the exception. 1 Bro. C.R. 311: 2 Bro. C. R. 614.

2. More immediately as to what Things are devisable.—In general it may be stated, that every thing in which a man has the absolute property may now be devised by his Will; disputes at present arising mostly on the words of the Will, and not on the capacity to bequeath. Thus, Rents, Tithes, Manors, Franchises, and Annuities, may be devised; by virtue of the words Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, in the Statutes of Wills. So may Reversions, and vested Remainders expectant after an Estate-Tail; and Trust-Estates by the Cestui que-Trust. See Powell on Devises.

Estates pur autre vie are devisable, by stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 12, by a Will attested by three Witnesses. See titles Occupant; Life Estate.

If any one has money owing to him on Mortgage, he may devise this money to be paid when it becomes due. Burn. Eccl. L. See 1 Inst. 209; and this Dict. title Mortgage.

The right of presenting to the next Avoidance, or the Inheritance of an Advowson, of a Benefice, may be devised; so also a Donative may be devised. Powell on Devises. And a Devise of the next Turn, or Presentation, carries the next Turn of presenting absolutely to the Devisee, and not merely the right of getting himself presented. 2 Black. Rep. 1840. And such Devise may be made by an Incumbent or Parson of any Church, to whom the Inheritance of the Advowson of that Church belongs, though he is the Incumbent or Parson of the Church when he dies; for though the Will has no effect

But by the death of the Testator, yet it has a beginning in his life-time; and the disposition and bequest will be good also, if he appoints by his Will who shall be presented to the Church by his Executors, or that one Executor shall present the other, or that his Executors shall grant the Advowson to any particular person. This case being distinguished and excepted from the general rule as to Advowsons, which are by Law forbidden to be disposed of while there is no Incumbent, and the Church is empty, in order to restrain the practice of Simony. 3 Bulst. 36, 43: 1 Roll. Rep. 210: Cro. Jac. 371: 1 Atk. 619. See Dy. 456; and this Dict. title Simony.

If a man has agreed to purchase an estate, and the Buyer and Seller enter into articles for the purchase, and the Buyer dies, having by his Will devised the land so agreed to be purchased, before any deed to convey the same is made to him; the land will, in Equity, pass to the Devisee; the Seller only standing as Trustee for him, and whom he should appoint, till a regular conveyance be executed. 1 C. C. 39: 2 Vern. 679: 1 Atk. 573.

A Lease for any number of years, determinable upon a Life or Lives, or a Lease for 500 or 1000 years, or any other term absolute, may be given and disposed of by Will, as Personal Estate. Burn. Eccl. L.

Some of our old Writers on the Law of Wills have very carefully stated, that if a person devises to another a Horse or a yoke of Oxen, the Legacy is good, though the Testator may have no Horse or Ox of his own, either at the time of his death or making his Will; and that in these kind of Legacies the rule is, that if the words of the Devise are directed to the person to whom the Legacy is given, as, "I will that A. B. shall have a Horse;" the choice of the Horse belongs to the Legatee; but if the words are directed to the Executor, as, "I will that my Executor give to A. B. a Horse;" the choice belongs to the Executor: And they add, that both parties should be reasonable in their choice, that the Legatee may not choose a Horse of too great value, or the Executor one of too little. Swinb.: Burn. Eccl. L.

3. If one of two Joint-tenants, during his life-time, devise his share in the land, and die, this Devise will not be good; and the person to whom the Joint-tenant has devised his share, takes nothing, because the Devise does not take effect till after the death of the Joint-tenant, and then the survivor takes the whole land by a prior title, that is to say, the Deed of Purchase. Burn. Eccl. L. And although the Joint-tenancy is severed before the Testator's death, yet if the Will be made before the severance, it will have no effect; unless there is a Republication of the Will after the partition. 3 Burr. 1497.

By stat. 20 H. 3. c. 2, Widows may bequeath the Crop of their Ground, as well of their Dowers as of their other Lands and Tenements: And by stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, if the Incumbent of a Living, before his death, has caused any of his Glebe Lands to be manured and sown at his own expence, with any Corn or Grain, he may by his Will devise such Corn, and all the profit of it, growing on the Glebe Land so manured and sown.—So if a man is possessed of Land for the term of his life only, and the Land after his death descends to his Heir, yet he may devise the Corn growing on the land at the time of his death, away from the Heir, to some other person; although he has it not in his power to devise the Land whereon it grows. Burn. Eccl. L.—So where a man has Lands in right of his Wife, or is Tenant by the Curtesy of Lands, and sows them with Corn, he may devise the Corn growing on the lands at his death: And if the Husband, or Tenant by the Curtesy, lets the lands to another, who sows the ground, and afterwards the Wife, or the Tenant by Curtesy, dies, the Corn not being ripe; yet, in this case, the person to whom the lands were let is entitled to the Corn, and may devise it, notwithstanding his estate and interest in the land is determined. See title Emblements.

But Trees, and other things fixed to the Freehold, or Heir-looms, which by custom go to the Heir with the House, are not devisable but by him who has the Fee-simple. 4 Co. 64: 1 Inst. 185. See title Heir.

An Executor or Administrator cannot devise those goods which he has as Executor or Administrator, and which belong to the person to whom he is Executor or Administrator; but the same must be applied in payment of that person's debts, and distributed in a due course of Law: the Executor or Administrator having these goods only for such particular purposes, and not to their own absolute use. Nor can a Husband devise any effects which his Wife has as Executrix, for the like reason. Burn. Eccl. L. See titles Executor; Baron and Feme.

Although the Personal Estate of the Wife becomes the property of the Husband immediately on marriage, as he is thereby enabled to make all debts due to her, and bonds for money given her before marriage, his own; yet unless he recovers such debts during the marriage, and renews the bonds, and takes them in his own name, he has not such an absolute interest in them as to be able to devise them by his Will; but they will, after his death, again become the property of the Wife. 1 Inst. 351. But if a Woman's fortune, or any part of it, consisted in Bonds given her before marriage, and the Husband on the marriage makes a settlement on her in consideration of such fortune, notwithstanding the Bonds are not renewed during the marriage, yet the Husband will be entitled to them, being in this case considered as a purchaser for a valuable consideration; and he may devise them, or they shall go to his Executor, even though the Wife should survive him. Talb. 108. See title Baron and Feme.

It has been already noticed, that one cannot devise lands which he shall acquire after making his Will; the Will only operating on such lands as he is possessed of at the time of publishing it. And though a man does, by express words in his Will, give to another all the lands which he shall have at the time of his death, yet this Devise will be good only as to such lands as he had at the time of making the Will; and any lands purchased afterwards will not pass by it, but go the Heir at Law, unless the Will is republished. See post. IV. 1.

But where a man is entitled to an Estate in Reversion, expectant on the determination of another person's life, who holds the lands for his Life or in Tail, he may by his Will dispose of this; and if the Tenant in Tail or for Life dies during the life-time of the Testator, such lands, which will then come to his possession, will pass without any Republication of his Will; the Reversion at the time of making the Devise being a certain present interest, though it was to take place in future. 10 Rep. 78 (a). See post. IV. 1.

IV. 1. THE

IV. 1. THE REPUBLICATION OF WILLS has already been alluded to. A Will as to the disposition of Land, and in some other circumstances, takes effect, or is hindered from doing so, according to its date; it is therefore necessary, on certain occasions, to renew it, as it were; or in fact to make a new Will. And if the Testator is exactly of the same mind, as to the method of the disposal of his property, and circumstances only require that the Will should bear date at any particular time, it will be sufficient for him to call in three proper Witnesses, and before them declare the signature to be his Hand-writing, and use the same forms as in the original execution. And the three Witnesses must sign their names to such new Will or Republication, mentioning the date thereof.

A new Publication of a Will is in truth, as has been already said, making it a new Will; so that after such Publication it has the force and operation of a Will just made at the time of such Publication. Therefore, if a man by his Will devises "all his Lands," and after making the Will purchases other lands, and then new publishes his Will, this new Publication has made it a new Will, and consequently by the Devise of all his Lands the newly-purchased lands shall pass; for there is no necessity to make any alteration in this case in the Will, the words being sufficient, upon the new Publication, to convey all the lands he had at the time of such Publication. So if a man by his Will devises all his Lands to certain uses, and afterwards purchases Copyhold Lands, and surrenders them to the uses declared, or to be declared, (or to the uses declared only,) by his last Will; this has the effect of a Republication of his Will, as to such after-purchased Copyhold Lands, and they shall pass thereby. Cowp. 130.—Or if the Testator, after making such a Devise, purchases Freehold Lands, and then makes a Codicil, duly executed to pass real estate, though no notice is taken of the after-purchased lands; yet if the Codicil is annexed to or confirms the Will, or (as it seems) has a reference to it, this amounts to a Republication of the Will, and the after-purchased lands will pass under the general Devise. Cowp. 158: Com. 383: Acherly v. Vernon, 3 Bro. P. C. See Powell on Devises; and Brady v. Cubitt, Doug. 40; where it seems that such Republication may be effected by any instrument (sufficiently executed) referring to the Will.

This rule, as to the new Publication of a Will, should be understood with the following restriction, viz. that the words of the Will at the time of the new Publication are such as are proper to convey the lands, and also sufficiently to denote the person to whom they are devised; for if there is any change with respect to the person who is to take the lands by the Will between the time of the first making the Will and the new Publication of it, in such case the new Publication will not alter the intention of the Will as originally made, nor change the import of the words made use of; so as to make the persons named in the Will take in a different manner than was intended at the time of such original making the same. If therefore I devise land to A. and his Heirs, and A. dies in my life-time, yet a new Publication after the death of A. will not make his Heir take by the Will; for though the original Devise was to A. and his Heirs, and from thence it appears to be my intention that his Heirs should have the land; yet because the Heirs were named in the Will to take by Descent, as Heirs only, and not as the persons designed to take the land immediately, the Devise to them was rendered void by the death of A. in my life-time, and the new Publication of the Will could not make it good; the Publication making no alteration in the words of the Will, and having no other effect than this, that if the words in the Will are proper to convey and describe the person to take, and the land or thing to be taken, it makes that Will, though of never so long a date, to be as perfectly new as if but then made. Powell on Devises.

Such Republication being duly made will supply a defect for want of capacity in the Testator to make a Will, as well as any inability for want of a subject-matter whereon the Will may attach. And therefore if one having, under age, made a Will of Land, duly executed according to the statute, which is void by reason of his infancy, re-execute it after he come of age, with the circumstances required by the statute, this will render such Will valid. 1 Sid. 162: 1 Keb. 589.

New Publication of a Will is always favoured in Equity; and with respect to Personal Estate, very slender evidence will serve; though it is not safe to trust to it. As if a man says, "My Will in the hands of Robert shall stand;" this will amount to a good Republication. But we have seen that in the case of real estate, the Republication must be as formal as the original execution.

2. REVOCATION OF A WILL may arise from various causes both in Fact and Law; and is either express or implied. Express, as if the Testator absolutely cancels the Will, by tearing off the seal and the signature; or if he destroys or burns the whole Will, or expressly declares his mind that his Will should be revoked. Revocations are implied where the state or condition of the person devising, or of the estate or thing devised, is altered, after making the Will. The consequences of a Revocation of a Will, which may frequently take place without the knowledge, or even against the consent, of an uninformed Testator, it is necessary to state the principles of the Law on this subject something at length.

By the Statute of Frauds, stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, no Devise of Land in Writing shall be revocable, otherwise than by another Will, or some other Writing, to be executed in the presence of three Witnesses; or by burning, tearing, or cancelling the Will containing such Devise, by the person making the same, or in his presence, or by his consent.

But it has been determined (since, as well as before, this statute) that, without an express Revocation, if a man who has made his Will afterwards marries, and has a child or children, whether such child is born before or after his death, this is a presumptive or implied Revocation of his former Will which he made in his state of celibacy, as well as to his Real as his Personal Estate; and the statute does not extend to this case, but he shall be said to die intestate; the Law supposing that he must mean to provide in the first place for his family, and distributing his estate for their benefit accordingly. See 5 Term Rep. 49.—This however being only a presumptive Revocation, if it appears, by any expression or other means, to be the intent of the Testator that his Will should continue in force, the marriage will be no Revocation of it. As in the case, where a man devised an estate to a woman, whom he afterwards married, and when when he died she was with child of a son, yet the Will was determined to be good, and not revoked by the marriage. And such implied Revocation may, in all cases, be rebutted by parol evidence. Brady v. Cubitt, Doug. 40.

If a man by his Will devises his land, and then sells the same land, and afterwards repurchases it, yet the Will stands revoked (as to the land) by the sale, and the repurchase is no declaration of the Testator's mind to set it on foot again, without a Republication. Powell on Devises.

If a woman before marriage makes her Will, and thereby devises her land to A., and afterwards marries him or any other, and then dies, yet neither A. nor the Husband take any thing by his Will, the marriage being, in Law, a Revocation of it; and a Married Woman not being capable of making a Will of Lands. See ante II. 3.

Where a man, possessed of Stock or Money in the Funds, devises the exact quantity he is possessed of to any one or more persons by his Will, this is a specific Legacy; and if the Testator afterwards, before his death, sells any part of the Stock so devised, such Sale shall operate as a Revocation (or, as the Law terms it, an Ademption or taking away) of so much of the Legacy as shall be sold: and the Legatee or Legatees shall be only entitled to so much Stock as actually remains at the time of the Testator's death; and if there is no Stock at all remaining, the whole Legacy is gone, and the Legatees cannot come on the other part of the estate for a satisfaction. If the Testator however, after sale of part of the Stock, purchases other Stock, this shall restore the Legatees to the amount of such purchase. See title Legacy I.

In the case of Lands, where the Law does not imply a Revocation, it must be in writing, operating as a Will, and signed by the person making the Will; or by some writing, by which the Testator declares his intention to revoke the first Will, and signed by three Witnesses, pursuant to the Statute of Frauds.

A subsequent Devise to another person, though he may be incapable of taking, is a Revocation of a precedent Devise to a person who was capable of taking; as it serves to shew the intent of the Testator to revoke the first Devise, though the second cannot take effect. See Spragge v. Stowe, cited Doug 35.—But one Will cannot be revoked by another Will, though it should contain a clause declaring all former Wills to be revoked, unless the second is valid and effectual as a Will. 2 P. Wms. 343. Yet a Will may be revoked by an instrument written merely for the purpose of Revocation, if it is attested by three Witnesses: and the Testator must sign it in their presence, which, as already noticed, is not necessary in the execution of a Will. 3 Comm. c. 23, in n.

If there is a Duplicate of a Will made, and deposited in the hands of an Executor, or other person; in such case, a cancelling of that part of the Will which is in the possession of the Testator is a sufficient Revocation of both the parts, as well that in his own hands as the Duplicate, in the hands of the Executor; they being both in fact but one Will. Doug. 40. So, if a Testator makes a second Will, and duly executes the same, it shall, without any thing further, revoke and make void the former Will and Duplicate.

Where a latter Will is the instrument by which a former is revoked, the Revocation effected thereby is ambulatory until the death of the Testator; for although, by making a second Will, the Testator intends to revoke the former, yet he may change his intention at any time before his death; (until which neither of his Wills can have operation;) and then the latter, being a revocable instrument itself, and only affecting the former as far as it is itself efficient, being revoked, is as no Will; the consequence of which is, that the first Will never having been cancelled, but remaining entire, stands in like manner as if no other had been made. 4 Burr. 2512. But if a prior Will be made, and then a subsequent one expressly revoking the former, in such case, although the first Will be left entire, and the second Will be afterwards cancelled, yet the better opinion seems to be, that the former is not thereby set up again. See Cowp. 53. So, if a Testator, having made a new Will, actually cancel the former Will by tearing off the name and seal, &c., and afterwards cancel the latter Will, the former Will is not revived thereby, although a Counterpart thereof be found in his possession uncancelled and undefaced; because the Revocation is here an express, independent, substantive Act; by which the former Will becomes, to all intents and purposes void, and incapable of taking effect, unless as a new Will by force of a Republication. Powell on Devises.

Revocations of a Will may also take place by an actual or intended alteration in the estate of the Testator. And here it is necessary to observe, that the principle which governs cases of such actual alteration, is clearly distinguishable from that which governs cases of an intended alteration only: In the former cases, the Revocation is a consequence of Law, uninfluenced by and independent of any intent in the Testator to revoke or not; but, in the latter cases, the Revocation is an inference from the fact, as furnishing a ground to conclude that such was the intent of the party. Powell on Devises.

The following general principles will explain the nature of such Revocations, and the decisions of the Courts thereon; and the instances quoted, though few, may suffice in a Work of this nature:

There is no feature in our Law more prominent than that of an uniform solicitude, on every occasion, to favour the Heir, and prevent his disinherison: This anxious attention to the interest of the lawful Representative has introduced into the Law respecting Devises this fixed principle; namely, that as at the inception of his Will a man must be seised of the estate he devises, so the Law requires that such estate should remain in the same plight and unaltered, to the time of its consummation by his death; and that his original intention in respect thereto should continue, unremittingly, the same until the object of it takes effect, when the Will is consummated thereby; and therefore not only any alteration or new modelling which makes it a different estate, but also any intent of the owner to alter or new-model the estate, will, in construction of Law, render a disposition of it by Will invalid. See Powell on Devises, title Revocations, and the cases there cited.

Any alteration whatever in a Freehold Estate will operate as a Revocation; even although the act done be necessary to give effect to the disposition made by such Devise. 3 P. Wms. 163, 170. And the rule of Law will be the same, although the act be expresly declared to be done with a view to give effect to the Will, if, in its operation, the Devisor be in as of a new purchase; for the rule being introduced with a view to preserving the inheritance in the Heir at Law, and not with a view to carry into execution the intent of the Devisor, the question is not, whether the Devisor intended to revoke; but whether he intended to do that, the effect of which in Law will be to alter the estate or interest which was in him, by passing it away, and taking it back through a new channel; for if that be his intention, whether he meant to revoke or not is immaterial; the alteration operating as a Revocation in Law, and not as a Revocation by the party; and therefore taking effect without reference to the intent of the party, as to the stability or non-stability of the Will. Powell on Devises. See 2 Atk. 579.

Since Courts of Equity have considered Articles for the Sale of Estates, or respecting the Settlement of them, as of the nature of actual Conveyances, from the time at which they are agreed to be carried into execution; even Covenants, when the Covenantee has a right to a specific performance, have been allowed in Equity to operate as Revocations of Wills previously made. See 2 P. Wms. 329, 624.

But, upon the principle that no actual alteration is made in the thing devised, the changing of Trustees, where the estate originally devised is only the Trust, will not amount to a Revocation. 1 C. R. 23: 2 C. R. 109. Nor though the estate is absolutely conveyed to different parties from those who had it at the time of the Devise; as in the case of an intended Purchase being completed, or a Mortgage paid off by the Testator. Fullarton v. Watts, Doug. 561: Doe d. Gibbons v. Pott, Doug. 710: 3 P. Wms. 170: 1 Wilf. 311.

Under the head of intended Alterations of his Estate by the Devisor may be arranged those cases, where the Devisor, after making his Will, attempts a disposition of his Estate, and intends a complete Conveyance, but fails therein, either for want of due formalities in the Instrument that he uses, or from an incapacity to take, in the person to whom he means to convey: In these cases of intended Alteration, it may be shewn that the Devisor had no intent to alter the disposition he has made; and if that be made out in proof, no Revocation will ensue from the circumstance of there having been such imperfect Conveyance. Powell on Devises.

In all cases, where a person having lands in Fee devises them, and then parts with or conveys them away, though he afterwards, nay immediately, takes a new Estate in Fee, this will be a Revocation of his Will. 1 Ro. Ab. 616. pl. 15: 2 Atk. 325: Darley v. Darley, Bro. P.C.: 1 Eq. Ab. 412. c. 12; and see Powell on Devises. As where a person having made his Will, and thereby devised his Real Estate, afterwards, in contemplation of an intended marriage, conveys that estate to Trustees for the use of himself and his Heirs till the marriage should take effect, and after the marriage for other particular uses; but happens to die before any marriage had; this has been determined to be a Revocation of his Will as to the disposal of such Estate. Show. P. C. 154: 4 Burr. 1961; See Powell on Devises. But in the case of Coparceners, as also in the case of Tenants in Common, having devised their several parts by Will, any partition between them, or even the levying a fine, in consequence of and to strengthen the same, shall not revoke their Will; if the Conveyance is merely for the purpose of partition. T. Raym. 140: 3 P. Wms. 170: 1 Wilf. 309.

If a man seised of lands in Fee, devises the same by his Will, and afterwards mortgages them in Fee, to secure a sum of money, though in Law the legal estate is conveyed to the Mortgagee, and such Mortgage is therefore held to be a Revocation of the Devise in the Will; yet, in Equity, it is now settled that these Mortgages shall only operate as a Revocation pro tanto; (for so much as the land is mortgaged for;) by which means the Devisee shall take the land under the Will, subject to the Mortgage. 1 Vern. 239: 2 C. R. 154: 1 Salk. 158; and see Powell on Devises.—A Conveyance by way of Mortgage for years, amounts, both in Law and Equity, only to a conditional Revocation, pro tanto, of a Devise in Fee: But still the Construction is different in Law and in Equity; for, in Law, the Mortgage is an absolute Revocation quoad the Term, though the Reversion passes by the Will notwithstanding; but, in Equity, it is a Revocation pro tanto only; as well with respect to the Term as to the Reversion, and the Reversion there draws to it the Equity of redemption. Powell on Devises. But if one devise lands to A. in Fee, and afterwards mortgage the same lands to A this has been decreed to be an entire Revocation, it being inconsistent with the Devise. Pre. Ch. 514.

If a man possessed of a Leasehold Estate in Land for a term of years, or for life or lives, by his Will bequeaths the same to A., and after making his Will takes a new lease of the same land for another term of years, or for other life or lives, so that the former lease is surrendered in Fact or in Law, this is a Revocation of his Will, or at least makes the same void as to this Devise; for this is another lease, and not that which he had at the time of the making of the Will. 1 P. Wms. 575: 2 P. Wms. 168: 3 P. Wms. 163.

But these Revocations turn merely on the penning the Will, viz. whether the words are sufficient to pass the subsequent renewed Interest; and not on any inability in point of Law, to give by Will an after-taken lease: and therefore if such lease be disposed of by Will, by a proper form of words, it will pass, notwithstanding any subsequent renewal. As if one give "all his Estate, Right and Interest, he shall have to come in such lease at the time of his death."—So, such right of renewal will pass by a general Devise of the residue; or by a Devise of the lease, together with the right of renewal: And the Devise of the lease carries the right of renewal as well as the lease itself. Salk. 237: 1 P. Wms. 575: 1 Atk. 599: 3 Atk. 177, 199; and see Powell on Devises.

In all the above cases, where a Will is determined to be revoked, and no other Will is made, a person is said to die Intestate; at least as far as concerns the Devises thus revoked. In all cases also of void Devises, an Intestacy shall take place as to those, unless there is a particular Devise contained in the Will of the residue of the Testator's estate to some person; in which case the Legacies sink into and become part of such residue, and go to the Residuary Legatee.

V. The

V. THE MOST GENERAL and comprehensive Rule, as to the Construction of Wills, is; That a Devise be most favourably expounded, to pursue, if possible, the Will of the Devisor, who, for want of advice or learning, may have omitted the legal or proper phrases: And, therefore, many times, the Law dispenses with the want of words in Devises, that are absolutely requisite in all other instruments. Thus a Fee may be conveyed without words of Inheritance; and an Estate-tail without words of Procreation. By a Will also an Estate may pass by mere Implication, without any express words to direct its course. As where a man devises lands to his Heir at Law, after the death of his Wife: Here, though no Estate is given to the Wife in express terms, yet she shall have an Estate for life by Implication; for the intent of the Testator is clearly to postpone the Heir till after her death; and, if she does not take it, nobody else can. 1 Vent. 376. But it seems, that if it is given to a Stranger, after the Wife's death, the Devise raises no Implication in favour of the Wife, for it may descend to the Heir during the life of the Wife. Cro. Jac. 75. So also, where a Devise is of Black acre, to A. and of White-acre to B. in Tail, and if they both die without issue, then to C. in Fee; here A. and B. have Cross Remainders by Implication, and on the failure of either's issue, the other or his issue shall take the whole; and C.'s Remainder over shall be postponed till the issue of both shall fail. But where Cross-Remainders are to be raised between more than two, the presumption is against them. See title Remainder. And, in general, where any Implications are allowed, they must be such as are necessary, (or at least highly probable,) and not merely possible Implications. And herein there is no distinction between the rules of Law and of Equity; for the Will, being considered in both Courts in the light of a Limitation of Uses, is construed in each with equal favour and benignity, and expounded rather on its own particular circumstances, than by any general rules of positive Law. 2 Comm. c. 23.

The intention of the Testator is said, by Coke, to be the pole star to guide the Judges in the exposition of Wills; but though it is allowed to be thus considered, in order to explain the words of the Will, yet such intention must be collected from the Will itself, and not from any reports or evidence concerning it; the Courts having been at all times careful of admitting verbal testimony in respect to a Will: And little credit being due to any thing that may have fallen from a man himself, either before or after making his Will; it often appearing that insinuations may be thrown out purposely to mislead those who were interested in the disposal of his property. Though a Parol Averment shall not be admitted to explain a Will, so as to expound it contrary to the import of the words, yet, when the words will bear it, a Parol Averment may be admitted. As, for instance, to ascertain a person; but in no case to alter the estate. 1 Freem. 292, Sleede v. Berrier: 5 Rep. 68, Lord Cheyney's Case.

Other Rules of Construction are the following; all consistent with, and dependent upon, that, which lays down the intent of the Testator as the general guide for the exposition of doubtful circumstances:—Where the words of a Will have a plain sense, and no doubt is in any matter within or without the words, touching the matter of the Devise, there the words of the Will shall always be taken to be the intent of the Devisor, and his intent to be what the words say. 2 And. 17. All the words of a Will are to be carried to answer the intent of the Devisor; but this is to be understood in cases where the intent of the party may be known by the words that are in the Will. 2 And. 10, 11, 134. If there are inconsistent and contradictory words in a Will, some words must be rejected to make it sense. Thus, where a Testator gave the interest of a sum of 6000*l.* to Mary Comfortle, his Daughter, for her life, and after her decease gave the money between Charles Comfortle, her Husband, and their Children: And in another part of the Will he said, "and in case there be no such Child or Children, I give it to Charles Comfortle and such Children."—Lord Chancellor rejected these latter words, as they were absurd and contradictory. 5 New Abr. 325: MS. Rep.

A Will must have a favourable interpretation, and as near to the mind and intent of the Testator as may be, and yet so withal as his intent may stand with the rules of Law, and not be repugnant thereunto; it being a rule or maxim of Law, Quod ultima voluntas testatoris perimplenda est, secundum veram intentionem;—sed legum servanda fides, suprema voluntas quod mandat fierique jubet parere necesse est. In Deeds the rule of Construction is, that the intention must be directed by the words; but in Wills, the words must follow the intent of the Devisor; and such a Construction is to be made of them, as to make use of all the words, and not of part, and so as they may stand together, and have no contrariety in them. Shep. Abr. part 10. voc. Testament: Bridg. 105. See tit. Words.

Such a sense shall be made of a Devise, that it may be for the profit of the Devisee, and not to his prejudice.—General and doubtful words in a Will shall not alter an express Devise before, nor carry any thing contrary to the apparent intent.—The clauses and sentences of a Will shall be severally transposed to serve the meaning of it: And Construction shall be made of the words to satisfy the intent, and they shall be put in such order as the intent may be fulfilled.—No sense may be framed upon the words of a Will, wherein the Testator's meaning cannot be found. Shep. Abr. voc. Testament.

One part of a Will shall be expounded by another: As where a man leaves an estate to another and his Heirs, and afterwards mentions to have given him an estate-tail, Heirs shall be taken to mean Heirs of the body, and the Devisee shall take only an estate-tail. 2 Freem. 267, Bramfield v. Popham. See further on this subject, Burr. 912—924; 1110—1113: 1 Vesey 142.

Notwithstanding that Wills are thus generally favoured, yet where a person endeavours to make a settlement of his estate against the reason and policy of the Common Law, the Judges are bound to reject it. And where a man, by his Will, makes no other disposition of his land than the Law itself would have done, had he not made any Will, there such a Will is useless, and will be invalid. As if one give land to his Son and his Heirs, or to A. and his Heirs, and his Son or A. is his Heir at Law, this is a void Devise, and the person to whom the land is given shall not take the land under the Will, but by Descent, being the better title, as if no Will had been made; for a Descent strengthens a title, taking away the entry of such as may possibly have right to the estate: But he who has an estate by Devise, is said by Law to be in by Purchase; a worse title than Descent. But if one by Will create an estate in his Heir, different from what he

he would have taken by Law, there the Devise shall be good, the quality of the estate being altered, and it being indeed not the same estate as would have descended to him. Burn. Eccl. Law.

Those Devises are also void and rejected where the words of the Will are so general and uncertain that no meaning can be collected from them. And, therefore, where a man by Will gives "all to his Mother," these general words will not not pass lands to his Mother; for since the Heir at Law has a plain and uncontroverted title, it would be severe and unreasonable to set him aside, unless the intention of the Testator is evident from the Will; for that would be to set up and prefer a dark, and at best but a doubtful title, to a clear and certain one. Burn. Eccl. Law.

So, a Devise of real estate to the Heir of an Alien is void; because an Alien, according to the policy of the English Law, can have no Heir, either to inherit or to take by Purchase. See ante II. 1. and title Aliens.

If a man devises land to another for ever, or in Fee-simple, or to him and his Assigns for ever, or to him and his; in all these cases the Fee-simple passes by the Will: For it is evident, by the Testator's intention, that the Gift should continue beyond the life of the Devisee. So, if one devises lands to another, to give, sell, or do what he pleases with them, these words, by the intent of the giver, convey the Fee-simple; as does also a Devise to one and his Blood; because the Blood runs through every branch of a family. A Devise also to a man and his Successors, carries a Fee; for by the word Successors is intended Heirs, the Heir succeeding to the Father. Burn. Eccl. Law. See Cowp. 352.

A Devise of all his estate (or estates) whatsoever, or all his effects real and personal, comprehends all that a man has, land, money, goods, or other property whatever: Provided, in all cases, that the Will is duly executed, and attested by three Witnesses, so as to pass land. And where there is a Surrender to the use of his Will, a Copyhold Estate will fall under the same Construction. See Cowp. 299.

If lands are devised to Trustees for any particular purposes, without using the word Heirs, yet, by Implication of Law, the Trustees must have an Estate of Inheritance sufficient to support such Trust; for there is no difference between a Devise to a man for ever, and to a man upon Trusts which may last for ever. 1 Eq. Abr. 176.

Where one devises land to another, on condition that the Devisee shall pay several sums of money in gross, and not saying out of the profits of the land; or shall release a debt due from the Testator; the Devisee, in this case, shall have a Fee-simple in the land, though all the sums of money together, which he is to pay, do not amount to a year's rent of the land; for the Devise shall be intended for his benefit: And if he was to have the land for his life only, he might die before he could receive the amount of the Legacies out of the land, and consequently be a loser: And where there is a sum thus to be paid all at once and immediately, there the person to whom the land is devised shall have the whole of it, though the sum is not the value of the land, or near it; the quantity of the sum thus to be paid in gross, not being material. But if a Devise were to A., paying so much, or such sums of money, out of the profits of the lands, there A. would take but an estate for his life; for though he takes the land charged with payment of the money, yet he is to pay no faster than he receives, and so he can be no loser. 1 Eq. Ab. 166, 7.

It would be endless to multiply individual cases, as to the Construction of Wills, where the words have been held to give an Estate in Fee, in Tail, or for Life. A Devise of Land to A. B., without any further words, gives him only an Estate for Life.—The reason why the word Estate has been held to pass a Fee, is, that this word (and which has been extended to the plural, Estates,) comprehends not only the land or property that a man has, but also the Interest he has in it. The General Rule of Construction, that governs all uncertain cases, of which innumerable instances occur in the Books, seems to be, that "if there be no words of Limitation added, nor words of Perpetuity annexed to the Devise, so as to show the intention of the Testator, to convey the Inheritance to the Devisee, he can only take an Estate for Life." Cowp. 299.—But "wherever there are words and expressions, either general or particular, or clauses in a Will, which the Court can lay hold of, to enlarge the estate of a Devisee, they will do so, to effectuate the intention of the Testator: But if the intention of the Testator is doubtful, the Rule of Law must take place." Cowp. 352.

WITHERNAM, From the Sax. Wither, i. e. altera, or, as some say, contrà, & Nam, captio.] Where a Distress is driven out of the County, and the Sheriff upon a Replevin cannot make deliverance to the party distrained; in this case the Writ of Withernam is directed to the Sheriff, for the taking as many of his beasts or goods, who did thus unlawfully distrain, into his keeping, till the party make deliverance of the first Distress, &c. It is therefore a taking or Reprisal of other cattle or goods, in lieu of those that were formerly unjustly taken and essoined, or otherwise withholden. F. N. B. 68, 69: 2 Inst. 140: Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 2. See title Replevin I.; V.

This Writ is granted on the return of the Sheriff upon the Alias and Pluries in Replevin, that the Cattle, &c. are essoined, by reason whereof he cannot replevy them; and it appears by our books, that the Sheriff may award Withernam on Replevin sued by plaint, if it be found by inquest in the county, that the Cattle were essoined according to the Bailiff's return, &c. Though upon the Withernam awarded in the County Court, if the Bailiff doth return that the other party hath not any thing, there shall be an Alias and Pluries, and so infinite, and no other remedy there: But on a Withernam returned in the King's Bench, or Common Pleas, if the Sheriff return that the party hath not any thing, &c. a Capias shall issue against him, and Exigent and Outlawry. New Nat. Br. 166. In Replevin, &c. the Sheriff returns averia elongata sunt by the defendant; thereupon a Writ of Withernam is awarded; and if he return nihil, the plaintiff proceeds to Outlawry by Alias and Pluries Capias in Withernam, and so to Exigent: There is some difference where the defendant appeareth upon the return of the Pluries Capias, and when he stays longer, and appears on the return of the Exigent and not before; for in the first case his Cattle shall not be taken in Withernam: but he must find pledges to make deliverance, or be committed; and, in the last case, he shall not only find pledges for making deliverance, but shall be fined, and his Cattle may be taken in Withernam: In both cases, the plaintiff may declare for the unjust taking, and yet detaining of his Cattle, and so go to trial upon the right; and if it is found for him, then he shall recover the value of the Cattle, with costs and damages, or may have the Cattle again by a retorno habendo directed to the Sheriff; but if it be found for the defendant, he shall keep the Cattle, and have costs and damages for the unjust prosecution. 1 Brownl. 180.

A defendant in Replevin may have a Writ of Withernam against the plaintiff; as if the defendant hath a Return awarded for him, and he sueth a writ de retorno habendo, and the Sheriff return upon the Pluries, quod averia elongata sunt, he shall have a sci. fac. against the pledges which the plaintiff put in to prosecute, &c.; and if they have nothing, then he shall have a Capias ad Withernam.

Withernam against the plaintiff. The Cattle taken in Withernam are to be ad valentiam, i e. to the value of the Cattle that were first taken and detained; for it is to be understood not only of the number of the Cattle, but according to the worth and value; otherwise he that brings the Replevin and Withernam will be deprived of his satisfaction. Where Cattle have been taken in Withernam, they have been, by a Rule of Court, delivered back and restored to the owner, on his payment to the plaintiff of all his damages, costs, and expences. 3 Lill. Abr. 690. Cattle taken in Withernam may be milked, or worked reasonably; because they are delivered to the party as his own Cattle, &c. Contrà of Cattle distrained. 1 Leon 302.

WOOL, Being a Staple Commodity of the greatest value in this kingdom; the employment of our Poor at home, and our most beneficial trade abroad, depending in a great measure upon it; divers good Laws have from time to time been made to preserve the same entirely to ourselves, and to prevent its being transported to other nations. An old stat. of 27 Ed. 3, declared it Felony to transport Wool: But the Felony was repealed by stat. 38 Ed. 3. c. 6; and see stat. 11 Ed. 3. c. 1. The stat. 8 Eliz. c. 3, prohibited the transportation of Live Sheep on severe penalties. By stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 30, any person exporting any Wool, Yarn, Sheep, or Fullers' Earth, was to forfeit the same; and for every pound weight of goods, 3*s*. And the owners of the ship in which it was transported, being privy to the offence, were to forfeit all their interest of the said ship; also the master and mariners assisting, all their goods; and any persons might seize such Wool, and should be entitled to one moiety, and the King to the other moiety of forfeitures, &c. The stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 18, made the transportation of Wool Felony again; though this being thought too severe, stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 28, a second time repealed the Felony, and ordained that exporting Wool beyond Sea should incur a forfeiture of the vessel, and treble value; and persons aiding and assisting, to suffer three years' imprisonment.

By stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 40, the former laws were explained, and a further provision made against transporting Wool; by obliging entries to be made of Wool shorn; and Wool not to be carried near the Sea-coasts, but between sun-rising and sun-setting, &c.—Unlawful exporters of Wool, where judgment was obtained against against them, were to pay the sum recovered within three months; or be liable to transportation for seven years as Felons. Stat. 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11.—The Admiralty were directed to appoint three sixth-rate ships, and eight sloops, to cruise on the coasts, and search and seize vessels having Manufactures of Wool of the kingdom of Ireland, to be exported to foreign parts; which, with the ships, shall be forfeited, &c. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 21. All Woollen Manufactures are to be shipped from Dublin, and certain other ports in Ireland, and imported here into Biddeford, and ports named, and none others; and be brought from thence hither in ships built in Great Britain or Ireland, and duly registered on oath. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 21.

By stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 38, all the former statutes respecting the Exportation of Wool and Sheep are repealed: and an infinite variety of regulations and restrictions upon the subject is consolidated into that statute, which it behoves the dealers in and carriers of Wool to pay particular attention to. It is given almost at length in 4 Burn. J. title Woollen Manufacture; but as it contains nearly 100 long clauses, it is impossible to give any adequate representation of it in an abridgment. The principal prohibitions are, that if any person shall send or receive any Sheep on board a ship or vessel, to be carried out of the kingdom, the Sheep and Vessel are both forfeited, and the person so offending shall forfeit 3 l. for every Sheep, and suffer solitary imprisonment for three months. But Wether Sheep, by a licence from the Collector of the Customs, may be taken on board for the use of the ship's company. And every person who shall export out of the kingdom any Wool or Woollen Articles, slightly made up, so as easily to be reduced to Wool again; or any Fullers' Earth, or Tobacco-pipe Clay; and every currier, ship-owner, commander, mariner, or other person, who shall knowingly assist in exporting, or in attempting to export, these articles, shall forfeit 3 s for every pound weight, or the sum of 50 l. in the whole, at the election of the prosecutor, and shall also suffer solitary imprisonment for three months. But Wool may be carried Coastwise upon being duly entered, and security being given, according to the directions of the statute, to the officer of the port from whence the same shall be conveyed. And the Owners of Sheep, which are shorn within five miles of the Sea, and ten miles in Kent and Sussex, cannot remove the Wool, without giving notice to the officer of the nearest port, as directed by the statute. WORDS, Which may be taken or interpreted by Law in a general or common sense, ought not to receive a strained or unusual construction: Ambiguous Words are to be construed so as to make them stand with Law and Equity; and not to be wrested to do wrong. A Latin Word in pleading, which signified divers things, was well used to express that thing intended to be expressed by it: Uncertain Words in a Declaration, are made good and certain by a Plea in Bar, where notice is taken of the meaning of them; and Words which are in themselves uncertain, may be made certain by subsequent or following Words. The different placing of the same Words may cause them to have a different sense and construction: A Word which is written short, or abbreviated, is not good without a dash to distinguish it: Senseless Words are void and idle; though they shall not hurt where the sense is good without them. Nor shall Words in Deeds that are needless, impeach a clause certain and perfect without such Words. 2 Lill. Abr. 711, 712, 713, 714: Hob. 313.

The following general rules and maxims are stated by Blackstone, as having been laid down by the Courts of Justice, for the construction and exposition of the several species of Common Assurances or Conveyances, whereby a title to lands and tenements may be transferred and conveyed from one man to another. 2 Comm. c. 23.

1. That the construction be favourable, and as near the minds and apparent intents of the parties, as the rules of Law will admit. For the maxims of Law are, that verba intentioni debent inservire; and benigne interpretamur chartas propter simplicitatem laicorum. And therefore the construction must also be reasonable, and agreeable to common understanding. And. 60: 1 Bulst. 175: Hob. 304.

2. That quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est: but that, where the intention is clear, too minute a stress be not laid on the the strict and precise signification of Words; nam qui hæret in litera, hæret in cortice 2 Saund. 157. Therefore, by a grant of a remainder a reversion may well pass, and è converso. Hob 27. And another maxim of Law is, that mala grammatica non vitiat chartam; neither false English nor bad Latin will destroy a Deed. Which perhaps (says Blackstone) a classical critic may think to be no unnecessary caution. See 10 Rep 133: 1 Inst. 225: 2 Show 334.

3. That the construction be made upon the entire deed, and not merely upon disjointed parts of it. Nam ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio 1 Bulst. 101. And therefore that every part of it be (if possible) made to take effect; and no Word but what may operate in some shape or other. 1 P Wms. 457 Nam verba debent intelligi cum effectu, ut res magis valeat quem pereat. Plowd. 156.

4. That the Deed be taken most strongly against him that is the Agent or Contractor, and in favour of the other party; Verba fortiùs accipiuntur contra proferentem As, if Tenant in Fee simple grants to any one an estate for life; generally, it shall be construed an estate for the life of the Grantee. 1 Inst 42. For the principle of self-preservation will make men sufficiently careful, not to prejudice their own interest by the too extensive meaning of their Words; and hereby all manner of deceit in any grant is avoided; for men would always affect ambiguous and intricate expressions, provided they were afterwards at liberty to put their own construction upon them. But here a distinction must be taken between an Indenture and a Deed-poll: for the Words of an Indenture, executed by both parties, are to be considered as the Words of them both; for, though delivered as the Words of one party, yet they are not his Words only, because the other party hath given his consent to every one of them. But in a Deed-poll, executed only by the Grantor, they are the Words of the Grantor only, and shall be taken most strongly against him. 1 Inst. 134. And, in general, this rule, being a rule of some strictness and rigour, is the last to be resorted to; and is never to be relied upon, but where all other rules of exposition fail. Bac. Elem. c. 3.

5. That, if the Words will bear two senses, one agreeable to, and another against, Law; that sense be preferred, which is most agreeable thereto. As if Tenant in Tail lets a lease to have and to hold during life generally, it shall be construed to be a lease for his own life only, for that stands with the Law; and not for the life of the Lessee, which is beyond his power to grant, 1 Inst. 42.

6. That in a Deed, if there be two clauses so totally repugnant to each other, that they cannot stand together, the first shall be received, and the latter rejected; contrary to the general rule as to the exposition of Wills: yet in both cases we should rather attempt to reconcile them. Hardr. 94: Cro Eliz. 420: 1 Vern. 30.

WRECK, Lat. Wreccum Maris, Fr Wreck de Mer, sometimes writ Wreche Wrec, & Seup werpe. quasi Seaup-werp, i e Ejectus Maris.] Such goods as, after a Ship-wreck, are cast upon the land by the Sea, and left there, within some county: for they are not Wrecks so long as they remain at Sea, in the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. 2 Inst. 167. Where a Ship perisheth on the Sea, and no man escapes alive out of it, this is called Wreck. And the goods in the Ship being brought to land by the waves, belong to the King by his prerogative, or to the Lord of the manor. 5 Rep. 106. By the Common Law all Wrecks belonged to the Crown; and therefore they are not chargeable with any customs, and for that goods coming into the kingdom by Wreck, are not imported by any body, but cast ashore by the wind and Sea. But it was usual to seize Wrecks to the King's use, only when no Owner could be found; and in that case the property being in no man, it of consequence belongs to the King, as Lord of the Narrow Seas, &c. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5.

The profits arising from Shipwrecks are classed, by Blackstone, among the articles of the King's ancient ordinary revenue. These are declared to be the King's property by the prerogative statute, 17 Ed. 2. st. 1. c. 11, and were so, long before, at the Common Law.

It is worthy observation, how greatly the Law of Wrecks has been altered, and the rigour of it gradually softened in favour of the distressed proprietors. Wreck, by the ancient Common Law, was where any Ship was lost at Sea, and the goods or cargo were thrown upon the land; in which case these goods, so wrecked, were adjudged to belong to the King: for it was held, that, by the loss of the Ship, all property was gone out of the original Owner. Doct & Stud. D. 2. c. 51. But this was undoubtedly adding sorrow to sorrow, and was consonant neither to reason nor humanity. Wherefore it was first ordained by King Henry I., that if any person escaped alive out of the Ship, it should be no Wreck; and afterwards King Henry II., by his charter, declared, that if on the coasts of either England, Poictou, Oleron, or Gascony, any Ship should be distressed, and either man or beast should escape or be found therein alive, the goods should remain to the Owners, if they claimed them within three months; but otherwise should be esteemed a Wreck, and should belong to the King, or other Lord of the franchise. This was again confirmed with improvements by King Richard I.; who, in the second year of his reign, not only established these concessions, by ordaining that the Owner, if he was shipwrecked and escaped, omnes res suas liberas et quietas haberet, but also, that, if he perished, his children, or, in default of them, his his brethren and sisters, should retain the property; and, in default of brother or sister, then the goods should remain to the King. And the Law, as laid down by Bratton in the reign of Henry III., seems still to have improved in its equity. For then, if not only a dog (for instance) escaped, by which the owner might be discovered, but if any certain mark were set on the goods, by which they might be known again, it was held to be no Wreck. Bract. l. 3. c. 3. And this is certainly most agreeable to reason; the rational claim of the King being only founded upon this, that the true owner cannot be ascertained. Afterwards, in the stat. Westm. 1; 3 Ed. 1. c. 4, the time of limitation of claims, given by the charter of Henry II., is extended to a year and a day, according to the usage of Normandy: and it enacts, that if a man, a dog, or a cat, escape alive, the vessel shall not be adjudged a Wreck. These animals are only put for examples; for it is now held, that not only if any live thing escape, but if proof can be made of the property of any of the goods or lading which come to shore, they shall not be forfeited as Wreck. The statute further ordains, that the Sheriff of the county shall be bound to keep the goods a year and a day, that if any man can prove a property in them, either in his own right or by right of representation, they shall be restored to him without delay; but, if no such property be proved within that time, they then shall be the King's. 2 Inst. 168. If the goods are of a perishable nature, the Sheriff may sell them, and the money shall be liable in their stead. Plowd. 166. This revenue of Wrecks is frequently granted out to Lords of manors, as a royal franchise; but if any one be thus entitled to Wrecks in his own land, and the King's goods are wrecked thereon, the King may claim them at any time, even after the year and day. 2 Inst. 168.

In order to constitute a legal Wreck, the goods must come to land. If they continue at Sea, the Law distinguishes them by the barbarous and uncouth appellations of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. Jetsam is, where goods are cast into the Sea, and there sink and remain under water: Flotsam is, where they continue floating or swimming on the surface of the waves: Ligan, or Lagan, is, where they are sunk in the Sea, but tied to a cork or buoy, in order to be found again. 5 Rep. 106. These are also the King's, if no owner appears to claim them; but, if any Owner appears, he is entitled to recover the possession. For even if they be cast overboard, without any mark or buoy, in order to lighten the Ship, the Owner is not by this act of necessity construed to have renounced his property: much less can things ligan be supposed to be abandoned, since the Owner has done all in his power to assert and retain his property. These three are therefore accounted so far a distinct thing from the former, that by the King's grant to a man of Wrecks, things jetsam, flotsam, and ligan will not pass. 5 Rep. 108. See title Jetsam, &c.

Wrecks, in their legal acceptation, are at present not very frequent: for, if any goods come to land, it rarely happens, since the improvement of Commerce, Navigation, and Correspondence, that the Owner is not able to assert his property within the year and day limited by Law. And in order to preserve this property entire for him, and if possible to prevent Wrecks at all, our Laws have made many very humane regulations. By stat. 27 Edw. 3. c. 13, if any Ship be lost on the shore, and the goods come to land, (which cannot, says the Statute, be called Wreck,) they shall be presently delivered to the merchants, paying only a reasonable reward to those that saved and preserved them, which is called Salvage. See title Insurance II. 6.—Also, by the Common Law, if any persons (other than the Sheriff) take any goods so cast on shore, which are not legal Wreck, the Owners might have a commission to inquire and find them out, and compel them to make restitution. F. N. B. 112. And by stat. 12 Ann st. 2. c. 18, confirmed by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 12, in order to assist the distressed, and prevent the scandalous illegal practices on some of our Sea-coasts, it is enacted, that all head officers and others of towns near the Sea shall, upon application made to them, summon as many hands as are necessary, and send them to the relief of any Ship in distress, on forfeiture of 100*l.*; and in case of assistance given, Salvage shall be paid by the Owners, to be assessed by three neighbouring Justices. All persons that secrete any goods shall forfeit their treble value: and if they wilfully do any act whereby the Ship is lost or destroyed, by making holes in her, stealing her pumps, or otherwise, they are guilty of Felony, without benefit of clergy. Lastly, by stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 19, plundering any Vessel either in distress, or wrecked, and whether any living creature be on board, or not, (for, whether Wreck or otherwise, it is clearly not the property of the populace,) or preventing the escape of any person that endeavours to save his life, or wounding him with intent to destroy him, or putting out false lights in order to bring any Vessel into danger; are all declared to be capital Felonies; in like manner as the destroying of trees, steeples, or other stated sea-marks, is punished by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 13, with a forfeiture of 100*l.* or Outlawry. Moreover, by the said statute of 26 Geo. 2, pilfering any goods cast ashore is declared to be Petty Larceny; and many other salutary regulations are made, for the more effectually preserving Ships, of any nation, in distress. 1 Comm. c. 8.

The year and day, in the stat. Westm. 1, shall be accounted from the seizure; and if the Owner of the goods die within the year, his executors or administrators may make proof. 2 Inst. 167; 5 Rep. 106. If a man have a grant of Wreck, and goods are wrecked upon his lands, and another taketh them away before seizure, he may bring Action of Trespass, &c. For, before they are seized, there is no property gained to make it Felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 24.

If goods wrecked are seized by persons having no authority, the Owner may have his action against them; or if the wrong-doers are unknown, he may have a commission to inquire, &c. 2 Inst. 166. Goods lost by Tempest, or Piracy, &c. and not by Wreck, if they afterwards come to land, shall be restored to the Owner. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 13. Where a Ship is ready to sink, and all the men therein, for the preservation of their lives, quit the Ship, and afterwards she perishes; if any of the men are saved and come to land, the goods are not lost. A Ship on the Sea was chased by an enemy; the men therein, for the security of their lives, forsook the Ship, which was taken by the enemy, and spoiled of her goods and tackle, and then turned to sea; after this by stress of weather she was cast on land, where it happened her men safely arrived; and it was resolved, that this was no Wreck. 2 Inst. 167. See further, titles Navy; Pilots, &c.

WRIT.

Breve, from Sax. Writan, i. e. Scribere.] In general is the King's Precept, in writing under seal, issuing out of some Court, to the Sheriff, or other person, and commanding something to be done touching a suit or action, or giving commission to have it done. Terms de Ley: 1 Inst. 73. Also a Writ is said to be a formal letter of the King's, in parchment sealed with a seal, directed to some Judge, Officer, or Minister, &c. at the suit or plaint of a Subject, requiring to have a thing done, for the cause briefly expressed, which is to be discussed in the proper Court, according to Law. Old Nat. Br. 4: Shep. Abr. 245. Of Writs there are divers kinds, in many respects; some Writs are grounded on Rights of Action, and some in nature of Commissions; some mandatory and extrajudicial, and others remedial; some are patent or open; some close or sealed up; some Writs issue at the suit of parties; some are of office; some ordinary; and others of privilege; some Writs are directed to the Sheriffs, and in special cases to the party, &c. 1 Inst. 289: 2 Inst. 39: 7 Rep. 20.

The Writs in Civil Actions are either original or judicial: Original Writs are issued out in the Court of Chancery, for the summoning a defendant to appear, and are granted before the suit is begun, to begin the same; and Judicial Writs issue out of the Court where the Original is returned, after the suit is begun: The Originals bear date in the name of the King; but Judicial Writs bear teste in the name of the Chief Justice. See titles Original; Process; Latitat; Capias, &c.—A Writ without a teste is not good, for the time may be material when it was taken out, and it is proved by the teste; and if it be out of the Common Law Courts, it must bear date some day in Term (not being Sunday); but in Chancery, Writs may be issued in Vacation as well as Term-time, as that Court is always open. F. N. B. 51, 147: 2 Inst. 40: Lutw. 337: See Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2.

Writs in Actions are likewise real; concerning the possession of lands, called Writs of Entry, or of Right, touching the property, &c.; personal, relating to goods, chattels, and personal injuries; and mixed, for the recovery of the thing, and damages. 2 Inst. 39. Writs may be possessory, of a man's own possession; or ancestrel, of the seisin and possession of his Ancestor: There are also certain Writs of Prevention or Anticipation; and of Restitution, &c. But the most common Writs in daily use, are in Debt, Detinue, Trespass, Action upon the Case, Accompt, and Covenant, &c. which with others must be rightly directed, or they will be naught. F. N. B.: Style 42, 237. In all Writs care is to be taken, that they be laid and formed according to the cause or ground of them, and so pursued in the process thereof: Though the Writ in some cases may be general; and the Count or Declaration special. Hob. 18, 84, 251.

Writ of Assistance, A Writ issuing out of the Exchequer to authorise any person to take a Constable, or other public officer, to seize goods or merchandize prohibited and uncustomed, &c. There is also a Writ of this name issued out of the Chancery, to give possession of land. Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 1.

Writ of Delivery, In what cases grantable, Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 30.

Writ of Entry; See title Entry.

Writ of Inquiry of Damages, A judicial Writ, that issues out to the Sheriff upon a Judgment by Default, in Action, of the Case, Covenant, Trespass, Trover, &c. commanding him to summon a Jury to inquire what Damages the plaintiff hath sustained occasione præmissorum. See title Judgment I.: Tidd 314.

The Writ of Inquiry should be returnable on a general return, or day certain, according to the nature of the proceedings: if by Original, on a general return; if by Bill, on a day certain. But where, in an Action by Bill against an Attorney, the Writ of Inquiry was returnable on a general return, it was holden not to be error: but only a miscontinuance, and cured by the Statutes of Jeofails. 2 Stra. 947: Say. Rep. 245.

A Writ of Inquiry of Damages is a mere Inquest of Office, to inform the conscience of the Court; who, if they please, may themselves assess the Damages. And it is accordingly the practice, in Actions upon Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange, instead of executing a Writ of Inquiry, to apply to the Court for a rule to shew cause, why it should not be referred to the Master to see what is due for principal and interest, and why final judgment should not be signed for that sum, without executing a Writ of Inquiry; which rule is made absolute, on an affidavit of service, unless good cause be shewn to the contrary. Tidd's Pract. K. B.—This practice, however, is confined to Actions upon Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange, where the quantum of Damages depends on figures, which may be as well ascertained by the Master as before a Jury; and therefore where the defendant had suffered judgment by default, in an Action of Assumpsit, on a foreign Judgment, the Court refused to make the rule absolute, for a reference to the Master; saying, this was an attempt to carry the rule further than had yet been done, and as there was no instance of the kind, they would not make a precedent for it. 4 Term Rep. 493. The Court has also refused to make the rule absolute, in an Action upon a Bill of Exchange, for foreign money; the value of which is uncertain, and can only be ascertained by a Jury. 5 Term Rep. 87. See Cro. Eliz. 536: Cro. Jac. 617.

Where the Jury, upon the trial of an Issue, omit to assess the Damages, the omission may, in some cases, be supplied by a Writ of Inquiry. As to which it seems, that where the matter, omitted to be inquired by the principal Jury, is such as goes to the very point of the Issue, and upon which, if it be found by the Jury, an Attaint will lie against them, by the party, if they have given a false verdict; there, such matter cannot be supplied by a Writ of Inquiry, because thereby the plaintiff may lose his Action of Attaint, which will not lie upon an Inquest of Office. Tidd's Pract.

Thus where, in Detinue, the Jury omitted to assess the value of the goods, the Court refused to supply the omission by a Writ of Inquiry. And so where the Jury, who try the issue in Replevin, (see that title,) omit to inquire of the rent in arrear, and value of the cattle, pursuant pursuant to the statute 17 C. 2. c. 7, no Writ of Inquiry can be afterwards awarded, to supply the omission; for, by the words of the statute, these matters are to be inquired of, by the same Jury who try the issue. Tidd's Pract. and the authorities there cited.

But where the matter, omitted to be inquired by the principal Jury, doth not go to the point in issue, or necessary consequence thereof, but is merely collateral, as the four usual Inquiries on a quare impedit; there, such matter may be supplied by a Writ of Inquiry, without any damage to the party; because, if the same had been inquired of by the principal Jury, it would have been, as to those particulars, no more than an Inquest of Office, upon which an Attaint will not lie. Carth. 362.

Thus, where the parties being at issue in assumpsit, a demurrer was joined upon the evidence, and the Jury discharged, without assessing the Damages; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, and a Writ of Inquiry of Damages awarded; the Court held, that though the same Jury might have assessed the Damages conditionally, yet it may be as well done by a Writ of Inquiry of Damages, when the demurrer is determined; and the most usual course is, when there is a demurrer upon evidence, to discharge the Jury, without further Inquiry. Cro. Car. 143.

So, in Trespass or Replevin, against Overseers of the Poor, acting virtute officii, if the plaintiff be nonsuit, or have a verdict against him, and the Jury are discharged, without inquiring of the Treble Damages, pursuant to the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 19, the defect may be supplied by a Writ of Inquiry; because such Inquiry is no more than an Inquest of Office. In such case, as a ground for awarding a Writ of Inquiry, it is necessary to enter a suggestion upon the roll, that the defendants were Overseers of the Poor; and that the action was brought against them, for something done by virtue of their office. Tidd's Pract.

The Writ of Inquiry may be executed, on due notice, before the Sheriff or his Deputy; or, by leave of the Court, under special circumstances, before the Chief Justice, or a Judge of Assize, as an Assistant to the Sheriff. And where the Writ of Inquiry is executed before the Chief Justice, or a Judge of Assize, it is usual to move the Court, for the Sheriff to return a good Jury. But unless some matter of Law is likely to arise in the course of the Inquiry, the Court will not give leave to have it executed before a Judge, merely on account of the importance of the facts. Tidd's Pract.

The Notice of Inquiry should be in Writing; and if the defendant have appeared, and his Attorney be known, it should be delivered to such Attorney: But if the defendant have not appeared, or his Attorney be unknown, the Notice should be delivered to the defendant himself, or left at his last place of abode. If the Venue be laid in London or Middlesex, and the defendant live within forty computed miles from London, there must be eight days' Notice of Inquiry, exclusive of the day it is given; which Notice is also sufficient in Country Causes: for the stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 4, which requires ten days' Notice of Trial at the Assizes, does not extend to Notices of Inquiry. But where the Venue is laid in London or Middlesex, and the defendant lives above forty computed miles from London, there must be fourteen days' Notice of Inquiry. And Sunday is to be accounted a day in these Notices, unless it be the day on which the Notice is given. Short Notice of Inquiry is the same as short Notice of Trial: and where a Term's Notice of Trial is required, there must, at the same distance of time, be the like Notice of Inquiry. Tidd's Pract. See title Trial.

Where the Inquiry is to be executed before the Chief Justice, or a Judge of Assize, the Notice should be given for the Sittings, or Assizes, generally: but otherwise the Notice should express the particular time and place of executing it. A Writ of Inquiry may be executed, in point of time, on the day it is returnable, but not on a Sunday; and where the Notice was to execute it by ten o'clock, the Court set it aside for uncertainty. The usual way is to give notice that the Inquiry will be executed, between two certain hours; as between ten and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, or between four and six in the afternoon, of a particular day, on or before the return of the Writ. On a Notice of Inquiry so given, the party is not tied down to the precise time fixed by the Notice; for the Sheriff may have prior business, which may last beyond it. Tidd's Pract.

With regard to the place of executing an Inquiry, it must be executed within the county where the action is laid, and the Notice should be given accordingly. Notice of Inquiry may be continued or countermanded, in like manner as Notice of Trial. Tidd's Pract.

In London or Middlesex, the Writ must be left at the Sheriff's Office the day before the time appointed for its execution. And if either party propose to attend by Counsel, he should give Notice thereof to his adversary, or he will not be allowed for it in costs. The execution of the Writ may be adjourned by the Sheriff, after it is entered upon. And if the plaintiff do not proceed to execute the Inquiry according to Notice, or countermand in time, the defendant, on an affidavit of attendance and necessary expences, shall have his costs, to be taxed by the Master. Tidd's Pract.

Letting judgment go by default is an admission of the cause of action: and therefore, where the action is founded on a Contract, the defendant cannot give in evidence on a Writ of Inquiry, that it was fraudulent. So, in an Action on a Promissory Note or Bill of Exchange, the Note or Bill need not be proved, though it must be produced before the Jury, in order to see whether any money appears to have been paid upon it. And where an Action was brought on a Policy of Assurance, on a foreign ship, wherein there was a stipulation, that the policy should be deemed sufficient proof of interest; the plaintiff, on the Writ of Inquiry, was only bound to prove the defendant's subscription to the policy without giving any evidence of interest. Tidd's Pract.

On the return of the Inquiry, the plaintiff should give a rule for judgment, with the Clerk of the Rules, which expires in four days. And, in the mean time, the defendant may move to set aside the Inquisition, for want of due Notice; or on account of an objection to the Jury, or mode of returning them, as that some of the Jury were debtors, taken out of prison for the purpose of attending, or that they were returned by the plaintiff's Attorney; or for excessive Damages. The plaintiff, in like manner, may move to set aside the Inquisition, when it is obvious the Damages are too small; except in vindictive, hard, or trifling actions. On the expiration of the rule for judgment, the Sheriff, being called upon for his Return, will deliver it, with the Inquisition, to the plaintiff's Attorney; who gets the Inquisition stamped, and taxes his costs thereon with the Master. Tidd's Pract.

The want of a Writ of Inquiry is aided by the Statute of Jeofails. And where a Writ of Inquiry had been many years executed, and costs taxed upon it, but no final judgment entered up; there being occasion to prove the debt in Chancery, and the Writ of Inquiry being lost, a rule was made for a new Writ of Inquiry and Inquisition, according to the Sheriff's notes, and that the Master should indorse the costs, which by the commitment-book appeared to have been taxed. Tidd's Pract. and the authorities there cited.

WRIT OF REBELLION, A Writ out of Chancery, or Exchequer, against a person in contempt, for not appearing in those Courts, &c. See title Commission of Rebellion.

WRIT OF RIGHT,

BREVE DE RECTO.] The great and final Remedy for him that is injured by Ouster, or Privation of his Freehold. See Recto; Right.

By the several possessory remedies given by our Law, (see titles Entry, Assize,) the Right of Possession may be restored to him that is unjustly deprived thereof. But the Right of Possession (though it carries with it a strong presumption) is not always conclusive evidence of the Right of Property, which may still subsist in another man: For as one man may have the Possession, and another the Right of Possession, which is recovered by Possessory Actions; so one man may have the Right of Possession, and thus not be liable to eviction by any Possessory Action, and another may have the Right of Property, which cannot be otherwise asserted than by the great and final Remedy of a Writ of Right, or such correspondent Writs as are in the nature of a Writ of Right. 3 Comm. c. 10. See Title.

This happens principally in four cases: 1. Upon Discontinuance by the Alienation of Tenant in Tail: whereby he, who had the Right of Possession, hath transferred it to the Alienee; and therefore his issue, or those in remainder or reversion, shall not be allowed to recover by virtue of that Possession, which the Tenant hath so voluntarily transferred. 2, 3. In case of judgment given against either party, whether by his own default, or upon trial of the merits, in any Possessory Action: for such judgment, if obtained by him who hath not the true ownership, is held to be a species of Deforcement; which however binds the Right of Possession, and suffers it not to be ever again disputed, unless the Right of Property be also proved. 4. In case the Demandant, who claims the Right, is barred from these Possessory Actions by length of time and the Statute of Limitations. See title Limitation of Actions. In these four cases the Law applies the remedial instrument of either the Writ of Right itself, or such other Writs as are said to be of the same nature.

1. And first, upon an Alienation by Tenant in Tail, whereby the estate-tail is discontinued, and the remainder or reversion is, by failure of the particular estate, displaced, and turned into a mere Right, the remedy is by Action of Formedon, (secundum formam doni,) which is in the nature of a Writ of Right, and is the highest action that Tenant in Tail can have. See this Dictionary, title Formedon.

2. In the second case; if the Owners of a particular estate, as for Life, in Dower, by the Curtesy, or in Fee-tail, are barred of the Right of Possession by a Recovery had against them, through their default or non-appearance in a Possessory Action, they were absolutely without any remedy at the Common Law, as a Writ of Right does not lie for any but such as claim to be Tenants of the Fee-simple. Therefore the stat. Westm. 2; 13 Edw. 1. c. 4, gives a new Writ for such persons, after their lands have been so recovered against them by default, called a Quod ei deforceat; which, though not strictly a Writ of Right, so far partakes of the nature of one, as that it will restore the Right to him who has been thus unwarily deforced by his own default. F. N. B. 155.—But in case the Recovery were not had by his own default, but upon defence in the inferior Possessory Action, this still remains final with regard to these particular estates, as at the Common Law: And hence it is, that a Common Recovery (on a Writ of Entry in the post) had, not by default of the Tenant himself, but (after his defence made and voucher of a third person to warranty) by default of such Vouchee, is now the usual bar to cut off an estate-tail. See this Dictionary, title Recovery.

3, 4. Thirdly, in case the Right of Possession be barred by a Recovery upon the merits in a Possessory Action, or lastly, by the Statute of Limitations, a claimant in fee-simple may have a mere Writ of Rights; which is in its nature the highest Writ in the Law, and lieth only of an estate in Fee-simple, and not for him who hath a less estate. F. N. B. 1. This Writ lies concurrently with all other real actions, in which an estate of fee-simple may be recovered; and it also lies after them, being as it were an appeal to the mere Right, when judgment hath been had as to the Possession in an inferior Possessory Action. F. N. B. 155. But though a Writ of Right may be brought, where the Demandant is entitled to the Possession, yet it rarely is advisable to be brought in such cases; as a more expeditious and easy remedy is had, without meddling with the property, by proving the Demandant's own, or his Ancestor's, Possession, and their illegal Ouster, in one of the Possessory Actions. But, in case the Right of Possession be lost by length of time, or by judgment against the true Owner in one of these inferior suits, there is no other choice; this is then the only remedy that can be had; and it is of so forcible a nature, that it overcomes all obstacles, and clears all objections that may have arisen to cloud and obscure the title. And, after issue once joined in a Writ of Right, the judgment is absolutely final; so that a Recovery had in this action may be pleaded in bar of any other claim or demand. F. N. B. 6: 1 Inst. 158.

The pure, proper, or mere Writ of Right lies only, we have seen, to recover Lands in Fee-simple, unjustly withheld from the true Proprietor. But there are also some other Writs which are said to be in the nature of a Writ of Right, because their process and proceedings do mostly (though not entirely) agree with the Writ of Right; but in some of them the Fee-simple is not demanded; and in others not Land, but some Incorporeal Hereditament. Nor is the mere Writ of Right alone, or always, applicable to every case of a claim of Lands in Fee-simple: for if the Lord's Tenant in Fee-simple dies without heir, whereby an Escheat accrues, the Lord shall have a Writ of Escheat, which is in the nature of a Writ a Writ of Right. Booth 135: F. N. B. 9. And if one of two or more Coparceners deforces the other, by usurping the sole Possession, the party aggrieved shall have a Writ of Right, de rationabili parte: which may be grounded on the Seisin of the Ancestor at any time during his life; whereas, in a nuper obiit, (which is a possessory remedy,) he must be seised at the time of his death. F. N. B. 9.

The General Writ of Right ought to be first brought in the Court-Baron of the Lord of whom the lands are holden; and then it is open, or patent: But if he holds no Court, or hath waived his Right, remisit Curiam suam, it may be brought in the King's Courts by Writ of Præcipe originally; and then it is a Writ of Right Close, being directed to the Sheriff, and not to the Lord. F. N. B. 2: Finch. L. 313: Booth 91: Also, when one of the King's immediate Tenants in capite is deforced, his Writ of Right is called a Writ of Præcipe in capite; (the improper use of which, as well as of the former Præcipe quia Dominus remisit Curiam, so as to oust the Lord of his jurisdiction, is restrained by Magna Carta, c. 24;) and, being directed to the Sheriff and originally returnable in the King's Court, is also a Writ of Right Close. F. N. B. 5. There is likewise a little Writ of Right Close, secundum consuetudinem manerii, which lies for the King's Tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the Right of their lands and tenements in the Court of the Lord exclusively. But the Writ of Right Patent itself may also at any time be removed into the County-Court by Writ of Tolt, and from thence into the King's Courts by Writ of Pone or Recordari facias, at the suggestion of either party that there is a delay or defect of justice. 3 Comm. c. 10.

In the progress of this action, the Demandant must allege some seisin of the lands and tenements in himself, or else in some person under whom he claims, and then derive the Right from the person so seised to himself; to which the Tenant may answer by denying the Demandant's Right, and averring that he has more Right to hold the lands than the Demandant has to demand them: and, this Right of the Tenant being shewn, it then puts the Demandant upon the proof of his title: in which, if he fails, or if the Tenant hath shewn a better, the Demandant and his Heirs are perpetually barred of their claim; but if he can make it appear that his Right is superior to the Tenant's, he shall recover the land against the Tenant and his Heirs for ever. But even this Writ of Right, however superior to any other, cannot be sued out at any distance of time. For by the ancient Law no Seisin could be alleged by the Demandant, but from the time of Hen. I.—By the statute of Merton, 20 Hen. 3. c 8, from the time of Hen. II.; by the statute of Westm. 1, 3 Edw. 1. c. 39, from the time of Rich. I.; and now, by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, Seisin in a Writ of Right shall be within 60 years. So that the Possession of Lands in Fee-simple uninterruptedly, for threescore years, is at present a sufficient Title against all the world; and cannot be impeached by any dormant claim whatsoever. 3 Comm. c. 10. YEAR, Annus.] The time wherein the Sun goes round his compass through the twelve Signs, viz. three hundred and sixty-five days, and about six hours. A Year is twelve months, as divided by Julius Cæsar: The Church has always begun the Year on the first day of January, called New-year's-day; but the civil account formerly, not till March the 25th. It appears by ancient grants and charters, that our Ancestors began the Year at Christmas, which was observed here till the time of William I. commonly called the Conqueror; but afterwards, for some time the Year of our Lord was seldom mentioned in Grants, only the Year of the Reign of the King. Mon. Ang. i. 62.

There being a difference in the computation of time in these Kingdoms, and on some parts of the Continent, of eleven days; and frequent uncertainties having arisen from the different times of commencing the Year abovementioned, (which introduced the mode of dating 174$\frac{8}{9}$, for days between the first of January and twenty-fifth of March,) all these inconveniences were remedied by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 23; which enacts, That the first day of January next following the last day of December 1751, shall be the first day of the Year 1752. And that the first day of January next after the first day of January 1752, shall be the first day of the Year 1753. And so on, the first day of January in every Year, shall be the first day of the Year. And that after the first day of January 1752, the several days of each month shall go on in the same order; and the Feast of Easter, and other Moveable Feasts thereon depending, shall be ascertained according to the same method they then were, until the second day of September 1752; and that the natural day next following the said second day of September, shall be reckoned the fourteenth day of September, omitting, for that time only, the eleven intermediate days. And that the several natural days which shall succeed the said fourteenth day of September, shall be reckoned in numerical order according to the order and succession of days now used in the present Calendar. All writings, &c. after the first of January 1752, to be dated according to the New Style. After 2 September 1752, Hilary and Michaelmas Terms, and all Courts to be held on the same nominal days and times they then were. The several Years 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200, 2300, and any other hundredth Year, (except every four hundredth Year, of which the Year 2000 shall be the first,) shall not be deemed Bissextile or Leap Year, but common Years to consist only of 365 days. The Years 2000, 2400, 2800, and every other four hundredth Year, from the Year 2000 inclusive, and all other Years, which are now esteemed Bissextile or Leap Years, shall for the future be esteemed Bissextile or Leap Years, consisting of 366 days.

A Calendar, and certain Tables and Rules for the fixing the true time of the celebration of the Feast of Easter, and the finding of the times of the Full Moons on which the same depends, are annexed to this Act, which are to be prefixed to all future editions of the Common Prayer Book. Courts of Session and Exchequer in Scotland, and Markets, Fairs, and Marts to be held upon the same natural days they should have been holden on, if this Act had not been made. The natural days and times for the opening and inclosing of Commons of Pasture, not altered by this Act. The natural days and times of payment of Rents, Annuities, Sums of Money or Interest, or of the Delivery of Goods, Commencement or Expiration of Leases, &c. or of attaining the age of twenty-one years, &c. not altered by this act. See 25 Geo. 2. c. 30: 26 Geo. 2. cc. 9, 34.

The mode of computation, introduced into England by the above Act, is called the New Style, to distinguish it from the former, called the Old Style, which still continues to prevail in many places; and the New Style had been used by other Nations, long previous to its adoption by the English.

The OLD STYLE now prevails in Muscovy, Denmark, Holstein, Hamburg, Utrecht, Gueldres, East Friesland, Geneva, and in all the Protestant Principalities in Germany, and the Cantons of Switzerland.

NEW STYLE, is used in all the Dominions subject to Great Britain; in America, in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Leiden, Haerlem, Middleburg, Ghent, Brussels, Brabant, and in all the Netherlands, except the places before-mentioned: —Also in France, (before the last introduction of the unintelligible Revolutionary Style,) Spain, Portugal, Italy, Hungary, Poland, and in all the Popish Principalities of Germany and Cantons of Switzerland.

YEAR AND DAY. Annus & Dies.] A time that determines a Right, or works a Prescription in many cases by Law; as in case of an Estray, if the Owner challenge it not within that time, it belongs to the Lord; so of a Wreck, &c. See title Estray. A Year and a Day is given to prosecute Appeals, and for Actions in a Writ of Right, &c. after entry or claim, to avoid a fine. A person wounded must die within a Year and Day, in order to make the offender guilty of Murder, &c. 3 Inst. 53: 6 Rep. 107. See titles Appeal of Death; Claim; Entry; Fine; Homicide; Wreck; and other titles.

YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE, Annus, Dies, & Vastum.] A part of the King's Prerogative, whereby he hath the profits of lands and tenements for a Year and a Day of those that are attainted of Petit Treason or Felony, whosoever is Lord of the Manor whereto the lands or tenements do belong; and [or] the King may cause Waste to be made on the tenements, by destroying the houses, ploughing up the meadows and pastures, rooting up the woods, &c. except the Lord of the Fee agree with him for the redemption of such Waste; afterwards restoring it to the Lord of the Fee. Staundf. Prarog. 44. See further titles Attainder; Escheat; Forfeiture II. 1.; Tenures.

"We will not hold the lands of them that be convict of Felony but one Year and one Day, and then those lands shall be delivered to the Lords of the Fee." Mag. Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c 22.

This appears by Glanvill to be due to the King by his ancient Prerogative, 2 Inst. 36, cites Glanvill 7. cap. 17. fol. 59.

This chapter of Magna Charta doth express that which doth belong to the King, viz. the Year and the Day, and omits the Waste, as not belonging to him; and this is explained by our ancient books with an uniform consent. 2 Inst. 36, cites Bracton, lib. 3. fol. 129, & 137; and Britton, c. 5. fol. 14; and Fleta, l. 1. c. 28; and Mirror, c. 5 § 2. The Mirror, speaking of this chapter, saith, Le point des terres aux felons tener per un an, est de fasie, car per la ou le roy ne aust aver que le gast de droit, ou l'an in nosme de fine pur salver le fief de l'estripment preignont les ministers le roy ambideux. Upon all which it appears, that the King originally was to have no benefit in this case upon the attainder of Felony, where the free land was holden of a Subject, but only in detestation of the crime; ut pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat; to prostrate the houses, to extirpate the gardens, to eradicate his wood, and to plough up the meadows of the Felon: For saving whereof, and pro bono publico, the Lords, of whom the lands where holden, were contented to yield the lands to the King for a Year and a Day; and therefore not only the Waste was justly omitted out of this chapter of Magna Charta, but thereby it is enacted, that after the Year and Day the Land shall be rendered to the Lord of the Fee, after which no Waste can be done. 2 Inst. 37. Serjeant Hawkins says, it seems agreed, that by the Common Law, upon an attainder of Felony, the King had a right utterly to waste the lands holden of any but himself, whereof the person attainted was seised of an estate of inheritance, either in his own or in his Wife's right. And it is said by some, that the King hath both this right, and also a right to hold such lands for a Year and a Day. But it is holden by others, that the right to hold over the lands for a Year and a Day was given to the King in lieu of the Waste, and it seems implied in Magna Charta, cap. 22, which saying, that the King shall not hold over the lands of those convicted of Felony but for one Year and a Day, and making no mention of the Waste, it seems plainly to intimate, that at the time of the making that statute, the King was thought to have no other right but only to the Year and Day. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49 § 8. See Forfeiture II. 1.

And where the treatise of Prærogativa Regis, made in 17 Edw. 2, says, Et postquam Dominus Rex habuerit annum, diem, et vastum, tunc reddatur tenementum illud capitali domino feodi illius, nisi prius faciat finem pro anno, die, & vasto; this is so to be expounded, that forasmuch as it appears in the said old Books, that the Officers and Ministers did demand both for the Waste and for Year and Day, that came in lieu thereof, therefore this treatise named both, not that both were due, but that a reasonable fine might be paid for all that which the King might lawfully claim. But if this act of 17 Ed. 2, be against this branch of Magna Charta, then it is repealed by the act of 42 Ed. 2. c. 1. 2 Inst. 37: 2 Hawk. P. C. cap. 49. § 8.

Hereby (says Coke) it appears how necessary the reading ancient Authors is for understanding of ancient Statutes. And out of these old Books you may observe, that when any thing is given to the King in lieu or satisfaction of any ancient right of his Crown, when once he is in possession of the new recompence, and the same in charge, his Officers and Ministers will, many times, demand the old also, which may turn to great prejudice, if it be not duly and discreetly prevented. 2 Inst. 37.

If there be Lord, Mesne, and Tenant, and the Mesne is attainted of Felony, the Lord Paramount shall have the Mesnalty, presently; for this prerogative belonging to the King, extends only to the land, which might be wasted, in lieu whereof the Year and Day was granted. 2 Inst. 37. And this is to be understood when a Tenant in Fee-simple is attainted; for when Tenant in Tail, or Tenant for Life is attainted, there the King shall have the profits of the lands during the life of Tenant in Tail, or of the Tenant for Life. 2 Inst. 37.

That be convict] Here convict, in a large sense is taken for attincti: For the nature and true sense of both these words, see the first part of the Institutes; and likewise for this word Felony there. 2 Inst. 37; and see this Dict. title Attainder.

Of Felony] Must be understood of all manner of Felonies punished by death, and not of Petit Larceny, which notwithstanding is Felony. 2 Inst. 38. If Lord and Tenant are, and the Tenant is attainted of Felony, and the King has Annum, Diem, & Vastum, yet if the Lord enters without due process, and the writ sued to the Eschcator, the land shall be re-seised, and he shall answer for the mesne issues and profits. Br. Re-Seisir, pl. 36, cites Ed. 2. and Fitz. Traverse, 48.

The statute de Prærogativa Regis, cap. 15, wills, that if a Felon has land, tunc Rex statim illam habeat, & habeat inde annum & vastum & terra destruetur, &c. & tunc reddatur capitali domino, &c. Quære, if this word (statim) shall be otherwise intended but after office found? Br. Corone, pl. 209.

Tenant by copy of Court-roll, by the verge in ancient demesne committed Felony, and was attainted of it, and Annum, Diem, & Vastum was awarded for the King; and the reason seems to be, inasmuch as Frank-tenants in ancient demesne have no other evidence but copies of Court-rolls; for otherwise it seems to be of a mere Copyholder out of ancient demesne for other Frank-tenement. Br. Tenant per Copie, &c. cites 3 Ed. 3. See titles Copyhold; Forfeiture.

A man was outlawed of Felony, and aliened his land to J. N., on which Scire facias issued against him, who came and would have traversed the Felony; and the Court doubted if he might traverse it, by reason that he is a stranger to the record; but per Pigot, by 7 Ed. 4. c. 2, he cannot traverse it in case of Felony being a stranger to the record; contrà in case of Trespass; on which it was prayed for the King, that Year, Day, and Waste be adjudged for the King immediately, and so it was immediately from that Day till a Year and a Day next after: quod nota. Quære, If the King may take the Year and the Day at what time he pleases? It seems he cannot. Br Corone, pl. 205, cites 49 Ass. 2. See title Inquest of Office.

The King shall have the first Year and Day and [or] Waste of the Land of him who is attainted of Felony, which comes after the attainder, and whosoever takes the profits this Year shall answer the profits to the King; per Fitzherbert. But it seems that this is to be understood after office found, or that the Inquest which attaints him finds also what lands he had at the time of the Felony committed, or after. And in the case above of 49 Ass. 2, the Outlawry of Felony was 18 Ed. 3. and writ issued to the Coroners to inquire of his goods, lands, and tenements, 48 Ed. 3; which returned that he had land, and aliened to J. N. after the Outlawry; and upon this Scire facias issued against J. N., who came and would have traversed the Felony; and the Year and Day was awarded to the King with the Waste. And so it seems that the King cannot take it, unless after office, which was thirty years after, as there. But Quære, if, upon the office found, he who receives the profits the first Year after the Felony shall not be charged? It seems he shall, per Fitzh. above. Quære the experience thereof in B. R.? Br. Corone, pl. 207, cites F. N. B. fol. 144. See title Inquest of Office.

YEAR-BOOKS. Reports, in a regular series, from the reign of King Edw. II., inclusive, to the time of Hen. VIII. which were taken by the Prothonotaries, or Chief Scribes of the Court, at the expence of the Crown, and published annually; whence they are known under the denomination of the Year-Books. See title Law-Books.

YEARS, Estates for; See title Lease.

YEMAN, or YEOMAN, or YOMAN, A derivative of the Saxon, Geman, i. e. Communis. These Camden in his Britannia placeth next in order to Gentlemen, calling them Ingenuos; whose opinion the statute affirms, anno 6 Ric. 2. c. 4. and 20 Ric. 2. c. 2. Sir Thomas Smith, in his Republ. Anglorum, l. 1. c. 23, calls him a Yeoman, whom our Law calls legalem hominem, which (says he) is in the English a free-born man, that may dispend of his own free-land in yearly revenues to the sum of forty shillings sterling. Verstegan, in his Restitution of decayed Intelligence, c. 10, writes, That Gemen among the ancient Teutonics, and Gemein among the modern, signifies as much as Common, and the letter g being turned into y, is written Yemen, which also signifies a Commoner. See title Precedence.

Yeoman also signifies an Officer in the Kings house, in the middle place between the Serjeant and the Groom; as Yeoman of the Chandry, Yeoman of the Scullery, Stat. antiq. 33 H. 8. c. 13. Yeoman of the Crown, Stat. antiq. 3 E. 4, 5. The word Youngmen is used for Yeomen, in the stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 10. Cowell.

YEME, An ancient corruption of Hieme, winter. Cowell.

YEVEN, or YEOVEN, Given: Dated. Cowell.

YEW, Said to be derived from the Greek ἰάω, to hurt, probably because, before the invention of guns, our Ancestors made bows with this wood, with which they annoyed their enemies; and therefore they took care to plant the trees in the church-yards, where they might be often seen and preserved by the people. Minshen.

YIELDING AND PAYING, Reddendo & Solvendo.] Comes from the Sax. Geldan & Gildan; and in Domesday, Gildare is frequently used for Solvere, Reddere, the Saxon G. being often turned into Y. See title Deed.

YINGMAN, Mentioned in the Laws of King Hen. 1. c. 15. Spelman thinks this may be a mistake for Inglishman, or, as we now say, Englishman: But perhaps the Yingmen were rather Youngmen, printed for Yeoman and Yemen, in stat. 33 H. 8. c. 10.

YOKELET, Sax. Jocelet.] A little Farm, &c. in some parts of Kent, so called from its requiring but a Yoke of Oxen to till it. Sax. Dict.

YORK, Custom of See title Executor V. 9.

YORK-BUILDINGS COMPANY, A Corporation or Company erected by statute for raising Thames Water in York-Buildings: This Company having bought the forfeited estates in Scotland on the Rebellion, anno 1 Geo. 1. to enable them to make good their engagements to the Government, they were empowered by statute to dispose of rent-charges, to grant annuities, &c.

YPSIVREMETA, In Latin Altitonans, signifies God, the Thunderer.

YVERNAGIUM; See Hybernagium.

YULE. In the North of England, the country people call the Feast of the Nativity of our Lord by the name of Yule, which is the proper Scotch word for Christmas; and the sports used at Christmas, here called Christmas Gambols, in Scotland they term Yule Games. The statute 1 Geo. 1. c. 8, was made for the repeal of a repealing act, passed in the Parliament of Scotland, intitled "An Act for discharging the Yule-Vacance." See Gule.

Z.

ZABOLUS, i. e. Diabolus, as used in many old Writers, viz. Edgar. in Leg. Monach. Hydens. c. 4: Orderic. Vitalis 460, &c.

ZABULUM, Latin, Sabulum.] Grofs fand or gravel. Cowell.

ZALA, i. e. Incendium; from whence we derive the English word Zeal.

ZANT-KILLOW, A meafure containing fix English bufhels.

ZATOVIN, Sattin, or fine Silk. Mon. Ang. iii. 177.

ZEALOT, Zelotes.] Is for the moft part taken in pejorem fenfum, fo that we term one that is a Separatift or Schifmatic from the Church of England, a Zealot or Fanatic.

ZENIA; See Xenia.

ZETA, A room kept warm like a ftove; a withdrawing chamber with pipes conveyed along in the walls, to receive from below either the cool air in the Summer, or the heat of fire, &c. in Winter: It is called by our English Hiftorians a Dining-room, or Parlour. Ofborn vita S. Elphegi apud Wharton: Mon. ii. 127.

ZODIACK, Zodiacus.] An imaginary circle in the Heavens, containing the twelve Signs through which the Sun paffes every year. Litt.

ZUCHE, Zucheus, Stirps ficcus & aridus.] A withered or dry ftock of a tree.—See Placit. Foreft. in Com. Nott. de Anno 8 H. 3, where it feems a writ of Ad quod damnum iffued, on granting of Zuches or dead wood in a Foreft, &c. Spelm.

ZYGOSTATES, Libripens.] The Clerk of the Markets, to fee to Weights. Spelm.

ZYTHUM, A drink made of corn, ufed by the old Gauls; fo called from the feething or boiling it, whence Cyder had its name. Spelm.

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA

IN THIS VOLUME.

IMPEACHMENT. Column 2. line 5. add—But see contrà, 4 Comm. c. 19, n.
At the end of the title add—See Raym. 120: 1 Leon. 384; and this Dictionary, title Parliament VIII.

INFORMATION. Div. I. parag. 2. line 4. after "Attorney-General," add—(or, during a Vacancy of that Office, by the Solicitor-General; Wilkes's Ca. Bro. P. C.)

INSURANCE. Div. III. 6. At the end of this Division, add—
Since the above was written, the cases of Brandon v. Nesbitt, and Bristow v. Towers, were determined. See 6 Term Rep. 23; 35. In the first of these, the Court of B. R. declared, that no Action could be maintained either by, or in favour of, an Alien Enemy: And, as a consequence of that determination, in the latter case, after a long argument, it was decided, by the positive opinion of the Court, in a very few words, that the Insurance of an Enemy's Property is illegal; and no Action can be sustained thereon. See also Parke's Law of Insurance, 3*d Edition.*

JOINTENANCY; IN THINGS PERSONAL. Line 14. after Litt. § 321; Read thus—
So also, if 100*l.* be given by Will to two or more, equally to be divided between them, and the Survivors and Survivor of them; this has been held to make them Tenants in Common; as the same words would have done in regard to Real Estates: The word Survivors, &c. being to be understood of such of them as shall be living at the Testator's death. 1 Eq Ab. 292. c. 11.—But in a case of a Devise of a Debt to two or more, "share and share alike, equally to be divided between them, and if either of them die, to the Survivors or Survivor of them," it was determined in Dom. Proc. that they were Joint-tenants; and the decree of Cowper, Ld. C. declaring them Tenants in Common was reversed. See Cox's P. Wms. i. 96, and the note there;—Residuary Legatees, &c.

JUS PATRONATUS. Line 3. after "learning" add—Who are to summon a Jury of six Clergymen and six Laymen, to inquire, &c.

NATIONAL DEBT. Column 2. instead of the five last lines, Read:
By the Commissioners' Account, published on the first of August 1796, it appears that they have laid out £14,969,312 : 18 : 6 Sterling in the purchase of £20,117,450 Stock in the 3 and 4 per Cents.
Line 31 of that Column, for "between 250 and 300," read "nearly 400."

PARLIAMENT. In the arrangement of the Divisions at the beginning of the Title, transpose the lines V. 1: VI. (A): 2. thus—

V. 1. As Members, &c.
2. In their judicial Capacity.
VI. (A) As relates to Taxes.

Div. VI. (B) 3; col. 3. of that Div; line 27, after 3 Lud. 455. Add, But a contrary determination was made by the Southwark Committee, in the first Session of the Parliament called in 1796; who declared a Candidate disqualified, on the ground of having treated at the former Election.

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA.

PAWNBROKERS. Col. 2. line 9, after the word "exceeding" add—(42 s. eight-pence, and thence not exceeding 10*l.*) &c.—This alteration was made by stat. 36 Geo. 3. c. 87; which see.

PEERS OF THE REALM. Div. II. col. 4. line. 7. after 87. add—

It seems now to be settled, that a Peerage cannot be transferred, (unless we consider the summoning of the eldest Son of a Peer by Writ as a Transfer of one of his Father's Baronies,) without the concurrence of Parliament, at least in those cases where the noble Personage has no other Barony to remain in himself: As otherwise, on such transfer, he would himself be deprived of his Peerage, and be made ignoble by his own act. The Earldom of Arundel (see ante) is now settled, by Act of Parliament, in the Norfolk Family: And even if it were not, it might be questioned, whether, under the supposition of no remaining Barony, such an one could now be otherwise conveyed; it being held that the whole Nation is interested in each individual Peer: And that a Peer cannot be deprived of his Peerage but by Act of Parliament. See Watkins's Notes on Gilbert's Tenures, Note XI. in p. 11; and p. 361.

POLICE. - - Col. 3. parag. 3. line 2. for stat. 25 Geo. 2. read 28 Geo. 2.
Col. 4. line 5. for Geo. 1. read Geo. 2. in both instances.

WILLS. - - In the arrangement of the Divisions II. 2. line 2. for temporal read temporary.
